The spirit of a man knows the things of a man: that is, a man is conscious of all the schemes, plans, and purposes, that pass in his own mind; and no man can know these things but himself. So, the Spirit of God, He whom we call the third person of the glorious TRINITY, knows all the counsels and determinations of the Supreme Being. As the Spirit is here represented to live in God, as the soul lives in the body of a man; and as this Spirit knows all the things of God, and had revealed those to the apostles, which concern the salvation of the world: therefore, what they spoke and preached was true, and men may implicitly depend upon it. The miracles which they did, in the name of Christ, was the proof that they had that Spirit and spoke the truth of God.

12. Now we have received, not the spirit of the world We, who are the genuine apostles of Christ, have received this Spirit of God, by which we know the deep things of God; and through the teaching of that Spirit, we preach Christ crucified. We have not therefore, received the spirit of the world, of the Jewish teachers, who are all looking for a worldly kingdom, and a worldly Messiah; and interpret all the scriptures of the Old Testament, which relate to him, in a carcinal and worldly sense.

13. Which things also we speak We receive this teaching that we may know what those super-eminent excellent things are which God has purposed freely to give to mankind. It is evident that, as the apostle means by princes of the world, the rulers of the Jews, ver. 6—8. so, by spirit of the world, he here means Jewish wisdom, or their carnal mode of interpreting the sacred oracles; and their carnal expectation of a worldly kingdom under the Messiah.

14. Which things also we speak We dare no more use the language of the Jews and the Gentiles, in speaking of those glorious things, than we can indulge their spirit. The Greek orators affected a high and florid language, full of tropes and figures, which dazzled more than it enlightened. The rabbins affected obscurity, and were studious to find out cablistical meanings, which had no tendency to make the people wise unto salvation. The apostles could not follow any of these; they spoke the things of God in the words of God; every thing is plain and intelligible; every word well placed, clear, and nervous. He who has a spiritual mind, will easily comprehend an apostle's preaching.

Comparing spiritual things with spiritually This is commonly understood to mean, comparing the spiritual things under the Old Testament, with the spiritual things under the New; but this does not appear to be the apostle's meaning. The word συγκρίνομεν, which we translate comparing, rather signifies conferring, discussing, or explaining; and the word πνευματικοί, should be rendered to spiritual men, and not be referred to spiritual things. The passage, therefore, should be thus translated; explaining spiritual things to spiritual persons. And this sense the following verse absolutely requires.

15. But the natural man Ψυχικός, the animal man; the man who is in a mere state of nature, and lives under the influence of his animal passions: for the word ψυχή, which we often translate soul, means the lower and sensitive part of man, in opposition to νους, the understanding, or rational part. The Latins use animus, to signify these lower passions; and animus to signify the higher. The person in question, is not only one who either has had no spiritual teaching, or has not profited by it; but one who lives for the present world, having no respect to spiritual or eternal things. This Ψυχικός, or animal man, is opposed to the πνευματικός, or spiritual man; and, as this latter is one who is under the influence of the Spirit of God; so the former is one who is without that influence.

The apostle did speak of those high and sublime spiritual things to these animal men; but he explained them to those which were spiritual. He uses this word in this sense, chap. iii. 1. ix. 11. and particularly in ver. 15. of the present chapter: He that is spiritual judgeth all things.

But the natural man—The apostle appears to give this as a reason why he explained those deep spiritual things to spiritual men; because the animal man, the man who is in a state of nature, without the regenerating grace of the Spirit of God;

Spirit of God. For they are foolishness unto him: neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned.

15. * But he that is spiritual judgeth all things, yet he himself is judged of no man.

16 For who hath known the mind of the Lord, that he may instruct him? But we have the mind of Christ.

b Or, discerneth — Or, discerned — Job 15:8. Isa. 40:13. Jer. 32:15. Wisd. 9:13. Rom. 11:34 — Gr. shall — John 13:15.

receiveth not the things of the Spirit; neither apprehends nor comprehends them: he has no relish for them; he considers it the highest wisdom to live for this world. Therefore, these spiritual things are foolishness to him: for, while he is in his animal state, he cannot see their excellency, because they are spiritually discerned; and he has no spiritual mind.

15. But he that is spiritual judgeth all things He who has the mind of Christ, discerns and judges of all things spiritual; yet he himself is not discerned by the mere animal man. Some suppose that the word avaykaias should be understood thus: he examines, scrutinizes, contrives, upbraids, which it appears to have in ch. xiv. 21. and they read the verse thus: the spiritual man, the well taught Christian, convinces, i. e. can easily convict all men, (crava, accus. sing.) every animal man, of error and vice. Yet he himself is convicted of no man; his mind is enlightened and his life is holy; and therefore the animal man cannot convict him of sin. This is a good sense, but the first appears the most natural. See Pearce and Rosenmüller.

16. For who hath known the mind of the Lord Who that is still an animal man, can know the mind of God, so as to instruct him, viz. the spiritual man, the same that is spoken of, ver. 15. But the words may be better understood thus: How can the animal man know the mind of the Lord; and how can any man communicate that knowledge which he has never acquired; and which is foolishness to him, because it is spiritual, and he is animal? This quotation is made from Isa. xl. 13.

But we have the mind of Christ He has endowed us with the same disposition, being born again by his Spirit; therefore, we are capable of knowing his mind, and receiving the teachings of his Spirit. These teachings we do receive, and therefore, are well qualified to convey them to others.

The words that he may instruct him, or avaykaias avay, should be translated that he may teach it: that is, the mind of God; not instruct God, but teach his mind to others. And this interpretation the Hebrew will also bear.

Bishop Pearce observes, "the principal questions here, are, what avaykaias signifies; and what avay is relative to? The Hebrew word, which the Septuagint translate by these two is יודיעניו yodiennu; now, since yodā signifies as well to make known as to know, (and indeed this is the most frequent sense of it in the Old Testament), the suffix, (postfix) ni may relate to a thing, as well as to a person; and therefore it may be rendered not by him, but by it, i. e. the mind of the Lord. And in this sense the apostle seems to have used the words of the Seventy; for if we understand avay here to be the relative to know, Lord, this verse contains no reason for what went before; whereas, if it be a relative to your, mind, it affords a reason for what had been said before, ver. 11." The true translation of the passage, as used by the apostle, appears to be this: For who hath known the mind of the Lord, that he should teach it? And this translation agrees with every part of the context, and particularly with what follows.

1. This chapter might be considered a good model for a Christian minister to regulate his conduct by, or his public ministry; because it points out the mode of preaching used by St. Paul and the apostles in general. This great apostle came not to the people with excellency of speech and of wisdom, when he declared unto them the counsel of God. They know little either of the spirit of St. Paul, or the design of the Gospel, who make the chief excellency of their preaching to consist in the eloquence of language, or depth of human reasoning. That may be their testimony; but it is not God's. The enticing words of men's wisdom, are seldom accompanied by the demonstration and power of the Holy Spirit.

2. One justly remarks, that "the foolishness of preaching has its wisdom, loftiness, and eloquence; but this consists in the sublimity of its truths, the depths of its mysteries, and the ardour of the Spirit of God." In this respect Paul may be said to have preached wisdom among those which were perfect. The wisest and most learned men in the world, who have seriously read the Bible, have acknowledged that there is a depth and height of wisdom and knowledge in that book of God, which are sought in vain any where else; and indeed it would not be a revelation from God were it not so. The men who can despise and ridicule this sacred book, are those who are too blind to discover the objects presented to them by this brilliant light; and are too sensual to feel and relish spiritual things. They, above all others, are incapable of judging; and should be no more regarded, when employed in talking against the sacred writings, than an ignorant peasant should be, who, not knowing his alphabet, pretends to decry mathematical learning.

3. A new mode of preaching has been diligently recommended—"Scriptural phraseology should be generally avoided where it is antiquated, or conveys ideas inconsistent with modern delicacy." St. Paul did not preach in the words which man's wisdom teacheth; such words are too mean and too low for a religion so divine. That which the Holy Spirit alone can discover, he alone can explain. Let no man dare to speak of God in any other way than he speaks of himself in his word. Let us take care not to profane his truths and mysteries, either by such low and abject ideas as are merely human; or by new and worldly expressions altogether unworthy of the Spirit of God.

4. It is the glory of God, and ought to be ours, not to be acceptable to carnal men. The natural man always finds some pretence to excuse himself from believing, by looking on the mysteries of religion as being either too much above man, or too much below God: the spiritual man judges them to be so much the more credible, the less credible they are to the natural man.

The opposition, contempt, and blindness of the world, with regard to the things of God, render all its judgments concerning them, liable to exception: this blindness in spiritual things is the just punishment of a carnal life. The principal part of the above is extracted from the reflections of the pious Quenel.

CHAPTER III.

Because of the carnal, divided state of the people at Corinth, the apostle was obliged to treat them as children, in the knowledge of sacred things, 1-3. Some were for setting up Paul, others Apollos, as their sole teachers, 4. The apostle shows that himself, and fellow apostles, were only instruments which God used to bring them to the knowledge of the truth; and even their sowing and watering the seed, was of no use, unless God gave the increase, 5-8. The church represented as God's husbandry; and as God's building, the foundation of which is Christ Jesus, 9-11. Ministers must beware how and what they build on this foundation, 12-15. The Church of God is his temple, and he that defiles it shall be destroyed, 16, 17. No man should depend on his own wisdom; for the wisdom of the world is foolishness with God, 18-20. None should glory in man as his teacher; God gives his followers every good, both for time and eternity, 21-23. [A. M. 4060. A. D. 56. A. U. C. 809. An. Imp. Neronis Cæs. 3.]

NOTES.—Verse 1. I, brethren, could not speak unto you as unto spiritual] This is a continuation of the preceding discourse. See the notes there.

But as unto carnal] Σαρκιαίς, persons under the influence of fleshly appetites; coveting and living for the things of this life.

Babes in Christ] Just beginning to acquire some notion of the Christian religion; but as yet, very incapable of judging what is most suitable to yourselves; and consequently, utterly unqualified to discern between one teacher and another; so that your making the distinctions which you do make, so far from being a proof of mature judgment, is, on the contrary, a proof that you have no right judgment at all; and this springs from your want of knowledge in divine things.

2. I have fed you with milk] I have instructed you in the elements of Christianity; in its simplest and easiest truths; because, from the low state of your minds in religious knowledge, you were incapable of comprehending the higher truths of the Gospel; and in this state you still continue. The apostle thus exposes to them the absurdity of their conduct, in pretending to judge between preacher and preacher; while they had but a very partial acquaintance even with the first principles of Christianity.

3. There is among you envying, and strife, and divisions] Ζηλος και ερις και διχοστασια: There are three things here worthy of note: these people were wrong in thought, word, and deed. Ζηλος, envying, refers to the state of their souls; they had inward grudgings and disaffection towards each other. Ερις, strife, or contention, refers to their words; they were continually disputing and contending whose party was the best; each endeavouring to prove that he and his party were alone in the right. Διχοστασια, divisions, refers to their conduct; as they could not agree, they contended till they separated from each other; and thus rent the church of Christ. Thus the envying and grudging led to strife and evil speaking; and this led to divisions and fixed parties. In this state well might the apostle say, Are ye not carnal, and walk as men? Ye act as the people of the world; and have no more of the spirit of religion than they.

4. For while one saith, I am of Paul, &c.] It was notorious that both Paul and Apollos held the same creed; between them there was not the slightest difference; when, therefore, the dissentients began to prefer the one to the other, it was the fullest proof of their carnality: because in the doctrines of these apostles there was no difference; so that what the people were captivated by, must be something in their outward manner, Apollos being probably more eloquent than Paul. Their preferring one to another, on such an account, proved that they were carnal, led by their senses and mere outward appearances, without being under the guidance either of reason or grace. There are thousands of such people in the Christian church, to the present day. See the notes on chap. i. 10, &c.

5. Ministers by whom ye believed] The different apostles who have preached unto you the word of life, are the means which God has used to bring you to the knowledge of Christ. No one of those has either preached or recommended himself; they all preach and recommend Christ Jesus the Lord. Even as the Lord gave to every man] Whatever difference there may be in our talents, it is of God's making; and 5 Who then is Paul, and who is Apollos, but ^k ministers by whom ye believed, ^l even as the Lord gave to every man?

6 ^m I have planted, ⁿ Apollos watered; ^o but God gave the increase.

7 So then, ^p neither is he that planteth any thing, neither he that watereth; but God that giveth the increase.

8 Now, he that planteth and he that watereth are one: ^q and every man shall receive his own reward, according to his own labour.

9 For ^r we are labourers together with God: ye are God's ^s husbandry, ye are ^t God's building.

he who knows best, what is best for his church, has distributed both gifts and graces according to his own mind: and, as his judgment is infallible, all these dispensations must be right. Paul, therefore, is as necessary to the perfecting of the church of Christ as Apollos; and Apollos as Paul. Both, but with various gifts, point out the same Christ; building on one and the same foundation.

6. I have planted] I first sowed the seed of the Gospel in Corinth, and the region of Achaia.

Apollos watered] Apollos came after me, and by his preachings and exhortations, watered the seed which I had sowed; but God gave the increase. The seed has taken root, has sprung up, and borne much fruit, but this was by the especial blessing of God. As in the natural, so in the spiritual world; it is by the especial blessing of God that the grain which is sown in the ground, brings forth thirty, sixty, or a hundred fold. It is neither the sower nor the waterer that produces this strange and inexplicable multiplication; it is God alone. So it is by the particular agency of the Spirit of God, that even good seed, sown in good ground, the purest doctrine conveyed to the honest heart, produces the salvation of the soul.

7. So then, neither is he that planteth any thing] God alone should have all the glory, as the seed is his, the ground is his, the labourers are his, and the produce all comes from himself.

8. He that planteth and he that watereth are one] Both Paul and Apollos have received the same doctrine, preached the same doctrine, and labour to promote the glory of God in the salvation of your souls. Why should you be divided with respect to Paul and Apollos, while these apostles are intimately one in spirit, design, and operation?

According to his own labour] God does not reward his servants according to the success of their labour, because that depends on himself: but he rewards them according to the quantum of faithful labour which they bestow on his work. In this sense, none can say I have laboured in vain, and spent my strength for nought.

9. For we are labourers together with God] We do nothing of ourselves, nor in reference to ourselves; we labour together in that work which God has given us to do, expect all our success from him; and refer the whole to his glory. It would perhaps be more correct to translate Θεω γαρ ενσυναυνοει, we are fellow-labourers of God; for as the preposition συν may express the joint labour of the teachers one with another, and not with God, I had rather, with R. Pearce, translate as above: i. e. we labour together in the work of God. Far from being divided among ourselves, we jointly labour as oxen in the same yoke, to promote the honour of our Master.

Ye are God's husbandry, ye are God's building.] Θεω γεωργον, Θεω οικοδομον εσε. The word γεωργον, which we translate husbandry, signifies properly an arable field: so Prov. xxiv. 30. I tenced by the field, γεωργον, of the slothful: and chap. xxxi. 16. The wise woman considereth a field, γεωργον, and buyeth it. It would be more literal to translate it, Ye are God's farm: γεωργος in Greek, answers to שרה sadeh, in Hebrew, which signifies, properly, a sown field.

Ye are God's building.—Ye are not only the field which God cultivates, but ye are the house which God builds, and in which he intends to dwell. As no man, in viewing a fine building, extols the quarry man, that dug up the stones, the hewer that cut and squared them, the mason that placed them in the wall, the woodman that hewed down the timber, the carpenter that squared and jointed it, &c. but the architect who planned it, and under whose direction the whole work was accomplished: so, no man should consider Paul, or Apollus, or Kephus, any thing, but as persons employed by the great Architect to form a building which is to become a habitation of himself through the Spirit; and the design of which is entirely his own.

11 For, ^c another foundation can no man lay than ^d that is laid, ^e which is Jesus Christ.

12 Now if any man build upon this foundation gold, silver, precious stones, wood, hay, stubble;

13 "Every man's work shall be made manifest: for the day ^f shall declare it, because ^g it ^h shall be revealed by fire; and the fire shall try every man's work of what sort it is.

10. As a wise master-builder] Ὁ σοφὸς ἀρχιτέκτων. The design or plan of the building is from God; all things must be done according to the pattern which he has exhibited: but the execution of this plan was entrusted chiefly to St. Paul; he was the wise or experienced architect, which God used in order to lay the foundation; to ascertain the essential and immutable doctrines of the Gospel:—those alone which came from God, and which alone he would bless to the salvation of mankind.

Let every man take heed how he buildeth thereupon] Let him take care that the doctrines which he preaches he answerable to those which I have preached: let him also take heed that he enjoin no other practice than that which is suitable to the doctrine; and in every sense accords with it.

11. Other foundation can no man lay] I do not speak particularly concerning the foundation of this spiritual building; it can have no other foundation than Jesus Christ: there cannot be two opinions on this subject among the true apostles of our Lord. The only fear is, lest an improper use should be made of this heavenly doctrine; lest a bad superstructure should be raised on this foundation.

12. If any man build—gold, silver, &c.] Without entering into curious criticisms relative to these different expressions, it may be quite enough for the purpose of edification, to say, that by gold, silver, and precious stones, the apostle certainly means pure and wholesome doctrines; by wood, hay, and stubble, false doctrines; such as at that time prevailed in the Corinthian church; for instance, that there should be no resurrection of the body; that a man may, on his father's death, lawfully marry his step-mother; that it was necessary to incorporate much of the Mosaic law with the Gospel; and perhaps other matters, equally exceptionable, relative to marriage, concubinage, fornication, frequenting heathen festivals, and partaking of the flesh which had been offered in sacrifice to an idol, with many other things; which, with the above, are, more or less, hinted at by the apostle in these two letters.

13. The day shall declare it, because it shall be revealed by fire] There is much difference of opinion relative to the meaning of the terms in this and the two following verses. That the apostle refers to the approaching destruction of Jerusalem, I think very probable; and when this is considered, all the terms and metaphors will appear clear and consistent.

The day, is the time of punishment coming on this disobedient and rebellious people. And this day being revealed by fire, points out the extreme rigour, and totally destructive nature, of that judgment:

And the fire shall try every man's work] If the apostle refers to the Judaizing teachers, and their insinuations that the law, especially circumcision, was of eternal obligation; then the day of fire, the time of vengeance, which was at hand, would sufficiently disprove such assertions; as, in the judgment of God, the whole temple service should be destroyed; and the people who fondly presumed on their permanence and stability, should be dispossessed of their land, and scattered over the face of the whole earth. The difference of the Christian and the Jewish systems should then be seen: the latter should be destroyed in that fiery day, and the former prevail more than ever.

14. If any man's work abide] Perhaps there is here an allusion to the purifying of different sorts of vessels under the law. All that could stand the fire, were to be purified by the fire; and those which could not resist the action of the fire, were to be purified by water. Numb. xxiii. 23. The gold, silver, and precious stones, could stand the fire; but the wood, hay, and stubble, must be necessarily consumed. So, in that great and terrible day of the Lord, all false doctrine, as well as the system that was to pass away, should be made sufficiently manifest; and God would then show that the Gospel, and that alone, was that system of doctrine which he would bless and protect, and none other.

He shall receive a reward] He has not only preached the 15 If any man's work shall be burned, he shall suffer loss: but he himself shall be saved; ^a yet so as by fire.

16 "Know ye not that ye are the temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you.

17 If any man ^b defile the temple of God, him shall God destroy; for the temple of God is holy, which temple ye are.

18 Let no man deceive himself. If any man among you seemeth to be wise in this world, let him become a fool, that he may be wise.

19 For, the wisdom of this world is foolishness with God. For, it is written, ^c He taketh the wise in their own craftiness.

truth, but he has laboured in the word and doctrine. And the reward is to be according to the labour. See on ver. 8.

15. If any man's work shall be burned, he shall suffer loss] If he have preached the necessity of incorporating the law with the Gospel, or proclaimed as a doctrine of God, any thing which did not proceed from heaven, he shall suffer loss; all his time and labour will be found to be uselessly employed and spent. Some refer the loss to the work, not to the man; and understand the passage thus: If any man's work be burned, it shall suffer loss: much shall be taken away from it, nothing shall be left but the measure of truth and uprightness which it may have contained.

But he himself shall be saved] If he sincerely and conscientiously have believed what he preached, and yet preached what was wrong, not through malice or opposition to the Gospel, but through mere ignorance, he shall be saved; God, in his mercy, will pass by his errors; and he shall not suffer punishment because he was mistaken. Yet, as in most erroneous teachings, there is generally a portion of useful and obstinate ignorance, the salvation of such erroneous teachers is very rare; and is expressed here, yet so as by fire, i. e. with great difficulty; a mere escape; a hair's breadth deliverance; he shall be like a brand plucked out of the fire.

The apostle obviously refers to the case of a man, who, having built a house, and begun to dwell in it, the house happens to be set on fire, and he has warning of it, just in time to escape with his life; losing, at the same time, his house, his goods, his labour, and almost his own life. So he, who, while he holds the doctrine of Christ crucified, as the only foundation on which a soul can rest its hopes of salvation; builds at the same time, on that foundation, antinomianism, or any other erroneous or destructive doctrine, he shall lose all his labour, and his own soul scarcely escape everlasting perdition; nor even this, unless sheer ignorance and inveterate prejudice, connected with much sincerity, be found in his case.

The popish writers have applied what is here spoken to the fire of purgatory; and they might, with equal propriety, have applied it to the discovery of the longitude, the perpetual motion, or the philosopher's stone; because it speaks just as much of the former as it does of any of the latter. The fire mentioned here is to try the man's work, not to purify his soul; but the dream of purgatory refers to the purging in another state, what left this impure; not the work of the man, but the man himself; but here the fire is said to try the work; ergo, purgatory is not meant, even if such a place as purgatory could be proved to exist; which remains yet to be demonstrated.

16. Ye are the temple of God] The apostle resumes here what he had asserted in ver. 9.—Ye are God's building. As the whole congregation of Israel were formerly considered as the temple and habitation of God, because God dwelt among them; so here, the whole church at Corinth is called the temple of God, because all genuine believers have the Spirit of God to dwell with them; and Christ has promised to be always in the midst even of two or three, who are gathered together in his name. Therefore, where God is, there is his temple.

17. If any man defile the temple] This clause is not consistently translated εἰ τις τὸν ναὸν τοῦ θεοῦ ὀνειδίσῃ, ὀνειδίσαι αὐτὸν ὁ θεός: If any man destroy the temple of God, him will God destroy. The verb is the same in both clauses. If any man injure, corrupt, or destroy the church of God by false doctrine, God will destroy him; will take away his part out of the book of life. This refers to him who wilfully opposes the truth; the erring mistaken man shall barely escape; but the obstinate opposer shall be destroyed. The former shall be treated leniently; the latter shall have judgment without mercy.

18. If any man among you seemeth to be wise] Εἰ τις δοκεῖ σοφὸς εἶναι, if any pretend or affect to be wise. This seems to refer to some individual in the church of Corinth, who had been very troublesome to its peace and unity: probably Diotrophes; see on chap. i. 14. or some one of a similar spirit, who wished to have the pre-eminence, and thought himself wiser than seven men that could render a reason. Every Christian church has less or more of these.

Let him become a fool] Let him divest himself of his worldly wisdom, and be contented to be called a fool, and esteem one, that he may become wise unto salvation; by renouncing his own wisdom, and seeking that which comes from God. But probably the apostle refers to him who, pretending to great wisdom and information, taught doctrines contrary to the Gospel; endeavouring to show reasons for them, and to support his own opinions with arguments which he thought unanswerable. This man brought his worldly wisdom to bear against the doctrines of Christ; and probably through such teaching, many of the scandalous things which the apostle reprehends among the Corinthians, originated.

13. The wisdom of this world]. Whether it be the pretended deep and occult wisdom of the rabbins; or the wire-drawn speculations of the Grecian philosophers; is foolishness with God: for, as folly consists in spending time, strength, and pains, to no purpose; so these may be fitly termed fools who acquire no saving knowledge by their speculations. And is not this the case with the major part of all that is called philosophy, even in the present day? Has one soul been made wise unto salvation through it? Are our most eminent philosophers either pious or useful men? Who of them is meek, gentle, and humble? Who of them directs his researches so as to meliorate the moral condition of his fellow creatures? Pride, insolence, self-conceit, and complacency, with a general forgetfulness of God, contempt for his word, and despite for the poor, are their general characteristics.

He taketh the wise in their own craftiness.] This is a quotation from Job v. 13. and powerfully shows what the wisdom of this world is: it is a sort of craft, a subtle trade, which they carry on to wrong others, and benefit themselves; and they have generally too much cunning to be caught by men; but God often overthrows them with their own devisings. Paganism raised up persecution against the church of Christ in order to destroy it: this became the very means of quickly spreading it over the earth, and of destroying the whole Pagan system. Thus the wise were taken in their own craftiness.

20. The Lord knoweth the thoughts of the wise]. They are always full of schemes and plans for earthly good; and God knows that all this is vain, empty, and unsatisfactory; and will stand them in no stead when He comes to take away their souls. This is a quotation from Psal. xciv. 11. What is here said of the vanity of human knowledge, is true of every kind of wisdom that leads not immediately to God himself.

21. Let no man glory in men]. Let none suppose that he has any cause of exaltation in any thing but God. All are yours; he that has got God for his portion, has every thing that can make him happy and glorious: all are his.

22. Whether Paul, or Apollos]. As if he had said, God designs to help you by all things and persons: every teacher, sent from him, will become a blessing to you, if you abide faithful to your calling. God will press every thing into the service of his followers. The ministers of the church of Christ are appointed for the hearers; not the hearers for the ministers. In like manner, all the ordinances of grace and mercy are appointed for them, not they for the ordinances.

Or the world]. The word κοσμος, here means rather the inhabitants of the world, than what we commonly understand by the world itself: and this is its meaning in John iii. 16, 17. vi. 33. xiv. 31. xvii. 21. See particularly John xii. 19. ὁ κοσμος οὐτως αὐτον ἀρνησιν: the world is gone after him: the great mass of the people believe on him. The Greek word has the same meaning in a variety of places, both in the sacred and profane writers, as le monde, the world, literally, has in French: where it signifies not only the system of created things, but by metonymy, the people; every body, the mass, the populace. In the same sense it is often found in English. The apostle's meaning evidently is, not only Paul, Apollos, and Kephass, are yours; appointed for, and employed in your service; but every person besides, with whom you may have any intercourse or connexion; whether Jew or Greek, whether enemy or friend. God will cause every person, as well as every thing, to work for your good while you love, cleave to, and obey Him.

Or life]. With all its trials and advantages, every hour of it, every tribulation in it, the whole course of it, as the grand state of your probation, is a general blessing to you: and you have life, and that life preserved, in order to prepare for an eternity of blessedness.

Or death]. That solemn hour, so dreadful to the wicked; and so hateful to those who live without God; that is yours. Death is your servant; he comes a special messenger from God for you: he comes to undo a knot that now connects body and soul, which it would be unlawful for yourselves to untie: he comes to take your souls to glory; and he cannot come before his due time to those who are waiting for the salvation of God. A saint wishes to live only to glorify God; and he who wishes to live longer than he can get and do good, is not worthy of life.

22 Whether Paul, or Apollos, or Cephas, or the world, or life, or death, or things present, or things to come; ^{*}all are yours;
23 And [†]ye are Christ's; and Christ is God's.

Rom 8. 29. 2 Cor. 4. 15. 1 Tim 4. 9.—Rom 14. 8. Ch. 11. 3. 2 Cor. 10. 7. Gal. 3. 29.

Or things present]. Every occurrence in Providence, in the present life; for God rules in providence as well as in grace.

Or things to come]. The whole order and economy of the eternal world, all in heaven, and all in earth, are even now working together for your good.

23. And ye are Christ's]. You are called by his name; you have embraced his doctrine; you depend on him for your salvation; he is your foundation stone; he has gathered you out of the world, and acknowledges you as his people and followers. Υπεις δε Χριστου: Ye are of Christ: all the light and life which ye enjoy, ye have received through and from him; and he has bought you with his blood.

And Christ is God's]. Χριστος δε Θεου. And Christ is of God. Christ, the Messiah, is the gift of God's eternal love and mercy to mankind: for God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that they who believe in him, should not perish, but have everlasting life. Christ in his human nature, is as much the property of God, as any other human being. And as mediator between God and man, he must be considered, in a certain way, inferior to God; but in his own essential, eternal nature, there is no inequality; he is God over all. Ye, therefore, do not belong to men.—Why then take Paul, Apollos, Kephass, or any other man for your head? All these are your servants; ye are not their property; ye are Christ's property; and, as he has taken the human nature into heaven, so will he take yours: because, he that sanctifieth, and they that are sanctified, are all of one; ye are his brethren; and as his human nature is eternally safe at the throne of God, so shall your bodies and souls be, if ye cleave to Him, and be faithful unto death.

1. A finer, and more conclusive argument, to correct what was wrong among this people, could not have been used than that with which the apostle closes this chapter. It appears to stand thus: "If you continue in these divisions, and arrange yourselves under different teachers, you will meet with nothing but disappointment, and lose much good. If ye will have Paul, Apollos, &c. on your present plan, you will have them and nothing else, nor can they do you any good, for they are only instruments in God's hand at best, to communicate good, and he will not use them to help you while you act in this unchristian way. On the contrary, if you take God as your portion, you shall get these, and every good besides. Act as you now do, and you get nothing and lose all! Act as I advise you to do, and you shall not only lose nothing of the good which you now possess, but shall have every possible advantage: the men whom you now wish to make your heads, and who, in that capacity cannot profit you, shall become God's instruments of doing you endless good. Leave your dissensions, by which you offend God, and grieve his Christ; and then God, and Christ, and all, will be yours." How agitated, convinced, and humbled, must they have been when they read the masterly conclusion of this chapter!

2. A want of spirituality seems to have been the grand fault of the Corinthians. They regarded outward things chiefly; and were carried away with sound and show. They lost the treasure, while they eagerly held fast the earthen vessels that contained it. It is a true saying, that he who lends only the ear of his body to the word of God, will follow that man most who pleases the ear; and these are the persons who generally profit the soul least.

3. All the ministers of God should consider themselves as jointly employed by Christ for the salvation of mankind. It is their interest to serve God, and be faithful to his calling; but shall they dare to make his church their interest? This is generally the origin of religious disputes and schisms. Men will have the church of Christ for their own property; and Jesus Christ will not trust it with any man.

4. Every man employed in the work of God, should take that part only upon himself that God has assigned him. The church, and the soul, says pious Quésnel, are a building of which God is the master and chief architect; Jesus Christ the main foundation; the Apostles the subordinate architects; the Bishops the workmen; the Priests their helpers; Good Works the main body of the building; FAITH a sort of second foundation; and CHARITY the top and perfection. Happy is that man who is a living stone in this building.

5. He who expects any good out of God, is confounded and disappointed in all things. God alone can content, as he alone can satisfy the soul. All our restlessness and uneasiness, are only proofs that we are endeavouring to live without God in the world. A contented mind is a continual feast; but none can have such a mind who has not taken God for his portion. How is it that Christians are continually forgetting this most plain and obvious truth? and yet wonder how it is that they cannot attain true peace of mind.

CHAPTER IV.

Ministers should be esteemed by their flocks as the stewards of God, whose duty and interest it is to be faithful, 1, 2. Precipitate and premature judgments condemned, 3-5. The apostle's caution to give the Corinthians no offence, 6. We have no god but what we receive from God, 7. The worldly-mindedness of the Corinthians, 8. The enumeration of the hardships, trials, and sufferings, of the apostles, 9-13. For what purpose St. Paul mentions these things, 14-16. He promises to send Timothy to them, 17. And to come himself shortly, to examine and correct the abuses that had crept in among them, 18-21. [A. M. 4060. A. D. 56. A. U. C. 809. An. lup. Neronis Cæs. 3.]

LET a man so account of us, as of ^a the ministers of Christ, ^b and stewards of the mysteries of God.

2 Moreover, it is required in stewards, that a man be found faithful.

3 But with me it is a very small thing that I should be judged of you, or of man's ^c judgment: yea, I judge not mine own self.

4 For I know nothing by myself; ^d yet am I not hereby justified; but he that judgeth me is the Lord.

5 ^e Therefore judge nothing before the time, until the Lord come, ^f who both will bring to light the hidden things of the darkness.

NOTES.—Verse 1. Let a man so account of us [This is a continuation of the subject in the preceding chapter; and should not have been divided from it.—The fourth chapter would have begun better at ver. 6. and the third should have ended with the fifth verse.] As of the ministers of Christ Ως υπαγομενων Χριστου. The word υπαγομενων, means an under-rower; or one who in the Trireme, Quadrireme, or Quinquereme galleys, rowed in one of the undermost benches: but it means also, as used by the Greek writers, any inferior officer or assistant. By the term here, the apostle shows the Corinthians, that, far from being heads and chiefs, he and his fellow-apostles considered themselves only as inferior officers, employed under Christ; from whom alone they received their appointment, their work, and their recompense.

Stewards of the mysteries of God Κυ οικονομους μυστηριων Θεου: economists of the Divine mysteries. See the explanation of the word steward in the note on Matt. xxiv. 45. Luke viii. 3. and xii. 42.

The steward, or οικονομος, was the master's deputy in regulating the concerns of the family, providing food for the household, seeing it served out at the proper times and seasons, and in proper quantities. He received all the cash, expended what was necessary for the support of the family, and kept exact accounts, which he was obliged at certain times to lay before the master. The mysteries, the doctrines of God relative to the salvation of the world, by the passion and death of Christ, and the inspiration, illumination, and purification of the soul by the Spirit of Christ, constituted a principal part of the divine treasure, entrusted to the hands of the stewards by their heavenly Master; as the food that was to be dispensed at proper times, seasons, and in proper proportions, to the children and domestics of the church, which is the house of God.

3. It is a very small thing that I should be judged of you [Those who preferred Apollos or Cephus, before St. Paul, would of course give their reasons for this preference; and these might, in many instances, be very unfavourable to his character as a man, a Christian, or an apostle; of this he was regardless, as he sought not his own glory, but the glory of God in the salvation of their souls.]

Or of man's judgment Η ημεν ανθρωπων ημερα, literally, or of man's day; but ανθρωπων ημερα, signifies any day set apart by a judge or magistrate, to try a man on. This is the meaning of ημερα, Psal. xxxviii. 13. The Lord shall laugh at him, for he seeth that his day, ημερα ανων, his judgment is coming. Malac. iii. 17. And they shall be mine in the day, ημερα ημερα, in the judgment, when I wake up my jewels. It has the same meaning in 2 Pet. iii. 10. but the day, the judgment of the Lord will come. The word ανθρωπων, (man's) signifies miserable, wretched, woful; so Jerem. xvii. 16. Neither have I desired, ουδεις εις ημερα ανων, the day of man, but very properly translated in our version, the woful day, God's days, Job xxiv. 1. certainly signify God's judgments. And the day of our Lord Jesus, in this epistle, chap. i. 8. and v. 5. signifies the day in which Christ will judge the world; or rather the judgment itself.

I judge not mine own self [I leave myself entirely to God, whose I am, and whom I serve.]

4. For I know nothing by myself Ουδεν γαρ τινος αννοια: I am not conscious that I am guilty of any evil; or have neglected to fulfil faithfully, the duty of a steward of Jesus Christ. The import of the verb αννοια, is to be conscious of guilt; and αννοια has the same meaning: so in Horace, Nil conscire sibi; to know nothing to one's self; is the same as nulla pallescere culpa, not to grow pale at being charged with a crime, through a consciousness of guilt.

Yet am I not hereby justified [I do not pretend to say that, though I am not conscious of any offence towards God, I must, therefore, be pronounced innocent; No—I leave those things to God; he shall pronounce in my favour; not I, myself.] By these words, the apostle, in a very gentle, yet effectual manner, censures those rash and precipitate judgments which the Corinthians were in the habit of pronouncing on both men and things: a conduct, than which nothing is more reprehensible and dangerous.

ness, and will make manifest the counsels of the hearts; and ^e then shall every man have praise of God.

6 And these things, brethren, I have in a figure transferred to myself and to Apollos for your sakes; ^f that ye might learn in us not to think of men above that which is written: that no one of you ^g be puffed up for one against another.

7 For who ^h maketh thee to differ from another? and ⁱ what hast thou that thou didst not receive? ^j now, if thou didst receive it, why dost thou glory, as if thou hadst not received it?

8 Now ye are full, ^k now ye are rich, ye have reigned as a Matt 7.1. Rom. 2.14 & 14.4. 10.13. Rev. 20.12.—b Ch. 3.13.—c Rom. 2.29. 2 Cor. 5.10.—d Ch. 1.12 & 3.4.—e Rom. 13.7.—f Ch. 3.21 & 5.2, 5.6.—g 1 Cor. 13.1.—h John 3.27. James 1.17. 1 Pet. 1.10.—i Rev. 3.17.

5. Judge nothing before the time [God, the righteous Judge, will determine every thing shortly; it is His province alone to search the heart, and bring to light the hidden things of darkness. If you be so pure and upright in your conduct; if what you have been doing in these divisions, &c. be right in His sight; then shall you have praise for the same; if, otherwise, yourselves are most concerned. Some refer the praise to St. Paul, and his companions: then shall every one of us apostles, have praise of God.]

6. These things [Which I have written, chap. iii. 5. &c.]

I have in a figure transferred to myself and to Apollos [I have written as if myself and Apollos were the authors of the sects which now prevail among you; although others, without either our consent or knowledge, have proclaimed us heads of parties. Bishop Pearce paraphrases the verse thus: "I have made use of my own and Apollos's name, in my arguments against your divisions, because I would spare to name those teachers among you, who are guilty of making and heading parties; and because I would have you, by our example, not to value them above what I have said of teachers in general, in this epistle: so that none of you ought to be puffed up for one against another." Doubtless, there were persons at Corinth who, taking advantage of this spirit of innovation among that people, set themselves up also for teachers; and endeavoured to draw disciples after them. And, perhaps, some even of these were more valued by the fickle multitude, than the very apostles, by whom they had been brought out of heathenish darkness into the marvellous light of the Gospel. I have already supposed it possible that Diotrophes was one of the ring-leaders in these schisms at Corinth. See on chap. i. 14.]

7. For who maketh thee to differ [It is likely that the apostle is here addressing himself to some one of those puffed up teachers, who was glorying in his gifts, and in the knowledge he had of the Gospel, &c. As if he had said, If thou hast all that knowledge which thou professest to have, didst thou not receive it from myself, or some other of my fellow-helpers, who first preached the Gospel at Corinth? God never spoke to thee, to make thee an apostle. Hast thou a particle of light that thou hast not received from our preaching? Why then dost thou glory, boast, and exult, as if God had first spoken by thee, and not by us?]

This is the most likely meaning of this verse; and a meaning that is suitable to the whole of the context. It has been applied in a more general sense by religious people; and the doctrine they build on it, is true in itself, though it does not appear to me to be any part of the apostle's meaning, in this place. The doctrine I refer to is this: God is the foundation of all good; no man possesses any good but what he has derived from God. If any man possess that grace which saves him from scandalous enormities, let him consider that he has received it as a mere free gift from God's mercy. Let him not despise his neighbour who has it not; there was a time when he himself did not possess it; and a time may come when the man, whom he now affects to despise, and on whose conduct he is unmerciful and severe, may receive it; and probably may make a more evangelical use of it than he is now doing. This caution is necessary to many religious people, who imagine that they have been eternal objects of God's favour; and that others have been eternal objects of his hate, for no reason that they can show for either the one or the other. He can have little acquaintance with his own heart, who is not aware of the possibility of pride lurking under the exclamation, Why me! when comparing his own gracious state, with the unregenerate state of another.

8. Now ye [Corinthians, are full of secular wisdom; now ye are rich, both in wealth and spiritual gifts, chap. xiv. 26. Ye have reigned as kings, flourishing in the enjoyment of these things, in all tranquility and honour; without any want of us; and I would to God ye did reign, in deed, and not in conceit only, that ye also, poor, persecuted, and despised apostles, might reign with you.—Whitby.]

Though this paraphrase appears natural, yet I am of opinion that the apostle here intends a strong irony; and one, which, when taken in conjunction with what he had said before, must have stung them to the heart. It is not an unusual thing, kings without us; and I would to God ye did reign, that we also might reign with you.

9 For I think that God hath set forth ^a us the apostles last, ^b as it were appointed to death: for ^c we are made a ^d spectacle unto the world, and to angels, and to men.

10 ^a We are ^b fools for Christ's sake, but ye are wise in Christ; ^c we are weak, but ye are strong; ye are honourable, but we are despised.

11 ^a Even unto this present hour we both hunger, and thirst, and we are naked, and ^b are buffeted, and have no certain dwelling-place.

12 ^a And labour, working with our own hands: ^b being reviled, we bless; being persecuted, we suffer it:

^a Or, as the last apostles, &c.—^b Psalm 44:22. Rom. 8:35. Chap. 15:30, 31. 2 Cor. 4:11, & 6:5.—^c Heb. 10:33.—^d Or, theatre.—^e Chap. 2:3.—^f Acts 17:18, & 21. Chap. 15: & 2:14. & 3:18. for many people to forget, if not despise, the men by whom they were brought to the knowledge of the truth; and take up with others, to whom, in the things of God, they owe nothing. Reader, is this thy case?

9. God hath set forth us the apostles last [This whole passage is well explained by Dr. Whitby. "Here the apostle seems to allude to the Roman spectacles, της των θεσποχων, και πομπηχας ανδρῶνων, that of the Bestiarii and the gladiators, where, in the morning, men were brought upon the theatres to fight with wild beasts; and to them was allowed armour to defend themselves, and smite the beasts that assailed them: but in the meridian or noon-day spectacles, the gladiators were brought forth naked, and without any thing to defend themselves from the sword of the assailant; and he that then escaped was only kept for slaughter to another day, so that these men might be well called επιδαριοι, men appointed for death; and this being the last appearance on the theatre, for that day, they are said here to be set forth εχατοι, the last. Of these two spectacles, Seneca speaks thus: Epist. vii. "In the morning, men are exposed to lions and bears; at mid-day, to their spectators; those that kill, are exposed to one another; the victor is detained for another slaughter; the conclusion of the fight is death. The former fighting, compared to this, was mercy; now, it is mere butchery; they have nothing to cover them, their whole body is exposed to every blow; and every stroke produces a wound. &c." We are made a spectacle] Οτι θεσπον εγεννημεν, we are exhibited on the theatre to the world: we are lawful booty to all mankind, and particularly to the men of the world: who have their portion in this life. Angels are astonished at our treatment; and so are the more considerate part of men. Who, at that time, would have coveted the apostolate?

10. We are fools for Christ's sake [Here he still carries on the allusion to the public spectacles among the Romans; where they were accustomed to hiss, hoot, mock, and variously insult the poor victims. To this, Philo alludes in his embassy to Caius, speaking of the treatment which the Jews received at Rome, οσπερ γαρ εν θεατροις κατασπαρτρυμενοι, καταρροαυον, αμετα λησμονην. "For, as if exhibited upon a theatre, we are hissed, most outrageously hooted, and insulted beyond all bounds." Thus, says the apostle, we are fools on Christ's account; we walk in a conformity to his will, and we bear his cross; and did we walk according to the course of this world, or according to the man-pleasing conduct of some among you, we should have no such cross to bear.

We are wise in Christ [Surely all these expressions are meant ironically: the apostles were neither fools, nor weak, nor contemptible; nor were the Corinthians, morally speaking, wise, and strong, and honourable. Change the persons, and then the epithets will perfectly apply. 11. We both hunger and thirst, &c.] Who would then have been an apostle of Christ, even with all its spiritual honours and glories, who had not a soul filled with love both to God and man? and the fullest conviction of the reality of the doctrine he preached, and of that spiritual world in which alone he could expect rest? See the Introduction, sect. vi. Have no certain dwelling.] We are mere itinerant preachers; and when we set out in the morning, know not where, or whether we shall or not get a night's lodging. 12. Working with our own hands] They were obliged to labour, in order to supply themselves with the necessities of life while preaching the Gospel to others. This, no doubt, was the case in every place where no church had been as yet formed: afterward, the people of God supplied their ministers, according to their power, with food and raiment. Being reviled, we bless, &c.] What a most amiable picture does this exhibit of the power of the grace of Christ! Man is naturally a proud creature; and his pride prompts him always to avenge himself in whatever manner he can; and repay insult with insult. It is only the grace of Christ that can make a man patient in bearing injuries, and to render blessing for cursing; beneficence for malevolence, &c. The apostles suffered all indignities for Christ's sake; for it was on his account, that they were exposed to persecutions, &c.

13. Being defamed] Βλασφημενοι, being blasphemed. I have already remarked that βλασφημειν, signifies to speak injuriously, and may have reference either to God or to man. God is blasphemed when his attributes, doctrines, providence, or grace, are treated contemptuously; or any thing said of 13 Being defamed, we entreat: ^a we are made as the filth of the earth, and are the offscouring of all things unto this day.

14 I write not these things to shame you, but ^b as my beloved sons, I warn you.

15 For though ye have ten thousand instructors in Christ, yet have ye not many fathers: for ^c in Christ Jesus I have begotten you through the gospel.

16 Wherefore I beseech you, ^d be ye followers of me.

17 For this cause have I sent unto you ^e Timothy, ^f who is my beloved son, and faithful in the Lord; who shall bring you ^g into remembrance of my ways which be in Christ, as I have taught every where in every church.

18 Now some are puffed up, as though I would not come to you.

Him that is contrary to his holiness, justice, goodness, or truth. Man is blasphemed, when any thing injurious is spoken of his person, character, conduct, &c. Blaspheming against men, is any thing by which they are injured in their persons, characters, or property.

We are made as the filth of the earth—the off-scouring of all things] The Greek word which we render filth, is περιδαυματα, a purgation, or lustrative sacrifice; that which we translate off-scouring, is περιφύμα, a redemption sacrifice. To understand the full force of these words, as applied by the apostle in this place, we must observe that he alludes to certain customs among the heathens; who, in the time of some public calamity, chose out some unhappy men of the most abject and despicable character, to be a public expiation for them; these they maintained a whole year at the public expense; and then they led them out, crowned with flowers, as was customary in sacrifices: and, having heaped all the curses of the country upon their heads, and whipped them seven times, they burned them alive, and afterward their ashes were thrown into the sea, while the people said these words, περιφύμα μωρον γινω: θεω τον γραπτισην. Sometimes the person thus chosen, was thrown into the sea, as a sacrifice to Neptune; the people saying the words as before. Hence Origen says that our Lord, in giving up himself as a propitiation for our sins, was much more than his apostles; περικαθαρισμα τον κοσμου, παντων περιφύμα, the lustration of the world, and the peculiar sacrifice for all men. The apostle, therefore, means that he and his fellows were treated like those wretched beings who were judged to be fit for nothing, but to be expiatory victims to the infernal gods, for the safety and redemption of others. Our words, filth and off-scouring, convey no legitimate sense of the original. See several useful remarks upon these terms, in Pearce, Whitby, and Parkhurst.

14. I write not these things to shame you] It is not by way of finding fault with you, for not providing me with the necessities of life, that I write thus; but I do it to warn you to act differently for the time to come; and be not so ready to be drawn aside by every pretender to apostleship, to the neglect of those, to whom, under God, you owe your salvation.

15. For though ye have ten thousand instructors] Μυριοις παιδαγωγους, myriads of teachers, that is, an indefinite multitude; for so the word is often used. The παιδαγωγοι, from which we have our word pedagogue, which we improperly apply to a schoolmaster, was among the Greeks, the person or servant who attended a child, had the general care of him, and who led him to school for the purpose of being instructed by the διδασκαλος, or teacher. It seems there were many at Corinth who offered their services to instruct this people, and who were not well affected towards the apostle.

Not many fathers] Many offer to instruct you, who have no parental feeling for you; and how can they? you are not their spiritual children: you stand in this relation to me alone: for in Christ Jesus, by the power and unction of his Spirit, I have begotten you, I was the means of bringing you into a state of salvation, so that you have been born again; ye are my children alone in the Gospel. Schoettgen produces a good illustration of this from Shemoth Rabba, sect. 46. fol. 140. "A girl who had lost her parents, was educated by a guardian who was a good and faithful man, and took great care of her: when she was grown up, he proposed to bestow her in marriage: the scribe came, and beginning to write the contract, said, What is thy name? The maid answered, N. The scribe proceeded, What is the name of thy father? The maid was silent. Her guardian said, Why art thou silent? The maid replied, Because I know no other father but thee. For he who educates a child well, is more properly the father, than he who begot it." This is the same kind of sentiment which I have already quoted from Teſence, Rom. xvi. 13.

Naturā tu illi pater es: consilis ego.

ADELPH. Act. i. scene 2. verse 47.

Thou art his father by nature; I, by instruction. 16. Wherefore, I beseech you, be ye followers of me] It should rather be translated, Be ye imitators of me; μιμηται, from which we have our word mimic; which, though now used only in a bad or ludicrous sense, simply signifies an imitator of another person, whether in speech, manner, habit, or otherwise. As children should imitate their parents in preference to all others: he calls on them to imitate him, &c.

19¹ But I will come to you shortly, ^m if the Lord will, and will know, not the speech of them who are puff'd up, but the power.

1 Acts 19.21. Ch. 16.5. 2 Cor. 1.15,23 — m Acts 18.21. Rom. 13.21. Heb. 6.3.

he claims them for his children. He lived for God and eternity, seeking not his own glory, ennoblement, or ease; those sowers of sedition among them were actuated by different motives. Here, then, the apostle compares himself with them; follow and imitate me, as I follow and imitate Christ; do not imitate them who, from their worldly pursuits, show themselves to be actuated with a worldly spirit.

17. For this cause [That you imitate me, and know in what this consists]

I sent unto you Timothy] The same person to whom he wrote the two epistles that are still extant under his name; and whom he calls here his beloved son, one of his most intimate disciples; and whom he had been the means of bringing to God through Christ.

My ways which be in Christ] This person will also inform you the manner in which I regulate all the churches; and show to you that what I require of you, is no other than what I require of all the churches of Christ which I have formed; as I follow the same plan of discipline in every place. See the Introduction, sect. iii.

18. Some are puff'd up] Some of your teachers act with great haughtiness, imagining themselves to be safe, because they suppose that I shall not revisit Corinth.

19. But I will come to you shortly] God being my helper, I fully purpose to visit you; and then I shall put these proud men to the proof, not of their speech, eloquence, or pretensions to great knowledge and influence, but of their power, the authority they profess to have from God, and the evidences of that authority in the works they have performed. See the Introduction, sect. xi.

20. For the kingdom of God] The religion of the Lord Jesus is not in word, in human eloquence, excellence of speech, or even in doctrines; but in power, ex docetque, in the mighty energy of the Holy Spirit; enlightening, quickening, converting, and sanctifying believers; and all his genuine apostles are enabled, on all necessary occasions, to demonstrate the truth of their calling by miracles; for this the original word often means.

21. Shall I come unto you with a rod, or in love] Here he alludes to the case of the teacher and father, mentioned ver. 15. Shall I come to you with the authority of a teacher, and use the rod of discipline? or shall I come in the tenderness of a father, and entreat you to do what I have authority to enforce? Among the Jews, those who did not amend after being faithfully admonished, were whipped, either publicly or privately, in the synagogue. If on this, they did not amend, they were liable to be stoned. We see from the case of Ananias and Sapphira, Elymas the sorcerer, Hymeneus and Alexander, &c. that the apostles had sometimes the power to inflict the most awful punishments on transgressors. The Corinthians must have known this, and consequently have dreaded a visit from him in his apostolical authority. That there were many irregularities in this church, which required both the presence and authority of the apostle, we shall see in the subsequent chapters.

1. In the preceding chapter we find the ministers of God compared to STEWARDS, of whom the strictest fidelity is required. (1.) Fidelity to God, in publishing his truth with zeal, defending it with courage, and recommending it with patience. (2.) Fidelity to CHRIST, whose representatives they are, in honestly and fully recommending his grace and salvation, on the ground of his passion and death; and 20 For ^a the kingdom of God is not in word, but in power.

21 What will ye? ^b shall I come unto you with a rod, or in love, and in the spirit of meekness?

James 4.15 — a Ch. 2.4. 1 Thess. 1.5. — b 2 Cor. 10.9. & 13.10.

preaching his maxims in all their force and purity. (3.) Fidelity to the Church, in taking heed to keep up a graily discipline, admitting none into it but those who have abandoned their sins; and permitting none to continue in it, that do not continue to adorn the doctrine of God their Saviour. (4.) Fidelity to their own Ministry, walking so as to bring no blame on the Gospel; avoiding the extremes of indolent tenderness on one hand, and averse severity on the other. Considering the flock, not as their flock, but the flock of Jesus Christ; watching, ruling, and feeding it according to the order of their Divine Master.

2. A minister of God should act with great caution; every man, properly speaking, is placed between the secret judgment of God, and the public censure of men. He should do nothing rashly, that he may not justly incur the censure of men; and he should do nothing but in the loving fear of God, that he may not incur the censure of his Maker. The man who scarcely ever allows himself to be wrong, is one of whom it may be safely said, he is seldom right. It is possible for a man to mistake his own will for the will of God; and his own obstinacy, for inflexible adherence to his duty. With such persons, it is dangerous to have any commerce. Reader, pray to God to save thee from an inflated mind.

3. Zeal for God's truth is essentially necessary for every minister; and prudence is not less so. They should be wisely tempered together; but this is not always the case. Zeal, without prudence, is like a flambeau in the hands of a blind man: it may enlighten and warm, but it may also destroy the spiritual building. Human prudence should be avoided as well as intemperate zeal: this kind of prudence consists in a man's being careful not to bring himself into trouble; and not to hazard his reputation, credit, interest, or fortune, in the performance of his duty. Evangelical wisdom consists in our suffering and losing all things, rather than be wanting in the discharge of our obligations.

4. From St. Paul's account of himself, we find him often suffering the severest hardships in the prosecution of his duty. He had for his patrimony, hunger, thirst, nakedness, stripes, &c. and wandered about testifying the Gospel of the grace of God, without even a cottage that he could claim as his own. Let those who dwell in their elegant houses, who profess to be apostolic in their order, and evangelical in their doctrines, think of this. In their state of affluence they should have extraordinary degrees of zeal, humility, meekness, and charity, to recommend them to our notice as apostolical men. If God, in the course of his Providence, has saved them from an apostle's hardships, let them devote their lives to the service of that church in which they have their emoluments; and labour incessantly to build it up on its most holy faith. Let them not be masters to govern with rigour and imperiousness; but tender fathers, who feel every member in the church as their own child, and labour to feed the heavenly family with the mysteries of God, of which they are stewards.

5. And while the people require much of their spiritual pastors, these pastors have equal right to require much of their people. The obligation is not all one side; those who watch for our souls have a right not only to their own support, but to our reverence and confidence. Those who despise their ecclesiastical rulers, will soon despise the church of Christ itself, neglect its ordinances, lose sight of its doctrines, and at last neglect their own salvation.

CHAPTER V.

Account of the incestuous person, or of him who had married his father's wife, 1. The apostle reproves the Corinthians for their carelessness in this matter; and orders them to excommunicate the transgressor, 2—5. They are reprehended for their glorying, while such scandals were among them, 6. They must purge out the old leaven, that they may properly celebrate the Christian Pass-over, 7—9. They must not associate with any who, professing the Christian religion, was guilty of any scandalous vice; and must put away from them every evil person, 10—13. [A. M. 4060. A. D. 56. A. U. C. 849. An Inq. Neronis Cas. 3.]

IT is reported commonly that there is fornication among you, and such fornication as is not so much as ^a named among the Gentiles, ^b that one should have his ^c father's wife.

a Eph. 5.3 — b Lev. 18.6. Deut. 22.30. & 27.20.

NOTES.—Verse 1. There is fornication among you] The word porneia, which we translate fornication in this place, must be understood in its utmost latitude of meaning, as implying all kinds of impurity; for, that the Corinthians were notoriously guilty of every species of irregularity and debauch, we have already seen: and it is not likely that, in speaking on this subject, in reference to a people so very notorious, he would refer to one only species of impurity, and that not the most flagitious.

That one should have his father's wife] Commentators and critics have found great difficulties in this statement. One part of the case is sufficiently clear, that a man who professed Christianity, had illegal connexions with his father's wife: but, the principal question is, was his father alive or dead? Most think that the father was alive, and imagine that to this the apostle refers, 2 Cor. vii. 12. where, speaking of the person who did the wrong, he introduces also him who had suffered the wrong; which must mean the father; and the father then alive. After all that has been said on this subject, I think it most natural to conclude that the person in question had married the wife of his deceased father; not his own mother, but step-mother, then a widow.

This was a crime which the text says, was not so much as named among the Gentiles: the apostle must only mean that it was not accredited by them; for it certainly did often occur; but by their best writers who notice it, it was branded as superlatively infamous. Cicero styles it, scelus incredibile et inauditum; an incredible and unheard of wickedness; but it was heard of and practised: and there are several stories of this kind in heathen authors; but they reprobate, not commend it. The word ονομαζεται, named, is wanting in almost every MS. and version of importance, and certainly makes

3 For I verily, as absent in body, but present in spirit, have judged already, as though I were present, concerning him that hath so done this deed;

4 In the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, when ye are gathered together, and my spirit, with the power of our Lord Jesus Christ,

5 To deliver such an one unto Satan for the destruction of the flesh, that the spirit may be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus.

6 Your glorying is not good. Know ye not that a little leaven leaveneth the whole lump?

7 Purge out therefore the old leaven, that ye may be a new lump, as ye are unleavened. For even Christ our passover is sacrificed for us:

8 Therefore let us keep the feast, not with old leaven, for I, C. 3. 5.—Or, determined.—Matt. 16. 19; 18. 19. 2 Cor. 2. 10; 13. 10.—1 John 3. 6. Ps. 109. 6. 1 Tim. 1. 9.—Acts 25. 18.—1 Ver. 2. no part of the text. The words should be read, and such fornication as is not amongst the Gentiles—i. e. not allowed. Some think that this woman might have been a proselyte to the Jewish religion from heathenism; and the Rabbins taught that proselytism annulled all former relationship, and that a woman was at liberty, in such a case, to depart from an unbelieving husband, and to marry even with a believing son—i. e. of her husband by some former wife.

2. Ye are puffed up. Ye are full of strife and contention, relative to your parties and favourite teachers; and neglect the discipline of the church. Had you considered the greatness of this crime, ye would have rather mourned, and have put away this flagrant transgressor from among you.

Taken away from among you. Ἐκ μέσων ὑμῶν. This is supposed by some to refer to the punishment of death; by others to excommunication. The Christian church was, at this time, too young to have those forms of excommunication which were practised in succeeding centuries. Probably no more is meant than a simple disowning of the person, accompanied with the refusal to admit him to the sacred ordinances; or to have any intercourse or connexion with him.

3. Absent in body, but present in spirit. Perhaps St. Paul refers to the gift of the discernment of spirits, which it is very likely the apostles in general possessed on extraordinary occasions. He had already seen this matter so clearly, that he had determined on that sort of punishment which should be inflicted for this crime.

4. In the name of our Lord Jesus. Who is the Head of the church; and under whose authority every act is to be performed.

And my spirit. My apostolical authority derived from Him; with the power, αὐτῷ δυνάμει, with the miraculous energy of the Lord Jesus, which is to inflict the punishment that you pronounce:—

5. To deliver such an one unto Satan. There is no evidence that delivering to Satan was any form of excommunication known either among the Jews or the Christians. Lightfoot, Selden, and Schoettgen, who have searched all the Jewish records, have found nothing that answers to this: it was a species of punishment administered in extraordinary cases, in which the body and the mind of an incorrigible transgressor were delivered by the authority of God, into the power of Satan, to be tortured with diseases and terrors, as a warning to all; but, while the body and mind were thus tormented, the immortal spirit was under the influence of the Divine mercy; and the affliction, in all probability, was in general only for a season; though sometimes it was evidently unto death, as the destruction of the flesh seems to imply. But the soul found mercy at the hand of God: for, such a most extraordinary interference of God's power and justice, and of Satan's influence, could not fail to bring the person to a state of the deepest humiliation and contrition: and thus, while the flesh was destroyed, the spirit was saved in the day of the Lord Jesus. No such power as this now remains in the church of God; none such should be assumed, the pretensions to it are as wicked as they are vain. It was the same power by which Ananias and Sapphira were struck dead; and Elmas, the sorcerer, struck blind. Apostles, alone, were entrusted with it.

6. Your glorying is not good. You are triumphing in your superior knowledge, and busily employed in setting up and supporting your respective teachers, while the church is left under the most scandalous corruptions; corruptions which threaten its very existence, if not purged away.

Know ye not. With all your boasted wisdom, do you not know and acknowledge the truth of a common maxim, a little leaven leaveneth the whole lump? If this leaven, the incestuous person, be permitted to remain among you; if his conduct be not exposed by the most formidable censures, the flood-gates of impurity will be opened on the church, and the whole state of Christianity ruined in Corinth.

7. Purge out therefore the old leaven. As it is the custom of the Jews, previously to the pass-over, to search their houses, in the most diligent manner, for the old leaven, and throw it out, sweeping every part clean; so act with this incestuous person. I have already shown with what care the Jews purged their houses from all leaven, previously to the pass-over. See the note on Exod. xii. 8—19, and on the term passneither with the leaven of malice and wickedness; but with the unleavened bread of sincerity and truth.

9 I wrote unto you in an epistle not to company with fornicators:

10 Yet not altogether with the fornicators of this world, or with the covetous, or extortioners, or with idolaters; for then must ye needs go out of the world.

11 But now I have written unto you not to keep company, if any man that is called a brother be a fornicator, or covetous, or an idolater, or a railer, or a drunkard, or an extortioner; with such a one, no not to eat.

12 For what have I to do to judge them also that are without? do not ye judge them that are within?

13 But them that are without God judgeth. Therefore put away from among yourselves that wicked person.

over, and Christ as represented by this ancient Jewish sacrifice, see on Exod. xii. 27, and my Discourse on the Nature and Design of the Eucharist.

8. Therefore let us keep the feast. It is very likely that the time of the pass-over was now approaching; when the church of Corinth would be called to extraordinary acts of devotion, in commemorating the passion, death, and resurrection of Christ; and of this circumstance the apostle takes advantage, in his exhortation to the Corinthians. See the Introduction, sec. xii.

Not without leaven. Under the Christian dispensation, we must be saved, equally from Judaism, Heathenism, and from sin of every kind; malice and wickedness must be destroyed; and sincerity and truth, inward purity and outward holiness, take their place.

The apostle refers here not more to wicked principles, than to wicked men: let us keep the feast, not with the old leaven, the impure principles which actuated you while in your heathen state; neither with the leaven of malice and wickedness, κακίας καὶ πονηρίας, wickedness, radical depravity, producing unrighteousness in the life; nor with the persons who are thus influenced, and thus act; but with the unleavened bread, ἀλλ' ἐν ἀσμῶναις, but with upright and godly men, who have sincerity, εὐκαρῶνεια, such purity of affections and conduct that even the light of God, shining upon them, discovers no flaw; and truth, who have received the testimony of God, and who are inwardly as well as outwardly, what they profess to be.

The word πονηρίας, which we translate wickedness, is so very like to πορνείας, fornication, that some very ancient MSS. have the latter reading instead of the former; which, indeed, seems most natural in this place; as κακίας, which we translate malice, includes every thing that is implied in πονηρίας, wickedness; whereas, πορνείας, as being the subject in question, see ver. 1. would come more pointedly in here, Not with wickedness and fornication, or rather not with wicked men and fornicators; but I do not contend for this reading.

9. I wrote unto you in an epistle. The wisest, and best skilled in Biblical criticism, agree that the apostle does not refer to any other epistle than this; and that he speaks here of some general directions which he had given in the foregoing part of it; but which he had now, in some measure, changed and greatly strengthened, as we see from ver. 11. The words ἐγὼ γὰρ ἐν τῇ ἐπιστολῇ, may be translated, I had written to you in this epistle; for there are many instances in the New Testament, where the aurist, which is here used, and which is a sort of indefinite tense, is used for the perfect, and the plusquam perfect. Dr. Whitby produces several proofs of this, and contends that the conclusion drawn by some, viz. that it refers to some epistle that is lost, is not legitimately drawn from any premises which either this text or antiquity affords.

The principal evidence against this is 2 Cor. vii. 8. where ἐν τῇ ἐπιστολῇ, the same words as above, appear to refer to this first epistle. Possibly the apostle may refer to an epistle which he had written though not sent; for, on receiving farther information from Stephanus, Fortunatus, and Achaicus, relative to the state of the Corinthian church, he suppressed that, and wrote this, in which he considers the subject much more at large. See Dr. Lightfoot.

Not to company with fornicators. With which, as we have already seen, Corinth abounded. It was not only the grand sin, but staple of the place.

10. For then ye must needs go out of the world. What an awful picture of the general corruption of manners does this exhibit! The Christians at Corinth could not transact the ordinary affairs of life with any others than with fornicators, covetous persons, extortioners, railers, drunkards, and idolaters, because there were none others in the place! How necessary was Christianity in that city!

11. But now I have written. I not only write this, but I add more, that if any one who is called a brother, i. e. professes the Christian religion, be a fornicator, covetous, idolater, railer, drunkard, or extortioner, not even to eat with such; have no communion with such an one, in things either sacred or civil. You may transact your worldly concerns with a person that knows not God, and makes no profession of Christianity, whatever his moral character may be; but ye must not even thus far acknowledge a man professing Christianity, who is scandalous in his conduct. Let him have this extra mark of your abhorrence of all sin; and let the world see that the church of God does not tolerate iniquity.

12. For, what have I to do to judge them also that are without? The term without, χωρις, signifies those who were not members of the church, and in this sense its correspondent term χωρις ha-chitsonim, those that are without, is generally understood in the Jewish writers, where it frequently occurs. The word kat, also, which greatly disturbs the sense here, is wanting in ABCFG, and several others, with the Syriac, Coptic, Slavonic, Vulgate, and the Itala; together with several of the Fathers. The sentence, I think, with the omission of kat, also, should stand thus: Does it belong to me to pass sentence on those which are without, which are not members of the church? By no means, (οχι.) Pass ye sentence on them which are within, which are members of the church—Those which are without, which are not members of the church, God will pass sentence on, in that way in which he generally deals with the heathen world—But put ye away the evil from among yourselves. This is most evidently the apostle's meaning, and renders all comments unnecessary. In the last clause there appears to be an allusion to Deut. xvii. 7, where the like directions are given to the congregation of Israel, relative to a person found guilty of idolatry. Thou shalt put away the evil from among you—where the Version of the Septuagint is almost the same as that of the apostle; καὶ ἐκείνους τὸν νόμον τοῦ θεοῦ ἀπορρίπτῃς.

There are several important subjects in this chapter which intimately concern the Christian church in general.

1. If evil be tolerated in religious societies, the work of God cannot prosper there. If one scandal appear, it should be the cause of general humiliation and mourning to the followers of God where it occurs; because the soul of a brother is on the road to perdition; the cause of God so far betrayed and injured; and Christ re-crucified in the house of his friends. Pity should fill every heart towards the transgressors, and prayer for the backslider occupy all the members of the church.

2. Discipline must be exercised in the Christian church: without this, it will soon differ but little from the wickedness of this world. But what judgment, prudence, piety, and caution, are requisite in the execution of this most important branch of a minister's duty! he may be too easy and tender, and permit the gangrene to remain till the flock be infected with it. Or he may be rigid and severe, and destroy those parts that are vital, while only professing to take away what is vitiated. A backslider is one who once knew less or more of the salvation of Christ. Hear what God says concerning such, Thou, ye backsliders, for I am married unto you. See how unwilling I be to give them up! He suffers long, and is kind; do thou likewise; and when thou art obliged to cut off the offender from the church of Christ, follow him still with thy best advice and heartiest prayers.

3. A soul cut off from the flock of God is in an awful state! his outward defence is departed from him; and being no longer accountable to any for his conduct, he generally plunges into unprecedented depths of iniquity; and the last state of without the pale of God's church! remember it is here written, then that are without, God judgeth, ver. 13.

4. Christians who wish to retain the spirituality of their religion, should be very careful how they mingle with the world. He who is placed with the company of ungodly men, no matter howsoever witty or learned, is either himself one with them, or is drinking into their spirit. It is impossible to associate with such by choice, without receiving a portion of their contagion. A man may be amused or delighted with such people, but he will return even from the festivals of wit, with a lean soul. Howsoever contagious they may be, yet the church and the world are separated by an impassable gulf.

5. If all the fornicators, adulterers, drunkards, extortioners, and covetous persons which bear the Christian name, were to be publicly excommunicated from the Christian church, how many, and how awful would the examples be! If, however, the discipline of the visible church be so lax, that such characters are tolerated in it, they should consider that this is no passport to heaven. In the sight of God, they are not members of his church: their citizenship is not in heaven, and therefore they have no right to expect the heavenly inheritance. It is not under names, creeds, or professions, that men shall be saved at the last day—those alone who were holy; who were here conformed to the image of Christ, shall inherit the kingdom of God. Those who expect it in any other way, or on any other account, will be sadly deceived.

CHAPTER VI.

The Corinthians are reproved for their litigious disposition; brother going to law with brother, and that before the heathen. 1-6. They should suffer wrong, rather than do any, 7, 8. No unrighteous person can enter into the glory of God, 9, 10. Some of the Corinthians had been grievous sinners, but God had saved them, 11. Many things may be lawful, which are not at all times expedient, 12. Meats are for the belly, and the belly for meats; but the body is not for uncleanness, 13. Christ's resurrection a pledge of ours, 14. The bodies of Christians are members of Christ, and must not be defiled, 15-17. He that commits fornication sins against his own body, 18. Strong dissuaves from it, 19, 20. [A. M. 4060. A. D. 56. A. U. C. 809. An. Inp. Neronis Cæs. 3.]

DARE any of you, having a matter against another, go to law before the unjust, and not before the saints?

2 Do ye not know that the saints shall judge the world? and if the world shall be judged by you, are ye unworthy to judge the smallest matters?

3 Know ye not that we shall judge angels? how much more things that pertain to this life?

Ps. 49. 14. Dan. 7. 22. Matt. 19. 28. Luke 22. 31. Rev. 22. 3. & 21. & 24. 1.

NOTES—Verse 1. Dare any of you, &c. From the many things that are here reprehended by the apostle, we learn that the Christian church at Corinth was in a state of great imperfection; notwithstanding there were very many eminent characters among them. Divided as they were among themselves, there was no one person who possessed any public authority to settle differences between man and man; and therefore, as one party would not submit to the decisions of another, they were obliged to carry their contentions before heathen magistrates; and probably these very subjects of litigation arose out of their ecclesiastical divisions. The thing, and this issue of it, the apostle strongly reprehends.

Before the unjust, and not before the saints. The heathen judges were termed ἀδικοι, from their presumed righteousness in the administration of justice: here the apostle, by a paranomasia, calls them ἀδικοι, unrighteous persons—and it is very likely that at Corinth, where such corruption of manners reigned, there was a great perversion of public justice; and it is not to be supposed that matters relative to the Christians, were fairly decided. The Christians the apostle terms αγιοι, saints, which they were all, by profession; and doubtless many were so in spirit and in truth.

2. The saints shall judge the world. Nothing can be more evident than, that the writers of the New Testament often use κόσμος, the world, to signify the Jewish people; and sometimes the Roman empire, and the Jewish state; and in the former sense it is often used by our Lord. When, says he, the Son of man shall sit on the throne of his glory, then shall ye sit on twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel, Matt. xix. 28. It is supposed that he refers to the same subject as that mentioned here, the saints judging the world; and that St. Paul has his words in view, in what he says here to the Corinthians. By judging the twelve tribes of Israel, some have imagined, that having authority in the church, is merely intended; but Dr. Lightfoot contends that the words

4 If then ye have judgments of things pertaining to this life, set them to judge who are least esteemed in the church.

5 I speak to your shame. Is it so, that there is not a wise man among you? no, not one that shall be able to judge between his brethren?

6 But brother goeth to law with brother, and that before the unbelievers!

b. 2 Pet. 2. 4. Jude 6. & Chap. 5. 12.

refer to the coming of our Lord to execute judgment on the Jews, and to destroy their state; and that the doctrine of the apostles, not themselves, was to judge and condemn that most disobedient people. The place before us is generally understood to imply that the redeemed of the Lord shall be, on the great day, assessors with Him, in judgment; and shall give their award in the determinations of his justice. On reviewing this subject, I am fully of opinion that this cannot be the meaning of the words; and that no such assessorship, as is contended for, ever will take place; and that the interpretation is charged with a multitude of absurdities.

1. The saints themselves, are to appear before the judgment seat of Christ, and shall be judged by him, after which they shall reign with him; but it is never said in Scripture that they shall judge with him.

2. It would be absurd to suppose that thrones should be erected, for the purpose of saints sitting on them to give their approbation in the condemnation of the wicked: of what use can such an approbation be? is it necessary to the validity of Christ's decision? and will not even the damned themselves, without this, acknowledge the justice of their doom? I therefore think with Dr. Lightfoot that these words of the apostle refer to the prediction of Daniel, chap. vii. 18, 27, and such like prophecies, where the kingdoms of the earth are promised to the sons of the Most High; that is, that a time shall come when Christianity shall so far prevail, that the civil government of the world shall be administered by Christians, which at that time, was administered by Heathens. And this is even now true of all those parts of the earth, which may be considered of the greatest political consequence. They profess Christianity, and the kings and other governors are Christians in this general sense of the term.

3. Know ye not, that ye shall judge angels. Dr. Lightfoot observes that "the apostle does not say here, as he said before, the saints shall judge angels; but we shall judge them. By 7 Now, therefore, there is utterly a fault among you, because ye go to law one with another. ^d Why do ye not rather take wrong? why do ye not rather suffer yourselves to be defrauded?

8 Nay, ye do wrong, and defraud, ^e and that your brethren. 9 Know ye not that the unrighteous shall not inherit the kingdom of God? Be not deceived; neither fornicators, nor idolaters, nor adulterers, nor effeminate, nor abusers of themselves with mankind, 10 Nor thieves, nor covetous, nor drunkards, nor revilers, nor extortioners, shall inherit the kingdom of God.

^d Prov. 20:22; Matt. 5:29, 40; Luke 6:29; Rom. 12:17, 19. 1 Thess. 5:13—e 1 Thess. 4:6—1 Cor. 15:19; Gal. 3:21; Eph. 5:5. 1 Tim. 9:1; Heb. 12:14 & 13:4; Rev. 22:15—^e Ch. 12:2; Eph. 2:2, 4 & 22 & 5:8; Col. 3:7; Tit. 3:3.

angels all confess that demons are intended; but certainly all saints, according to the latitude with which that word is understood: i. e. all who profess Christianity, shall not judge angels. Nor is this judging of angels to be understood of the last day; but the apostle speaks of the ministers of the Gospel, himself and others, who, by the preaching of the Gospel, through the power of Christ, should spoil the devils of their oracles and their idols: should deprive them of their worship; should drive them out of their seats, and strip them of their dominion. Thus would God subdue the whole world under the Christian power, so that Christian magistrates should judge men, and Christian ministers judge devils.

4. Things pertaining to this life]. They could examine all civil cases among themselves, which they were permitted to determine without any hindrance from the heathen governments under which they lived.

Who are least esteemed in the church? Τὸν ἐξουθενήσαντες, those who were in the lowest order of Judges; for the apostle may refer here to the order in the Jewish benches, as Dr. Lightfoot conjectures; of which there were five, viz.

1. The great Sanhedrim, consisting of 72 elders, which presided in Jerusalem.

2. The little Sanhedrim of 25, in large cities out of Jerusalem.

3. The bench of Three in every synagogue.

4. The Authorized, or authentic Bench.

5. The Bench not authorized, ἐξουθενήσαντες. This latter Bench was so called, because it received not its authority immediately from the Sanhedrim; but was chosen by the parties between whom the controversy depended. The apostle certainly does not mean persons of no repute; but such as these arbitrators, who were chosen for the purpose of settling private differences, and preventing them from going before the regular magistrates. The following verse makes it pretty evident that the apostle refers to this lower kind of tribunal; and hence he says:

5. Is it so? that there is not a wise man among you? Have you none among yourselves that can be arbitrators of the differences which arise, that you go to the heathen tribunals!

6. Brother seek to law with brother.]. One Christian sues another at law! This is almost as great a scandal as can exist in a Christian society. Those in a religious community who will not submit to a proper arbitration, made by persons among themselves, should be expelled from the church of God.

7. There is utterly a fault among you.]. There is a most manifest defect among you.—1. Of peaceableness.—2. Of brotherly love.—3. Of mutual confidence, and 4. Of reverence for God, and concern for the honour of his cause.

Why do ye not rather take wrong? Better suffer an injury than take a method of redressing yourselves, which must injure your own peace, and greatly dishonour the cause of God.

8. Nay, ye do wrong.]. Far from suffering, ye are the aggressors, and defraud your pious, long-suffering brethren, who submit to this wrong, rather than take those methods of redressing their grievances which the spirit of Christianity forbids. Probably the apostle refers to him who had taken his father's wife.

9. The unrighteous shall not inherit the kingdom.]. The unrighteous, ἀδικοί, those who act contrary to right; cannot inherit, for the inheritance is by right. He who is not a child of God, has no right to the family inheritance; for that inheritance is for the children. If children, then heirs, heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ, Gal. iv. 5, 6. There are here two classes of transgressors which the apostle excludes from the kingdom of God; and any man who is guilty of any one of the evils mentioned above, is thereby excluded from this kingdom, whether it imply the church of Christ here below, or the state of glory hereafter.

Several of the evils here enumerated will not bear to be particularly explained; they are, however, sufficiently plain of themselves, and show us what abominations were commonly practised among the Corinthians.

11. And such were some of you.]. It was not with the prospect of collecting saints, that the apostles went about preaching the Gospel of the kingdom. None but sinners were to be found over the face of the earth; they preached that sinners might be converted unto God, made saints, and constituted into a church; and this was the effect, as well as the object, of their preaching.

But ye are washed.]. Several suppose that the order in which the operations of the grace of God take place in the soul, is here inverted; but I am of a very different mind. Every thing will appear here in its order, when we understand the terms used by the apostle.

Ye are washed, ἀπελούασθε; ye have been baptized into 11 And such were some of you; but ye are washed, but ye are sanctified, but ye are justified in the name of the Lord Jesus, and by the Spirit of our God.

12 All things are lawful unto me, but all things are not expedient; all things are lawful for me, but I will not be brought under the power of any.

13 Meats for the belly, and the belly for meats; but God shall destroy both it and them. Now the body is not for fornication, but for the Lord; and the Lord for the body.

14 And God hath both raised up the Lord, and will also raise up us by his own power.

^h Chap. 1:20; Heb. 10:22—ⁱ Ch. 10:23—^k Or, profitable.—1 Matt. 15:17. Rom. 14:17. Col. 2:24; 23—^m Ver. 15, 19, 29. 1 Thess. 4:3, 7.—ⁿ Eph. 5:32.—^o Rom. 6:5, 8 & 3:11. 2 Cor. 4:14—^p Eph. 1:19, 20.

the Christian faith: and ye have been promised in this baptism to put off all filthiness of the flesh and spirit; and the washing of your bodies is emblematical of the purification of your souls.

Ye are sanctified.]. Ἁγιασθε; from a, privative, and h, the earth; ye are separated from earthly things, to be connected with spiritual. Ye are separated from time, to be connected with eternity. Ye are separated from idols, to be joined to the living God. Separation from common, earthly, or sinful uses, to be wholly employed in the service of the true God, is the ideal meaning of this word, both in the Old and New Testaments. It was in consequence of their being separated from the world that they became a church of God. Ye were formerly workers of iniquity, and associated with workers of iniquity; but now ye are separated from them, and united together to work out your salvation with fear and trembling before God.

Ye are justified.]. Ἐδικαιοθῆτε. Ye have been brought into a state of favour with God, your sins having been blotted out through Christ Jesus; the Spirit of God witnessing the same to your conscience, and carrying on by his energy, the great work of regeneration in your hearts. The process here is plain and simple.—1. Paul and his brother apostles preached the Gospel at Corinth, and besought the people to turn from darkness to light: from idol vanities to the living God; and to believe in the Lord Jesus for the remission of sins. 2. The people who heard were convinced of the divine truths delivered by the apostle: and flocked to baptism. 3. They were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus, and thus took upon them the public profession of the Gospel. 4. Being now baptized into the Christian faith, they were separated from idols and idolaters, and became incorporated with the church of God. 5. As penitents, they were led to the Lord Jesus, for justification; which they received through faith in his blood. 6. Being justified freely, having their sins forgiven through the redemption that is in Jesus; they received the Spirit of God, to attest this glorious work of grace to their consciences; and thus became possessed of that principle of righteousness, that true heaven which was to leaven the whole lump, producing that universal holiness without which none can see the Lord.

12. All things are lawful unto me.]. It is likely that some of the Corinthians had pleaded that the offence of the man who had his father's wife, as well as the eating of the things offered to idols, was not contrary to the law as it then stood. To this the apostle answers, though such a thing be lawful, yet the case of fornication, mentioned chap. v. 1. is not expedient, or οὐ συμφέρει, it is not agreeable to propriety, decency, order, and purity. It is contrary to the established usages of the best and most enlightened nations: and should not be tolerated in the church of Christ.

They might also be led to argue in favour of their eating things offered to idols, and attending idol feasts thus: that an idol was nothing in the world; and as food was provided by the bounty of God, a man might partake of it any where without defiling his conscience, or committing sin against the Creator; this excuse also the apostle refers to. All these things are lawful, taken up merely in the light that none of your laws is against the first; and that, on the ground that an idol is nothing in the world, there can be no reason against the last. But I will not be brought under the power of any! Allowing that they are all lawful, or at least that there is no law against them, yet they are not expedient; there is no necessity for them; and some of them are abominable and forbidden by the law of God and nature, whether forbidden by yours or not: while others, such as eating meats offered to idols, will almost necessarily lead to bad moral consequences: and who, that is a Christian, would obey his appetite so far, as to do these things for the sake of gratification? A man is brought under the power of any thing which he cannot give up. He is the slave of that thing whatsoever it be, which he cannot relinquish; and then, to him, it is sin.

13. Meats for the belly.]. I suppose that κοιλία means the animal appetite, or propensity to food, &c. and we may conceive the apostle to reason thus: I acknowledge that God has provided different kinds of aliments for the appetite of man: and, among others, those which are generally offered to idols: and he has adapted the appetite to these aliments, and the aliments to the appetite; but God shall destroy both it and them; none of these is eternal: all these lower appetites and sensations will be destroyed by death, and have no existence in the resurrection body: and the earth and its productions shall be burnt up.

Now the body is not for fornication.]. Though God made an 15 Know ye not that ^a your bodies are the members of Christ? shall I then take the members of Christ and make them the members of a harlot? God forbid.

16 What? know ye not that he which is joined to a harlot is one body? for ^b two, saith he, shall be one flesh.

17 ^c But he that is joined unto the Lord is one spirit.

18 ^d Flee fornication. Every sin that a man doeth is without blame unto him: ^e but fornication, and that which is so joined unto it, defileth a man, as he defiles himself, who toucheth the altar of God.

appetite for food, and provided food for that appetite; yet he has not made the body for any unlawfulness, nor indulgence in sensuality, but he has made it for Christ; and Christ was provided to be a sacrifice for this body as well as for the soul, by taking our nature upon him; so that now, as human beings, we have an intimate relationship to the Lord; and our bodies are made not only for his service, but to be his temples.

14. And God hath both raised up the Lord. He has raised up the human nature of Christ from the grave, as a pledge of our resurrection; and will also raise us up by his own power, that we may dwell with him in glory for ever.

15. Know ye not that your bodies are the members of Christ? Because he has taken your nature upon him; and thus, as believers in him, ye are the members of Christ.

Shall I then take, &c.] Shall we, who profess to be members of his body, of his flesh, and of his bones, connect ourselves with harlots, and thus dishonour and pollute the bodies which are members of Christ? God forbid! These passages admit of a more liberal interpretation. This, if given at all, I must give in a strange language.

Membra humana ad generationem pertinentia, recavimus Membra Christi, quia mysterium conjunctionis Christi et Ecclesie, per conjunctionem carnis et sanguinis indigimus. Ephes. v. 32. In Yel. Test. dem valent de membro in seculo, quippe quod circumcissio, lingua signa faderis, honoraria est. Vide Schottgen, Hor. Hebr.

16. He that is joined to a harlot, is one body.] In Solus Genes. fol. 19. we have these remarkable words:—Unusquisque connectit se cum alterius uxore sua, id est, in effect, renouat se cum benedictio Dei, et ecclesie dei Israel.

17. Is one spirit? He who is united to God, by faith in Christ Jesus, receives his Spirit, and becomes a partaker of the Divine nature.—Who can charge such a relationship for communion with a harlot; or for any kind of sensual gratification? He who can, must be far and deeply fallen!

18. Flee fornication! Abominate, detest, and escape from every kind of uncleanness. Some sins, or solicitations to sin, may be reasoned with; in the above cases, if you partly, you are undone; reason not, but fly!

causes which induce men to marry: 1. Impure desire: 2. To get riches: 3. To become honourable: 4. For the glory of God. Those who marry through the first motive, beget wicked and rebellious children. Those who marry for the sake of riches, have the curse of aggrandizing their family, their families shall be diminished. Those who marry to promote the glory of God, their children shall be holy, and by them shall the true church be increased.¹

3. Let the husband render unto the wife due benevolence] Ἐν ἀγάπῃ ὡς ὁ κύριος: though our version is no translation of the original, yet few persons are at a loss for the meaning; and the context is sufficiently plain. Some have rendered the words, not unaptly, the matrimonial debt, or conjugal duty; that which a wife owes to her husband, and the husband to his wife; and which they must take care mutually to render, else alienation of affection will be the infallible consequence; and this, in numberless instances, has led to adulterous connexions. In such cases, the wife has to blame herself for the infidelity of her husband; and the husband for that of his wife. What miserable work has been made in the peace of families, by a wife or a husband pretending to be wiser than the apostle, and too holy and spiritual to keep the commandments of God!

4. The wife hath not power, &c.] Her person belongs to her husband; her husband's person belongs to her: neither of them has any authority to refuse what the other has a matrimonial right to demand. The woman that would act so, is either a knave or a fool. It would be trifling to attribute her conduct to any other cause than weakness or folly. She does not love her husband; or she loves some one else better than her husband; or she makes pretensions to a fancied sanctity unsupported by Scripture or common sense.

5. Deffraud ye not one the other] What ye owe thus to each other, never refuse paying: unless by mutual consent; and let that be only for a certain time, when prudence dictates the temporary separation: or when some extraordinary spiritual occasion may render it mutually agreeable; in order that ye may fast and pray, and derive the greatest possible benefit from these duties, by being enabled to wait on the Lord without distraction.

That Satan tempt you not for your incontinency] It is most evident that the separations permitted by the apostle, for he enjoins none, are only for a season: on extraordinary occasions: and, that the persons may come together again, lest Satan taking advantage of their matrimonial abstinence, might tempt either party to illicit commerce.

There are a multitude of rules prescribed in such cases by the rabbinis, and indeed even by heathen writers; for this was a matter in which common sense could always judge; and under the direction of experience, heathens, as well as those favoured with Divine Revelation, could see what was proper in all such cases.

Incontinence, aspasia, want of strength to regulate one's desires or appetites; from a negalite, and spuros, strength. It is remarkable, that the apostle supposes that even this temporary continence might produce incontinence: and universal observation confirms the supposition.

6. I speak this by permission, &c.] It was a constant custom of the more conscientious rabbins, to make a difference between the things which they enjoined on their own judgment; and those which they built on the authority of the law. Thus Rabbi Tanhum, "The washing of hands before meat, is in our own power: washing after meat, is commanded." In relation to this point, Dr. Lightfoot produces some examples from the Jewish writers: "The man is commanded concerning begetting and multiplying, but not the woman. And when does the man come under this command? From the age of sixteen or seventeen years: but if he exceeds twenty years without marrying, behold he violates, and renders an affirmative precept vain. The Gemara says, It is forbidden a man to be without a wife; because it is written, It is not good for man to be alone. And whosoever gives not himself to generation and multiplying, is all one with a murderer: he is as though he diminished from the image of God," &c. We may understand the apostle here as saying that the directions already given were from his own judgment, and not from any divine inspiration; and we may take it for granted that where he does not make this observation, he is writing under the immediate effluus of the Holy Spirit.

7. For, I would that all men, &c.] He wished that all that were then in the church, were like himself, unmarried; but this was in reference to the necessities of the church, or what he calls, ver. 26. the present disorder: for, it never could every man hath his proper gift of God, one after this manner, and another after that.

8 I say, therefore, to the unmarried and widows, * It is good for them if they abide even as I:

9 But ¹ if they cannot contain, let them marry; for it is better to marry than to burn.

10 And unto the married, I command, ² yet not I, but the Lord, ³ Let not the wife depart from her husband.

11 But, and if she depart, let her remain unmarried, or be reconciled to her husband: and let not the husband put away his wife.

^h Ch 9. 5.—ⁱ Matt. 19. 12. Ch. 12. 11.—^k Ver. 1. 26.—^l 1 Tim. 5. 14.—^m See Ver. 12. 25, 40.—ⁿ Mat. 12. 14. 16. Mat. 5. 32. & 19. 6. 9. Mark 10. 11. 12. Luke 16. 18.

be his wish that marriage should cease among men; and that human beings should no longer be propagated upon earth: nor could he wish that the church of Christ should always be composed of single persons; this would have been equally absurd. But as the church was then in straits and difficulties, it was much better for its single members, not to encumber themselves with domestic embarrassments.

Every man hath his proper gift of God] Continence is a state that cannot be acquired by human art or industry; a man has it from God, or not at all: and if he have it from God, he has it from him as the author of his nature: for where it does not exist naturally, it never can exist but either by miraculous interference, which should never be expected; or by chirurgical operation, which is a shocking abomination in the sight of God. See the note on Matt. xix. 12.

8. The unmarried and widows] It is supposed that the apostle speaks here of men who had been married, in the word ἀγαπᾷ, but were now widowers; as he does of women who had been married, in the word ἡγάγα, but were now widows. And when he says ὡς καὶ ἐγώ, even as I, he means that he himself was a widower; for several of the ancients rank Paul among the married apostles.

9. But if they cannot contain] If they find it inconvenient and uncomfortable to continue as widowers and widows, let them remarry.

It is better to marry than to burn] Bishop Pearce translates the original thus; for it is better to marry than to be made uneasy. Προσβάλλει, says he, "signifies primarily to burn, but in a metaphorical sense, to be troubled, vexed, or made uneasy." So in 2 Cor. xi. 29. who is offended and is burnt unhappy, καὶ κακὸν ὄψιν ὑποπαύει, and I am not troubled. So in Trochimus, Ὁ ὁμιλίαν, is I vex him. It would be well to soften the sense of this word, in reference to the subject of which the apostle speaks. He cannot mean burning with lust, no more than Virgil means so, when he says, Æn. iv. ver. 63. Uritur infelix Dido, the unfortunate Dido is tormented; and in Eccl. ii. 68. Me invenit urit amor; love torments me. All this may be said with the strictest truth in such cases, where the impure fire, referred to above, has no existence.

A curious story, which certainly casts light on the phraseology of this place, is related by Dr. Lightfoot, from the tract Kiddushin, fol. 81. "Some captive women were brought to Nehardon, and disposed in the house, and the upper room of Rabbi Amram. They took away the ladder (that the women might not get down, but stay there till they were ransomed.) As one of these captives passed by the window, the light of her great beauty shined into the house. Amram, [captivated] set up the ladder; and when he was got to the middle of the steps, [checked by his conscience] he stopped short, and with a loud voice cried out FIRE! FIRE! in the house of Amram! [This he did that the neighbours flocking in, he might be obliged to desist from the evil affection which now prevailed in him.] The rabbins ran to him, [and seeing no fire] they said, Thou hast disgraced us. To which he replied, It is better that ye be disgraced in the house of Amram in this world, than that ye be disgraced by me in the world to come. He then adjured that evil affection to go out of him; and it went out as a pillar of FIRE. Amram said, Thou art FIRE, and I am FLESH; yet for all that I have prevailed against thee." From this story much instruction may be derived.

10. I command, yet not I, but the Lord] I do not give my own private opinion, or judgment, in this case; for the Lord Jesus commands, that man shall not put asunder them whom God hath joined, Mat. v. 32. xix. 6. And God has said the same, Gen. ii. 24. The following extracts will prove, that the law among the Jews was very loose relative to the firmness of the marriage bond.

A woman might put away, or depart from her husband, by giving this simple reason to the elders, who would give the following certificate:—"In — day, of — week, of — year, A daughter of B. put away before us, and said: My mother, or my brethren, deceived me, and wedded me, or betrothed me, when I was a very young maid, to C. son of D. but I now reveal my mind before you, that I will not have him."

Sometimes they parted with mutual consent, and this, also, was considered legal, as was, also, the marriage of the separated parties to others; witness the following story: "A good man had a good wife; but because they had no children, they mutually put away each other. The good man married a bad (a heathen,) wife, and she made him bad, (a heathen;) the good woman married a bad (a heathen) husband, and she made him good."

12 But to the rest speak I, ² not the Lord: If any brother hath a wife that believeth not, and she be pleased to dwell with him, let him not put her away.

13 And the woman which hath a husband that believeth not, and if he be pleased to dwell with her, let her not leave him.

14 For the unbelieving husband is sanctified by the wife, and the unbelieving wife is sanctified by the husband: else ye were your children unclean; but now are they holy.

15 But if the unbelieving depart, let him depart. A brother or a sister is not under bondage in such cases: but God hath called us to peace.

16 For what knowest thou, O wife, whether thou shalt save a Ver. 6. p. 1. For 3. 1. 2. — M. 1. 2. 15. — Rom. 12. 18. & 14. 19. Ch. 14. 33. Heb. 12. 14. — Gr. in place of 1 Pet. 3. 1. a Gr. what.

Divorces were easily obtained among them, and they considered them the dissolving of the marriage bond: and, in consequence of these, the parties might re-marry with others. This was contrary to the original institution of marriage; and is opposed both by our Lord and the apostle.

11. But, and if she depart] He puts the case as probable, because it was frequent; but lays it under restrictions.

Let her remain unmarried] She departs at her own peril; but she must not marry another: she must either continue unmarried, or be reduced to her husband.

And let not the husband put away his wife] Divorces cannot be allowed, but in the case of fornication; an act of this kind dissolves the marriage rate; but nothing else can. It is a fact, that, among the Jews, the wife had just as much right to put away her husband, as the husband had to put away his wife. As divorces were granted, it was right that each should have an equal power; for this served as a mutual check.

12. But to the rest speak I, not the Lord] As if he had said, for what I have already spoken, I have the testimony of the Lord by Moses; and of my own Lord and Master Christ. But for the directions which I am now about to give, there is no written testimony; and I deliver them now for the first time. These words do not intimate, that the apostle was not now under the influence of the Divine Spirit; but, that there was nothing in the sacred writings which bore directly on this point.

If any brother] A Christian man, have a wife that believeth not, i. e. who is a heathen; not yet converted to the Christian faith; and she be pleased to dwell with him, notwithstanding his turning Christian since their marriage; let him not put her away, because she still continues in her heathen superstition.

13. And the woman] Converted from heathenism to the Christian faith; which hath a husband, who still abides in heathenism; if he be pleased to dwell with her, notwithstanding she has become a Christian since their marriage, let her not leave him because he still continues a heathen.

14. The unbelieving husband is sanctified by the wife] Or, rather, is to be reputed as sanctified, on account of his wife: she being a Christian woman, and he, though a heathen being, by marriage, one flesh with her; her sanctity, as far as it refers to outward things, may be considered as imputed to him, so as to render their connexion not unbeneficial. The case is the same when the wife is a heathen, and the husband a Christian. The word sanctification, here, is to be applied much more to the Christian state than to any moral change in the persons: for, Αγιοι, saints, is a common term for Christians, those who were baptized into the faith of Christ; and, as its corresponding term, קדושים, kedashim, signified all the Jews, who were in the covenant of God by circumcision. The heathens in question were considered to be in this holy state by means of their connexion with those who were by their Christian profession saints.

Else were your children unclean] If this kind of relative sanctification were not allowed, the children of these persons could not be received into the Christian church, nor enjoy any rights or privileges as Christians; but the church of God never scrupled to admit such children as members, just as well as she did those who had sprung from parents, both of whom were Christians.

The Jews considered a child as born out of holiness, whose parents were not proselytes at the time of the birth, though afterward they became proselytes. On the other hand, they considered the children of heathens born in holiness, provided the parents became proselytes before the birth. All the children of the heathens were reputed unclean by the Jews; and all their own children holy. — See Dr. Lightfoot. This shows clearly what the apostle's meaning is.

If we consider the apostle as speaking of the children of heathens, we shall get a remarkable comment on this passage from Tertullian, who, in his treatise De Carne Christi, chaps. 37, 39, gives us a melancholy account of the height to which superstition and idolatry had arrived in his time, among the Romans. "A child," says he, "from its very conception, was dedicated to the idols and demons they worshipped. While pregnant, the mother had her body swathed round with bandages, prepared with idolatrous rites. The embryo they conceived to be under the inspection of the goddess Almona, who nourished it in the womb. Nona and Decima took care that it should be born in the ninth or tenth month. Partula adjusted every thing relative to the labour; and Lucina ushered it into the light. During the week preceding the birth, a table was spread for Juno; and, on the last day, certain persons were called together to mark the moment on which the parce or fates had fixed its destiny. The first step the child set on the earth, was consecrated to the goddess Statina; and, finally, some of the hair was cut off, or the whole head shaven, and the hair offered to some god, or goddess, through some public or private motive of devotion." He adds, that "no child among the heathens was born in a state of purity; and it is not to be wondered at," says he, "that demons possess them from their youth, seeing they were thus early dedicated to their service." In reference to this, he thinks St. Paul speaks in the verses before us, "The unbelieving husband is sanctified by the wife—else were your children unclean; but now are they holy; i. e. "As the parents were converted to the Christian faith, the child comes into the world without these impure and unallowed rites; and is, from its infancy, consecrated to the true God."

15. But if the unbelieving depart] Whether husband or wife; if such obstinately depart and utterly refuse all cohabitation; a brother or a sister, a Christian man or woman is not under bondage to any particular laws, so as to be prevented from re-marrying; such, probably, the law stood then; but it is not so now: for the marriage can only be dissolved by death, or by the ecclesiastical court. Even fornication, or adultery, does not dissolve the marriage contract; nor will the obstinate separation of any of the parties, however long continued, give the party abandoned, authority to re-marry. If the person have been beyond sea, and not heard of for seven years, it is presumed he may be dead, and marriage has been allowed in such cases. "If there be no person to complain, it may be presumed that there is none injured." But I have known instances where even a marriage after seven years' absence has been very unfortunate; to a husband, retreating at the end of ten or twelve years, and, to his utter distress, finding his wife married to another man, and with issue of that marriage! There can be no safety in this case, unless there be absolute certainty of the death of the party in question.

God hath called us to peace] The refractory and disagreeing party should not be compelled to fulfil such matrimonial engagements, as would produce continual jarring and discord. At the same time, each should take care that he give no cause for disagreements and separation; for the author of the Christian religion, is the author of peace, and has called us to it.

16. For what knowest thou, O wife] You that are Christians, and who have heathen partners, do not give them up because they are such; for you may become the means of saving them unto eternal life. Bear your cross, and look up to God, and he may give your unbelieving husband, or wife, to your prayers.

17. But as God hath distributed to every man, &c.] Let every man fulfil the duties of the state to which God, in the course of his providence, has called him.

So ordain I in all churches] I do not lay on you a burthen which others are not called to bear: this is the general rule which, by the authority of God, I impose on every Christian society.

18. Is any man called, being circumcised?] Is any man, who was formerly a Jew, converted to Christianity.

Let him not become uncircumcised] Let him not endeavour to abolish the sign of the old covenant, which he bears in his flesh. The Greek words, ο περιτομιας, let him not draw over, is evidently an elliptical expression; the word νεκροφωριαν, the foreskin, being understood; which, indeed, is added by the Armenian and the Itala; and several of the Latin Fathers. It is a fact, that it was possible, by the assistance of art, to do this; and Celsus, himself, prescribes the mode. De Medic. vii. 25, by frequent stretching, the circumcised skin could be again so drawn over, as to prevent the ancient sign of circumcision from appearing. Some, in their zeal against Judaism, endeavoured to abolish this sign of it in their flesh: it is most evidently against this, that the apostle speaks. Many false Jews made use of this practice, that they might pass through heathen countries unobserved; otherwise, in frequenting the baths, they would have been detected.

Let him not be circumcised] Let no man, who, being a Gentile, has been converted to the Christian faith, submit to circumcision, as something necessary to his salvation.

19. Circumcision is nothing] Circumcision itself, though commanded of God, is nothing of itself; it being only a sign of the justification, which should be afterward received by faith. At present, neither it, nor its opposite, either hinder or further the work of grace; and, keeping the commandments of fur-

21 Art thou called being a servant? care not for it: but if thou mayest be made free, use it rather.

22 For he that is called in the Lord, being a servant, is ^a the Lord's freeman: likewise also he that is called, being free, is ^a Christ's servant.

23 ^a Ye are bought with a price; be not ye the servants of men. 24 Brethren, ^a let every man, wherein he is called, therein abide with God.

25 Now concerning virgins, ^a I have no commandment of the Lord: yet I give my judgment, as one ^a that hath obtained mercy of the Lord ^b to be faithful.

26 I suppose, therefore, that this is good for the present ^a distress, I say, ^a that it is good for a man so to be.

God, from his love shed abroad in a believing heart, is the sum and substance of religion.

20. Let every man abide in the same calling] As both the circumcised and uncircumcised, in Christ have the same advantages, and to their believing, the same facilities; so any situation of life is equally friendly to the salvation of the soul, if a man be faithful to the grace he has received. Therefore, in all situations, a Christian should be content: for all things work together for good to him who loves God.

21. Art thou called being a servant? Δουλος εκληθης; art thou converted to Christ, while thou art a slave? the property of another person, and bought with his money: care not for it: this will not injure thy Christian condition: but if thou canst obtain thy liberty, use it rather; prefer this state for the sake of freedom, and the temporal advantages connected with it.

22. For he that is called] The man who, being a slave, is converted to the Christian faith, is the Lord's freeman; his condition as a slave does not vitiate any of the privileges to which he is entitled as a Christian: on the other hand, all free men, who receive the grace of Christ, must consider themselves the slaves of the Lord, i. e. his real property, to be employed and disposed of according to his godly wisdom; who, notwithstanding his state of subjection, will find the service of his Master to be perfect freedom.

23. Ye are bought with a price] As truly as your bodies have become the property of your masters, in consequence of his paying down a price for you: so sure you are now the Lord's property in consequence of your being purchased by the blood of Christ.

Some render this verse interrogatively. Are ye bought with a price from your slavery? Do not again become slaves of men. Never sell yourselves: prefer and retain your liberty, now that ye have acquired it.

In these verses the apostle shows that the Christian religion does not abolish our civil connexions:—in reference to them, where it finds us, there it leaves us. In whatever relation we stood before our embracing Christianity, there we stand still: our secular condition being no further changed, than as it may be effected by the amelioration of our moral character.

24. Let every man—abide with God] Let him live to God in whatsoever station he is placed by Providence. If he be a slave, God will be with him even in his slavery; if he be faithful to the grace which he has received. It is very likely that some of the slaves at Corinth, who had been converted to Christianity, had been led to think that their Christian privileges absolved them from the necessity of continuing slaves; or, at least, brought them on a level with their Christian masters. A spirit of this kind might have soon led to confusion and insubordination, and brought scandals into the church. It was therefore a very proper subject for the apostle to interfere in; and to his authority, the persons concerned would doubtless respectfully bow.

25. Now concerning virgins] This was another subject on which the church at Corinth had asked the advice of the apostle.

The word παρθενος, virgin, we take to signify a pure, unmarried young woman; but it is evident that the word, in this place, means young unmarried persons of either sex, as appears from verses 26, 27, 32—34. and from Rev. xiv. 4. The word παρθενος, virgin, is frequently applied to men as well as to women. See Suidas under the word Αβελ: αβελ παρθενος και δικαος υμνος, He (Abel) was a virgin, and a righteous man. In ver. 36. the word is supposed to mean the state of virginity or celibacy—and very probable reasons are assigned for it; and it is evident that persons of either sex in a state of celibacy are the persons intended.

I have no commandment of the Lord] There is nothing in the Sacred Writings that directly touches this point.

Yet I give my judgment] As every way equal to such commandments, had there been any; seeing I have received the teaching of his own Spirit, and have obtained mercy of the Lord to be faithful to this heavenly gift, so that it abides with me to lead me into all truth. In this way I think the apostle's words may be safely understood.

26. This is good for the present distress] There was no period in the heathen times, when the church was not under persecutions and afflictions; on some occasions, these were more oppressive than at others.

The word αυαχη signifies necessity, distress, tribulation, and calamity, as it does in Luke xxi. 23. 2 Cor. vi. 4. and xii. 10. In such times when the people of God had no certain dwelling-place; when they were lying at the mercy of their 28 But, and if thou marry, thou hast not sinned; and if a virgin marry, she hath not sinned. Nevertheless such shall have trouble in the flesh; but I spare you.

29 But I this I say, brethren, the time is short: it remaineth, that both they that have wives be as though they had none;

30 And they that weep, as though they wept not; and they that rejoice, as though they rejoiced not; and they that buy, as though they possessed not;

31 And they that use this world, as not ^a abusing it; for ^a the fashion of this world passeth away.

enemies, without any protection from the state; the state itself often among the persecutors; he who had a family to care for, would find himself in very embarrassed circumstances, as it would be much more easy to provide for his personal safety, than to have the care of a wife and children. On this account it was much better for unmarried persons to continue, for the present, in their celibacy.

27. Art thou bound unto a wife? i. e. married; for the marriage contract was considered in the light of a bond.

Seek not to be loosed] Neither regret your circumstances, notwithstanding the present distress; nor seek, on this account, for a dissolution of the marriage contract. But if thou art under no matrimonial engagements, do not, for the present, enter into any.

28. But, and if thou marry] As there is no law against this, even in the present distress, thou hast not sinned, because there is no law against this; and it is only on account of prudential reasons, that I give this advice.

And, if a virgin marry] Both the man and the woman have equal privileges in this case; either of them may marry without sin. It is probable, as there were many sects and parties in Corinth, that there were among them those who forbade to marry, 1 Tim. iv. 3. and who might have maintained other doctrines of devils besides. These persons, or such doctrines, the apostle had in view when he says, they may marry, and yet not sin.

Trouble in the flesh] From the simple circumstance of the encumbrance of a family, while under persecution; because of the difficulty of providing for its comfort and safety, while flying before the face of persecution.

But I spare you] The evil is coming; but I will not press upon you the observance of a prudential caution, which you might deem too heavy a cross.

29. The time is short] These persecutions and distresses are at the door, and life itself will soon be run out. Even then, Nero was plotting those grievous persecutions with which he not only afflicted, but devastated the church of Christ.

They that have wives] Let none begin to think of any comfortable settlement for his family; let him sit loose to all earthly concerns, and stand ready prepared to escape for his life, or meet death, as the Providence of God may permit. The husband will be dragged from the side of his wife, to appear before the magistrates, and be required either to abjure Christ or die.

FRANCIS.

Poor Heathenism! thou couldest give but cold comfort in such circumstances as these; and infidelity, thy young brother, is no better provided than thou.

30. They that weep, &c.] There will shortly be such a complete system of distress and confusion, that private sorrows and private joys will be absorbed in the weightier and more oppressive public evils—yet, let every man still continue in his calling; let him buy, and sell, and traffic, as usual; though in a short time, either by the coming persecution, or the levelling hand of death, he that had earthly property, will be brought into the same circumstances with him who had none.

31. And they that use this world] Let them who have earthly property or employments, discharge conscientiously their duties from a conviction of the instability of earthly things. Make a right use of every thing, and pervert nothing from its use. To use a thing, is to employ it properly, in order to accomplish the end to which it refers. To abuse a thing, signifies to pervert it from that use. Pass through things temporal, so as not to lose those which are eternal.

For the fashion of this world] Το σχημα του κοσμου τουτου, signifies properly the present state or constitution of things: the frame of the world; that is, the world itself. But often the term κοσμος, world, is taken to signify the Jewish state and polity; the destruction of this was then at hand, and this the Holy Spirit might then signify to the apostle.

^p Gr. of the Lord, an Ver. 31.

[32. Without carefulness] Though all these things will shortly come to pass, yet do not be anxious about them. Every occurrence is under the direction and management of God. The wrath of man shall praise him, and the remainder of it he shall restrain, and none can harm you if ye be followers of that which is good. We should all take the advice of the poet:

"With patient mind thy course of duty run;
God nothing does, nor suffers to be done,
But thou would'st do thyself, could'st thou but see
The end of all events as well as He?"

BYRON.

He that is unmarried careth for the things that belong to the Lord] He has nothing to do with a family, and therefore can give his whole time to the service of his Maker; having him alone to please.

33. But he that is married] He has a family to provide for, and his wife to please, as well as to fulfil his duty to God, and attend to the concerns of his own soul. The single man has nothing to attend to but what concerns his own salvation; the married man has all this to attend to, and besides, to provide for his wife and family, and take care of their eternal interests also. The single man has very little trouble comparatively; the married man has a great deal. The single man is an atom in society; the married man is a small community in himself. The former is the centre of his own existence, and lives for himself alone. The latter is diffused abroad, makes a much more important part of the body social, and provides both for its support, and continuance. The single man lives for, and does good to himself only: the married man lives both for himself and the public. Both the state and the church of Christ are dependant on the married man: as from him, under God, the one has subjects, the other members; while the single man is but an individual in either; and by and by will cease from both, and having no posterity, is lost to the public for ever. The married man therefore, far from being in a state of inferiority to the single man, is beyond him out of the limits of comparison. He can do all the good the other can do, though perhaps sometimes in a different way, and he can do ten thousand goods that the other cannot possibly do. And therefore both himself and his state are to be preferred infinitely before those of the other. Nor could the apostle have meant any thing less; only for the present distress he gave his opinion that it was best for those who were single to continue so. And who does not see the propriety of the advice!

34. There is a difference also between a wife and a virgin] That is, there is this difference between a married and an unmarried woman. The unmarried careth (only) for the things of the Lord, having no domestic duties to perform. That she may be holy; separated to divine employments both in body and spirit. Whereas, she that is married, careth (also) for the things of the world, how she may please her husband, having many domestic duties to fulfil; her husband being obliged to leave to her the care of the family, and all other domestic concerns.

On this verse there is a profusion of various readings in MSS., Versions, and Fathers, for which I must refer to Griesbach, as it would be impossible to introduce them here, so as to make them look like sense.

35. This I speak for your own profit] The advices belong to yourselves alone, because of the peculiar circumstances in which you are placed. Nothing spoken here was ever designed to be of general application; it concerned the church at Corinth alone; or churches in similar circumstances.

Not that I may cast a snare upon you] Οὐχ ἵνα παγίσω ὑμῖν ἐπιβόλον—Here is a manifest allusion to the Belshazzar among the Romans, who carried a small casting net, which he endeavoured to throw over the head of his adversary, and thus entangle him. Or to a similar custom among the Persians, who made use of a noose called the χλας rumand, which they employed in the same way.—One of these lies before me; it is a strong silken cord, one end of which is a loop to be held in the hand; and the rest is in the form of a common snare or noose, which, catching hold of any thing, tightens in proportion as it is pulled by the hand that holds the loop.

The apostle therefore intimates, that what he says was not intended absolutely to bind them, but to show them the propriety of following an advice which, in the present case, would be helpful to them in their religious connexions, that they might attend upon the Lord without distraction, which they could not do in times of persecution, when, in addition to their own personal safety, they had a wife and children to care for.

For that which is comely, and that ye may attend upon the Lord without distraction.] The original ἀλλὰ πρὸς τὸ εὐχρημον, καὶ εὐπροσέδον τῷ Κυρίῳ ἀπερίσπαστος, of which our version is only a paraphrase, is thus translated by Bishop Pearson, But for the sake of decency, and of attending more easily upon the Lord without distraction. This is much more literal than ours.

36. Uncomely towards his virgin] Different meanings have been assigned to this ver. 1. I shall mention three of the principal. 1. "In those early times, both among the Hebrews and Christians, the daughters were wholly in the power of the father, so that he might give or not give them in marriage as he chose; and might bind them to perpetual celibacy if he thought proper; and to this case the apostle alludes. If the father had devoted his daughter to perpetual virginity; and he afterward found that she had fixed her affections upon a person whom she was strongly inclined to marry, and was now getting past the prime of life, he, seeing from his daughter's circumstances, that it would be wrong to force her to continue in her state of celibacy; though he had determined before to keep her single, yet he might, in this case, alter his purpose without sin, and let her, and her suitor, marry."

2. "The whole verse and its context speaks of young women dedicated to the service of God, who were called παρθένοι, virgins, in the primitive church. And a case is put here, that circumstances might occur to render the breach of even a vow of this kind necessary, and so no sin be committed."

3. "The apostle by παρθένοι, does not mean a virgin, but the state of virginity, or celibacy, whether in man or woman." Both Mr. Locke and Dr. Whitby are of this opinion, and the latter reasons on it thus:

It is generally supposed that these three verses relate to virgins under the power of parents and guardians, and the usual inference is, that children are to be disposed of in marriage by the parents, guardians, &c. Now this may be true, but it has no foundation in the text, for ὑπερ τὴν ἐξουσίαν πατέρων, is not to keep his daughter's, but his own virginity, or rather his purpose of virginity; for, as Pharocritus says, He is called a virgin, who freely gives himself up to the Lord, renouncing matrimony, and preferring a life spent in continence. And, that this must be the true import of these words, appears from this consideration: that this depends upon the purpose of his own heart, and the power he has over his own will, and the no necessity arising from himself to change this purpose. Whereas the keeping a daughter unmarried depends not on these conditions on her father's part, but on her own: for let her father have a necessity, surely the apostle would not advise the father to keep her a virgin, because he had determined so to do; nor could there be any doubt whether the father had power over his own will or not, when he necessarily lay upon him to betroth his virgin. The Greek runs to this sense: if he had stood already firm in his heart, finding no necessity, viz. to change his purpose; and hath power over his own will, not to marry; finding himself able to persist in the resolution he had made to keep his virginity; he does well to continue a virgin; and then the phrase, if any man thinks he behaves himself uncomely towards his virgin, if it be over-aged, and thinks he ought rather to join in marriage; refers to the opinions both of Jews and Gentiles that all ought to marry. The Jews say, that the time of marriage is from 16 or 17 to 20; while some of the Gentiles specify from 20 to 35. If any think thus, says the apostle, let them do what they will, they sin not: so then marry. And then he concludes with those words applied to both cases: so then, both he that marries, dwells well; and he that marries not, dwells better.

This last opinion seems to be the true sense of the apostle.

It may be necessary to make a few general observations on these verses, summing up what has been said.

1. Ἐκείθεν here, should be considered as implying not a virgin, but the state of virginity or celibacy.

2. Υπερᾶνω, over-aged, must refer to the passing of that time in which both the laws and customs of Jews and Gentiles required men to marry. See above, and see the note on ver. 6.

3. Καὶ οὐτως ἀδείκται γινέσθαι, and need so require; or if there appear to be a necessity; is to be understood of any particular change in his circumstances, or in his feelings; or, that he finds, from the law and custom in the case, that it is a scandal for him not to marry; then let him do what he wills or purposes.

4. Instead of γαμίζεσθαι, let them marry, I think ἀμείβεσθαι, let him marry, is the true reading, and agrees best with the context. This reading is supported by D'ELEG., Syrjac, all the Arabic, Solomonic, one of the Italics, and St. Augustin. Si nubat, if he marry, is the reading of the Vulgate, several copies of the Itala, Ambose, Jerom, Ambrasiaster, Sedulius, and Beate. This reading is nearly of the same import with the other; let him do what he will, he sinneth not, let him marry; or he sinneth not, if he marry.

g Heb. 13.4.—1 Rom. 7.2.—2 Cor. 6.14

5. The whole of the 37th verse relates to the purpose that the man has formed; and the strength that he has to keep his purpose of perpetual celibacy, being under no necessity to change that purpose.

6. Instead of ὁ ἐκπαύγων, he who giveth her in marriage, I propose to read ὑπαύγων, he who marrieth, which is the reading of the Codex Alexandrinus, the Codex Vaticanus, No. 1209, and of some others: with Clement, Altholius, and Basil. The σαυρον παύγων, his own virgin, is added after the above by several very ancient and reputable MSS. as also by the Syriac, Armenian, Vulgate, Ethiopic, Clement, Basil, Optatus, and others; but it seems so much like a gloss, that Griesbach has not made it even a candidate for a place in the text. He then who marrieth, though previously intending perpetual virginity, doeth well; as this is agreeable to laws both divine and human; and he who marrieth not, doeth better: because of the present distress: see ver. 26.

39. The wife is bound by the law. This seems to be spoken in answer to some other question of the Corinthians to this effect: "May a woman remarry whose husband is dead, or who has abandoned her?" To which he replies, in general, That as long as her husband is living, the law binds her to him; and, but, if the husband die, she is free to remarry; but only in the Lord: that is, she must not marry a heathen, nor an irreligious man: and she should not only marry a genuine Christian, but one of her own religious sentiments; for, in reference to domestic peace, much depends on this.

40. But she is happier if she so abide. If she continue in her widowhood, because of the present distress, for this must always be taken in, that consistency in the apostle's reasoning may be preserved. If this were not understood, how could St. Paul tell the widow that it would be more happy for her to continue in her widowhood than to remarry? She who had tried both the state of celibacy and the state of marriage, could certainly test all which was most for her comfort; and he could not tell any thing but by an express revelation from heaven, relative to the future state of any widow; it is certain that he can never be understood as speaking in general; as there are multitudes of persons abundantly more happy in their married than in their single state: and there are many widows also much more happy in their second marriage than they have been in their first.

After my judgment! According to the view I have of the subject, which view I take by the light of the Divine Spirit, who shows me the tribulations which are coming on the church. But, says he, ver. 23. I spare you, I will not be more explicit concerning coming evils, as I wish to save you from all forebodings which bring torment.

I think—I have the Spirit of God. Δόκω δὲ καὶ γὰρ Πνεῦμα Θεοῦ ἔχειν, might be translated I am certain that I have the Spirit of God. This sense of δόκω, (which we translate to seem, to think, to appear, &c.) I have noticed in another part of this work. Ulpian on Demosthen. Olynth. 1. says, Τὸ δόκω ἐν παντὶ ἐπὶ ἀμφίβολου τὰ πνεῦμα οἱ παλαιοί, ἀλλὰ πολλὰ κείναι καὶ ἐπὶ τοῦ ἀληθεῖν. The word δόκω is used by the ancients, not always to express what is doubtful, but often to express what is true and certain.—See Dr. Pearce. The apostle cannot be understood as expressing any doubt of his being under the inspiration of the Divine Spirit; as this would have defeated his object, in giving the above advices; for, if they were not dictated by the Spirit of God, can it be supposed that, in the face of apparent self-interest, and the prevalence of strong passions, they could have been expected to have become rules of conduct to this people? They must have understood him as asserting that he had the direction of the Spirit of God in giving those opinions, else they could not be expected to obey.

1. In the preceding chapter, we have met with subjects both of difficulty and importance. As to the difficulties, it is hoped that they have been so generally considered in the notes, that few or none of them remain: and, on the subject of peculiar importance, much time has been spent, in order to impress them on the mind of the reader. The delicacy of some of them would not admit of greater plainness; and in a few instances I have been obliged to wrap the meaning in a foreign language.

2. On the important subject of marriage, I have said what I believe to be true; and scruple not to say, that it is the most useful state in which the human being can be placed; and consequently, that in which most honour may be brought to God. I have listened with much attention, for the better part of half a century, to the arguments against marriage, and in favour of celibacy: and I have had the opportunity of being acquainted with many who endeavoured to exemplify their own doctrine: but, I have seen an end of all their perfection; neither the world nor the church, are under any obligations to them: they either married when they could do it to their mind and convenience, or, continuing in their celibacy, they lived a comparatively useless life; and died, as they should, unregretted. The doctrine is not only dangerous, but anti-scriptural; and, I hope, I have sufficiently vindicated Paul from being its patron or supporter.

liveth; but if her husband be dead, she is at liberty to be married to whom she will; * only in the Lord.

40 But she is happier if she so abide, * after my judgment and * I think also that I have the Spirit of God.

v Ver. 25.—w 1 Thess. 4.8.

3. While I contend for the superior excellence of the marriage state, I hope I shall not be understood to be the apologist of indiscriminate marriages.—No, many of them are blamable in a very high degree. Instead of consulting common sense and propriety; childish affections, brutish passions, or the love of money, are the motives on which many of them have been contracted. Such marriages are miserable, must be so, and should not be otherwise: and superficial people, looking at these, form an estimate of the state itself; and then indulge themselves in exclaiming against an ordinance of God; either perverted by themselves, or the equally foolish persons who are the subjects of their animadversion. That genuine Christians can never be successful in any state as that of marriage, I am fully convinced; but, to be happy, the marriage must be in the Lord. When believers match with unbelievers, generally par sineera tractant, the good becomes perverted; and Satan has his triumph when he has got an immortal soul out of the church of Christ into his own synagogue. But who, among young people, will lay this to heart! And how few, among young men and young women, will not sell their Saviour and his people, for a husband or a wife!

4. The doctrine of second marriages has been long a subject of controversy in the church. The Scriptures, properly understood, have not only nothing against them, but much for them. And, in this chapter St. Paul, in the most pointed manner, admits of them. A widow may marry again; only, let it be in the Lord. And a widower has certainly the same privilege.

5. The conversion which the Scripture requires, though it makes a most essential change in our souls, in reference to God; and in our works, in reference both to God and man; makes none in our civil state: even if a man is called, i. e. converted in a state of slavery, he does not gain his manumission in consequence of his conversion: he stands in the same relation both to the state and to his fellows, that he stood in before; and is not to assume any civil rights or privileges in consequence of the conversion of his soul to God. The apostle decides the matter in this chapter, and orders that every man should abide in the calling wherein he is called.

6. From the 20th to the 23d verse, the apostle refers to the state of slavery among the Greeks; and, from what he says, we find that even among the slaves there were Christian converts; to whom, though he recommends submission and contentment, yet he intimates that if they could get their freedom, that they should prefer it; and he strongly charges those that were free, not to become again the slaves of men, ver. 23. from which we learn, that a man might dispose of his own liberty, which, in a Christian, would be a disgrace to his redemption by Christ. The word ἐλεύθερος, which we translate freeman, means properly freedman; one who had been a slave, but had regained his liberty. It is the same as libertus among the Romans, one who was manumitted. The manumission was performed three several ways.—1. The consent of the master, that the slave should have his name entered in the census, or public register of the citizens.—2. The slave was led before the prætor, and the magistrate laid his hand, called vindicta, on his head, and declared him free.—3. By testament or will, the master bequeathing to the slave his freedom.

The manner in which the second mode of manumission was performed is curious. The prætor, having laid the rod vindicta upon the slave's head, pronounced these words, Dico eum liberum esse meo Quiritium, "I pronounce him free, according to the custom of the Romans." This done, he gave the rod to the lictor, or serjeant, who struck the slave with it upon the head, and afterward, with the hand, upon the face and back. The head also of the slave was shaven, and a cup given him by his master, as a token of freedom; and the notary entered the name of the new freedman in the public register, with the reasons of his manumission: it was customary also to give him another surname.

7. Among our Saxon ancestors, and also after the conquest, there was a species of slavery: all the villani were slaves to their respective lords; and each was bound to serve him in a great variety of ways. There is a profusion of curious examples of this in that ancient record, preserved in the bishop's auditors' office in the cathedral of Durham, commonly known by the name of the Golden Book. This record is now printing, under the direction of his Majesty's commissioners on the public records of the kingdom.

8. Among our Saxon ancestors, manumissions were granted on various accounts.—1. A person might, if able, purchase his own freedom.—2. One man might purchase the freedom of another.—3. Manumissions were granted to procure, by their merit, the salvation of departed souls.—4. Persons were manumitted also, in order to be consecrated to the service of God. These manumissions were usually recorded in some holy book, especially in copies of the four Evangelists, which being preserved in the libraries of abbeys, &c. were a continual record; and might, at all convenient times, be consulted. Several entries of these manumissions exist in a MS. of the four Evangelists, s. 4. 14. in the library of Corpus Christi, or Benet college, Cambridge.

I shall produce a specimen of one of the several kinds mentioned above, giving the original only of the first; and, of the others, verbal translations.

9. When a man was made free, it was either in the church, or at some public meeting; the sheriff of the county took him by the right hand, and proclaimed him a freeman; and showed him the open door, and the public highway; intimating that he was free to go whithersoever he pleased, and then gave him the arms of a freeman, viz. a spear and a sword. In some cases the man was to pay thirty pence to his master, of hide money; intimating that he was no longer under restraint, chastisement, or correction. From which it appears, that our ancestors were in the habit of flogging their slaves. See the laws of Iua, c. 24. 39. of Wm. the Conqueror, c. 65. and of Hen. I. c. 78.

10. Among the *Gentoo*s, the manumission of a slave was as follows:—The slave took a pitcher, filled it with water, and put therein berence-drook, (rice that had been cleaned with hot boiling,) and flowers of doeb, (a kind of a small salad;) and taking the pitcher on his shoulder, he stands near his master; and making the slave kneel down, and on the slave's head, breaks it; so that the water, rice, flowers, and doeb, fall on the slave's pitcher, may fall on the slave's body: when this is done, the master thrice pronounces, I have made thee free; then the slave steps forward a few paces towards the east, and then the manumission is complete. See Code of Gentoo Laws, chap.

viii. sec. 2, pag. 160. It is evident that the whole of this ceremony is emblematical.—1. The pitcher represents the conflux servile state of the slave.—2. The articles contained in it, his exclusion while in a state of slavery, from the grand benefits and comforts of life.—3. The water contained in the pitcher his exclusion from the refreshing influences of heaven; for slaves were not permitted to take part in the ordinances of religion.—4. The clean unboiled rice; his incapacity to have secular possessions; for slaves were not permitted to possess lands either by inheritance or purchase: a slave could sow no seed for himself, and consequently have no legal claim on support from this staff of life.—5. The doob or salad shut up, his being without relish for that state of being, which was rendered insupportable to him by his thralldom.—6. The breaking of the pitcher, his admission and enjoyment of liberty: being as free as air, with those who he would, as the water was to run, being now disengaged from the power of the slave.—7. The shedding of the water, rice, flowers, &c. over his body, his privilege of enjoying and possessing every heavenly and earthly good.—8. His stepping towards the east, his acknowledgment to the Supreme Being, the fountain of light and life, (of whom the sun was the emblem), for his enlargement; and his eagerness to possess the light and comfort of that new state of happiness into which he was now brought, in consequence of his manumission.

11. The description that Dr. John Taylor gives, in his Elements of Civil Law, of the state of slaves among the ancients, will nearly suit with their state among our ancestors; though scarcely as bad as their state in the West Indies. "They were held among the Romans—pro nullis—pro mortuis—pro quadrupedibus—for no men—for dead men—for beasts: nay, were in a much worse state than any cattle whatever. They had no head in the state, no name, no tribe or register. They were not capable of being injured; nor could they take by purchase or descent: had no heirs, and could make no will. Exclusive of what was called their peculium, whatever they possessed was their master's: they could neither plead nor be pleaded; but were subjected from all civil concerns: were not entitled to the rights of inheritance; and if they had no relief in case of adultery, nor were they proper objects of cognation or affinity. They might be sold, transferred, or pawned, like other goods or personal estate; for goods they were, and such were they esteemed. They might be tortured for evidence, punished at the discretion of their lord, and even put to death by his authority. They were held under several other civil incapacities, too tedious to mention."

When all this is considered, we may at once see the horrible evil of slavery; and wonder at the grace which could render them happy and contented in this situation: see the preceding chapter, verses 20, 21, and 22. And yet we need not be surprised that the apostle should say to those who were free or freed, Ye are bought with a price; do not become slaves of men.

12. I have entered the more particularly into this subject, because it, or allusions to it, are frequently occurring in the New Testament; and I speak of it here once for all. And to conclude, I here register my testimony against the unprincipled, inhuman, anti-christian, and diabolic Slave Trade, with all its authors, promoters, upholders, and sacrilegious gains; as well as against the Great Devil, the father of it and them.

CHAPTER VIII.

The question of the Corinthians concerning meats offered to idols, and the apostle's preface to his instructions on that head, 1-3. The nature of idolatry, 4, 5. Of genuine worship, 6. Some ate of the animals that had been offered to idols, knowingly, and so defiled their conscience, 7. Neither eating nor abstinence in themselves, recommend us to God, 8. vided they be not marked with the sign of the idols." Thus far the Karaites; and here we see one strong point of difference between these two sects. The Karaites totally objected to every thing used in idolatrous services; the Traditionists, that the Talmud shows, did generally the same; but it appears that they scrupled not to use any animal employed in idolatrous worship, provided they did not see the sign of the idol on it. Now, the sign of the idol is the mark placed on an animal previously to its being sacrificed, such as gilded horns and hoofs, consecrated fillets, garlands, &c. And, as after it had been sacrificed, and its flesh exposed for sale in the shambles, it could bear none of these signs, we may take it for granted that the Jews might think it lawful to buy and eat this flesh; this the Karaité would most solemnly scruple.

It may be just necessary to state here, that it was customary after the blood and life of an animal had been offered in sacrifice to an idol, to sell the flesh in the market indiscriminately, with that of other animals, which had not been sacrificed; but merely killed for common use. Even the less scrupulous Jews, knowing that any particular flesh had been thus offered, would abhor the use of it; and as those who lived among the Gentiles, as the Jews at Corinth, must know that this was a common case; hence they would be generally scrupulous;

NOTES.—Verse 1. As touching things offered unto idols This was another subject on which the Corinthians had asked the apostle's advice; and we shall understand the whole of this chapter the better, when we consider one fact, viz. That there had long subsisted a controversy between the Karaites and the Traditionists, how far it was lawful to derive any benefit or advantage from things used by the Gentiles. The Karaites were a sect of the Jews who scrupulously held to the letter of the Sacred Writings; taking this alone for their directory. The Traditionists were those who followed the usage of the elders; interpreting the Divine Testimonies by their own customs. From a work of the Karaites, entitled Ad-derech Eliyahu, I have extracted the following decisions, which will throw much light upon this subject. "It is unlawful to receive any benefit from any kind of heathen worship; or from any thing that has been used in an idolatrous manner. "It is unlawful to buy or sell an idol: and if, by accident, any such thing shall come into thy power, thou shalt derive no emolument from it."—"The animals that are destined and prepared for the worship of idols, are universally prohibited; and particularly those which bear the mark of the idol. This should be in untaught against the opinion of the Traditionists, who think they may lawfully use these kinds of animals, pro-

4 As concerning therefore the eating of those things that are offered in sacrifice unto idols, we know that 'an idol is nothing in the world, and that there is none other God but one.

5 For, though there be that are called gods, whether in heaven or in earth, (as there be gods many, and lords many,)

6 But to us there is but one God, the Father, of whom are all things, and we are in him; and one Lord Jesus Christ, by whom are all things, and we are in him.

7 Howbeit, there is not in every man that knowledge: for some with conscience of the idol unto this hour eat it as a thing offered unto an idol; and their conscience being weak is defiled.

8 But meat commendeth us not to God: for neither if we eat, is it to him. 1 Cor. 10:19—g Rom 4:29—e 6:4—s 41:3 Mk.12:29 Ver. 5, Eph. 4:6 1 Tim. 2:5—h Jn. 10:24—i Mat. 2:19, Eph. 4:6—k Ac. 17:28 Rom 11:36—l Or for him—m John 13:13, Acts 2:36, Ch. 12:3, Eph. 4:5, Phil. 2:11—n Jn. 1:3, Col. 1:6, Heb. 1:3

and those of them that were converted to Christianity, would have their scruples increased, and be as rigid on this point as the Karaites themselves. On the other hand, those of the Gentiles who had received the faith of Christ, knowing that an idol was nothing in the world, nor was even a representation of any thing, (for the beings represented by idol images were purely imaginary.) made no scruple to buy and eat the flesh as they used to do, though not with the same intention: for when in their heathen state, they ate the flesh offered to idols, they ate it as a feast with the idol, and were thus supposed to have communion with the idol; which was the grossest idolatry.

From these observations, it will at once appear, that much misunderstanding and offence must have existed in the Corinthian church; the converted Jews abominating every thing that they knew had been used in the heathen worship; while the converted Gentiles, for the reasons above assigned, would feel no scruple on the account.

We know that we all have knowledge] I am inclined to think that these are not St. Paul's words; but a quotation from the letter of the Corinthians to him: and a proof of what the apostle says below, knowledge puffeth up: but, however the words may be understood as to their origin, they contain a general truth, as they relate to Christians of those times; and may be thus paraphrased: "All we who are converted to God, by Christ, have sufficient knowledge concerning idols and idol worship: and we know also the liberty which we have through the Gospel, not being bound by Jewish laws, rites, ceremonies, &c. but many carry their knowledge in this liberty too far, and do what is neither seemly nor convenient, and thus give offence to others."

Knowledge puffeth up, but charity edifieth.] This knowledge is very nearly allied to pride; it puffeth up the mind with vain conceit, makes those who have it bold and rash, and renders them careless of the consciences of others. And this knowledge boasted of by the Corinthians, led them to contemn others: for so the word φρονι is understood by some eminent critics.

2. If ye knoweth nothing yet, &c.] The person who acts in this rash unfeeling way, from the general knowledge which he has of the vanity of idolatry, and the liberty which the Gospel affords from Jewish rites; with all his knowledge, does not know this, that though the first and greatest commandment says, Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, &c. yet the second is like unto it, Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself. He then that can torment his neighbour's weak or tender conscience, with his food or his conduct, does not love him as himself; and therefore knows no more than he ought to know.

3. But if any man love God] In that way which the commandment requires, which will necessarily beget love to his neighbour, the same is known of him, is approved of God, and acknowledged as his genuine follower.

4. Things that are offered in sacrifice] See on the first verse. An idol is nothing in the world] Dr. Lightfoot translates this, we know that there is no idol in the world; which he explains thus—Εἰδωλον, idol, is ἰσχυρισμα, εἰκον, εἰμασις, χηρακρησις, σκιασις, a likeness, an image, a sign, a character, a shadow; now, οὐδεν εἰδωλον, signifies there is no idol, no representation of God in the world. Images there are of stone, wood, and metal, but none of these is any representation of the Infinite Spirit. But I prefer the meaning given in the note on verse 1. As the expression an idol is nothing in the world, was common in the Old Testament, and among the Jews; and was understood by them in this way: they are not אלהים Elohim, the true God; but they are אלהים nothings, and אלהים habelim, VANITY.

5. There be that are called gods] There are many images that are supposed to be representations of divinities; but these divinities are nothing: the figments of mere fancy; and these images have no corresponding realities.

Whether in heaven or in earth] As the sun, moon, planets, stars; the ocean, rivers, trees, &c. And thus there are, nominally, gods many and lords many.

6. But to us there is but one God, the Father] Who produced all things, himself un-created, and un-originated. And being in him, all things are by him, and we are by him; all intelligent beings having been created for the purpose of manifesting his glory; by receiving and reflecting his wisdom, goodness, and truth.

are we the better; neither if we eat not, are we the worse. 9 But, take heed, lest by any means this liberty of yours become a stumbling-block to them that are weak.

10 For, if any man see thee which hath knowledge, sit at meat in the idol's temple, shall not the conscience of him which is weak be emboldened to eat those things which are offered to idols;

11 And through thy knowledge shall the weak brother perish, for whom Christ died?

12 But, when ye sin so against the brethren, and wound their weak conscience, ye sin against Christ.

13 Wherefore, if meat make my brother to offend, I will eat no flesh while the world standeth, lest I make my brother to offend.

And one Lord Jesus] Only one visible governor of the world and the church; by whom are all things: who was the Creator, as he is the upholder of the universe. And we by him, being brought to the knowledge of the true God, by the revelation of Jesus Christ; for, it is the only begotten Son alone that can reveal the Father. The gods of whom the apostle speaks, were their divinities, or objects of religious worship; the lords were the rulers of the world, such as emperors, who were considered next to gods, and some of them were deified. In opposition to those gods he places God the Father, the fountain of plenitude and being; and in opposition to the lords, he places Jesus Christ, who made and who governs all things. We, as creatures, live in reference, not arrog, to him, God the Father, who is the fountain of our being; and, as Christians, we live not arrog, by or through him, Jesus Christ; by whom we are bought, enlightened, pardoned, and saved.

7. There is not in every man that knowledge] This is spoken in reference to what is said, ver. 4. We know that an idol is nothing in the world; for some with a conscience of the idol, viz. that it is something, eat it; the flesh that was offered to the idol, as a thing thus offered, considering the feast as a sacred banquet, by which they have fellowship with the idol. And their conscience being weak, not properly instructed in divine things, is defiled: he perishes what he does as an act of religious worship, and thus his conscience contracts guilt through this idolatry.

As in the commencement of Christianity among the Jews that were converted, there were many found who incorporated the rites of the law with the principles of the Gospel; so, doubtless, among the Gentiles there were several who did not at once throw aside all their idolatry or idolatrous notions, but preserved some of its more spiritual and imposing parts, and might think it necessary to mingle idolatrous feasts with the rites of Christianity—as the sacrament of the Lord's supper was certainly considered as a feast upon a sacrifice, as I have proved in my Discourse on the Nature and Design of the Eucharist: as the minds of many of these young Gentile converts could not, as yet, have been deeply endued with spiritual knowledge, they might incorporate these feasts, and confound their nature and properties.

8. Meat commendeth us not to God] No such feasts as these can be a recommendation of our souls or persons to the Supreme Being. As to the thing, considered in itself, the eating gives us no spiritual advantage; and the eating not, is no spiritual loss.

9. But take heed] Lest by frequenting such feasts, and eating things offered to idols, under the conviction that an idol is nothing, and that you may eat those things innocently; lest this liberty of yours should become a means of grievously offending a weak brother, who has not your knowledge; or inducing one, who respects you for your superior knowledge, to partake of these things with the conscience, the persuasion and belief that an idol is something, and you partake of such things; so he may also, and with safety. He is not possessed of your superior information on this point, and he eats to the idol, what you take as a common need.

10. If any man see thee which hath knowledge] Of the true God, and who art reputed for thy skill in divine things. Sit at meat in the idol's temple] Is it not strange that any, professing the knowledge of the true God, should even enter one of those temples! And is it not more surprising that any Christian should be found to feast there? But by all this we may see, that the boasted knowledge of the Corinthians had very little depth in things purely spiritual.

There are many curious, thin-spun theories in the Rabbinical writings, concerning entering idol-temples, and eating there, and even worshipping there; provided the mind be towards the true God. Dr. Lightfoot produces several quotations to prove this. Perhaps the man of knowledge mentioned by the apostle, was one of those who, possessing a convenient conscience, could accommodate himself to all circumstances; be a heathen without, and a Christian within, and vice versa, as circumstances might require.

Be emboldened to eat] Οὐκ οὐκ ὁρῶνται, be built up, be confirmed and established in that opinion which before he doubtfully held, that on seeing you eat, he may be led to think there is no harm in feasting in an idol-temple, nor in eating things offered to idols.

11. Shall the weak brother perish] Being first taught by thy conduct that there was no harm in thus eating, grieves the Spirit of God, becomes again darkened and hardened; and sliding back into idolatry, dies in it, and so finally perishes.

For whom Christ died! So we learn that a man may perish for whom Christ died!—This admits of no quibble. If a man for whom Christ died, apostatizes from Christianity, for he is called a brother, though weak, return again to and die in idolatry, cannot go to heaven; then a man for whom Christ died, may perish everlastingly. And if it were possible for a believer, whether strong or weak, to retrace his steps back to idolatry and die in it, surely it is possible for a man who had escaped the pollutions that are in the world to return to it, live and die in its spirit, and perish everlastingly also. Let him that readeth understand.

12. But, when ye sin against the brethren]. Against Christians, who are called by the Gospel to abhor and detest all such abominations.

Ye sin against Christ.]. By sending to perdition, through your bad example, a soul for whom he shed his blood; and so far defeating the gracious intentions of his sacrificial death. This is a farther intimation, that a person for whom Christ died, may perish; and this is the drift of the apostle's argument.

13. Wherefore, &c.]. Rather than give any occasion to a Christian to sin against, and so to harden his conscience that he should return to idolatry and perish; I would not only abstain from all meats offered to idols, but I would eat no flesh, should I exist through the whole course of time, but live on the herbs of the field, rather than cause my brother to stumble, and thus fall into idolatry and final ruin.

The following words of Origen contain a very solemn lesson and warning—"If we did more diligently attend to these things, we should avoid sinning against our brethren, and wounding their weak conscience, that we might not sin against Christ; our brethren that are among us, for whom Christ died; often perishing, not only by our knowledge, but by many other ways, and things, in which things, we sinning against Christ, shall suffer punishment: the souls of them that perish by us, being required of, and avenged upon us." See Whitby on this place.

1. The greater our reputation for knowledge and sanctity, the greater mischief we shall do by our influence and example, if we turn aside from the holy commandment delivered unto us. Every man should walk so as either to light or lead his brother to heaven.

2. It is the duty of every Christian to watch against apostasy in his own case, and to prevent it as much as possible in that of others. That a person for whom Christ died may finally perish, is strongly argued, says Dr. Whitby, from this place, and Rom. xiv. 15. for here the apostle dissuades the Corinthians from scandalizing their weak brethren, by an argument taken from the irreparable mischiefs they may do them, the eternal ruin they may bring upon them by this scandal; whereas, if he, as some assert, that all things, even the sins of the elect, shall work together for their good, and that they shall never perish; if the apostle knew, and taught this doctrine to them, why does he endeavour to afflict them from this scandal, by telling them that it might have that effect, which he had before told them was impossible? If you interpret his words thus, so shall he perish for whom, in charity, ye ought to judge Christ died. It is certain from this doctrine, that they must be assured that this judgment of charity must be false; or that their brother could not perish. In the first place, they could not be obliged to act by it; and in the second, they could not rationally be moved by it to abstain from giving scandal on that impossible supposition.

If you interpret the apostle thus, So shall thou do that which, in its nature, tends to make thy brother perish; and might have that effect, had not God determined to preserve all from perishing, for whom Christ died. Since this determination renders it sure to me, who know it, that they cannot actually perish, it must assure me that there can be no cause of abstinence from this scandal, lest they should perish by it.

Moreover, by thus offending, saith the apostle, ye sin against Christ; viz. by sinning against him whom he has purchased by his blood; and destroying them for whose salvation he has suffered. If this intent of Christ's death be denied, how can we show in what Christ has demonstrated his great love to them that perish? Is it possible that they can sin against redeeming love! and how, by thus offending them who neither do nor can belong to him as members of his mystical body, are we injurious to Christ! see Whitby on this place.

3. It is natural for man to wish and affect to be wise; and when this desire is cultivated in reference to lawful objects, it will be an indescribable good; but when, like Eve, we see in a prohibition, something to be desired to make one wise, we are then, like her, on the verge of our fall. Though extensive knowledge is not given to all, yet it is given for all; and is the public property of the church. He who does not use it for general edification, robs the public of its right. For the misuse and misapplication of this talent, we shall give account to God, as well as of other gifts and graces.

4. Persons of an over tender and scrupulous conscience, may be very troublesome in a Christian society; but as this excessive scrupulosity comes from a want of more light, more experience, or more judgment, we should bear with them. Though such should often run into ridiculous extremes, yet we must take care that we do not attempt to cure them either with ridicule or rebuke. Extremes generally beget extremes; and such persons require the most judicious treatment, else they will soon be stumbled and turned out of the way. We should be very careful lest in using what is called Christian liberty, we occasion their fall; and for our own sake, we must take heed that we do not denominate sinful indulgences, Christian liberties.

5. Though we are bound to take heed that we put not a stumbling-block in the way of a weak brother; yet if such a brother be stumbled at any part of our conduct which is not blameable in itself; but of which he may have taken a wrong view, we are not answerable for the consequences. We are called to walk by the testimony of God; not according to the measure of any man's conscience, how sincere soever he may be.

6. Many persons cover a spirit of envy and uncharitableness, with the name of godly zeal and tender concern for the salvation of others; they find fault with all; their spirit is a spirit of universal censoriousness; none can please them; and every one suffers by them. These destroy more souls by tything mint and cummin, than others do by neglecting the weightier matters of the law. Such persons have what is termed, and very properly too, sour godliness. Both are extremes, and he who would avoid perdition must avoid them.

CHAPTER IX.

St. Paul vindicates his apostleship, and shows that he has equal rights and privileges with Peter and the brethren of our Lord; and that he is not bound, while doing the work of an apostle, to labour with his hands for his own support, 1-6. He who labours should live by the fruit of his own industry, 7. For the law will not allow even the ox to be muzzled which treads out the corn, 8-10. Those who minister in spiritual things, have a right to a secular support for their work, 11-14. He shows the disinterested manner in which he has preached the Gospel, 15-18. How he accommodated himself to the prejudices of men, in order to bring about their salvation, 19-23. The way to heaven compared to a race, 24. The qualifications of those who may expect success in the games celebrated at Corinth, and what that success implies, 25. The apostle applies these things spiritually to himself; and states the necessity of keeping his body in subjection, lest after having proclaimed salvation to others, he should become a castaway, 26, 27. NOTES.—Verse 1. Am I not an apostle?]. It is sufficiently evident that there were persons at Corinth, who questioned the apostleship of St. Paul; and he was obliged to walk very circumspectly, that they might not find any occasion against him. It appears also that he had given them all his apostolical labours gratis; and even this, which was the highest proof of his disinterested benevolence, was produced by his opposers, as an argument against him. "Prophets, and all divinely commissioned men, have a right to their secular support; you take nothing;—is this not from a conviction that you have no apostolical right?" On this point the apostle immediately enters on his own defence.

Am I not an apostle? am I not free?]. These questions are all designed as assertions of the affirmative: I am an apostle, and I am free, possessed of all the rights and privileges of an apostle.

Have I not seen Jesus Christ?]. From whom, in his personal appearance to me, I have received my apostolic commission. This was judged essentially necessary to constitute an apostle. See Acts xxiii. 14, 15. xxvi. 10.

2 If I be not an apostle unto others, yet doubtless I am to you: for d the seal of my apostleship are ye in the Lord.

Are not ye my work?]. Your conversion from heathenism is a proof that I have preached with the divine unction and authority.

Several good MSS. and Versions transpose the two first questions in this verse, thus: Am I not free? Am I not an apostle? But I cannot see that either perspicuity or sense gains any thing by this arrangement. On the contrary, it appears to me that his being an apostle gave him the freedom or rights to which he refers, and therefore the common arrangement I judge to be the best.

2. If I be not an apostle unto others]. If there be other churches which have been founded by other apostles; yet it is not so with you.

The seal of mine apostleship are ye]. Your conversion to Christianity, is God's seal to my apostleship. Had not God sent me, I could not have profited your souls.

The agapay, or seal, was a figure cut in a stone, and that set in a ring, by which letters of credence and authority were stamped. The ancients, particularly the Greeks, excelled in this kind of engraving. The existence of the curious give am-written these things that it should be so done unto me : for ^{it} were better for me to die, than that any man should make my glorying void.

16 For though I preach the Gospel, I have nothing to glory of: for ^y necessity is laid upon me: yea, wo is unto me, if I preach not the Gospel!

17 For if I do this thing willingly, ² I have a reward ; but if against my will, ³ a dispensation of the Gospel is committed unto me.

18 What is my reward then? Verily that, ^b when I preach the Gospel, I may make the Gospel of Christ without charge, that I ^c abuse not my power in the Gospel.

19 For though I be ^d free from all men, yet have ^e I made myself servant unto all, ^f that I might gain the more.

authority of God in the law, of Christ in the Gospel, the common consent of our own doctors, and the usages of civil society, yet I have not availed myself of my privileges: nor do I now write with the intention to lay in my claims.

16. For though I preach the Gospel! I have cause of glorying that I preach the Gospel free of all charges to you; but I cannot glory in being a preacher of the Gospel: because I am not such either by my own skill or power: I have received both the office, and the grace by which I execute the office, from God. I have not only his authority to preach, but that authority obliges me to preach; and if I did not, I should endanger my salvation: yea, who is cause me to preach not for myself. For every such preacher receives his commission from God alone; it is God alone who can take it away. Wo to that man who runs when God has not sent him; and to him who refuses to run, or who tempts to run, when God has sent him.

17. For if I do this thing willingly] If I be a cordial co-operator with God, I have a reward, an incorruptible crown, ver. 25. Or, if I freely preach this Gospel without being burdensome to any, I have a special reward; but, if I do not, I have simply an office to fulfil into which God has put me; and may fulfil it conscientiously, and claim my privileges at the same time; but then I lose that special reward, which I have in view by preaching the Gospel without charge to any.

This, and the 18th verse, have been variously translated: Sir Norton Knatchbull, and after him Mr. Wakefield, translate the two passages thus: For, if I do this willingly, I have a reward; but if I am entrusted with an office without my consent, what is my reward then? to make the Gospel of Christ, whilst I preach it, without charge, in not using to the utmost, my privileges in the Gospel.

Others render the passage thus : But if I do it merely because I am obliged to it, I only discharge an office that is committed to me, ver. 18. For what then shall I be rewarded? It is for this, that preaching the Gospel of Christ, I preach it freely, and do not insist on a claim which the Gospel itself gives me.

[S. That I abuse not my power.] I am inclined to think that καταναγκάζει is to be understood here, not in the sense of forcing, but of using to the uttermost; exacting every thing that a man can claim by law. How many proofs have we of this in preachers of different denominations, who insist so strongly, and so frequently, on their privileges, as they term them; that the people are tempted to believe they seek not their souls' interests, but their secular goods. Such preachers can do the people no good. But the people who are most liable to think thus of their ministers, are those who are unwilling to grant the common necessities of life to those who watch over them in the Lord. For, there are such people even in the Christian church! If the preachers of the Gospel were as parsimonious of the bread of life, as some congregations and Christian societies are of the bread that perisheth; and if the preacher gave them a spiritual nourishment, as base, as mean, and as scanty as the temporal support which they afford him, their souls must, without doubt, have nearly a famine of the bread of life.

19. For though I be free] Although I am under no obligation to any man; yet I act as if every individual had a particular property in me; and as if I were the slave of the public.

20. Unto the Jews I became as a Jew] In Acts xvi. 3. we find that, for the sake of the unconverted Jews, he circumcised Timothy. See the note there.

To them that are under the law. To those who considered themselves still under obligation to observe its rites and ceremonies, though they had, in the main, embraced the Gospel, he became as if under the same obligations; and therefore purified himself in the temple, as we find related Acts xx. 21—26, where also see the notes.

After the first clause, To them that are under the law, as under the law; the following words $\pi\lambda\iota\upsilon\ \delta\upsilon\ \alpha\iota\omega\rho\varsigma\ \tau\omega\ \nu\omicron\mu\omicron\upsilon$, not being myself under the law, are added by AB¹ D¹ F¹ G¹, several others; the later Syriac, Sahidic, Armenian, Vulgate, and all the Itala: Cyrl, Chrysostom, Damascenus, and others; and on this evidence Griesbach has received them into the text.

21. To them that are without law] The Gentiles who had no written law; though they had the law written in their hearts: see on Rom. ii. 15.

• Being not without law to God] Instead of to, to God,

29 And ^{to} unto the Jews I became as a Jew, that I might gain the Jews ; to them that are under the law, as under the law, that I might gain them that are under the law ;

Them that are without law.] Dr Lightfoot thinks the Sadducees may be meant; and that, in certain cases, as far as the rites and ceremonies of the Jewish religion were concerned, he might conform himself to them, not observing such rites and ceremonies, as it is well known that they disregarded them: for the Dr. cannot see how the apostle could conform himself in any thing to them that were without law, i. e. the heathen. But, list, it is not likely that the apostle would conform himself to the Sadducees: for, what success could he expect among a people who denied the resurrection; and, consequently, a future world, a day of judgment, and all rewards and punishments? 2. He might among the heathen, appear as if he were not a Jew, and discourse with them on the great principles of that eternal law, the outlines of which had been written in their hearts: in order to show them the necessity of embracing that Gospel, which was the power of God unto salvation, to every one that believed.

22. To the weak became I as weak] Those who were conscientiously scrupulous, even in respect to lawful things.

I am made all things to all men I assumed every shape and form consistent with innocence and perfect integrity; giving up my own will, my own way, my own ease, my own pleasure, and my own profit, that I might save the souls of all. Let those who plead for the system of accommodation, on the example of St. Paul, attend to the end he had in view; and the manner in which he pursued that end. It was not to get money, influence, or honour, but to save souls! It was not his life, but to increase his labours. It was not to save his life, but rather that it should be a sacrifice for the good of thousand souls!

parallel to this of St. Paul, has been quoted from Achilles Tatius, lib. v. cap. xix. where Clitophon says, on having received a letter from Leucippe, Totus exortor, παντα εινουρησεν, βωον, ανεβλεψεν, οργισθη, εβλαστησεν, ησπιςθη, εξαπρησεν, ηβουνησεν "When I read the contents, I became all things at once: I was inflamed; I grew pale; I was struck with wonder; I doubted; I rejoiced; I became sad." The same form of speech is frequent among Greek writers. I think this casts some light on the apostle's meaning.

[That I might by all means save some.] On this clause there are some very important readings found in the MSS. and Versions. Instead of ταυτας οτις δυναται σωσει, that I might by all means save some; ταυτας ας ποιοι, that I might save all, is the reading of BEFG, Syriac, Vulgate, Æthiopic, all the Itala, and several of the Fathers. This reading Bishop Pearce prefers, because it is more agreeable to St. Paul's meaning here, and exactly agrees with what he says chap. x. 33, and makes his design more extensive and noble. Hukefeld also prefers this reading.

23. And this I do for the Gospel's sake] Instead of τοῦτο, this, ταῦτα, all things, (I do all things for the Gospel's sake, is the reading of ABCDEFG, several others, the Coptic, Ethiopic, Vulgate, Itala, Armenian, and Sahidic: the two latter reading ταῦτα ταῦτα, all these things. Several of the Fathers have the same reading; and there is much reason to believe it to be genuine.

That I might be partaker thereof with you.] That I might attain to the reward of eternal life, which it sets before me; and this is in all probability the meaning of το εὐαγγέλιον, which we translate the Gospel; and which should be rendered here, prize or reward: this is a frequent meaning of the original word, as may be seen in my preface to St. Matthew: do all this for the sake of the prize, that I may partake of it with you.

21. They which run in a race, run all) It is sufficiently evident that the apostle alludes to the athletic exercises in the games, which were celebrated every fifth year on the isthmus, or narrow neck of land, which joins the Peloponnesus, or Morea, to the main land; and were thence termed the Isthmian games. The exercises were running, wrestling, boxing, throwing the discus, or quoit, &c. to the three first of these the apostle especially alludes.

But one receiveth the prize?) The apostle places the Christian race in contrast to the Isthmian games; in them, only one received the prize, though all ran : in this, if all run, all will receive the prize : therefore, he says, so run, that ye may rate in all things. Now they do it to obtain a corruptible crown; but we an incorruptible.

26 I therefore so run, not as uncertainly; so fight I, not as one that beatech the air:

q Tim. 4.8. James 1.12. 1 Pet. 1.4 & 5.4. Rev. 2.10 & 3.11.—r 2 Tim 2.5.

obtain. Be as much in earnest to get to heaven as the others are to gain their prize; and, although only one of them can win, all of you may obtain.

25. Is temperate in all things.] All those who contended in these exercises, went through a long state and series of painful preparations. To this exact discipline Epictetus refers, enp. 35. Θεῶς Ὀλυμπία νικᾷται; Δεῖ δ' εὐρακτεῖν, ἀναγκορθεῖν, ἀπεχθᾶσθαι πόνον, γυμναζεσθαι πρὸς ἀνάγκην ἐν ὧρα τεταγμένη, ἐν καύρῳ, ἐν ψυχῇ μὴ ψυχρὸν πίνειν, μὴ οἶνον, ὡς εἴηεν; ἅπλος ὡς ἱατρός, παρὰ δὲ δοκεῖναι σεαυτὸν τοῦ ἐπιστάτη ἐντα εἰς τὸν ἀγῶνα παρεχέσθαι. κ. τ. λ. "Do you wish to gain the prize at the Olympic games?—Consider the requisite preparations, and the consequences: You must observe a strict regimen; must live on food which you dislike; you must abstain from all delicacies; must exercise yourself at the necessary and prescribed times both in heat and in cold; you must drink nothing cooling; take no wine as formerly; in a word, you must put yourself under the directions of a pugilist, as you would under those of a physician; and afterward enter the lists. Here you may get your arm broken, your foot put out of joint, be obliged to swallow mouthfuls of dust, to receive many stripes; and, after all, be conquered." Thus we find, that these suffered much hardships in order to conquer; and yet were uncertain of the victory.

Horace speaks of it in nearly the same way—

*Qui studeat optatum cursu contingere metum,
Multa tulit fecitque puer: sudavit et alsit, Abstulit Venere et Baccho.—De Arte Poet. ver. 412.*
A youth who hopes the Olympic prize to gain,
All arts must try, and every toil sustain;
Th' extremes of heat and cold must often prove;
And shun the weakening joys of wine and love.

Fyancis.

These quotations show the propriety of the apostle's words: Every man that striveth for the mastery, πάντα ἐκπαρεσκεύας, is temperate, or continent, in all things.

They do it to obtain a corruptible crown.] The crown won by the victor in the Olympic games, was made of the wild olive; in the Pythian games, of laurel; in the Nemean games, of parsley; and in the Isthmian games, of the pine. These were all corruptible, for they began to wither as soon as they were separated from the trees, or plucked out of the earth. In opposition to these, the apostle says, he contended for an incorruptible crown; the heavenly inheritance. He sought not worldly honour; but that honour which comes from God.

26. I therefore so run, not as uncertainly.] In the foot-course in those games, how many soever ran, only one could have the prize, however strenuously they might exert themselves; therefore all ran uncertainly; but it was widely different in the Christian course; if every one ran as he ought, each would receive the prize.

The word ἀσέως, which we translate uncertainly, has other meanings. 1. It signifies ignorantly; I do not run like one ignorant of what he is about; or of the laws of the course: I know that there is an eternal life: I know the way that leads to it; and I know and feel the power of it. 2. It signifies without observation; the eyes of all the spectators were fixed on those who ran in these races; and to gain the applause of the multitude, they stretched every nerve: the apostle knew that the eyes of all were fixed upon him—1. His false brethren waited for his halting—2. The persecuting Jews and Gentiles longed for his downfall—3. The church of Christ looked on him with anxiety—4. And he acted in all things as under the immediate eye of God.

Not as one that beatech the air.] Kypke observes that there are three ways in which persons were said ἀσπὰ ἐπερ, to beat the air. 1. When in practising for the combat, they threw their arms and legs about in different ways, thus practising the attitudes of offence and defence. This was termed ὁσπαρία, fighting with a shadow. To this Virgil alludes when representing Dares swinging his arms about, when he rose to challenge a competitor in the boxing match:—

*Talis prima Dares caput altum in prælia tollit, Ostenditque humeros lutos, alteraque jactat
Brachia protendens, et verberat ictibus auras.*

Æn. v. ver. 375.

Thus, glorying in his strength, in open view
His arms around the towering Dares threw;
Stalk'd high, and laid his brawny shoulders bare,

And dealt his whistling blows in empty air. PITT.
2. Sometimes boxers were said to aim blows at their adversaries which they did not intend to take place; and which the others were obliged to exert themselves to prevent as much as if they had been really intended; and, by these means, some dexterous pugilists vanquished their adversaries by mere fatigue, without giving them a single blow. 3. Pugilists were said to beat the air when having to contend with a nimble adversary, who, by running from side to side, stooping, and various contortions of the body, eluded the blows of his antagonist; who spent his strength on the air, frequently missing his aim, and sometimes overturning himself, in attempting to hit his adversary, when this, by his agility, had been able to elude the blow. We have an example of this in Virgil's account of the boxing match between Entellus and Dares, so well told, Æneid. v. verse 426, &c. and which will give us a proper view of the subject to which the apostle alludes—viz. boxing at the Isthmian games.

Immiscuisse manus manibus, pugnantque lacerassunt.
Ille, (Dares) pedum melior motu, fretusque juvenitâ;
Hic (Entellus) membris et mole valens; sed tarda tremant
Genua labant, castos quatit æger anhelitus artus.
Multa viri nequiququam inter se vulnèra jactant,
Multa caro lateri ingeminant, et pectore circum
Dant sonitus; eratque aures et tempora circum
Creba manus; Auro crepitant sub vulnere mala.
Stat gravis Entellus, nisque innotus eodem,
Corporè tela modo atque oculis vigilantibus exit.
Ille, velut celsam oppugnat qui mollius urbem,
Aut montana sedet circum castella sub armis;
Nunc hos, nunc illos aditus, omnemque pererrat
Arte locum, et partis assultibus irritus urget.
Ostendit dextram insurgens Entellus, et alte
Extulit: ille ictum ventrem à vertice relox
Præcidiit, ceterique elapsus corpore cessit.*

Entellus vires in ventum effudit; et ultro
Ipse gravis, graviturne ad terram pondere rosto
Concidit: ut quondam cara concidit, aut Erymantho, Aut Ida in magnâ, rudicibus eruta pinus.—
Consurgunt studiis Teucri et Trinacria pubes;
Il clamor celo; primusque accurrat Acetes,
Æque cumque ab hinc miserans attollit amicum.
At non tardatus casu, neque teritus heros,
Acrior ad pugnam redit, ac vim suscitât ira:
Tum pudor incendit vires, et conscia virtus;
Præcipientem Daren ardens agit æquore toto;
Nunc dextra ingeminans ictus, nunc ille sinistra
Nec moro, nec requies: quàm multa grandine nimbi
Culminibus crepitant; sic densis ictibus heros
Creber utrâque manu pulsât versatque Dareta.
Both on the tiptoe stand, at full extent:
Their arms aloft, their bodies inly bent;
Their heads from aiming blows, they bear afar,
With clashing gauntlets then provoke the war.
One (Dares) on his youth and pliant limbs relies;
One (Entellus) on his sinews, and his giant size.
The last is stiff with age, his motions slow;
He heaves for breath, he staggers to and fro.—
Yet equal in success, they ward, they strike;
Their ways are different, but their art alike.
Before, behind, the blows are dealt; around
Their hollow sides the rattling thumps resound.
A storm of strokes well meant, with fury flies,
And errs about their temples, ears, and eyes:
Nor allows errs; for oft the gauntlet draws
A sweeping stroke along the crackling jaws.
Hoary with age, Entellus stands his ground;
But with his warping body wards the wound:
His head and watchful eye keep even pace,
While Dares traverses, and shifts his place;
And like a captain who beleaguers round
Some strong built castle on a rising ground;
Views all th' approaches, with observing eyes,
This and that other part, in vain he tries;
And more on industry than force relies.
With hands on high, Entellus threatens the foe:
But Dares watch'd the motion from below,
And slipp'd aside, and shunn'd the long descending blow.
Entellus wastes his forces on the wind;
And thus deluded of the stroke designed,
Headlong and heavy fell; his ample breast,
And weighty limbs, his ancient mortar press'd.
So falls a hollow pine, that long had stood
On Ida's height, or Erymanthus' wood.—
Dauntless he rose, and to the fight returned,
With shame his cheeks, his eyes with fury burn'd:
Disdain and conscious virtue fi'd his breast,
And with redoubled force, his foe he press'd;
He lays on loads with either hand amain,
And headlong drives the Trojan o'er the plain,
Nor stops, nor stays; nor rest nor breath allows;
But storms of strokes descend about his brows;
A rattling tempest, and a hail of blows.

Dryden.
To such a combat as this the apostle most manifestly alludes; and in the above description, the reader will see the full force and meaning of the words, so fight I, not as one that beatech the air; I have a real and a deadly foe; and as I fight not only for my honour but for my life, I aim every blow well, and do execution with each.

No man, who had not seen such a fight, could have given such a description as that above; and we may fairly presume that when Virgil was in Greece, he saw such a contest at the Isthmian games; and therefore was enabled to paint from nature. Homer has the same image of missing the foe, and beating the air, when describing Achilles attempting to kill Hector; who by his agility and skill, (Ποικίλ by Ἀπολλῶ,) eluded the blow:—

Τοῖς νεν εστὶν ἐπὶ στροφῇ ποδάρεσσι δὺς Ἀχιλλεύς
Εἵχε χαλκείω, τρίς δ' ἑπὶ πύφῃ βαθεῖα ν.

IIAD, lib. xx. ver. 45.

Thrice struck Pelides with indignant heart,

Thrice, in impassive air, he plunged the dart. POPE.

27. But I keep under my body, &c. This is an allusion not only to boxers, but also to wrestlers in the same games; as we may learn from the word πρωτιάς, which signifies to hit in the eyes; and δυνατότης, which signifies to trip, and give the antagonist a fall, and then keep him down when he was down; and, having obliged him to acknowledge himself conquered, make him a slave. The apostle considers his body as an enemy with which he must contend; he must mortify it by self-denial, abstinence, and severe labour; it must be the slave of his soul, and not the soul the slave of the body; which, in all unregenerate men, is the case.

Let—having preached to others The word κηρύξας which we translate having preached, refers to the office of the κέρυξ, or herald at these games, whose business it was to proclaim the conditions of the games, display the prizes, exhort the combatants, excite the emulation of those who were to contend, declare the terms of crown on their heads. See my observations on this office in the notes at the end of Matt. iii.

Should be a cast-away. The word ἀποβῶν, signifies such a person as the βῆσαντι, or judges of the games, reject as not having deserved the prize. So Paul himself might be rejected by the Great Judge; and, to prevent this, he ran, he contended, he denied himself, and brought his body into subjection to his spirit, and had his spirit governed by the Spirit of God. Had this heavenly man lived in our days, he would, by a certain class of people, have been deemed a legalist; a people who widely differ from the practice of the apostle; for they are conformed to the world, and they feed themselves without fear.

On the various subjects in this chapter I have already spoken in great detail; not, indeed, all that might be said, but as much as is necessary. A few general observations will serve to recapitulate and impress what has been already said.

1. St. Paul contends that a preacher of the Gospel has a right to his support: and he has proved this from the law, from the Gospel, and from the common sense and consent of men. If a man who does not labour, takes his maintenance from the church of God, it is not only a domestic theft, but a sacrilege. He that gives up his time to this labour, has a right to the support of himself and family: he who takes more than is sufficient for this purpose, is a covetous hireling. He who does nothing for the cause of God and religion, and yet obliges the church to support him, and minister to his idleness, irregularities, luxury, avarice, and ambition, is a monster, for whom human language has not yet got a name.

2. Those who refuse the labourer his hire, are condemned by God and by good men. How liberal are many to public places of amusement, or to some popular charity, where their names are sure to be published abroad; while the man who watches over their souls, is fed with the most parsimonious hand! Will not God abate this pride, and reprove this hard-heartedness?

3. As the husbandman ploughs and sows in hope, and the God of Providence makes him a partaker of his hope; let the upright preachers of God's word take example and encouragement by him. Let them labour in hope; God will not permit them to spend their strength for nought. Though much of their seed, through the fault of the bad ground, may be unfruitful; yet some will spring up unto eternal life.

4. St. Paul became all things to all men, that he might gain all. This was not the effect of a fickle or man-pleasing disposition; no man was ever of a more firm or decided character than St. Paul; but, whenever he could, with a good conscience, yield so as to please his neighbour, for his good to edification, he did so; and his yielding disposition was a proof of the greatness of his soul. The unyielding and obstinate mind, is always a little mind: a want of true greatness always produces obstinacy and peevishness. Such a person as St. Paul is a blessing wherever he goes: on the contrary, the obstinate hoggish man, is either a general curse, or a general cross: and if a preacher of the Gospel, his is a burdensome ministry. Reader, let me ask thee a question: If there be no gentleness in thy manners, is there any in thy heart? If there be little of Christ without, can there be much of Christ within?

5. A few general observations on the Grecian games may serve to recapitulate the subject in the four last verses.

1. The Isthmian games were celebrated among the Corinthians; and therefore the apostle addresses them, ver. 24. KNOW ye not, &c.

2. Of the five games there used, the apostle speaks only of three, running, ver. 23. they which run in a race; and ver. 26. I therefore so run, not as uncertainly. WRESTLING, ver. 25. every man that striketh, & αγωνίζεσθαι, he who wrestleth, Boxing, ver. 25, 27. so fight I, not as one that beateth the air; δυνατότης, so fist I, so I hit; but I keep my body under, &c.

3. He who won the race by running, was to observe the rules of racing; keeping within the white line, which marked out the path or compass in which they ran; and he was also to outrun the rest, and to come first to the goal: otherwise, he ran uncertainly, ver. 24, 26, and was ἀδοκίμος, one to whom the prize could not be judged by the judges of the games.

4. The athletic combatants, or wrestlers, observed a set diet; see the quotation from Epietetus, under ver. 25. And this was a regimen both for quantity and quality; and they carefully abstained from all things that might render them less able for the combat: whence the apostle says they were temperate in all things, ver. 25.

5. No person who was not of respectable family and connections was permitted to be a competitor at the Olympic games. St. Chrysostom, in whose time these games were still celebrated, assures us that no man was suffered to enter the lists, who was either a servant or a slave, οὐδὲς αγωνίζεσθαι δούλος, οὐδὲς σκλαβεῖναι οἰκετῆς. And if any such was found who had got himself inserted on the military list, his name was erased, and he was expelled and punished. Ἀλλ' εὖν ἀπο δούλου, ὡς, μετὰ τιμωρίας ἐκβαλεται τὸν τὸν σκλαβῶτος κατάλογον. To prevent any person of bad character from entering the lists at the Olympic games, the kerux, or herald, was accustomed to proclaim aloud in the theatre, when the combatant was brought forth, Μη τις τούτων κατηγορεῖ; ὡς αὐτὸν ἀποσκεπασμένον τῆς δουλείας τὴν ὑπόβλην οὐ τοῖς τοῖς ἀγωνίας ἐμῆρας. Will any accuse this man? For which he gives this reason? "that being free from all suspicion of being in a state of slavery, (and elsewhere he says of being a thief, or of corrupt morals,) he might enter the lists with credit." Chrysost. Homil. in Inscript. Altaris, &c. vol. iii. pag. 59. Edit. benedict.

6. The boxers used to prepare themselves by a sort of εὐκαταχία, or going through all their postures of defence and attack, when no adversary was before them. This was termed beating the air, ver. 26. but when such came to the combat, they endeavoured to bind their adversaries by hitting them in the eye, which is the meaning of ἐντοπιάζειν, as we have seen under ver. 27.

7. The rewards of all these exercises were only a crown made of the leaves of some plant, or the bough of some tree, the olive, bay, laurel, parsley, &c. called here by the apostle φθάνον, στέφανον, a corruptible, withering and fading crown, while he and his fellow Christians expected a crown incorruptible and immortal, and that could not fade away.

8. On the subject of the possibility of St. Paul becoming a cast-away, much has been said in contradiction to his own words: He most absolutely states the possibility of the case: and who has a right to call this in question? The ancient Greek commentators, as Whitby has remarked, have made a good use of the apostle's saying, Εἰδε Πάυλος τούτο δίδουσι, ὁ τσάνωνος δίδωσιν, τι ἀν εἰσπομέν ημεῖς; "If Paul, so great a man, one who had preached and laboured so much, dreaded this, what cause have we to fear lest this should befall us?"

9. On the necessity of being workers together with God, in order to avoid apostacy, Clement Alexandrinus has some useful observations in his Stromata, lib. vii. pag. 448. Edit. Oberthür—ὁς εἶ, says he, ὁ ἱερωὺς θεῶν παρέχει τοῖς συνεργοῖσι τὴν βίαν, ὅπως καὶ ὁ θεὸς τὴν αἰδὸν σὺν ἡμῖν τοῖς συνεργοῖσι πρὸς ἡμῶν τε καὶ εὐαγγελίαν. "As a physician gives health to those who co-operate with him in their cure; so God also gives eternal salvation to them who are workers together with him in knowledge and a godly life." "Therefore," says he, "it is well said among the Greeks, that when a certain wrestler, who had long injured his body to manly exercise, was going to the Olympic games, as he was passing by the statue of Jupiter, he offered up this prayer, Εἰ πάντα, ὦ Ζεῦ, δυνάτοί μοι τα προς τὸν ἀγῶνα παρεσκεύασαι, ἀποδοῖς φερὸν δικαίως τὴν κερύειν." "O Jupiter, if I have performed every thing as I ought, in reference to this contest, grant me the victory!"—May we not feel something of this spirit in seeking the kingdom of God? And can any thing of this kind be supposed to derogate from the glory of Christ? St. Paul himself says, if a man contend for the mastery, yet is he not crowned except he strive lawfully. Shall we pretend to be wiser than the apostle, and say, that we may gain the crown, though we neither fight the good fight, nor finish the course.

CHAPTER X.

Peculiar circumstances in the Jewish history were typical of the greatest mysteries of the Gospel; particularly their passing through the Red sea, and being overshadowed with the miraculous cloud, 1, 2. The manna with which they were fed, 3. And rock out of which they drank, 4. The punishments inflicted on them for their disobedience, are warnings to us, 5. We should not lust as they did, 6. Nor commit idolatry, 7. Nor fornication as they did; in consequence of which twenty-three thousand of them were destroyed, 8. Nor tempt Christ as they did, 9. Nor murmur, 10. All these transgressions, and their punishments, are recorded as warnings to us, that we may not fall away from the grace of God, 11, 12. God never suffers any to be tempted above their strength, 13. Idolatry must be detested, 14. And the sacrament of the Lord's Supper properly considered, and taken, that God may not be provoked to punish us, 15—22. There are some things which may be legally done which are not expedient; and we should endeavour so to act as to edify each other, 23, 24. The question concerning eating things offered to idols, considered and finally settled, 25—30. We should do all things to the glory of God, avoid whatsoever might be the means of stumbling another, and seek the profit of others in spiritual matters, rather than our own gratification, 31—33. NOTES.—Verse 1. I would not that ye should be ignorant It seems as if the Corinthians had supposed that their being made partakers of the ordinances of the Gospel, such as baptism and the Lord's supper, would secure their salvation; notwithstanding they might be found partaking of idolatrous feasts; as long, at least, as they considered an idol to be nothing in the world. To remove this destructive supposition which would have led them to endless errors, both in principle and practice; the apostle shows that the Jews had sacramental ordinances in the wilderness, similar to those of the Christians; and that notwithstanding they had the typical baptism from the cloud, and the typical eucharist from the paschal lamb, and the manna that came down from heaven; yet when they joined with idolaters, and partook of idolatrous feasts, God was not only displeased with them, but signified this displeasure by pouring out his judgments upon them; so that in one day 23,000 of them were destroyed.

Under the cloud It is manifest from Scripture that the miraculous cloud in the wilderness performed a three-fold office to the Israelites. 1. It was a cloud in the form of a pillar to direct their journeyings by day. 2. It was a pillar of fire to give light to the camp by night. 3. It was a covering for them during the day, and preserved them from the scorching rays of the sun, and supplied them with a sufficiency of aqueous particles, not only to cool that burning atmosphere, but to give refreshment to themselves and their cattle; and its humidity was so abundant, that the apostle here represents the people as thoroughly sprinkled and enveloped in its aqueous vapour. See the note on Exodus xiii. 21.

2. And were all baptized unto Moses Rather into Moses, into the covenant of which Moses was the mediator; and by this typical baptism, they were brought under the obligation of acting according to the Mosaic precepts, as Christians receiving Christian baptism, are said to be baptized into Christ, and are thereby brought under obligation to keep the precepts of the Gospel.

3. Spiritual meat The manna which is here called spiritual meal. 1. Because it was provided supernaturally; and, 2. Because it was a type of Christ Jesus, who speaking of it, John vi. 31, &c. tells us that it was a type of that true bread which came down from heaven, which gives life to the world, v. 33, and that himself was the bread of life, v. 48.

4. Spiritual drink by the βόσκη τροφικόν, spiritual meat, and ποτα τροφικόν, spiritual drink; the apostle certainly means both meat and drink, which were furnished to the Jewish assembly miraculously, as well as typically; and he appears to borrow his expressions from the Jews themselves, who expressly say החלהם ה' חלצהם halatz halechem halaz ruchenim, that bread was spiritual, and ה' חלצהם halechem halaz ruchenim hain, the waters were spiritual. Alschech is legem, fol. 233, to which opinion the apostle seems particularly to refer. See Schoettgen.

The spiritual rock that followed them There is some difficulty in this verse. How could the rock follow them? it does not appear that the rock ever moved from the place where Moses struck it. But to solve this difficulty, it is said, that rock here is put by metonymy, for the water of the rock; and that this water did follow them through the wilderness. This is more likely: but we have not direct proof of it. The ancient Jews, however, were of this opinion, and state that the streams followed them in all their journeyings, up the mountains, down the valleys, &c. &c. and that when they came to encamp, the waters formed themselves into cisterns, and pools, and that the rulers of the people guided them by their staves in rivulets to the different tribes and families; and this is the sense they give to Num. xxi. 16. Spring up, O well, &c. See the place in Schoettgen.

Others contend that by the rock following them, we are to understand their having carried of its waters with them, on their journeyings.—This we know is a common custom in 5 But with many of them God was not well pleased: for they were overthrown in the wilderness.

6 Now these things were ^a our examples, to the intent we should not lust after evil things, as ^b they also lusted.

7 Neither be ye idolaters, as ^c were some of them; as it is written, ^d The people sat down to eat and drink, and rose up to play.

8 Neither let us commit fornication, as some of them committed, and ^e fell in one day three and twenty thousand.

a Or, went with them. Deu. 9. 21. Ps. 106. 41. b Num. 14. 29, 30, & 36. 64. 55. Ps. 106. 26. Heb. 3. 17. c Jude 5. d Or, our figures.—Num. 11. 4. 33. 34. Ps. 106. 14. e Ver. 14.—Exod. 32. 6.—1 Ch. 6. 13. Rev. 2. 14.—Num. 25. 19. Ps. 106. 29.

these deserts to the present day; and that the Greek verb ἀκολουθεῖν, to follow, has this sense, Bishop Pearce has amply proved in his note on this place. The Jews suppose that the rock itself went with the Israelites, and was present with them in their thirty-eight stations, for only so many are mentioned. See Alschech in legem, fol. 236. And see Schoettgen.

Now, though of all the senses already given, that of Bishop Pearce is the best; yet it does appear that the apostle does not speak about the rock itself; but of him whom it represented, namely, Christ: this was the rock that followed them, and ministered to them; and this view of the subject is rendered more probable by what is said ver. 9. that they tempted Christ, and were destroyed of serpents.

5. They were overthrown in the wilderness And yet ALL these persons were under the cloud—ALL passed through the sea—ALL ate the same spiritual meat—ALL drank the same spiritual drink, for they were made partakers of the spiritual rock (Christ). Nothing can be a more decisive proof than this, that people who have every outward ordinance, and are made partakers of the grace of our Lord Jesus, may abuse their privileges and grieve the Spirit of God, as to fall from their state of grace, and perish everlastingly. Let those who are continually asserting that this is impossible, beware lest they themselves, if in a state of grace, become not, through their overmuch security, proofs in point of the possibility of ending in the flesh, though they began in the spirit.—Reader, remember who said, Ye shall not surely die; and remember the mischiefs produced by a belief of his doctrine.

6. These things were our examples The punishments which God inflicted on them, furnish us with evidences of what God will inflict upon us, if we sin after the similitude of those transgressors.

We should not lust after evil things It is most evident that the apostle refers here to the history in Num. xi. 4, &c. and the mixed multitude fell a lusting, and said, Who shall give us flesh to eat. Into the same spirit the Corinthians had most evidently fallen; they lusted after the flesh in the idol feasts, and therefore frequented them to the great scandal of Christ's unity. The apostle shows them that their sin was of the same nature as that of the murmuring rebellious Israelites, whom God so severely punished; and if he did not spare the natural branches, there was no likelihood that he should spare them.

7. Neither be ye idolaters The apostle considered partaking of the idolatrous feasts, as being real acts of idolatry; because those who offered the flesh to their gods, considered them as feeding invisibly with them, on the flesh thus offered; and that every one that partook of the feast, was a real participator with the god to whom the flesh or animal had been offered in sacrifice. See ver. 21.

Rose up to play See the note on Exod. xxxii. 6. The Jews generally explain this word, as implying idolatrous acts only—I have considered it as implying acts of impurity with which idolatrous acts were often accompanied. It also means those dances which were practised in honour of their gods. That this is one meaning of the verb παίζειν, Kypke has largely proved. The whole idolatrous process was as follows.

1. The proper victim was prepared and set apart. 2. It was slain, and its blood poured out at the altar of the deity. 3. The flesh was dressed, and the priests and offerers feasted on it, and thus endeavoured to establish a communion between themselves and the object of their worship. 4. After eating, they had idolatrous dances in honour of their god: and 5. As might be expected, impure mixtures, in consequence of those dances. The people sat down to eat and to drink, and rose up to play; and it is in reference to this issue of idolatrous feasts and dances, that the apostle immediately subjoins, Neither let us commit fornication, &c.

8. Fell in one day three and twenty thousand In Num.

9 Neither let us tempt Christ, as ⁿ some of them also tempted, and ^o were destroyed of serpents.

10 Neither murmur ye, as ^a some of them also murmured, and ^b were destroyed of ^c the destroyer.

11 Now, all these things I happened unto them for ² ensamples; and ³ they are written for our admonition, ⁴ upon whom the ends of the world are come.

12 Wherefore v let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall.

13 There hath no temptation taken you but ^x such as is common to man : but ^y God is faithful, who will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able ; but will, with the temptation, also ^z make a way to escape, that ye may be able to bear it.

xv. the number is 21,000 and, allowing this to be the genuine reading, and none of the Hebrew MSS. exhibit any various reading in the place, Moses and the apostle may be thus reconciled; in Num. xxv. 4. God commands Moses to take all the heads (the rulers) of the people, and hang them up before the Lord against the sun; these possibly amounted to 1,000; and those who fell by the plague were 23,000, so that the whole amounted to 24,000. Instead of εκατομύρια χιλιάδων, 23,000, two MSS. with the latter Syriac and the Armenian, have εκατοστήσων χιλιάδων, 21,000; but this authority is too slender to establish a various reading, which recedes so much from the received text. I think this discordance may be best accounted for, by supposing, as above, that Phineas and his companions, might have slain 1,000 men, who were heads of the people, and chief in this idleness; and that the plague sent from the Lord destroyed 23,000 more; so an equal number to the whole tribe of Levi perished in one day: who were just 23,000. See Num. xvi. 62. and see Lightfoot.

9. Neither deus tempt Christ] I have already supposed, in the note on ver. 4. that Christ is intended by the Spiritual Rock that followed them; and that it was He, not the rock that did follow or accompany the Israelites in the wilderness. This was the Angel of God's presence who went with the church in the wilderness, to whom our fathers would not obey, as St. Stephen says, Acts vi. 38, and 40. Instead of Xpus n. Christ; several MSS. and a few Verses, have Kypior, the Lord, and some few Gen. God. But though some respectable MSS. have the Lord, instead of Christ; yet this latter has the greatest proportion of authority on its side. And this affords no mean proof that the person who is called 7075 Xp. horch, in the Old Testament, is called Christ in the New. By tempting Christ, we meant disbelieving the providence and goodness of God; and presuming to presume to Him how he should send them the necessary supplies; and of what kind they should be, &c.

And they murmured, saying, Neither manna yet! How the Israelites murmured against the manna, which their souls despoised of a light bread, something like the manna which the angels ate in Eden & Paradise; they had been brought out of Egypt into a wilderness, and pretended that the promises of God had failed; and how they were destroyed by serpents, and by the destroyer or plague, may be seen at large in the texts referred to in the margin, on this, and the preceding verses. It appears, from what the apostle says here, that the Corinthians were murmuring against God and his apostle, for prodding them from partaking of the idolatrous feasts; just as the Israelites did in the wilderness, in reference to a similar subject. See the history of Pharaoh with Zari and Cush, and the rebellion of Korah and his company, etc.

Destroyer of the Destroyer.—The Jews suppose that God employed destroying angels to punish those rebellious Israelites; they were five in number, and one of them they call מַשְׁחֹרֵת Meschacheth, the destroyer; which appears to be another name for Sannath, the angel of death; to whose influence they attribute all deaths which are not unknown or violent. Those who die violent deaths, or deaths that are not in the common manner of men, are considered as perishing by immediate judgments from God.

11 Upon whom the words of the world are come. To reign thou forever. The end of the times included within the whole duration of the Moslem economy. For, although the word awm, means in its primary sense, endless being, or duration, yet in its accommodated sense, it is applied to any round duration, that is complete in itself. And here it evidently means the whole duration of the Moslem economy. "Thus therefore," says Dr. Lightfoot, "the apostle speaks in this place that those things which were transacted in the beginning of the Jewish ages, are written for an example to you, upon whom the ends of those ages are come; and the beginning is like to the end; and the end to the beginning. It thus begins forty years; both consisted of temptation and unbelief; and both ended in the destruction of the unbelief-verse. That, in the destruction of those who perished in it, whereas: sic; this, in the destruction of those that believed not, where the destruction of their city and nation." The phrase מִיָּמֵינוּ עַד סוֹפָאָם, the end of days, says the Targum of Jerusalem qum, in 15, mean מִיָּמֵינוּ עַד סוֹפָאָם begomel dema'el Mashicha, in the days of the King Messiah. We are to consider the apostle's words as referring to the end of the Jewish dispensation, and the commencement of the Christian; which is the last dispensation which God will vouchsafe to man in the state of probation.

12. Let him that thinketh he standeth: "Ὁ δοκῶν ἐγχαίρειν;" Let him who must confidently standeth; him who has the fullest conviction in his own conscience, that his heart is right with God, and that his mind is right in the truth, take heed lest he fall from his faith, and from the state of holiness in which the grace of God has placed him. I have already shown, that the verb δοκῶν, which we render to seem, to think, to suppose, is used by the best Greek writers not to lessen or weaken the sense, but to render it stronger, and more emphatic. See the note on Luke viii. 18.

43. But such is common to man. Ἀνθρώπου· Chrysostom has properly translated this word ἀνθρώπος, τῷ ἐλαττωμένῳ, by εὐφραίνεσθαι, that is, small, short, moderate. Yet the passions or trials have been but trifling, in comparison of those endured by the larger ones; they might have been easily resisted and overcome; besides, God will not suffer you to be tried above the strength he gives you; but, as the trial comes, he will provide you with sufficient strength to resist it: as the trial comes in, he will make your way out. The words are very remarkable, τὰ αὐτὰ καὶ τὸ πάλιν οὐκ ἐπιτρέψεται, "he will," with the temptation, make the deliverance, or way out." Satan is never permitted to block up any way, without the providence of God making a way through the wall. God never makes a breach in his otherwise impregnable fortification. Should an upright soul get into difficulties and straits, the way rest assured that there is a way out, as there was a way in: so that the trial shall never be above the strength that God shall give him to bear it.

11. Wherefore—flee from idolatry.] This is a trial of no great magnitude; to escape from so gross a temptation requires but a moderate portion of grace and circumspection.

15. I speak as to wise men). The Corinthians valued themselves not a little on their wisdom and various gifts; the apostle rebuked this, and drew a conclusion from it against themselves. — As ye are wise, surely ye can see the propriety of abstaining from idolatry of every kind: for an idol is nothing in the world; and can do nothing for you, and nothing against you.

[b. The cup of blessing] The apostle speaks here of the Eucharist, which he illustrate, by the כוס הברכה kos habrahah, cup of blessing, over which thanks were expressed at the conclusion of the pass-over. See this largely explained at the conclusion of the notes on Matt. xxvi. and in my Discourse upon the Eucharist, 8vo. 2d edit. 1814.

The communion of the blood of Christ! We who partake at this sacred cup, in commemoration of the death of Christ, are made partakers of his body and blood, and thus have fellowship with him; as those who partake at an ido. feast, thereby, as much as they can, participate with the idol, to whom the sacrifice was offered. This I have proved at large in the above tract, to which I must refer the reader: as the subject is too voluminous to be inserted here.

17. For, we are many, are one bread). The original would be better translated thus: because there is one bread or loaf, we, who are many, are one body. As only one loaf was used at the pass-over, and those who partook of it were considered to be one religious body; so we, who partake of the everlasting bread and wine, in commemoration of the sacrificial death of Christ, are one spiritual society, because we are all united to Christ by the same blood. These blood was shed for us, to make an atonement for our sins; as the blood of the paschal lamb was shed and sprinkled in reference to this, of which it was the type.

21 [†] Ye cannot drink the cup of the Lord, and ^m the cup of devils: ye cannot be partakers of the Lord's table, and of the table of devils.

22 Do we ⁿ provoke the Lord to jealousy? ^o are we stronger than he?

18. Behold Israel after the flesh] The Jews not yet converted to Christianity: the latter being Israel after the Spirit. As the design of the apostle was to withdraw his converts at Corinth from all temptations to idolatry, he produces two examples to show the propriety of his endeavours. 1. All who join together in celebrating the Lord's supper, and are partakers of that one bread, give proof by this that they are Christians, and have fellowship with Christ. 2. All the Israelites who offer sacrifice, and partake of those sacrifices, give proof thereby that they are Jews, and are in fellowship with the object of their worship: so they who join in idol festivals, and eat things which have been offered to idols, give proof that they are in communion with those idolaters, and that they have fellowship with the demons they worship.

19. What say I then?] A Jewish phrase for I conclude; and his is his conclusion, that although an idol is nothing, has neither power nor influence; nor are things offered to idols any thing the worse for being thus offered: yet, as the things sacrificed by the Gentiles are sacrificed to demons, and not to God, those who partake of them have fellowship with demons; those who profess Christianity, cannot have fellowship both with Christ and the devil.

21. Ye cannot drink the cup of the Lord] It is in vain that you, who frequent these idol festivals, profess the religion of Christ, and commemorate his death and passion in the Holy Eucharist; for you cannot have that fellowship with Christ which this ordinance implies, while you are partakers of the table of demons. That the Gentiles, in their sacrifices, fed on the slain beasts, and ate bread and drank wine in honour of their gods, is sufficiently clear, from various accounts. See my Discourse on the Holy Eucharist, where many examples are produced. The following from Virgil, Æn. viii. ver. 173, is proof in point.

*Tum lecti juvenes certatim aræque sacerdos
Viscera tota ferunt lanturum, æneanque canistris
Dona laborata Cereris, Bacchumque ministrant, Vescitur, Aeneas, simul et Trojana juvenis,
Pergæti tergo horis et lustralibus extis.
Quare agite o juvenes, tantarum in munere laudum,
Cingite fronde comas, et pocula porgite dextris,
Communeque vocate Deum, et Date vna volentes.
The loaves were served in canisters; the wine in bowls; the priest renewed the rites divine;
Broiled entrails are their food, and beef's continued chine.
Ye warlike youths, your heads with garlands crown,
Fill high the goblets with a sparkling flood,
And with deep draughts invoke our common god.*

22. Do we provoke the Lord to jealousy] All idolatry is represented as a sort of spiritual adultery; it is giving that heart to Satan that should be devoted to God; and he is represented as being jealous, because of the infidelity of those who have covenanted to give their hearts to him.

Are we stronger than he?] As he has threatened to punish such transgressors, and will infallibly do it, can we resist his Omnipotence? A sinner should consider, while he is in rebellion against God, whether he be able to resist that power whereby God will inflict vengeance.

23. All things are lawful for me] I may lawfully eat all kinds of food; but all are not expedient, οὐ πάντα συμφέρει. It would not be becoming in me to eat of all, because I should, by this, offend and grieve many weak minds. See the notes on chap. vi. 12, &c.

24. Let no man seek his own, &c.] Let none, for his private gratification or emolument, disturb the peace or injure the soul of another.—Let every man live, not for himself, but for every part of the great human family with which he is surrounded.

25. Whatsoever is sold in the shambles, that eat] The case to which the apostle refers is simply this: it was customary to bring the flesh of the animal to market, the blood of which had been poured out in sacrifice to an idol; or, taken more particularly, the case was this; one part of the sacrifice was consumed on the altar of the idol; a second part was dressed and eaten by the sacrificer; and a third belonged to the priest, and was often sold in the shambles. To partake of the second share, or to feast upon the sacrifice, St. Paul absolutely forbids; because this was one part of the religious worship, which was paid to the idol; it was sitting down as guests at his table, in token that they were in fellowship with him.

25 But, if any man say unto you, This is offered in sacrifice unto idols, eat not, ^u for his sake that showed it, and for conscience sake: for ^v the earth is the Lord's, and the fulness thereof:

29 Conscience, I say, not thine own, but of the other: for ^w why is my liberty judged of another man's conscience?

30 For, if I by ^x grace be a partaker, why am I evil spoken of for that? for which I give thanks?

31 ^y Whether therefore ye eat, or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God.

32 ^z Give none offence, neither to the Jews, nor to the ^b Gentiles, nor to ^c the church of God:

33 Even as ^d I please all men in all things, ^e not seeking mine own profit, but the profit of many, that they may be saved.

This was utterly incompatible with receiving the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, which was the communion of the body and blood of Christ. But, as to the third share, the apostle leaves them at liberty either to eat of it or forbear: except that, by eating, their weak brethren should be offended: in that case, though the thing was lawful, it was their duty to abstain. See the notes on chap. vii. 1, &c.

Asking no question for conscience sake] Dr. Lightfoot observes, that the Jews were vexed with innumerable scruples in their feasts, as to the eating of the thing, as well as to the company with which they ate; and even the manner of their eating. Of fruits and herbs brought to the table, they were to inquire whether they were tithed according to custom? whether they were consecrated by the Truma? or whether they were profane? whether they were clean, or touched with some pollution, &c. And concerning flesh set on the table, they were to inquire whether it was of that which had been offered to idols? whether it were the flesh of an animal that had been torn by wild beasts? or, of that which had been strangled, or not killed according to the canons? &c. &c. All which doubts the liberty of the Gospel abolished as to one's own conscience, with this proviso, that no scandal or offence be cast before another man's weak or scrupulous conscience.

From this, it is evident, that the apostle had the case of the Jewish converts in view, and not the Gentiles. The latter were not troubled with such extraordinary scrupulousness.

26. For the earth is the Lord's] And because God made the earth and its fulness, all animals, plants, and vegetables; there can be nothing in it or them, impure, or unholy; because all are the creatures of God.

27. If any—bid you to a feast] The apostle means any common meal, not an idol festival; for to such no Christian could lawfully go.

Whatsoever is set before you, eat] Do not act as the Jews generally do, torturing both themselves and others, with questions, such as those mentioned on ver. 25.

28. This is offered in sacrifice unto idols.] While they were not apprised of this circumstance, they might lawfully eat; but when told that the flesh set before them had been offered to an idol, then they were not to eat, for the sake of his weak conscience, who pointed out the circumstance.—For the apostle still takes for granted, that even the flesh offered in sacrifice to an idol might be eaten innocently at any private table; as in that case they were no longer in danger of being partakers with devils, as this was no idol festival.

For the earth is the Lord's, and the fulness thereof] This whole clause, which appears also in ver. 26, is wanting here in ABCDEFGH, several others: the Syriac, Erpen, Coptic, Saldic, Ethiopic, Armenian, Vulgate, Italia, and in several of the Fathers. Griesbach has left it out of the text; and professor White says, "certissime delendum;" it should most undoubtedly be erased. It has scarcely any authority to support it.

29, 30. For why is my liberty judged of another man's conscience, &c.] Though in the case of flesh offered to idols, and other matters connected with idolatry, (on which it appears there was much of a tender conscience among some of the Corinthians,) it was necessary to sacrifice something to an lay any man under this general burthen, that he must do nothing at which any weak brother might feel hurt, or be stumbled; for the liberty of the Gospel must not take for its rule the scrupulousness of any conscience; for, if a man, by grace, by the allowance or authority of the Gospel, partake of any thing that God's bounty has sent, and which the Gospel has not forbidden, and give thanks to God for the blessing; no man has right or authority to condemn such a person. This seems to be the meaning of these two verses; and they read a lesson of caution to rash judges; and to those who are apt to take offence.

31. Whether therefore ye eat, or drink] As no general rule can be laid down in reference to the above particulars, there is one maxim, of which no Christian must lose sight: that, whether he eats or drinks of this, or the other kind of aliments, or whatever else he may do, he must do it so as to bring glory to God. This is a sufficient rule to regulate every man's conscience and practice in all indifferent things, where there are no express commands or prohibitions.

32. Give none offence, &c.] Scrupulously avoid giving any cause of offence either to the unconverted Jews, or the unconverted Gentiles, so as to prejudice them against Christianity. nor to the church of God, made up of converts from the above parties.

33. Even as I please all men] Act as I do: forgetting myself, my own interests, conveniences, ease, and comfort, I labour for the welfare of others; and particularly that they may be saved. How blessed and amiable was the spirit and conduct of this holy man!

This chapter has already presented the serious reader with a variety of maxims for his regulation—1. As to his own private walk—2. His domestic duties—And, 3. his connection with the church of God. Let us review some of the principal parts.

1. We should be on our guard against what are called little sins; and all occasions and excitements to sin. Take heed what company you frequent. One thing, apparently harmless, may lead, by almost imperceptible links, to sins of the deepest die. See the example in this chapter—1. The people sat down to eat and to drink. 2. They rose up to pay, dance, and sing: and, 3. They committed fornication, and brought upon themselves swift destruction.

2. However conscious we may be of our own sincerity and uprightness, we should ever distrust ourselves. God has made nothing independent of himself; the soul has no principle of self-dependence, either in itself or in its attainments: it is wise, powerful, and happy, only while it is depending on infinite wisdom, unlimited power, and endless mercy.

3. The Gentiles were in communion with demons, by their idolatrous services. In what communion are those who feed themselves without fear; who eat with the glutton and drink with the drunkard? Do they partake of the Lord Jesus who are under the influence of pride, self-will, hatred, censoriousness, &c. and who carry their self-importance, and worldly spirit, even into the house and worship of God?

4. A spirit of curiosity, too much indulged, may, in an irreligious man, lead to curiosity and theft: in a godly man, to a troublesome and unscrupulous scrupulosity of conscience; productive of nothing but uneasiness to itself, and disturbance to others. Simplicity of heart saves from this, and is an excellent gift.

5. In many actions we have a two fold rule: the testimony of God and charity; and, in many things, charity is the best interpreter of the testimony. The testimony often permits what charity forbids, because circumstances, in time, place, &c. may render a thing improper on one occasion that might be proper on another.

6. Pons Quersnel has well said, Every thing honours God when it is done for his sake; every thing dishonours him when any ultimate end is proposed besides his glory. It is an inchangeable principle of the Christian morality, that all comes from God by his love; and all should be returned to him by ours. This rule we should keep inviolate.

7. Though many of the advices given in this chapter, appear to respect the Corinthians alone, yet there is none of them that is not applicable to Christians in general, in certain circumstances. God has given no portion of his word to any people or age exclusively: the whole is given to the church universal in all ages of the world. In reading this epistle let us seriously consider what parts of it apply to ourselves; and if we are disposed to appropriate its promises, let us act conscientiously, and inquire how many of its reprehensions we may fairly appropriate also.

CHAPTER XI.

The apostle reprehends the Corinthians for several irregularities in their manner of conducting public worship; the men praying or prophesying with their heads covered; and the women with their heads uncovered; contrary to custom, propriety, and decency. 1-6. Reasons why they should act differently. 7-16. They are also reprimanded for their divisions and heresies. 17-19. And for the irregular manner in which they celebrated the Lord's Supper. 20-22. NOTES.—Verse 1. Be ye followers of me] This verse certainly belongs to the preceding chapter, and is here out of all proper place and connexion.

2. That ye remember me in all things] It appears that the apostle had previously given them a variety of directions relative to the matters mentioned here; that some had paid strict attention to them, and that others had not; and that contentions and divisions were the consequences, which he here reproves and endeavours to rectify. While Paul and Apollos had preached among them, they had undoubtedly prescribed every thing that was necessary to be observed in the Christian worship; but it is likely that those who joined in idol festivals, wished also to introduce something relative to the mode of conducting the idol worship into the Christian assembly; which they might think was an improvement on the apostle's plan.

3. The head of every man is Christ] The apostle is speaking particularly of Christianity and its ordinances: Christ is the head, or author of this religion; and is the Creator, Preserver, and Lord of every man. The man also is the head or head of the woman; and the head or Lord of Christ, as mediator between God and man, is God the Father. Here is the order—God sends his Son Jesus Christ to redeem man; Christ comes and lays down his life for the world; every man who receives Christianity, confesses that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father; and every believing woman will acknowledge, according to Genesis iii. 16. that God has placed her in a dependence on, and subjection to, the man. So far, there is no difficulty in this passage.

4. Praying or prophesying] Any person who engages in public acts in the worship of God, whether prayer, singing, or exhortation; for we learn from the apostle himself, that προφητεία, to prophesy, signifies to speak unto men to edification, exhortation, and comfort, chap. xiv. 3. And this comprehends all that we understand by exhortation, or even preaching.

Having his head covered] With his cap or turban on, dishonoureth his head; because the head being covered, was a sign of subjection; and while he was employed in the public administration of the word, he was to be considered as a representative of Christ; and on this account, his being veiled or covered, would be improper. The decision of the apostle was in point blank hostility to the canons of the Jews, for they would not suffer a man to pray unless he was veiled; for which they give this reason: "He should veil himself to show that he is ashamed before God, and unworthy, with open face, to behold him." See much in Lightfoot on this point.

5. But every woman that prayeth, &c.] Whatever may be the meaning of praying and prophesying, in respect to this man, they have precisely the same meaning in respect to the woman. So that some women, at least, as well as some men, might speak to others to edification, or exhortation, and comfort. And this kind of prophesying, or teaching, was predicted by Joel, ii. 28. and referred to by Peter, Acts ii. 17. And had there not been such gifts bestowed on women, the prophecy could not have had its fulfilment. The only difference marked by the apostle was, the man had his head uncovered, because he was the representative of Christ: the woman had hers covered, because she was placed, by the order of God, in a state of subjection to the man; and because it was a custom, both among the Greeks and Romans, and among the Jews, an express law, that no woman should be seen abroad without a veil. This was, and is, a common custom through all the East; and now but public prostitutes go without veils. And, if a woman should appear in public without a veil, she would dishonour her head, her husband. And she must appear like to those women who had their hair shorn off as the punishment of who elom, or adultery.

Tacitus informs us, Germ. 19, that, considering the greatness of the population, adulteries were very rare among the Germans; and, when any woman was found guilty, she was punished in the following way: acreis erubitus nudatam coram propinquis expellit domo maritus; "having cut off her hair, and stripped her before her relatives, her husband turned her out of doors." And we know that the woman suspected of adultery, was ordered, by the law of Moses, to be stripped of her veil. Num. v. 18. Women reduced to a state of servitude, or slavery, had their hair cut off: so we learn from Achilles Tatius. Othobon says, concerning Leucippe, who was reduced to a state of slavery, περιαντίζετο, γυν. ἐξαπατ., ἐρως—ἐν τῷ ἀλλοτρίῳ τῷ ἀλλοτρίῳ, τῷ κυρίῳ ἐν τῷ lib. vii. cap. 3. "she was sold for a slave, she dug in the ground, and her hair being shorn off, her head was deprived of its ornament," &c. It was also the custom among the Greeks to cut off their hair in time of mourning: See Euripides in Alcest. ver. 426. Admetus, ordering a common mourning for his wife Alcestis, says, πένθος γυναικὸς τῆς κοινοῦνθαι λέγει, κόμη ζυρεται καὶ μελαμπέπλω στήλη. "I order a general mourning for this woman: let the hair be shorn off, and a black garment put on." Propriety, and decency of conduct, are the points which the apostle seems to have more especially in view. As a woman who dresses lovely or fantastically, even in the present day, is considered a disgrace to her husband, because suspected to be not very sound in her morals; so, in those ancient times, a woman appearing without a veil, would be considered in the same light.

n Gen. 2.21, 22.—o Gen. 2.13, 21, 23.—p Gen. 2.4, 65.—q That is, a covering; in

6. For if the woman be not covered] If she will not wear a veil in the public assemblies, let her be shorn; let her carry a badge of public infamy: but if it be a shame; if, to be shorn or shaven would appear, as it must, a badge of infamy, then let her be covered: let her by all means wear her veil. Even in mourning it was considered disgraceful to be obliged to shear off the hair; and, lest they should lose this ornament of their heads, the women contrived to evade the custom, by cutting off the ends of it only. Euripides, in Orest. ver. 123, speaking of Helen, who should have shaved her head on account of the death of her sister Clytemnestra, says, εἰδὲν παρ' ἀκρας οὐ ἀπέβρεν τριχὺς σάκος ἀ καλλός, ἐστὶ δὲ ἡ παλαιὰ γυνή: "See how she cuts off the very points of her hair, that she may preserve her beauty; and is just the same woman as before." See the note on the preceding verse.

7. A man indeed ought not to cover his head] He should not wear his cap or turban in the public congregation, for this is a badge of servitude; or an indication that he has a conscience overwhelmed with guilt: and besides, it was contrary to the custom that prevailed both among the Greeks and Romans.

He is the image and glory of God] He is God's vicegerent in this lower world; and, by the authority which he has received from his Maker, he is his representative among the creatures, and exhibits, more than any other part of the creation, the glory and perfections of the Creator.

But the woman is the glory of the man] As the man is among the creatures, the representative of the glory and perfections of God; so that the fear of him, and the dread of him, are on every beast of the field, &c. so the woman is in the house and family, the representative of the power and authority of the man. I believe this to be the meaning of the apostle; and, that he is speaking here principally concerning power and authority; and skill to use them. It is certainly not the moral image of God, nor his celestial glory, of which he speaks in this verse.

8. For the man is not of the woman] Bp. Pearce translates, οὐ γὰρ ἐστὶν ἀνὴρ ἐκ γυναικός, ἀλλὰ γυνή ἐκ ἀνδρός: thus—"For, the man doth not proceed to the woman, but the woman to the man." And vindicates this sense of ἐκ, by its use in chap. xii. 15. If the foot shall say, ἐκ τοῦ ἐστὶν ὁ σώματος, I am not of the body; i. e. I do not belong to the body. He observes that, as the verb ἐστὶν is in the present tense, and will not allow that we should understand this sense of something that is past, yap, for, in the following verse, which is unnoticed by our translators, will have its full propriety and meaning, because it introduces a reason why the woman belongs to the man, and not the man to the woman. His meaning is, that the man does not belong to the woman, as if she was the principal; but the woman belongs to the man in that view.

9. Neither was the man created, &c.] Καὶ οὐκ ἐκείνην for the man was not created upon the woman's account. The reason is plain from what is mentioned above; and from the original creation of woman, she was made for the man, to be his proper or suitable helper.

10. For this cause ought the woman to have power on her head because of the angels.] There are few portions in the sacred writings that have given rise to such a variety of conjectures and explanations, and is less understood than this verse; and ver. 29 of chap. xv. Our translators were puzzled with it; and have inserted here one of the largest marginal readings found any where in their work; but this is only on the words power on her head, which they interpret thus: that is, a covering, in sign that she is under the power of her husband. But, admitting this marginal reading to be a satisfactory solution so far as it goes, it by no means removes all the difficulty. Mr. Locke ingeniously acknowledged that he did not understand the meaning of the words; and almost every critic and learned man has a different explanation. Some have endeavoured to force out a meaning by altering the text. The emendation of Mr. Toup, of Cornwall, is the most remarkable: he reads ἐξουσία, going out, instead of ἐξουσία, power; wherefore the woman, when she goes out, should have a veil on her head. Whatever ingenuity there may appear in this emendation, the consideration that it is not acknowledged by any MS., or Version, or primitive writer, is sufficient proof against it. Dr. Lightfoot, Schoetgen, and Bishop Pearce, have written best on the subject; in which

10 For this cause ought the woman ⁹ to have ⁸ power on her head ⁷ because of the angels.

11 Nevertheless ² neither is the man without the woman, neither the woman without the man in the Lord.

sign that she is under the power of her husband.—Eccles. 5.6.—s Gal. 3.28 they allow that there are many difficulties: the latter contends, 1. That the original should be read Wherefore the woman ought to have a power upon her head: that is, the power of the husband over the wife. The word power standing for the sign or token of that power which was a covering or veil. Theophylact explains the word, το τὸν ἐξουσιάζεσθαι συμβόλου, τούτου, τὸ καλύμμα, "the symbol of being under power; that is, a veil or covering." And Photius explains it thus, τῆς υποταγῆς συμβόλου τὸ ἐπὶ τῆς κεφαλῆς καλύμμα φέρειν; to wear a veil on the head is the symbol of subjection. It is no unusual thing, in the Old and New Testaments, for the signs and tokens of things to be called by the names of the things themselves; for thus, circumcision is called the covenant, in Gen. xxi. 10, 13, though it were only the sign of it.

2. The word angels presents another difficulty: some suppose that, by these, the apostle means the fallen angels, or devils; others the governors of the church; and others those who were deputed among the Jews to espouse a virgin in the name of a lover. All these senses the learned Bishop rejects; and believes that the apostle uses the word angels in its most obvious sense, for the heavenly angels; and that he speaks according to the notion which then prevailed among Jews, that the holy angels interested themselves in the affairs of men, and particularly were present in their religious assemblies, as the cherubim, their representation, were present in the temple. Thus we read in Eccles. v. 6. Neither say thou before the angel, it was an error; and in 1 Tim. v. 21. I charge thee before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, and the elect angels, &c. Parallel to these is what Agrippa says in his oration to the Jews, Josephus, War, b. ii. chap. 16. I protest before God, your holy temple, and all the angels of heaven, &c. All which passages suppose, or were spoken to those who supposed that the angels know what passes here upon earth. The notion, whether just or not, prevailed among the Jews; and, if so, St. Paul might speak according to the common opinion.

3. Another difficulty lies in the phrase dia touto, wherefore; which shows that this verse is a conclusion from what the apostle was arguing before; which we may understand thus, that his conclusion from the foregoing argument, ought to have the more weight, upon account of the presence, real or supposed, of the holy angels, at their religious meetings. See Bp. Pearce in loc.

The learned bishop is not very willing to allow that the doctrine of the presence of angelic beings in religious assemblies, is legitimate; but what difficulty can there be in this, if we take the words of the apostle in another place, Are they not all ministering spirits, sent to minister to them that shall be heirs of salvation? Heb. i. 14. And perhaps there is no time in which they can render more essential services to the followers of God, than when they are engaged in divine ordinances. On the whole, the bishop's sense of the passage, and paraphrase, stand thus: "And because of this superiority in the man, I conclude, that the woman should have on her head a veil, the mark of her husband's power over her; especially in the religious assemblies, where the angels are supposed to be invisibly present."

The ancient Versions make little alteration in the common reading; and the MSS. leave the verse nearly as it stands in the common printed editions. The Armenian has the word that answers to unbram, a shade or covering. The Ethiopic, her head should be veiled. The common editions of the Vulgate have potestate, power; but in an ancient edition of the Vulgate, perhaps one of the first, if not the first, ever printed, 2 vols. folio, sine ulli notā omni, &c. the verse stands thus; Ideo debet mulier velamen habere super caput suum: et propter angelos. My old MS. translation seems to have been taken from a MS. which had the same reading: Therefore the woman shall have a veil on her head: and for angels. Some copies of the Itala have also velamen, a veil.

In his view of this text, Kypke differs from all others; and nothing, that so judicious a critic advances, should be lightly regarded. 1. He contends that ἐξουσία, occurs no where in the sense of veil, and yet he supposes that the word καλύμμα, veil, is understood, and must, in the translation of the passage, be supplied. 2. He directs that a comma be placed after ἐξουσίαν, and that it be construed with οφείλει, ought; and which he translates the verse thus: Propterea mulier potestate obnoxia est, ita ut velamen in capite habeat, propter angelos; On this account the woman is subject to power, so that she should have a veil on her head, because of the angels. 3. He contends that both Latins and Greeks use debere and οφείλειν, elegantly to express that to which one is obnoxious or liable. So Horace:—

Debes ludibrium cave.

Carm. lib. i. Od. xiv. ver. 15.

Take heed lest thou owe a laughing-stock to the winds; i. e. lest thou become the sport of the winds; for to these thou art now exposing thyself. So Dionys. Hal. Ant. lib. iii. p. 205. καὶ πολλὰν οφείλοντες ἀσχυρῇ ἀπληθὺς ἐκ τῆς αγοράς, they 14 Doth not even nature itself teach you, that, if a man have long hair, it is a shame unto him?

15 But if a woman have long hair, it is a glory to her: for her hair is given her for a ² covering.

16 But ³ if any man seem to be contentious, we have no such custom, ⁴ neither the churches of God.

17 Now, in this that I declare unto you I praise you not, that ye come together not for the better, but for the worse.

18 For, first of all, when ye come together in the church, ⁵ I hear that there be ⁶ divisions among you; and I partly believe it.

departed from the market exposed to great dishonour. So Euripides, ὄφειλον εὐπλαστῆρ, I am exposed to thy injury. E. contends that the words taken in this sense agree perfectly with the context and with dia τὴν ἀρετὴν, therefore, in this verse. "Because the man was not created for the woman, but the woman for the man, therefore she is subject to his authority; and should have a veil on her head as the token of that subjection: and particularly before the holy angels, who are present in the congregations of the saints."

For Dr. Lightfoot's opinion, that by angels, we are to understand the paranymphs, or messengers who came on the part of others, to look out for proper spouses for their friends, I must refer to his works, vol. ii. fol. p. 772. The reader has now before him every thing that is likely to cast light on this difficult subject; and he must either adopt what he judges to be best, or else think for himself.

1. Neither is the man without the woman] The apostle seems to say, I do not intimate any disparagement of the female sex, by insisting on the necessity of her being under the power or authority of the man: for they are both equally dependent on each other: in the Lord, ἐκ Κεφαλῆ, but instead of this reading, Theodoret has ἐν σώματι, in the world. Probably the apostle means that the human race is continued by an especial providence of God. Others think, that he means men and women equally make a Christian society; and in it have equal rights and privileges.

2. For as the woman is of the man] For as the woman was first formed out of the side of man; man has ever since been formed out of the womb of the woman; but they, as all other created things, are of God.

3. Judge in yourselves] Consider the subject in your own common sense; and then say whether it be decent for a woman to pray in public without a veil on her head? The heathen priestesses prayed or delivered their oracles bare-headed, or with dishevelled hair, non compta mansere comæ, as in the case of the Cumean Sibyl, Æn. vi. ver. 48. and otherwise in great disorder; to be conformed to them would be very disgraceful to Christian women: and in reference to such things as these, the apostle appeals to their sense of honour and decency.

4. Doth not—nature—teach you, that, if a man have long hair] Nature certainly teaches us, by bestowing it, that it is proper for women to have long hair; and it is not so with men. The hair of the male rarely grows like that of the female unless art is used; and even then it bears but a scanty proportion to the former. Hence it is truly womanish to have long hair; and it is a shame to the man who affects it. In ancient times, the people of Achaia, the province in which Corinth stood, and the Greeks in general, were noted for their long hair, and hence called by Homer, in a great variety of schisms, κακρόχροες Ἀχαιοί, the long-haired Greeks or Achæans. Soldiers, in different countries, have been distinguished for their long hair, but whether this can be said to their praise or blame, or whether Homer uses it always as a term of respect, when he applies it to the Greeks, I shall not wait here to inquire. Long hair was certainly not in repute among the Jews. The Nazirites let their hair grow, but it was a token of humiliation: and it is possible that St. Paul had this in view. There were, consequently, two reasons why the apostle should condemn this practice—1. Because it was a sign of humiliation—2. Because it was womanish. After all, it is possible that St. Paul may refer to dishevelled, frizzled, and curled hair, which shallow and effeminate men might have affected in that time, as they do in this. Perhaps there is not a sight more ridiculous in the eye of common sense than a high dressed, curled, cued, and powdered head, with which the operator must have taken considerable pains; and the silly patient lost much time and comfort in submitting to what all but senseless custom must call an indignity and degradation. Hear nature, common sense, and reason; and they will inform you that if a man have long hair, it is a shame unto him.

5. But if a woman have long hair] The Author of their being has given a larger proportion of hair to the head of women than to that of men: and to them it is an especial ornament; and may, in various cases, serve as a veil.

It is a certain fact, that a man's long hair renders him contemptible; and a woman's long hair renders her more ania-

20 When ye come together therefore into one place, ¹ this is not to eat the Lord's supper.

21 For in eating every one taketh before other his own supper: and one is hungry, and ² another is drunken.

22 What? have ye not houses to eat and to drink in? or despise ye ³ the church of God, and ⁴ shame ⁵ them that have not? What shall I say to you? shall I praise you in this? I praise you not.

23 For ⁶ I have received of the Lord that which also I delivered unto you, [That the Lord Jesus the same night in which he was betrayed took bread:

24 And when he had given thanks, he brake it, and said, Take, eat: this is my body, which is broken for you: this do ye in remembrance of me.]

25 After the same manner also he took the cup, when he had supped, saying, This cup is the New Testament in my blood: this do ye, as oft as ye drink it, in remembrance of me.]

ble. Nature and the apostle speak the same language; we may account for it as we please.

16. But if any man seem to be contentious] Εἰ τις δοκεῖ φιλονεικεῖν, εἰ. If any person sets himself up as a wrangler, puts himself forward as a defender of such points, that a woman may pray, or touch, with her head uncovered, and that a man may, without reproach, have long hair; let him know, that we have no such custom as either; nor are they sanctioned by any of the churches of God, whether among the Jews or the Gentiles. We have already seen, that the verb increases the sense. From the attention that the apostle has paid to the subject of veils and hair, it is evident that it must have occasioned considerable disturbance in the church of Corinth. They have produced evil effects in much later times.

17. Now in this—I praise you not] In the beginning of this epistle, the apostle did praise them, for their attention in general to the rules he had laid down; see ver. 2. But here he is obliged to condemn certain irregularities which had crept in among them, particularly relative to the celebration of the Lord's supper. Through some false teaching, which they had received in the absence of the apostle, they appear to have celebrated it precisely in the same way the Jews did their pass-over. That we know, was a regular meal, only accompanied with certain peculiar circumstances and ceremonies; two of these ceremonies were eating bread solemnly broken, and drinking a cup of wine, called the cup of blessing. Now, it is certain, that our Lord has taken these two things, and made them expressive of the crucifixion of his body, and the shedding of his blood, as an atonement for the sins of mankind. The teachers which had crept into the Corinthian church, appear to have perverted the whole of this divine institution: for the celebration of the Lord's supper, appears to have been made among them a part of an ordinary meal. The people came together, and it appears, brought their provisions with them; some had much, others had less: some ate to excess, others had scarcely enough to suffice nature. One was hungry, and the other was drunken: pebui, was filled to the full; this is the sense of the word in many places of Scripture. At the conclusion of this irregular meal, they appear to have done something in reference to our Lord's institution; but more resembling the Jewish pass-over. These irregularities, connected with so many indecencies, the apostle reproves; for, instead of being benefited by the divine ordinance, they were injured; they came together not for the better, but for the worse.

18. There be divisions among you] They had σχίσματα, schisms among them; the old parties were kept up, even in the place where they assembled to eat the Lord's supper. The Paulinians, the Kephites, and the Apollonians, continued to be distinct parties, and ate their meals separately, even in the same house.

19. There must be also heresies] Αἵρεσις, not a common consent of the members of the church, either in the doctrines of the Gospel, or in the ceremonies of the Christian religion. Their difference in religious opinion, led to a difference in their religious practice; and thus the Church of God, that should have been one body, was split into sects and parties. The divisions and the heresies, sprung out of each other. I have spoken largely on the word heresy, in Acts v. 17. to which place I beg leave to refer the reader.

20. This is not to eat the Lord's supper] They did not come together to eat the Lord's supper exclusively, which they should have done, and not have made it a part of an ordinary meal.

21. Every one taketh before—his own supper] They had a grand feast, though the different sects kept in parties by themselves; but all took as ample a supper as they could provide, (each bringing his own provisions with him,) before they took what was called the Lord's supper. See on ver. 17.

22. Have ye not houses to eat and to drink in?] They should have taken their ordinary meal at home; and have come together in the church to celebrate the Lord's supper. Despise ye the church of God] Ye render the sacred assembly and the place contemptible by your conduct; and ye show yourselves destitute of that respect which ye owe to the place set apart for divine worship.

26 For as often as ye eat this bread, and drink this cup, I ye do show the Lord's death ^{to all} till he come.

27 ^a Wherefore whosoever shall eat this bread, and drink this cup of the Lord, unworthily, shall be guilty of the body and blood of the Lord.

28 But ^a let a man examine himself, and so let him eat of that bread, and drink of that cup.

29 For he that eateth and drinketh unworthily, eateth and drinketh ^a damnation to himself, not discerning the Lord's body.

23. Thave received of the Lord) It is possible that several of the people at Corinth did receive the bread and wine of the eucharist, as they did the paschal bread and wine; as a mere commemoration of an event. And, as our Lord had, by his institution, consecrated that bread and wine, not to be the means of commemorating the deliverance from Egypt, and their joy on the account; but their deliverance from sin and death, by his passion and cross: therefore, the apostle states, that he had received from the Lord what he delivered, viz.:—that the eucharistic bread and wine were to be understood of the accomplishment of that, of which the paschal lamb was the type: the body broken for them; the blood shed for them.

The Lord Jesus—took bread) See the whole of this account collated with the parallel passages in the four Gospels, amply explained in my Discourse on the Eucharist; and in the notes on Matt. xxvi.

26. Ye do show the Lord's death) As in the pass-over they showed forth the bondage they had been in, and the redemption they had received from it: so, in the eucharist they showed forth the sacrificial death of Christ, and the redemption from sin derived from it.

27. Whosoever shall eat—and drink—unworthily) To put a final end to controversies and perplexities relative to these words and the context, let the reader observe, that to eat and drink the bread and wine in the Lord's supper unworthily, is to eat and drink as the Corinthians did; who eat it not in reference to Jesus Christ's sacrificial death; but rather in such a way as the Israelites did the pass-over, which they celebrated in remembrance of their deliverance from Egyptian bondage. Likewise, these mongrel Christians at Corinth, used it as a kind of historical commemoration of the death of Christ; and did not, in the whole institution, discern the Lord's body and blood as a sacrificial offering for sin; and, besides, in their celebration of it, they acted in a way utterly unbecoming the gravity of a sacred ordinance. Those who acknowledge it as a sacrificial offering, and receive it in remembrance of God's love to them in sending his Son into the world, can neither bring damnation upon themselves by so doing, nor eat nor drink unworthily. See our translation of this verse vindicated, at the end of the chapter.

Shall be guilty of the body and blood of the Lord) If he use it unworthily, if he deny that Christ suffered majestically, (for of some such persons the apostle must be understood to speak,) then he, in effect, joins issue with the Jews in their condemnation and crucifixion of the Lord Jesus; and renders himself guilty of the death of our blessed Lord. Some, however, understand the passage thus: is guilty, i.e. eats and drinks unworthily, and brings on himself that punishment mentioned ver. 30.

23. Let a man examine himself) Let him try whether he has proper faith in the Lord Jesus; and whether he discerns the Lord's body; and whether he duly considers that the bread and wine point out the crucified body and spilt blood of Christ?

29. Buteth and drinketh damnation) Κρίμα, judgment, punishment; and yet this is not to damnation, for the judgment, or punishment, inflicted upon the disorderly and the profane, was intended for their amendment; for, in ver. 32. it is said, when we are judged, κρινόμεθα, we are chastened, παιδεύεται, corrected as a father does his children, that we should not be condemned with the world.

30. For this cause) That they partook of this sacred ordinance without discerning the Lord's body: many are weak and sickly; it is hard to say whether these words refer to the consequences of their own intemperance, or to some extraordinary disorders inflicted immediately by God himself. That there were disorders of the most reprehensible kind among these people at this sacred supper, the preceding verses sufficiently point out; and, after such excesses, many might be weak and sickly among them; and many might sleep, i.e. die; for continual experience shows us, that many fall victims to their own intemperance. However, acting as they did, in this solemn and awful sacrament, they might have "provoked God to plague them with divers diseases, and sundry kinds of death."—Communion service.

31. If we would judge ourselves) If, having acted improperly, we condemn our conduct, and humble ourselves, we shall not be judged, i.e. punished, for the sin we have committed.

32. But when we are judged) See on ver. 29.

30 For this cause many are weak and sickly among you, and many sleep.

31 For ^a if we would judge ourselves, we should not be judged.

32 But when we are judged, ^a we are chastened of the Lord, that we should not be condemned with the world.

33 Wherefore, my brethren, when ye come together to eat, tarry one for another.

34 And if any man ^a hunger, let him eat at ^a home; that ye come not together unto ^a condemnation. And the rest ^a will I set in order when ^a I come.

33. When ye come together to eat) The Lord's supper, tarry one for another; do not eat and drink in parties, as ye have done heretofore; and do not connect it with any other meal.

34. And if any man hunger) Let him not come to the house of God to eat an ordinary meal, let him eat at home; take that in his own house which is necessary for the support of his body before he comes to that sacred repast; where he should have the feeding of his soul alone in view.

That ye come not together unto condemnation) That ye may avoid the curse that must fall on such worthless communicants as those above-mentioned; and that ye may get that especial blessing which every one that discerns the Lord's body, in the eucharist, must receive.

The rest will I set in order, &c.) All the other matters relative to this business, to which you have referred in your letter, I will regulate when I come to visit you: as, God permitting, I fully design. The apostle did visit them about one year after this, as is generally believed.

I have already been so very particular on this long and difficult chapter, that I have left neither room nor necessity for many supplementary observations. A few remarks are all that is requisite.

1. The apostle inculcates the necessity of order and subjection; especially in the church. Those who are impatient of rule, are generally those who wish to tyrannize. And those who are loudest in their complaints against authority, whether civil or ecclesiastical, are those who wish to have the power in their own hands, and would infallibly abuse it if they had. They alone who are willing to obey as capable of rule, and who can rule well, is willing to obey as to govern. Let all be submissive and orderly: let the woman know that the man is head and protector; let the man know that Christ is his head and redeemer; and the gift of God's endless mercy for the salvation of a lost world.

2. The apostle insisted on the woman having her head covered in the church, or Christian assembly. If he saw the manner in which Christian women now dress, and appear in the ordinances of religion, what would he think? What would he say? How could he even distinguish the Christian from the infidel? And if they who are in Christ, are new creatures, and the persons who ordinarily appear in religious assemblies, are really new creatures, as they profess, in general, to be in Christ; he might reasonably inquire, if these are new creatures, what must have been their appearance when they were old creatures? Do we dress to be seen? And do we go to the house of God to exhibit ourselves? Wretched is that man or woman who goes to the house of God to be seen by any but God himself.

3. The Lord's supper may be well termed the feast of charity; how unbecoming this sacred ordinance, to be the subject of dispute, party spirit, and division! Those who make it such, must answer for it to God. Every man who believes in Christ his atoning sacrifice, should as frequently as he can, receive the sacrament of the Lord's supper. And every minister of Christ is bound to administer it to every man who is seeking the salvation of his soul, as well as to all believers. Let no man dare to oppose this ordinance; and let every man receive it according to the institution of Christ.

4. Against the fidelity of our translation of ver. 27. of this chapter, Whosoever shall eat this bread and drink this cup unworthily, several Popish writers have made heavy complaints, and accused the Protestants of wilful corruption; as both the Greek and Vulgate texts, instead of eat and drink, have have and rel, or: Whosoever shall eat this bread or drink this cup. As this criticism is made to contemnance their unscriptural communion in one kind, it may be well to examine the ground of the complaint. Supposing even this objection to be valid, their cause can gain nothing by it while the 26th and 28th verses stand both in the Greek text and Vulgate, as they now do; For, as often as ye eat this bread and drink this cup, &c.—Let him eat of that bread and drink of that cup. But although, or, be the reading of the common printed text, eat and drink, is the reading of the Codex Alexandrinus, and the Codex Claromontanus, two of the best MSS. in the world; as also of the Codex Bezae Cantabrigiae, 2. and the Codex Petropolitanus, 3. both MSS. of the first character; it is also the reading of the ancient Syriac, all the Arabic, the Coptic, the margin of the latter Syriac, the Ethiopic, different MSS. of the Vulgate, and of one in my own possession; and of Clemens, Chromatius, and Cassiodorus. Though the present text of the Vulgate has rel, or, yet this is a departure from the original editions, which were all professedly taken from the best MSS. In the famous Bible without date, place, or printer's name, 2 vols. fol. two columns, and forty-five lines in each, supposed by many to be the first Bible ever printed, the text stands thus: Itaque quicumque manducaverit panem et biberit calicem, &c.—Wherefore whosoever shall eat this bread and drink this cup, &c. here is no vel, or. The Bible printed by Fust, 1462, the first Bible with a date, has the same reading. Did the Protestants corrupt these texts? In the editio princeps of the Greek Testament, printed by the authority of Cardinal Ximenes at Complutum, and published by the authority of Pope Leo X. though η, or, stands in the Greek text; yet in the opposite column which contains the Vulgate, and in the opposite line, et, and, is found, and not vel, or; though the Greek text would have authorized the editor to have made this change: but he conscientiously preserved the text of his Vulgate. Did the Protestants corrupt this Catholic text also? Indeed, so little design had any of those who differed from the Romish church, to make any alteration here, that even Wiclif, having a faulty MS. of the Vulgate by him, which read vel instead of et, followed that faulty MS. and translated, And so who ever schal etc the bread or drinke the cup.

That καὶ, and, is the true reading; and not ἢ, or, both MSS. and Versions sufficiently prove: also that et, not vel, is the proper reading in the Vulgate, those original editions formed by Roman Catholics, and one of them by the highest authority in the Papal church, fully establish: likewise those MSS., Versions, Fathers, and original editions, must be allowed to be not only competent, but also unsuspected and incontrovertible witnesses.

But as this objection to our translation is brought forward to vindicate the withholding the cup from the laity in the Lord's supper; it may be necessary to show that without the cup there can be no eucharist. With respect to the bread, our Lord had simply said, Take, eat, this is my body; but concerning the cup, he says, Drink ye all of this; for as this pointed out the very essence of the institution, viz. the blood of atonement, it was necessary that each should have a particular application of it, therefore he says, Drink ye all of this. By this we are taught that the cup is essential to the sacrament of the Lord's supper; so that they who deny the cup to the people, sin against God's institution; and they who receive not the cup, are not partakers of the body and blood of Christ. It either could, without mortal prejudice, be omitted, it might be the bread; but the cup, as pointing out the blood, poured out, i. e. the life, by which alone the great sacrificial act is performed, and remission of sins procured, is a absolutely indispensable. On this ground it is demonstrable, that there is not a Popish priest under heaven, who denies the cup to the people, (and they all do this,) that can be said to celebrate the Lord's supper at all; nor is there one of their votaries that ever received the holy sacrament. All pretensions to this is an absolute farce, so long as the cup, the emblem of the atoning blood, is denied. How strange is it, that the very men who plead so much for the bare literal meaning of this is my body, in the preceding verse, should deny all meaning to drink ye all of this cup, in this verse. And though Christ has, in the most positive manner enjoined it, they will not permit one of the laity to taste it! See the whole of this argument, at large, in my Discourse on the Nature and Design of the Eucharist.

CHAPTER XII.

The apostle proceeds to the question of the Corinthians concerning spiritual gifts, 1. He calls to their remembrance their former state, and how they were brought out of it, 2, 3. Shows that there are diversities of gifts which proceed from the Spirit, 4. Diversities of administrations which proceed from the Lord Jesus, 5. And diversities of operations which proceed from God, 6. What these gifts are, and how they are dispensed, 7—11. Christ is the Head, and the church his members; and this is pointed out under the similitude of the human body, 12, 13. The relation which the members of the body have to each other; and how necessary their mutual support, 14—26. The members in the church, or spiritual body and their respective offices, 27—30. We should earnestly covet the best gifts, 31. [A. M. 4060. A. D. 56. A. U. C. 899. An. Imp. Neronis Cass. 3.]

NOW * concerning spiritual gifts, brethren, I would not have you ignorant.

* Ye know ^b that ye were Gentiles, carried away unto these ^c dumb idols, even as ye were led.

3 Wherefore I give you to understand, ^d that no man speaking by the Spirit of God, calleth Jesus ^e accursed; and ^f that no man can say that Jesus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghost.

4 Now, ^g there are diversities of gifts, but ^h the same Spirit.

NOTES.—Verse 1. No man concerning spiritual gifts [This was a subject about which they appear to have written to the apostle; and concerning which there were probably some contentions among them. The words ἡσυχία καὶ ἡμεταπειθήσει may as well be translated concerning spiritual persons, as spiritual gifts; and indeed the former agrees much better with the context.

I could not have you ignorant. I wish you fully to know whence all such gifts come, and for what end they are given, that each person may serve the church in the capacity in which God has placed him; that there may be no misunderstandings, and no schism in the body.

2. Ye were Gentiles. Previously to your conversion to the Christian faith; ye were heathens, carried away, not guided by reason or truth, but hurried by your passions into a senseless worship, the chief part of which was calculated only to excite and gratify animal propensities.

Dumb idols. Though often supplied, could never return an answer; so that not only the image could not speak, but the god or demon pretended to be represented by it, could not speak: a full proof that an idol was nothing in the world.

3. No man speaking by the Spirit of God. It was granted on all hands, that there could be no religion without divine inspiration; because God alone, could make his will known to men: hence heathenism pretended to this inspiration. Judaism had it in the law and the prophets; and it was the very essence of the Christian religion. The heathen priests and priestesses pretended to receive, by inspiration from their god, the answers which they gave to their votaries. And, as far as the people believed their pretensions, so far they were led by their teaching.

Both Judaism and heathenism were full of expectations of a future teacher and deliverer: and to this person, especially among the Jews, the Spirit in all the prophets gave witness. This was the Anointed One, the Messiah, who was manifested in the person of Jesus of Nazareth; and him the Jews rejected, though he proved his divine mission, both by his doctrines and his miracles. But as he did not come as they fancied he would, as a mighty secular conqueror; they not only rejected him, but blasphemed him; and persons among them professing to be spiritual men, and under the influence of the Spirit of God, did so. But as the Holy Spirit, through all the law and the prophets, gave testimony to the Messiah; and as Jesus proved himself to be the Christ, both by his miracles and doctrines, no man, under the inspiration of the Divine Spirit, could say to him, Anathema, thou art a deceiver, 5 ⁱ And there are differences of ^k administrations, but the same Lord.

6 And there are diversities of operations, but it is the same God ^l which worketh all in all.

7 ^m But the manifestation of the Spirit is given to every man to profit withal.

8 For to one is given by the Spirit, ⁿ the word of wisdom; or ^o another, ^p the word of knowledge by the same Spirit;

9 ^q or ^r another, ^s the word of knowledge by the same Spirit; and a person worthy of death, &c. as the Jews did: therefore the Jews were no longer under the inspiration of the Spirit of God. This appears to be the meaning of the apostle in this place: No man speaking by the Spirit of God, &c. And that no man can say that Jesus is the Lord. Nor can we demonstrate this person to be the Messiah and the Saviour of men, but by the Holy Ghost, enabling us to speak with divers tongues, to work miracles. He attesting the truth of our doctrines to them that hear, by enlightening their minds, changing their hearts, and filling them with the peace and love of God.

4. There are diversities of gifts χαρίσματα, gracious administrations; leading to miraculous results; such as the gift of prophecy, speaking different tongues, &c. And these all came by the extraordinary influences of the Holy Spirit.

5. Differences of administrations διακονίαι, various offices in the church, such as apostle, prophet, and teacher, under which were probably included bishop or presbyter, pastor, deacon, &c. the qualifications for such offices, as well as the appointments themselves, coming immediately from the one Lord, Jesus Christ.

6. Diversities of operations εργασματα, miraculous influences exerted on others; such as the expulsion of demons, inflicting extraordinary punishments, as in the case of Ananias and Sapphira, Elymas the sorcerer, &c. the healing of different diseases, raising the dead, &c. all these proceeded from God the Father, as the fountain of all goodness and power, and the immediate dispenser of every good and perfect gift.

In the three preceding verses we find more than an indirect reference to the doctrine of the Holy Trinity.

GIFTS, are attributed to the Lord Jesus, ver. 4.

ADMINISTRATIONS, to the Lord Jesus, ver. 5.

OPERATIONS, to God the Father, ver. 6. He who may think this fanciful, must account for the very evident distinctions here, in some more satisfactory way.

7. The manifestation of the Spirit ἡ φανερωσις τοῦ Πνεύματος; this is variously understood by the fathers, some of them rendering φανερῶς, by illumination, others demonstration, and others operation. The apostle's meaning seems to be this: whatever gifts God has bestowed, or in what various ways soever the Spirit of God may have manifested himself, it is all for the common benefit of the church; God has given no gift to any man for his own private advantage, or exclusive profit. He has it for the benefit of others, as well as for his own salvation.

8. Word of wisdom. In all these places, I consider that the

9 ^a To another, faith by the same Spirit; to another, ^a the gifts of healing by the same Spirit;

10 ^a To another, the working of miracles; to another, ^a prophecy; to another, discerning of spirits; to another, ^a divers kinds of tongues; to another, the interpretation of tongues;

11 But all these worketh that one and the self-same Spirit, dividing to every man severally as he will.

12 For ^a as the body is one, and hath many members, and all the members of that one body, being many, are one body: ^a so also is Christ.

13 For ^a by one Spirit are we all baptized into one body, ^a whether be he Jews or Gentiles, whether we be bond or free; and ^a have been all made to drink into one Spirit.

proper translation of logos, is doctrine, as in many other places of the New Testament. It is very difficult to say what is intended here by the different kinds of gifts mentioned by the apostle: they were probably all supernatural, and were necessary at that time only for the benefit of the church. On the 8th, 9th, and 10th verses, much may be seen in Lightfoot, Whitby, Pearce, and others.

By doctrine of wisdom, we may understand, as Bp. Pearce and Dr. Whitby observe, the mystery of our redemption, in which the wisdom of God was most eminently conspicuous; see chap. ii. 7, and 10, and which is called the manifold wisdom of God, Eph. iii. 10. Christ, the great teacher of it, is called the wisdom of God, 1 Cor. i. 24, and in him are said to be contained all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge, Col. ii. 3. The apostles to whom this doctrine was committed, are called apostles, wise men, Matt. xxiii. 34, and they are said to teach this Gospel according to the wisdom given them, 2 Peter iii. 15.

2. By the doctrine of knowledge, we may understand either a knowledge of the types, &c. in the Old Testament, or what are termed mysteries; the calling of the Gentiles, the recalling of the Jews; the mystery of iniquity, — of the beast, &c. and especially the mystical sense or meaning of the Old Testament, with all its types, rites, ceremonies, &c. &c.

3. By faith, ver. 9. we are to understand that miraculous faith by which they could remove mountains, chap. xii. 2, or a peculiar impulse, as Dr. Whitby calls it, that came upon the apostles when any difficult matter was to be performed, which inwardly assured them that God's power would assist them in the performance of it. Others think that justifying faith received by means of Gospel teaching, is what is intended.

4. Gifts of healing, simply refers to the power which at particular times the apostles received from the Holy Spirit, to cure diseases: a power which was not always resident in them; for Paul could not cure Timothy, nor remove his own thorn in the flesh; because it was given only on extraordinary occasions, though perhaps more generally than many others.

5. The working of miracles, εργασματα δυνατειν, ver. 10. This seems to refer to the same class as the operations, εργασματα, ver. 6. as the words are the same, and in signify those powers by which they were enabled at particular times to work miraculously on others; ejecting demons, inflicting punishments or judgments, as in the cases mentioned under verse 6. It is a handywork, for mighty operations.

6. Prophecy.—This seems to import two things, 1st. The predicting future events, such as then particularly concerned the state of the church and the apostles; as the death foretold by Agabus, Acts xi. 28, and the binding of St. Paul, and delivering him to the Romans, Acts xxi. 10, &c. and St. Paul's foretelling his own shipwreck on Malta, Acts xxvii. 25, &c. And, 2dly, As implying the faculty of teaching or expounding the Scriptures, which is also a common acceptance of the word.

7. Discerning of spirits.—A gift by which the person so privileged, could discern a false miracle from a true one; or a pretender to inspiration from him who was made really partaker of the Holy Ghost. It probably extended also to the discernment of false professors from true ones; as appears in Peter, in the case of Ananias and his wife.

8. Divers kinds of tongues.—ἑνὴ γλώσσαν, different languages, which they had never learned; and which God gave them, for the immediate instruction of people of different countries who attended their ministry.

9. Interpretation of tongues.—It was necessary that while one was speaking the deep things of God, in a company where several were present who did not understand, though the majority did, there should be a person who could immediately interpret what was said to that part of the congregation that did not understand the language. This power to interpret was also an immediate gift of God's Spirit: and is classed here among the miracles.

11. But all these worketh that one and the self-same Spirit! All these gifts are miraculously bestowed; they cannot be acquired by human art or industry; the different languages excepted: but they were given in such a way, and in such circumstances, as sufficiently proved that they also were miraculous gifts.

12. For as the body is one! Though the human body have many members, and though it be composed of a great variety of parts yet it is but one entire system; every part and mem-

14 For the body is not one member, but many.

15 If the foot shall say, Because I am not the hand, I am not of the body: is it therefore not of the body?

16 And if the ear shall say, Because I am not the eye, I am not of the body: is it therefore not of the body?

17 If the whole body were an eye, where were the hearing? If the whole were hearing, where were the smelling?

18 But now hath God set the members every one of them in the body, as it hath pleased him.

19 And if they were all one member, where were the body?

20 But now are they many members, yet but one body.

21 And the eye cannot say unto the hand, I have no need of thee: nor again the head to the feet, I have no need of you.

ber being necessary to the integrity or completeness of the whole.

So also is Christ! That is, so is the church the body of Christ, being composed of the different officers already mentioned, and especially those enumerated, ver. 28. apostles, prophets, teachers, &c. It cannot be supposed that Christ is composed of many members, &c. and therefore the term church must be understood; unless we suppose, which is not improbable, that the term Ὁ Χριστός, Christ, is here used to express the church, or whole body of Christian believers.

13. For by one Spirit are we all baptized, &c.] As the body of man, though composed of many members, is informed and influenced by one soul; so the church of Christ, which is his body, though composed of many members, is informed and influenced by one Spirit, the Holy Ghost, actuating and working by this spiritual body; as the human soul does in the body of man.

To drink into one Spirit! We are to understand being made partakers of the gifts and graces of the Holy Ghost, agreeably to the words of our Lord, John vii. 37, &c. If any man thirst, let him come unto me and drink: this he spake of the Spirit which they that believed on him should receive.

O! this verse there is a great profusion of various readings, which may be found in Griesbach; but cannot be conveniently noticed here.

14. For the body is not one member! The mystical body, the church, as well as the natural body, is composed of many members.

15. If the foot shall say, &c.] As all the members of the body are necessarily dependent on each other, and minister to the general support of the system; so is it in the church. All the private members are intimately connected among themselves; and also with their pastors: without which union no church can subsist.

21. And the eye cannot say unto the hand, I have no need of thee! The apostle goes on with his principal object in view, to show that the gifts and graces with which their different teachers were endowed, were all necessary for their salvation, and should be collectively used; for not one of them was unnecessary, nor could they dispense with the least of them; the body of Christ needed the whole for its nourishment and support. The famous apologue of Meneuius Agrippa, related by Livy, will serve to illustrate the apostle's reasoning. The Roman people, getting into a state of insurrection and rebellion against the nobility, under pretext that the great men not only had all the honours, but all the emoluments of the nation; while they were obliged to bear all the burdens, and suffer all privations. Matters were at last brought to such an issue, that the senators and great men were obliged to fly from the city, and the public peace was on the point of being utterly ruined: it was then thought expedient to send Meneuius Agrippa to them, who was high in their esteem, having vanquished the Sabines and Samnites, and had the first triumph at Rome. This great general, who was as eloquent as he was valiant, went to the Mons Sacer, to which the insurgents had retired, and thus addressed them: Tempore, quo in homine non, ut nunc, omnia in unum consentebant, sed singulis inebribis suum cuique consistunt, suus sermo fuerat, indignatus reliquus partes, sua cura, suo labor ac ministerio venturi omnia queri; centum, in medio quietum, nihil aliud, quam datus colupitinus frui. Conspicisse, ne manens ad os eorum ferrent, nec os acciperet datum, nec dentes conferrent. Hæc trā: dum centum fame domare vellet, ipsa una membra totaque corpus ad extremum labem perisse. Inde apparuisse, ventris quoque haud segne ministerium esse: nec nungui alii, quam alere eum red deum in omnes corporis partes hunc, quo rivimus vigemusque, divisionem pariter in rebus naturum, confecto cibo, sanguinem. T. Livii, Histor. lib. ii. cap. 32. "In that time in which the different parts of the human body were not in a state of unity as they now are, but each member had its separate office and distinct language; they all became discontented, because whatever was procured by their care, labour, and industry, was spent on the belly: while this, lying at ease in the midst of the body, did nothing but enjoy whatever was provided for it. They therefore conspired among themselves, and agreed that the hands should not convey food to the mouth: but the mouth should not receive what was offered to it; and that the teeth should not masticate whatever was brought to the mouth. Acting on this principle of revenge, and hoping to reduce the belly by famine, all the members, 22 Nay, much more those members of the body which seem to be more feeble, are necessary.

23 And those members of the body, which we think to be less honourable, upon these we bestow more abundant honour; and our uncomely parts have more abundant comeliness.

24 For our comely parts have no need: but God hath tempered the body together, having given more abundant honour to that part which lacked:

25 That there should be no schism in the body; but that the members should have the same care one for another.

26 And whether one member suffer, all the members suffer with it; or one member be honoured, all the members rejoice with it.

f Or, put on.—g Or, division.—h Rom 12.5. Eph. 1.2, 4. 12 & 5. 21, 30. Col 1. 24.—Eph 5. 31.—i Eph 4. 11.—l Eph 2. 20 & 3. 5 and the whole body itself, were at length, brought into the last stage of a consumption. It then plainly appeared that the belly itself did no small service; that it contributed not less to their nourishment than they did to its support; distributing to every part that from which they derived life and vigour; for, by properly concocting the food, the pure blood derived from it was conveyed by the arteries to every member.²⁷

This sensible comparison produced the desired effect: the people were persuaded that the senators were as necessary to their existence as they were to that of the senators; and that it required the strictest union and mutual support of high and low, to preserve the body politic. This transaction took place about 500 years before the Christian era, and was handed down by unbroken tradition, to the time of Titus Livius, from whom I have taken it; who died the year of our Lord 17, about forty years before St. Paul wrote this epistle: as his works were well known, and universally read among the Romans in the time of the apostle, it is very probable that St. Paul had this famous apologue in view, when he wrote from the 14th verse to the end of the chapter.

22. Those members—which seem to be more feeble. These, and the less honourable and the uncomely, mentioned in the next verses, seem to mean the principal viscera, such as the heart, lungs, stomach, and intestinal canal. These, when compared with the arms and limbs, are comparatively weak, and some of them, considered in themselves, uncomely and less honourable—yet these are more essential to life, than any of the others. A man may lose an eye by accident, and an arm, or a leg may be amputated; and yet the body live and be vigorous: but let the stomach, heart, lungs, or any of the viscera be removed, and life becomes necessarily extinct. Hence these parts are not only valued, but the parts in which they are lodged are surrounded, ornamented, and fortified for their preservation and defence, on the proper performance of whose functions life so immediately depends.

21. For our comely parts have no need. It would be easy to go into great detail in giving an anatomical description of the different members and parts to which the apostle refers; but it would not, probably, answer the end of general edification—and to explain every allusion made by the apostle, would require a minuteness of description, which would not be tolerated, except in a treatise on the anatomy of the human body. My readers will therefore excuse my entering into this detail.

25. That there should be no schism in the body. That there should be no unnecessary and independent part in the whole human machine; and that every part should contribute something to the general proportion, symmetry, and beauty of the body. So completely has God tempered the whole together, that not the smallest visible part can be removed from the body without not only injuring its proportions, but producing deformity. Hence the members have the same care one for another.—The eyes and ears watch for the general safety of the whole, and they are placed in the head like sentinels in a tower, that they may perceive the first approach of a foe, and give warning. The hands, immediately on an attack, exert themselves to defend the head and the body; and the limbs are swift to carry off the body from dangers, against which resistance would be vain.—Even the heart takes alarm from both the eyes, and the ears: and when an attack is made on the body, every external muscle becomes inflated, and contracts itself, that by thus collecting and concentrating its force, it may the more effectually resist the assailant, and contribute to the defence of the system.

26. And whether one member suffer. As there is a mutual exertion for the general defence; so there is a mutual sympathy. If the eye, the hand, the foot, &c. be injured, the whole man grieves; and if by clothing, or any thing else, any particular member or part is adorned, strengthened, or better secured, it gives a general pleasure to the whole man.

27. Now, ye are the body of Christ. The apostle having finished his apologue, comes to his application.

As the members in the human body; so the different members of the mystical body of Christ. All are intended by him to have the same relation to each other, to be mutually subservient to each other, to mourn for, and rejoice with each other. He has also made each necessary to the beauty, proportion, strength, and perfection of the whole. Not one is useless; not one unnecessary. Paul, Apollos, Kephas, &c. with all their variety of gifts and graces, are for the perfecting of the saints for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ, Eph. iv. 12. Hence no teacher should be exalted above, or opposed to another. As the eye cannot say 27 Now, ye are the body of Christ, and I members in particular.

23 And God hath set some in the church, first, apostles, secondarily, prophets, thirdly, teachers, after that miracles, then gifts of healings, helps, governments, diversities of tongues.

29 Are all apostles? are all prophets? are all teachers? are all workers of miracles?

30 Have all the gifts of healing? do all speak with tongues? do all interpret?

31 But covet earnestly the best gifts: and yet show I unto you a more excellent way.

to the hand, I have no need of thee—so luminous Apollos cannot say to laborious Paul, I can build up and preserve the church without thee. The foot planted on the ground to support the whole fabric, and the hands that swing at liberty, and the eye that is continually taking in near and distant prospects, are all equally serviceable to the whole; and mutually helpful to and dependant on each other. So also, are the different ministers and members of the church of Christ.

From a general acquaintance with various ministers of Christ, and a knowledge of their different talents and endowments, manifested either by their preaching or writings, and with the aid of a little fancy, we could here make out a sort of correspondency between their services and the uses of the different members of the human body. We could call one eye, because of his acute observation of men and things, and penetration into cases of conscience, and divine mysteries. Another hand, from his laborious exertions in the church. Another foot, from his industrious travels to spread abroad the knowledge of Christ crucified; and so of others. But this does not appear to be any part of the apostle's plan.

23. God hath set some in the church. As God has made evident distinctions among the members of the human body, so that some occupy a more eminent place than others: so has he in the church. And to prove this the apostle enumerates the principal offices, and in the order in which they should stand.

First, apostles. Ἀποστολῶν, from ἀπο, from, and στέλλω, I send: to send from one person to another, and from one place to another. Persons immediately designated by Christ, and sent by him to preach the Gospel to all mankind.

Secondarily, prophets. Προφητας, from προ, before, and φημι, I speak, a person who, under divine inspiration, predicts future events: but the word is often applied to those who preached the Gospel. See on ver. 10.

Thirdly, teachers. Διδασκαλῶν, from διδάσκειν, I teach. Persons whose chief business it was to instruct the people in the elements of the Christian religion, and their duty to each other. See on Rom. viii. 8.

Miracles. Δυναμεις. Persons endowed with miraculous gifts, such as those mentioned Mark xvi. 17, 18. casting out devils, speaking with new tongues, &c. See on ver. 10. and at the end of the chapter.

Gifts of healing. Χρισματα ιασην. Such as laying hands upon the sick and healing them, Mark xvi. 18. which, as being one of the most beneficent miraculous powers, was most frequently conferred. See on ver. 8.

Helps. Ἀντιληπεις. Dr. Lightfoot conjectures that these were the apostles' helpers; persons, who accompanied them, baptized those who were converted by them; and were sent by them to such places as they could not attend to, being otherwise employed.

The Levites are termed by the Talmudists helps of the priests. The word occurs Luke i. 54. Rom. viii. 26.

Governments. Κυβερνηταις. Dr. Lightfoot contends that this word does not refer to the power of ruling, but to the case of a person endowed with a deep and comprehensive mind, who is profoundly wise and prudent; and he thinks that it implies the same as discernment of spirits; ver. 10. where see the note. He has given several proofs of this use of the word in the Septuagint.

Diversities of tongues. Τενη γλωσσων, kinds of tongues; that is, different kinds.—The power to speak, on all necessary occasions, languages which they had not learned. See on ver. 10.

29. Are all apostles, &c.] That is, all are not apostles: all are not prophets, &c. God has distributed his various gifts among various persons, each of whom is necessary for the complete edification of the body of Christ. On these subjects see the notes on verses 7, 8, 9, 10.

31. But covet earnestly. To covet, signifies, to desire earnestly. This disposition towards heavenly things is highly laudable—towards earthly things, is deeply criminal. A man may possess the best of all these gifts, and yet be deficient in what is essentially necessary to his salvation; for he may be without that love or charity which the apostle here calls the more excellent way, and which he proceeds in the next chapter to describe.

Some think that this verse should be read affirmatively, Ye earnestly contend about the best gifts, but I show unto you a more excellent way; i. e. get your hearts filled with love to God and man.—Love which is the principle of obedience; which works no ill to its neighbour, and which is the fulfilling of the law. This is a likely reading, for there was certainly more contentions in the church of Corinth about the gifts, than about the graces of the Spirit.

1. After all that has been said on the different offices mentioned by the apostle in the preceding chapter, there are some of them which, perhaps, are not understood. I confess I scarcely know what to make of those which we translate helps and governments. Bishop Pearce, who could neither see church government, nor state government in these words, expresses himself thus: "These two words, after all that the commentators say about them, I do not understand; and in no other part of the New Testament, is either of them, in any sense, mentioned as the gift of the Spirit; especially it is observable that in ver. 23, 30, where the gifts of the Spirit are again enumerated, no notice is taken of any thing like them, while all the other several parts are exactly enumerated. Perhaps these words were put in the margin to explain divinus, miracles, or powers. Some taking the meaning to be helps, assistances, as in 2 Cor. xii. 9. Others to be superintendents, governments, as in Rom. viii. 38, and from being marginal explanations, they might have been at last incorporated with the text." It must, however, be acknowledged, that the omission of these words is not countenanced by any MS. or Version. One thing we may fully know, that there are some men who are peculiarly qualified for governing by either providence or grace; and that there are others who can neither govern nor direct, but are good helpers.

2. In three several places in this chapter the apostle sums up the gifts of the Spirit. Dr. Lightfoot thinks they answer to each other in the following order, which the reader will take on his authority.

Ver. 8, 9, 10.	Ver. 23.	Ver. 29 and 30.
Is given	God hath set some	Are all
The word of Wisdom;	First, Aposles ;	Aposles ;
The word of Knowledge;	Secondly Prophets ;	Prophets ;
Ver. 9. Faith;	Thirdly, Teachers ;	Teachers ;
Gifts of Healings.	After that, Miracles ;	Miracles ;
V. 10. Working of Miracles;	Gifts of Healings ;	V. 30. Gifts of healings.
Prophecy;	Helps ;
Discerning of Spirits;	Governments ;
Diverse kinds of Tongues;	Diverse kinds of tongues.	Speak with Tongues;
Interpretation of Tongues.		Interpret.

If the reader thinks that this is the best way of explaining these different gifts and offices, he will adopt it; and he will, in that case, consider, 1. That the word or doctrine of wisdom comes from the apostles. 2. The doctrine of knowledge, from the prophets. 3. Faith, by means of the teachers. 4. That working of miracles includes the gifts of healing. 5. That to prophecy, signifying preaching, which it frequently does, helps is a parallel. 6. That, discernment of spirits, is the same with governments, which Dr. Lightfoot supposes to imply a deeply comprehensive, wise, and prudent mind. 7. As to the gift of tongues, there is no variation in either of the three places.

3. It is strange that in this enumeration, only three distinct officers in the church should be mentioned: viz. apostles, prophets, and teachers. We do not know that miracles, gifts of healing, helps, governments, and diversity of tongues, were exclusive offices; for it is probable that apostles, prophets, and teachers, wrought miracles occasionally, and spoke with diverse tongues. However, in all this enumeration, where the apostle gives us all the officers, and gifts necessary for the constitution of a church, we find not one word of bishops, presbyters, or deacons; much less of the various officers and offices which the Christian church at present exhibits. Perhaps the bishops are included under the apostles; the presbyters, under the prophets; and the deacons under the teachers.—As to the other ecclesiastical officers with which the Roman church teems, they may seek them who are determined to find them, any where out of the New Testament.

4. Mr. Quensel observes on these passages, that there are three sorts of gifts necessary to the forming Christ's mystical body. 1. Gifts of power, for the working of miracles, in reference to the Father. 2. Gifts of labour and ministry, for the exercise of government and other offices with respect to the Son. 3. Gifts of knowledge for the instruction of the people, with relation to the Holy Ghost.

The FATHER is the principle and end of all created power, let us then ultimately refer all things to Him.

The SON is the Institutor and Head of all the hierarchical ministries; let us depend upon Him.

The HOLY GHOST is the fountain and fulness of all spiritual graces; let us desire and use them, only in and by Him.

There is nothing good, nothing profitable to salvation, unless it be done in the power of God, communicated by Christ Jesus, and in that holiness of heart which is produced by his Spirit. Pastors are only the instruments of God, the depositaries of the authority of Christ, and the channels by whom the love and graces of the Spirit are conveyed. Let these act as receiving all from God by Christ, through the Holy Ghost; and let the church receive them as the ambassadors of the Almighty.

CHAPTER XIII.

Charity, or love to God and man, the sum and substance of all true religion; so that without it, the most splendid eloquence, the gift of prophecy, the most profound knowledge, faith, by which the most stupendous miracles might be wrought, benevolence the most unbounded, and zeal for the truth, even to martyrdom, would all be unavailing to salvation, 1—3. The description and praise of this grace, 4—7. Its durability; though tongues, prophecies, and knowledge shall cease, yet this shall never fail, 8—10. NOTES.—Ver. 1. Though I speak, &c. At the conclusion of the preceding chapter, the apostle promised to show the Corinthians a more excellent way than that in which they were now proceeding. They were so distracted with contentions, divided by parties, and envious of each other's gifts, that unity was nearly destroyed. This was a full proof that love to God and man was wanting; and that without this, their numerous gifts and other graces were nothing in the eyes of God; for it was evident that they did not love one another, which is a proof that they did not love God; and consequently, that they had not true religion. Having, by his advices and directions, corrected many abuses, and having shown them how, in outward things, they should walk so as to please God, he now shows them the spirit, temper, and disposition in which this should be done, and without which all the rest must be ineffectual.

Before I proceed to the consideration of the different parts of this chapter, it may be necessary to examine whether the word agape, be best translated by charity or love. Wiclif, translating from the Vulgate, has the word charity, and him our authorized version follows. But Coverdale, Matthews, Cranmer, and the Geneva Bible, have love; which is adopted by recent translators and commentators in general; among whom the chief are Dodd, Pearce, Purver, Wakefield, and Wesley; all these strenuously contend that the word charity, which is now confined to almsgiving, is utterly improper; and that the word love, alone expresses the apostle's sense. As the word charity seems now to express little else than almsgiving, which, performed even to the utmost of a man's power is nothing, if he lack what the apostle terms agape, and which we here translate charity; it is best to omit the use of a word in this place which, taken in its ordinary signification, makes the apostle contradict himself; see ver. 3. Though I give all my goods to feed the poor, and have not charity, it profiteth me nothing.—That is, "though I have the utmost charity, and act in every respect according to its dic-all mysteries, and all knowledge; and though I have all faith, so that I could remove mountains, and have not charity, I am nothing.

tates; yet if I have not charity, my utmost charity is unprofitable." Therefore, to shun this contradiction, and the probable misapplication of the term, Love had better be substituted for CHARITY.

The word agape, love, I have already considered at large in the note on Matt. xxii. 37. and to that place I beg leave to refer the reader for its derivation and import. Our English word love we have from the Teutonic leban, to live, because love is the means, dispenser, and preserver of life; and without it, life would have nothing desirable, nor indeed anything even supportable; or it may be taken immediately from the Anglo-Saxon lopa and lyra, love, from lyfan and lypan, to desire, to love, to favour. It would be ridiculous to look to the Greek verb philein for its derivation.

Having said so much about the word love, we should say something of the word charity, which is supposed to be improper in this place. Charity comes to us immediately from the French charité, who borrowed it from the Latin caritas, which is probably borrowed from the Greek charis, signifying grace or favour, or xapa, joy, as a benefit bestowed is a favour that inspires him who receives it with joy; and so far contributes to his happiness. The proper meaning of the word CHARIS, is dear, costly; and CHARITAS, is dearth, scarcity, a high price, or dearth. Hence, as in times of dearth or scarcity, many, especially the poor, must be in want, and the benevolent will be excited to relieve them; the term which expressed the cause of this want, was applied to the disposition which was excited in behalf of the sufferer. Now, as he who relieves a person in distress, and preserves his life, by communicating a portion of his property to him, will feel a sort of interest in the person thus preserved: hence he is said to be dear to him; i. e. he has cost him something; and he values him in proportion to the trouble or expense he has cost him. Thus charity properly expresses that affectionate attachment we may feel to a person whose wants we have been enabled to relieve; but originally it signified that want of the necessaries of life, which produced dearth or dearness of those necessities; and brought the poor man into that state in which he stood so much in need of the active benevolence of his richer neighbor. If the word be applied to God's benevolence towards man, it comes in with all propriety and force: we are dear to God, for we have not been purchased with silver or gold, but with the precious rupu quaru (costly) blood of Christ, who so loved us as to give his life a ransom for ours.

As Christians in general acknowledge that this chapter is the most important in the whole New Testament, I shall give here the first translation of it into the English language, which is known to exist; extracted from an ancient and noble MS. in my own possession, which seems to exhibit both a text and language prior to the time of Wiclif. The reader will please to observe that there are no divisions of verses in the MS.

The XIII. chapter of I. Corinthians, from an ancient MS.

This is the whole of the chapter, as it exists in the MS with all its peculiar orthography, points, and lines. The words with lines under, may be considered the translator's marginal readings; for though incorporated with the text, they are distinguished from it by those lines.

I had thought once of giving a literal translation of the whole chapter from all the ancient Versions. This would be both curious and useful: but the reader might think it would take up too much of his time; and the writer has none to spare.

The tongues of men] All human languages, with all the eloquence of the most accomplished orator.

And of angels] i.e. Though a man knew the language of the eternal world so well, that he could hold conversation with its inhabitants, and find out the secrets of their kingdom.—Or, probably the apostle refers to a notion that was common among the Jews, that there was a language by which angels might be invoked, adjured, collected, and dispersed; and, by the means of which, many secrets might be found out; and curious arts and sciences known.

There is much of this kind to be found in their cabalistical books, and in the books of many called Christians. Cornelius Agrippa's occult philosophy abounds in this; and it was the main object of Dr. Dee's actions with spirits, to get a complete vocabulary of this language. See what has been published of his work by Dr. Cusubon; and the remaining manuscript parts in the Sloan library, in the British Museum.

In Bara Buthra, fol. 134, mention is made of a famous rabbin, Jochanan Ben Zaccat, who understood the language of derils, trees, and angels.

Some think that the apostle means only the most splendid eloquence; as we sometimes apply the word angelic to egi-nify any thing sublime, grand, beautiful, &c. But it is more likely that he speaks here after the manner of his countrymen, who imagined that there was an angelic language which was the key to many mysteries: a language which might be acquired, and which, they say, had been learned by several.

Sounding brass] Ναρκος ηχου That is, like a trumpet made of brass; for, although ναρκος signifies brass, and αη signifies the same, yet we know the latter is often employed to signify the trumpet, because generally made of this metal. Thus Virgil, when he represents Misenus endeavouring to fright away the harpies with the sound of his trumpet:

*Ergo, ubi delapsa sonitum per curra dedre.
Littora; dat signum specula Misenus ab altis
Ere cavo: iradant socii, et nova praelia tentant, Obscenus pelagi ferro fadare volucres.*

Æneid. lib. iii. ver. 238.

Then as the harpies, from the hills once more,
Pour'd shrieking down, and crowded round the shore;
On his high stand, Misenus sounds from far,
The brazen trumpet, the signal of the war.
With unaccustomed light, we flew to slay

The forms obscene, dread monsters of the sea.—Pitt.
The metal, of which the instrument was made, is used again for the instrument itself, in that fine passage of the same poet, Æneid. lib. ix. ver. 533, where he represents the Trojans rushing to battle against the Volscians.

*At tuba terribilem sonitum prociat are canoro
Incepit: sequitur clamor, catenque remigat.
And now the trumpets, terribly from far,
With rattling clangour rouse the sleepy war.
The soldiers' shouts succeed the brazen sounds,
And heaven from pole to pole their noise rebounds.*

Dryden. §

And again, in his Battle of the Bees, Geo. lib. iv. 70.

*—nuncque morantes
Martius ille aris rauri canit incipit, et cor
Auditor fractos, sonitus imitata tubarum.
With shouts the coward's courage they excite,
And martial clangours call them out to fight;
With hoarse alarms, the hollow camp rebounds,
That imitates the trumpet's angry sounds.—*Dryden.

Examples of the same figure might be multiplied; but these are sufficient.

Tinkling cymbal.] “The cymbal was a concavo-convex plate of brass, the concave side of which being struck against another plate of the same kind, produced a tinkling inharmonious sound.” We may understand the apostle thus: “Though I possessed the knowledge of all languages, and could deliver even the truth of God in them, in the most eloquent manner; and had not a heart full of love to God and man, producing piety and obedience to the One, and benevolence and beneficence to the other, doing unto all as I would wish them to do to me, were our situations reversed; my religion is no more to my salvation than the sounds emitted by the brazen trumpet; or the jingling of the cymbals could contribute intellectual pleasure to the instruments which produce them. And, in the sight of God, I am of no more moral worth than those sounds are. I have, it is true, a profession; but destitute of a heart filled with love to God and man, producing meekness, gentleness, long-suffering, &c. I am without the soul and essence of religion.”

I have quoted several passages from heathens of the most cultivated minds in Greece and Rome, to illustrate passages of the sacred writers. I shall now quote one from an illiterate cottier of Somerset: and, as I have named Hom., Horac., Virg., and others, I will quote Josiah Gregory, whose mind might be compared to a diamond of the first water, whose native splendour broke in various places through its incrustations; but whose brilliancy was not brought out, for the want of the hand of the lapidary. Among various energetic sayings of this great, unlettered man, I remember to have heard the following: “People of little religion are always noisy; he who has not the love of God and man filling his heart, is like an empty wagon coming violently down a hill: it makes a great noise, because there is nothing in it.”

2. And though I have the gift of prophecy] Though I should have received from God the knowledge of future events; so that I could correctly foretel what is coming to pass in the world and in the church:—

And understand all mysteries] The meaning of all the types and figures in the Old Testament; and all the unexplored secrets of nature: and all knowledge; every human art and science; and though I have all faith, such miraculous faith as would enable me even to remove mountains; or had such powerful discernment in sacred things, that I could solve the greatest difficulties: see note on Matt. xxi. 21. And have not charity: this love to God and man, as the principle and motive of all my conduct, the characteristics of which are given in the following verses.—I am nothing: nothing in given, nothing in the sight of God; nothing in the church, and good for nothing to mankind. Balaam, and several others, not under the influence of this love of God, prophesied: and we daily see many men, who are profound scholars, and well skilled in arts and sciences, and yet not only careless about religion, but downright fools! It does not require the tongue of the inspired to say, that these men, in the sight of God, are nothing; nor can their literary or scientific acquisitions give them a passport to glory.

3. And though I bestow all my goods to feed the poor] This is a proof that charity, in our sense of the word, is not what the apostle means; for surely almsgiving can go no farther than to give up all that a man possesses, in order to relieve the wants of others. The word ψωφίζω, which we translate to feed the poor, signifies to divide into morsels, and put into the mouth; which implies carefulness and tenderness in applying the bounty thus freely given.

And though I give my body to be burned] Ἰνα καθήσθωαι. Mr. Wakefield renders this clause thus: And though I give up my body so as to have cause of boasting; in vindication of which he first refers to Dan. iii. 28. Acts xv. 26. Rom. viii. 32. Phil. i. 20. 2. He says that there is no such word as καθήσθωαι. 3. That καυχήσθωαι, that I may boast, is the reading of the Æthiopic and Coptic, and he might have added of the Codex Alexandrinus, several Greek and Latin MSS. referred to by St. Jerome, by Ephraim, and by St. Jerome himself, who translates the passage thus, Si tradidero corpus meum ut glorior: i. e. "If I deliver up my body, that I may glory, or have cause of boasting." 4. He adds, that burning, though a common punishment in after times, was not prevalent when this epistle was written.

Some of the foreign critics, particularly Schultzius, translate thus, Si tradidero corpus, ut mihi stigma inuretur: "If I should deliver up my body, to receive a stigma with a hot iron;" which may mean, if I should, in order to redeem another, willingly give up myself to slavery, and receive the mark of my owner, by having my flesh stamped with a hot iron; and have not love, as before specified, it profits me nothing. This gives a good sense; but will the passage bear it? In the MSS. there are several various readings, which plainly show the original copyists scarcely knew what to make of the word καθήσθωαι, which they found in the text generally. The various readings are καθήσθωαι, which Grischbach seems to prefer: καθήσθωαι and καυθῶ, all of which give little variation of meaning. Which should be preferred, I can scarcely venture to say. If we take the commonly received word, it states a possible case; a man may be so obstinately wedded to a particular opinion, demonstrably false in itself, as to give up his body to be burned in its defence, as was literally the case with Vanini, who, for his obstinate atheism, was burnt alive at Paris, February 19, A. D. 1619. In such a case, his giving his body to be burnt, certainly profited him nothing.

"We may observe," says Dr. Lightfoot, "in those instances which are compared with charity, and as good as nothing, if charity be absent, that the apostle mentions those which were of the noblest esteem in the Jewish nation; and as also the most precious things that could be named by them, were compared with this more precious, and were of no account in comparison of it."

1. To speak with the tongues of men, among the Jewish Interpreters, means to speak the languages of the seventy nations. To the praise of Mordecai, they say, that he understood all those languages; and they require that the fathers of the Sanhedrin, should be skilled in many languages, that they may not be obliged to hear any thing by an interpreter. Maim. in Sanh. c. 2.

2. To speak with the tongues of angels, they thought to be not only an excellent gift, but to be possible; and highly extol Jochanan ben Zaccai, because he understood them: see the note on ver. 1.

3. To know all mysteries and all knowledge, was not only prized but affected by them. Of Hillel, the elder, they say, he had eighty disciples: thirty who were worthy to have the Holy Spirit dwell upon them, as it did upon Moses; thirty who were worthy that the sun should stop his course for them, as it did for Joshua; and there were twenty between both. The greatest of all was Jonathan ben Uzziel; the least was Jochanan ben Zaccai. He omitted not, i. e. (perfectly understood,) the Scripture, the Mishna, the Gemara, the idioms of the law, and the scribes, traditions, illustrations, comparisons, equalities, gematries, parables, &c.

4. The moving or rooting up of mountains, which, among them, signified the removing of the greatest difficulties, especially from the sacred text, they considered also a high and glorious attainment: see the note on Matt. xxi. 21. And of his salvation who had it, they could not have formed the slightest doubt. But the apostle says, a man might have and enjoy all those gifts, &c. and be nothing in himself, and be nothing profited by them."

The reader will consider, that the charity or love, concerning which the apostle speaks, is that which is described from ver. 4. to 7. inclusive; it is not left to the conjectures of men to find it out. What the apostle means, is generally allowed to be true religion; but if he had not described it, this true religion would have been as various as the parties are who suppose they have it. Let the reader also observe, that not only the things which are in the highest repute among the Jews, but the things which are in the highest repute among Christians and Gentiles, are those which the apostle shows to be of no use, if the love hereafter described be wanting. And yet, who can suppose that the man already described can be destitute of true religion, as he must be under an especial influence of God; else how, 1st. could he speak all the languages of men? for this was allowed to be one of the extraordinary gifts of God's Spirit. 2. He must have Divine teaching to know the language of angels, and thus to get acquainted with the economy of the invisible world. 3. Without immediate influence from God, he could not be a prophet, and predict future events. 4. Without this he could not understand all the mysteries of the Divine word; nor those of Providence. 5. All knowledge, suppose this be confined to human arts and sciences, could not be acquired without especial assistance. 6. And without the most powerful and extraordinary assistance, he could not have a faith that could remove mountains; or miraculous faith of any kind; and the apostle supposes that a man might have all these six things, and not possess that religion which could save his soul! And may we not say, that if all these could not avail for salvation, a thousand times less surely cannot. How blindly, therefore, are multitudes of persons trusting in that which is almost infinitely less than that which the apostle says would profit them nothing!

7 I bearth all things, believeth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things.

8 Charity never faileth: but whether there be prophecies, 1 Rom. 15, 1. Gal 6, 2. 2 Tim. 2, 24.—m Ch. 12, 31. Phil. 9.—11. 2 Pet. 1, 19. Rev. 22, 4, 5.

The charity or love which God recommends, the apostle describes in sixteen particulars, which are the following:—

4. (1.) Charity suffereth long] Μακρὸν ὄψεται, has a long mind, to the end of which, neither trials, adversities, persecutions, nor provocations can reach. The love of God, and of our neighbor for God's sake, is patient towards all men: it suffers all the weakness, ignorance, errors, and infirmities of the children of God; and all the malice and wickedness of the children of this world; and all this, not merely for a time, but long, without end: for it is still a mind or disposition, to the end of which, trials, difficulties, &c. can never reach. It also waits God's time of accomplishing his gracious or providential purposes, without murmuring or repining; and bears its own infirmities as well as those of others, with humble submission to the will of God.

(2.) It is kind] Χρηστεύεται, it is tender and compassionate in itself, and kind and obliging to others: it is mild, gentle, and benign; and, if called to suffer, inspires the sufferer with the most amiable sweetness, and the most tender affection. It is also submissive to all the dispensations of God; and creates trouble to no one.

(3.) Charity envieth not] Οὐ ζήλοι: is not grieved because another possesses a greater portion of earthly, intellectual, or spiritual blessings. Those who have this pure love, rejoice as much at the happiness, the honour, and comfort of others, as they can do in their own. They are ever willing that others should be preferred before them.

(4.) Charity vaunteth not itself] Οὐ περπερεύεται: This word is variously translated; acteth not rashly, insolently; is not inconstant, &c. It is not agreed by learned men whether it be Greek, Latin, or Arabic. Bishop Pearce derived it from the latter language, and translates it is not inconstant. There is a phrase in our own language that expresses what I think to be the meaning of the original, does not set itself forward; does not desire to be noticed or applauded; but wishes that God may be all in all.

(5.) Is not puffed up] Οὐ φευσονται: is not inflated with a sense of its own importance; for it knows it has nothing but what it has received; and that it deserves nothing that it has got. Every man whose heart is full of the love of God, is full of humility; for there is no man so humble as he whose heart is cleansed from all sin. It has been said that indwelling sin humbles us; never was there a greater falsity: PRIDE is the very essence of sin; he who has sin has pride, and pride too in proportion to his sin; this is a mere Popish doctrine; and, strange to tell, the doctrine in which their doctrine of merit is founded! They say, God leaves conscience in the heart of every Christian, that in striving with, and overcoming it from time to time, he may have an accumulation of meritorious acts. Certain Protestants say, it is a true sign of a very gracious state, when a man feels and deplores his inbred corruptions. How near do these come to the Papists, whose doctrine they profess to detest and abhor! The truth is, it is no sign of grace whatever; it only argues, as they use it, that the man has got light to show him his corruptions; but he has not yet got grace to destroy them. He is convinced that he should have the mind of Christ, but he feels that he has the mind of Satan; he deplores it; and, if his bad doctrine do not prevent him, he will not rest till he feels the blood of Christ cleansing him from all sin.

True humility arises from a sense of the fulness of God in the soul; abasement from a sense of corruption, is a widely different thing; but this has been put in the place of humility; and even called grace; many, very many, verify the saying of the poet:—

"Proud I am, my wants to see; Proud of my humility."

they shall fall; whether there be tongues, they shall cease; whether there be knowledge, it shall vanish away.

n Ch. 8.2. John 15. 13.

5. (6.) Doth not behave itself unseemly Οὐκ ἀσχημονεῖ, from α, negative, and αἰσχημα, figure, mean; love never acts out of its place or character: observes due decorum and good manners; is never rude, beastish, or brutish: and is ever willing to become all things to all men, that it may please them for their good to edification. No ill-bred man, or what is termed rude or unmanly, is a Christian. A man may have a natural bluntness, or be a clown, and yet there be nothing beastish or hoggyish in his manner. I must apologise for using such words; they best express the evil against which I wish, both powerfully and successfully, to declaim. I never wish to meet with those who affect to be called "blunt, honest men," who feel themselves above all the forms of respect and civility; and care not how many they put to pain; or how many they displease. But let me not be misunderstood: I do not contend for ridiculous ceremonies, and hollow compliments; there is surely a medium; and a sensible Christian man will not be long at a loss to find it out. Even that people, who profess to be above all worldly forms, and are generally stiff enough, yet are rarely found to be rude, unseemly, or ill-bred.

(7.) Seeketh not her own Οὐ ζητεῖ τὰ ἑαυτῆς; is not desirous of her own spiritual welfare only, but of her neighbour's also; for the writers of the Old and New Testaments do almost every where, agreeably to their Hebrew idiom, express a preference given to one thing before another, by an affirmation of that which is preferred, and a negative of that which is contrary to it. See Bishop Pearce; and see the note on chap. i. 17. and chap. x. 24. 33. Love is never satisfied but in the welfare, comfort, and salvation of all. That man is no Christian who is solicitous for his own happiness alone; and cares not how the world goes, so that himself be comfortable.

(8.) Is not easily provoked Οὐ παροργίζεται; is not provoked, is not irritated, is not made sour or bitter. How the word easily got into our translation it is hard to say; but, however it got in, it is utterly improper, and has nothing in the original to countenance it. By the transcript from my old MS. which certainly contains the first translation ever made in English, we find that the word did not exist there; the conscientious translator rendering it thus:—It is not stirred to wrath.

The New Testament, printed in 1547, 4to. the first year of Edward VI. in English and Latin, is simply, is not provoked to anger. The edition published in English, in the following year, 1548, has the same rendering, but the orthography better: is not provoked to anger. The Bible in folio, with notes, published the next year, 1549, by Edmund Beke, preserves nearly the same reading, is not provoked to anger. The large folio printed by Richard Carduarden, at Rouen, 1566, has the same reading. The translation made and printed by the command of King James I. fol. 161, &c. departs from all these, and improperly inserts the word easily, which might have been his majesty's own; and yet this translation was not followed by some subsequent editions; for the 4to. Bible printed at London four years after, 1613, not only retains this original and correct reading, it is not provoked to anger, but has the word love every where in this chapter, instead of charity, in which all the preceding versions and editions agree. In short, this is the reading of Coverdale, Matthæus, Cranmer, the Geneva, and others; and our own authorized version is the only one which I have seen where this false reading appears.

As to the ancient versions, they all, Vulgate, Syriac, Arabic, Ethiopic, Coptic, and Italic, strictly follow the Greek text; and supply no word that tends to abate the signification of the apostle's οὐ παροργίζεται, is not provoked; nor is there a various reading here, in all the numerous MSS. It is of importance to make these observations, because the common version of this place destroys the meaning of the apostle, and makes him speak very improperly. If love is provoked at all, it then ceases to be love; and if it be not easily provoked, this grants, as almost all the commentators say, that in special cases, it may be provoked; and that they instance in the case of Paul and Barnabas, Acts xv. 39. but I have sufficiently vindicated this passage in my note on that place, and given at large the meaning of the word παροργίζω; and to that place I beg leave to refer the reader. The apostle's own words in ver. 7. are a sufficient proof that the love of which he speaks, can never be provoked.—When the man who possesses this love, gives way to provocation, he loses the balance of his soul, and grieves the Spirit of God. In that instant he ceases from loving God with all his soul, mind, and strength; and surely if he get embittered against his neighbour, he does not love him as himself. It is generally said, that though a man may feel himself highly irritated against the sin, he may feel tender concern for the sinner. Irritation of any kind is inconsistent with self-government, and consequently with internal peace and communion with God. However favourably we may think of our own state, and however industrious we may be to find out excuses for sallies of passion, &c. still the testimony of God is, Love is not provoked; and if I have not such a love, whatever else I may possess, It profiteth me nothing.

(9.) Thinketh no evil Οὐ λογίζεται—^a believes no evil, where no evil seems." Never supposes that a good action may have a bad motive; gives every man credit for his profession of religion, uprightness, godly zeal, &c. while nothing is seen in his conduct or in his spirit inconsistent with this profession. His heart is so governed and influenced by the love of God, that he cannot think of evil but where it appears. The original implies that he does not invent, or derive any evil; or does not reason on any particular act or word, so as to infer evil from it; for this would destroy his love to his brother; it would be ruinous to charity and benevolence.

6. (10.) Rejoiceth not in iniquity Οὐ χαίρει ἐν τῇ ἀδικίᾳ—rejoiceth not in falsehood, but, on the contrary, rejoiceth in the truth; this meaning ἀδικία has in different parts of the Scriptures. At first view, this character of love seems to say but little in its favour; for who can rejoice in unrighteousness or falsity. But is it not a frequent case, that persons who have received any kind of injury, and have forborne to avenge themselves, but perhaps, have left it to God; when evil falls upon the sinner, do console themselves with what appears to them an evidence that God has avenged their quarrel; and do at least secretly rejoice that the man is suffering for his misdeeds. Is not this, in some sort, rejoicing in iniquity? Again, is it not common for interested persons to rejoice in the successes of an unjust and sanguinary war, in the sackage and burning of cities and towns: and is not the joy always in proportion to the slaughter that has been made of the enemy? And do these call themselves Christians? Then we may expect that Moloch and his sub-devils, are not so far behind this description of Christians as to render their case utterly desperate. If such Christians can be saved, demons need not despair!

(11.) But rejoiceth in the truth Ἀληθείᾳ—every thing that is opposite to falsehood and irreligion. Those who are filled with the love of God and man, rejoice in the propagation and extension of divine truth; in the spread of true religion, by which alone peace and good-will can be diffused throughout the earth. And because they rejoice in the truth, therefore they do not persecute or hinder true religion; but help it forward with all their might and power.

7. (12.) Beareth all things Πᾶν ὑποφέρει. This word is also variously interpreted; to endure, bear, sustain, cover, conceal, contain. Bishop Pearce contends that it should be translated covereth all things, and produces several plausible reasons for this translation; the most forcible of which is, that the common translation confounds it with endureth all things, in the same verse. We well know that it is a grand and distinguishing property of love to cover and conceal the fault of another; and it is certainly better to consider the passage in this light than in that which our common version holds out; and this perfectly agrees with what St. Peter says of charity, 1 Ep. iv. 8, it shall cover the multitude of sins; but there is not sufficient evidence that the original will fully bear this sense; and perhaps it would be better to take it in the sense of contain, keep in, as a vessel does liquor; thus Plato compared the souls of foolish men to a stere, and not able στειν εὐαριστῶν τε καὶ ἡδῶν, to contain any thing through unfaithfulness and forgetfulness. See Parkhurst and Wetstein. Some of the Versions have στέγει, loveth, or is warmly affectioned to all things or persons. But the true import must be found either in cover or contain. Love conceals every thing that should be concealed; betrays no secret; retains the grace given, and goes on to continual increase. A person under the influence of this love, never makes the sins, follies, faults, or imperfections of any man, the subject either of censure or conversation. He covers them as far as he can; and if alone privy to them, he retains the knowledge of them in his own bosom, as far as he ought.

(13.) Believeth all things Πᾶν πιστεύει—is ever ready to believe the best of every person, and will credit no evil of any but on the most positive evidence; gladly receives whatever may tend to the advantage of any person whose character may have suffered from obloquy and detraction; or even justly, because of his misconduct.

(14.) Hopeth all things Πᾶν ἐλπίζει—When there is no place left for believing good of a person; then love comes in with its hope, where it could not work by its faith; and begins immediately to make allowances and excuses, as far as a good conscience can permit; and farther, anticipates the repentance of the transgressor; and his restoration to the good opinion of society, and his place in the church of God from which he had fallen.

(15.) Endureth all things Πᾶν ὑπομένει—bears up under all persecutions and mal-treatment from open enemies and professed friends. Bears adversities with an even mind, as it submits with perfect resignation to every dispensation of the providence of God; and never says of any trial, affliction, or insult, that it cannot be endured.

8. (16.) Charity never faileth Ἡ ἀγάπη οὐδέποτε ἐκπίπτει—This love never faileth off, because it bears, believes, hopes, and endures all things; and while it does so it cannot fail; it is the means of preserving all other graces; indeed, properly speaking, it includes them all; and all receive their perfection from it. Love to God and man can never be dispensed with. It is essential to social and religious life; without it, no communion can be kept up with God: nor can any man have a preparation for eternal glory whose heart and soul are not deeply imbued with it. Without it there never was true religion, nor ever can be; and it not only is necessary through life, but will exist throughout eternity. What were a state of blessedness, if it did not comprehend love to God and human spirits, in the most exquisite, refined, and perfect degrees?

Prophecies—shall fail [Whether the word imply predicting future events, or teaching the truths of religion to men, all such shall soon be rendered useless. Though the accurate prophet, and the eloquent persuasive preacher, be useful in their day, they shall not be always so; nor shall their gifts fit them for glory; nothing short of the love above described, can fit a soul for the kingdom of God.]

Tongues—shall cease [The miraculous gift of different languages, that also shall cease, as being unnecessary.]

Knowledge shall vanish away [All human arts and sciences, as being utterly useless in the eternal world, though so highly extolled and useful here.]

9. For we know in part [We have here but little knowledge even of earthly, and much less, of heavenly things. He that knows most, knows little in comparison of what is known by angels, and the spirits of just men made perfect. And as we know so very little, how deficient must we be if we have not much love! Angels may wonder at the imperfection of our knowledge; and separate spirits may wonder at the perfection of their own, having obtained so much more in consequence of being separated from the body, than they could conceive to be possible while in that body. When Sir Isaac Newton had made such astonishing discoveries in the laws of nature, far surpassing any thing that had been done, by all his predecessors in science, from the days of Solomon; one of our poets, considering the scantiness of human knowledge, when compared with that which is possessed by the inhabitants of heaven, reduced his meditations on the subject to the following nervous and expressive epigram:]

Superior beings, when of late they saw,

A mortal man explain all nature's law;

Admired such wisdom in an earthly shape,

And show'd our Newton as we show an ape.

We prophesy in part [Even the sublimest prophets have been able to say but little of the heavenly state; and the best preachers have left the Spirit of God, very much to supply. And had we no more religious knowledge than we can derive from men and books; and had we no farther instruction in the knowledge of God and ourselves, than we derive from preaching, our religious experience would be low indeed. Yet, it is our duty to acquire all the knowledge we possibly can: and, as preaching is the ordinary means by which God is pleased to instruct and convert the soul, we should diligently and thankfully use it. For, we have neither reason nor Scripture to suppose that God will give us that immediately from himself, which he has promised to convey only by the use of means. Even this, his blessing makes effectual: and, after all, his Spirit supplies much that man cannot teach. Every preacher should take care to inculcate this on the hearts of his hearers. When you have learned all you can from your ministers, remember you have much to learn from God: and for this you should diligently wait on him by the reading of his word, and incessant prayer.]

10. But when that which is perfect [The state of eternal blessedness: then that which is in part, that which is imperfect shall be done away; the imperfect as well as the probationary state shall cease for ever.]

11. When I was a child [This future state of blessedness is as far beyond the utmost perfection that can be attained in this world, as our adult state of Christianity is above our state of natural infancy; in which we understood only as children understand; speak only a few broken articulate words; and reason only as children reason; having few ideas, little knowledge but what may be called mere instinct, and that much less perfect than the instinct of the brute creation; and having no experience. But when we became men; adults, having gained much knowledge of men and things, we spoke and reasoned more correctly, having left off all the manners and habits of our childhood.]

12. Now we see through a glass darkly [Δι' εσπιντρον εν αυτη παρτι. Of these words, some literal explanation is necessary. The word εσπιντρον, which we translate a glass, literally signifies a mirror, or reflector, from ες, into, and σπεινναι, I look: and among the ancients, mirrors were certainly made of fine polished metal. The word here may signify any thing by which the image of a person is reflected, as in our looking, or look in glass. The word is not used for a glass to look through; nor would such an image have suited with the apostle's design.]

The εσπιντρον, or mirror, is mentioned by some of the most ancient Greek writers; so Anacreon, Ode xi. ver. 1.

Δεγναισι δι' γυαλιν,
 Ανακρεων σπειννεν

* face to face: now I know in part; but then shall I know even as now I am known.

13 And now abideth faith, hope, charity, these three; but the greatest of these is charity.

e Matt. 18:10, 1 John 3:2.—1 Ch. 15:19. Rom. 13:8—10.

Δαβων ΕΣΠΙΤΡΟΝ ἀπει

Εγας μεν οὐκ ούσας.

Τη γυναίκα λέγει,

Anacreon, thou art grown old:

Take thy mirror, and view

How few of thy hairs remain.

And again in Ode xx. ver. 5.

Εγώ δ' εσπιντρον εἶμι

Ὅπως ἀνὴρ βλεψῆς με.

I wish I were a mirror,

That thou mightest always look into me.

In Exod. xxxviii. 8. we meet with the term looking-glasses, but the original is מראה maroth, and should be translated mirrors; as out of those very articles which we absurdly translate looking-glasses, the bracen laver was made! In the Greek version, the word εσπιντρον, is not found but twice, and that in the apocryphal books. In the book of the wisdom of Solomon, chap. vii. 26. speaking of wisdom, the author says, "She is the brightness of the everlasting light, κατεσπιντρον ακαλιδωτον, and the unspotted mirror of the power of God and the image of his goodness." In Eccles. xii. 11. exhorting to put no trust in an enemy, he says, "Though he humble himself, and go crouching, yet take good heed, and beware of him, and thou shalt be unto him ως εκμεταχως εσπιντρον, as if thou hadst wiped a looking-glass, (mirror), and thou shalt know that his rust hath not altogether been wiped away." All these passages must be understood of polished metal, not of glass; which, though it existed among the Romans and others, yet was brought to very little perfection: and as to grinding and silvering of glass, they are modern inventions.

Some have thought that the apostle refers to something of the telescope kind; by which distant and small objects become visible, although their surfaces become dim in proportion to the quantum of the magnifying power: but this is too refined; he appears simply to refer to a mirror, by which images were reflected, and not to any diaphanous and magnifying powers, through which objects were perceived.

Possibly the true meaning of the words δι' εσπιντρον εν αυτη παρτι, through a glass darkly, may be found among the Jewish writers, who use a similar term to express nearly the same thing to which the apostle refers. A revelation of the will of God, in clear and express terms, is called by them מראה אשכולית aspecularia maira, a clear or lucid glass, or specular; in reference specularibus lapidibus, to the diaphanous, polished stones, used by the ancients for windows, instead of glass. An obscure prophecy they termed מראה אשכולית aspecularia dela nahuria, "A specular which is not clear."

Numb. xii. 6. If there be a prophet, I, the Lord, will make myself known unto him in a vision, and I will speak unto him in a dream: Rab. Tanchum thus explains—"My Shechinah shall not be revealed to him, מראה אשכולית aspecularia maira, in a lucid specular, but only in a dream and a vision."

On Ezek. i. 4, 5. And I looked and behold a whirlwind, a great cloud and a fire infolding itself, &c. Sohar Chudash, fol. 33. says, "This is a vision מראה אשכולית aspecularia dela nahuria, "by an obscure or dark specular."

From a great variety of examples produced by Schoettgen, it appears that the rabbins make a great deal of difference between seeing through the lucid glass or specular, and seeing through the obscure one. The first is attributed only to Moses, who conversed with God face to face, i. e. through the lucid specular; and between the other prophets, who saw him in dreams and visions, i. e. through the obscure specular. In these distinctions and sayings of the ancient Jews we must seek for that to which the apostle alludes. See Schoettgen.

The word αυτη παρτι, which we render darkly, will help us to the true meaning of the place. The following is Mr. Parkhurst's definition of the term and of the thing. "Αυτη παρτι, from αυτη παρτι, the perfect passive of αυτη παρτι, to hint, intimate, signify with some degree of obscurity: an enigma, in which one thing answers or stands in correspondence to, or as the representative of, another; which is, in some respect, similar to it, occurs 1 Cor. xiii. 12. Now, in this life, we see by means of a mirror reflecting the images of heavenly and spiritual things, εν αυτη παρτι, in an enigmatical manner, invisible things being represented by visible; spiritual, by natural; eternal, by temporal; but then, in the eternal world, face to face; every thing being seen in itself, and not by means of a representative or similitude."

Now I know in part [Though I have an immediate revelation from God, concerning his great design in the disposition of the Gospel, yet there are lengths, breadths, depths, and heights of this design, which even that revelation has not discovered; nor can they be known and apprehended in the present imperfect state. Eternity alone can unfold the whole scheme of the Gospel.]

As—I am known. In the same manner in which disembodied spirits know and understand.

13. And now, [in this present life,] abideth faith, hope, charity [These three supply the place of that direct vision, which no human embodied spirit can have; these abide or remain for the present state. Faith, by which we apprehend spiritual blessings, and walk with God. Hope, by which we view and expect eternal blessedness, and pass through things temporal, so as not to lose those which are eternal. Charity or love, by which we show forth the virtues of the grace which we receive by faith, in living a life of obedience to God, and of good will and usefulness to man.

But the greatest of these is charity. Without faith it is impossible to please God; and without it, we cannot partake of the grace of our Lord Jesus: without hope, we could not endure, as seeing him who is invisible; nor have any adequate notion of the eternal world: nor bear up under the afflictions and difficulties of life: but great, and useful, and indispensably necessary as these are, yet charity or love is greater: love is the fulfilling of the law; but this is never said of faith or hope.

It may be necessary to enter more particularly into a consideration of the conclusion of this very important chapter.

1. Love, is properly the image of God in the soul; for God is love. By faith, we receive from our Maker; by hope, we expect a future and eternal good; but by love, we resemble God; and by it alone are we qualified to enjoy heaven, and be one with him throughout eternity. Faith, says one, is the foundation of the Christian life, and of good works: Hope rears the superstructure; but love finishes, completes, and crowns it in a blessed eternity. Faith and hope respect ourselves alone; love takes in both God and man. Faith helps, and hope sustains us; but love to God and man makes us obedient and useful. This one consideration is sufficient to show that love is greater than either faith or hope.

2. Some say love is the greatest, because it remains throughout eternity, whereas faith and hope proceed only through life; hence we say, that there faith is lost in sight, and hope in fruition. But does the apostle say so? Or does any man inspired by God, say so? I believe not. Faith and hope will as necessarily enter into eternal glory, as love will. The perfections of God are absolute in their nature, infinite in number, and eternal in their duration. However high, glorious, or sublime the soul may be in that eternal state, it will ever, in respect to God, be limited in its powers; and must be improved, and expanded, by the communications of the Supreme Being. Hence it will have infinite glories in the nature of God to apprehend by faith, to anticipate by hope, and enjoy by love.

3. From the nature of the Divine perfections, there must be infinite glories in them which must be objects of faith to disembodied spirits; because it is impossible that they should be experimentally, or possessively known by any creature. Even in the heaven of heavens we shall, in reference to the infinite and eternal excellencies of God, walk by faith, and not by sight. We shall credit the existence of infinite and illimitable glories in him, which, from their absolute and infinite nature, must be incommunicable. And as the very nature of the soul shows it to be capable of eternal growth and improvement; so the communications from the Deity, which are to produce this growth, and effect this improvement, must be objects of faith to the pure spirit; and, if objects of faith, consequently objects of hope; for, as hope is "the expectation of future good," it is inseparable from the nature of the soul, to know of the existence of any attainable good, without making it immediately the object of desire or hope. And is it not this that shall constitute the eternal and progressive happiness of the immortal spirit; viz. knowing, from what it has received, that there is infinitely more to be received; and desiring to be put in possession of every communicable good which it knows to exist?

4. As faith goes forward to receive, so hope goes forward to desire; and God continues to communicate; every communication making way for another, by preparing the soul for greater enjoyment; and this enjoyment must produce love. To say that the soul can have neither faith nor hope in a future state, is to say that, as soon as it enters heaven, it is as happy as it can possibly be; and this goes to exclude all growth in the eternal state; and all progressive manifestations and communications of God; and consequently to fix a spirit which is a composition of infinite desires, in a state of eternal sameness, in which it must be greatly changed in its constitution, to find endless gratification.

CHAPTER XIV.

We should earnestly desire spiritual gifts; but prophesying is to be preferred, because it is superior to the gift of tongues, 1, 2. Prophesying defined, 3. How to regulate this supernatural gift of tongues, in teaching for the edification of the church, 4—13. In praying and giving thanks, 14—17. Those who speak with tongues should interpret, that others may be edified, 18—22. What benefit may accrue from this in the public assemblies, 23—28. How the prophets or teachers should not be in the church, 29—33. Women should keep silence in the church, 34, 35. All should be humble, and every thing should be done in love, 36—40. [A. M. 4060. A. NOTES.—Verse 1. Follow after charity. Most earnestly labour to be put in possession of that love which beareth, believeth, hopeth, and endureth all things. It may be difficult

5. To sum up the reasoning on this subject, I think it necessary to observe—1. That the term faith is here to be taken in the general sense of the word, for that belief which a soul has of the infinite sufficiency and goodness of God; in consequence of the discoveries he has made of himself and his designs, either by revelation, or immediately by his Spirit. Now we know that God has revealed himself not only in reference to this world, but in reference to eternity; and much of our faith is employed in things pertaining to the eternal world, and the enjoyments in that state. 2. That hope is to be taken in its common acceptation, the expectation of future good; which expectation is necessarily founded on faith, as faith is founded on knowledge. God gives a revelation which concerns both worlds; containing exceeding great and precious promises relative to both. We believe what he has said on his own veracity; and we hope to enjoy the promised blessings in both worlds, because he is faithful who has promised. 3. As the promises stand in reference to both worlds, so also must the faith and hope to which these promises stand as objects. 4. The enjoyments in the eternal world are all spiritual, and must proceed immediately from God himself. 5. God, in the plenitude of his excellencies, is as incomprehensible to a glorified spirit, as he is to a spirit resident in flesh and blood. 6. Every created, intellectual nature, is capable of eternal improvement. 7. If seeing God as he is, be essential to the eternal happiness of beatified spirits, then the discoveries which He makes of himself must be gradual; forasmuch as it is impossible that an infinite eternal nature can be manifested to a created and limited nature, in any other way. 8. As the perfections of God are infinite, they are capable of being eternally manifested; and after all manifestations, there must be an infinitude of perfections still to be brought to view. 9. As every soul that has any just notion of God must know that he is possessed of all possible perfections; so these perfections being objects of knowledge must be objects of faith. 10. Every holy spirit feels itself possessed of unlimited desires for the enjoyment of spiritual good; and faith, in the infinite goodness of God necessarily implies that he will satisfy every desire he has excited. 11. The power to gratify, in the Divine Being, and the capacity to be gratified in the immortal spirit, will necessarily excite continual desires; which desires, on the evidence of faith, will as necessarily produce hope, which is the expectation of future good. 12. All possible perfections in God, are the objects of faith; and the communication of all possible blessedness, the object of hope. 13. Faith goes forward to apprehend, and hope to anticipate, as God continues to discover his unbounded glories and perfections. 14. Thus discovered and desired, their influences become communicated, love possesses them, and is excited and increased by the communication. 15. With respect to those which are communicated, faith and hope cease, and go forward to new apprehensions and anticipations; while love continues to retain and enjoy the whole. 16. Thus an eternal interest is kept up; and infinite blessings, in endless succession, apprehended, anticipated, and enjoyed.

6. My opinion, that faith and hope, as well as love, will continue in a future state, will, no doubt, appear singular to many, who have generally considered the two former as necessarily terminating in this lower world; but this arises from an improper notion of the beatified state; and from inattention to the state and capacity of the soul. If it have the same faculties there which it has here, howsoever improved they may be, it must acquire its happiness from the Supreme Being in the way of communication; and this communication must necessarily be gradual; for the reasons already alleged; and if gradual, then there must be, (if in that state we have any knowledge at all of the Divine nature,) faith that such things exist, and may be communicated; desire to possess them because they are good; and hope that these good things shall be communicated.

7. I conclude, therefore, from these, and a multitude of other reasonings, which might be brought to bear on this subject, that faith and hope will exist in the eternal world as well as love; and that there, as well as here, it may endlessly be said, The greatest of these is love. With great propriety, therefore, does the apostle exhort, Follow after love; it being so essential to our comfort and happiness here, and to our beatification in the eternal world; and how necessary faith and hope are to the same end, we have already seen.

CHAPTER XIV.

3 But he that prophesieth speaketh unto men to edification, and exhortation, and comfort.

4 He that speaketh in an unknown tongue edifieth himself; but he that prophesieth edifieth the church.

5 I would that ye all spoke with tongues, but rather that ye propheied: for greater is he that prophesieth than he that speaketh with tongues, except he interpret, that the church may receive edifying.

6 Now, brethren, if I come unto you speaking with tongues, what shall I profit you, except I shall speak to you either by revelation, or by knowledge, or by prophesying, or by doctrine?

7 And even things without life giving sound, whether pipe or harp, except they give a distinction in the sounds, how shall it be known what is piped or harped?

8 For, if the trumpet give an uncertain sound, who shall prepare himself to the battle?

9 So likewise ye, except ye utter by the tongue words easy to be understood, how shall it be known what is spoken? for ye shall speak unto the air.

a Ver. 35.—f Or, tunes.—g Gr. significant.

Desire spiritual gifts] Ye are very intent on getting those splendid gifts which may add to your worldly consequence; and please your carnal minds; but labour rather to get the gifts of God's Spirit, by which ye may grow in grace, and be useful to others: and particularly desire that ye may prophesy, that ye may be able to teach and instruct others in the things of their salvation.

2. For he that speaketh in an unknown tongue] This chapter is crowded with difficulties. It is not likely that the Holy Spirit should, in the church, suddenly inspire a man with the knowledge of some foreign language, which none in the church understood but himself; and lead him to treat the mysteries of Christianity in that language, though none in the place could profit by his teaching.

Dr. Lightfoot's mode of reconciling these difficulties is the most likely I have met with. He supposes that, by the unknown tongue, the Hebrew is meant: and that God restored the true knowledge of this language when he gave the apostles the gift of tongues. As the Scriptures of the Old Testament were contained in this language, and it has beauties, energies, and depths in it, which no verbal translation can reach: it was necessary for the proper elucidation of the prophecies concerning the Messiah, and the establishment of the Christian religion, that the full meaning of the words of this sacred language, should be properly understood. And it is possible that the Hebrew Scriptures were sometimes read in the Christian congregations, as they were in the Jewish synagogues; and if the person who read and understood them had not the power and faculty of explaining them to others; in vain did he read and understand them himself. And we know that it is possible for a man to understand a language, the force, phraseology, and idioms of which he is incapable of explaining, even in his mother's tongue. We shall see, in the course of these notes, how this view of the subject will apply to the illustration of the apostle's words throughout the chapter.

Speaketh not unto men, but unto God] None present understanding the language, God alone knowing the truth and import of what he says.

In the spirit he speaketh mysteries] Though his own mind, (for so νεφελος is understood here by many eminent critics,) apprehends the mysteries contained in the words which he reads or utters; but if, by the Spirit, we understand the Spirit of God, it only shows that it is by that Spirit that he is enabled to speak and apprehend these mysteries. See the note on ver. 19.

3. But he that prophesieth] The person who has the gift of teaching, is much more useful to the church than he is who has only the gift of tongues, because he speaks to the profit of men, viz. to their edification, by the Scriptures he expounds; to their exhortation, by what he teaches; and to their comfort, by his revelation.—Whitby. I must here refer to my sermon on this text, intitled, "The Christian Prophet and his Work," in which I have endeavoured to consider the whole of this subject at large.

4. He that speaketh in an unknown tongue] In the Hebrew for instance: the knowledge of the depth and power of which he has got by a divine revelation, edifieth himself by that knowledge.

But he that prophesieth] Has the gift of preaching. Edifieth the church] Speaketh unto men to edification, exhortation, and comfort, ver. 3.

5. I would that ye all spake with tongues] The word βελω, does not so much imply a wish, or desire, as a command or permission. As if he had said, I do not restrain you to prophesying or teaching, though I prefer that; but I give you full permission to speak in Hebrew whenever it is proper; and when one is present who can interpret for the edification of the church: provided yourselves have not that gift, though you understand the language. The apostle said tongue, in the singular number, ver. 2, 4, because he spoke of a single man; now he says tongues, in the plural number, because he speaks of many speaking; but he has the same meaning in both places.—Lightfoot.

Greater is he that prophesieth] A useful, zealous preacher, though unskilled in learned languages, is much greater in the sight of God, and in the eye of sound common sense, than he who has the gift of those learned tongues: except he interpret; and we seldom find great scholars good preachers. This should humble the scholar, who is too apt to be proud 10 There are, it may be, so many kinds of voices in the world, and none of them is without signification.

11 Therefore, if I know not the meaning of the voice, I shall be unto him that speaketh a barbarian, and he that speaketh shall be a barbarian unto me.

12 Even so ye, forasmuch as ye are zealous of spiritual gifts, seek that ye may excel to the edifying of the church.

13 Wherefore let him that speaketh in an unknown tongue pray that he may interpret.

14 For, if I pray in an unknown tongue, my spirit prayeth, but my understanding is unfruitful.

15 What is it then? I will pray with the spirit, and I will pray with the understanding also: I will sing with the spirit, and I will sing with the understanding also.

16 Else, when thou shalt bless with the spirit, how shall he b Gr. of spirits.—i Eph. 5. 19. Col. 3. 16.—k Psa. 47. 7.

of his attainments, and despise his less learned, but more useful brother. This judgment of St. Paul is too little regarded.

6. Speaking with tongues] Without interpreting.

What shall I profit you?] i. e. I shall not profit you;

Except I shall speak to you either by revelation] Of some secret thing: or by knowledge, of some mystery: or by prophesying, foretelling some future event: or by doctrine, instructing you what to believe and practise.—See Whitby. These four words are taken in different acceptations by learned men. The general sense of the terms is that given above: but the peculiar meaning of the apostle is perhaps not easily discerned.

7. And even things without life] I may, as if he had said, illustrate this farther, by referring to a pipe or harp; if these were to utter mere sounds without order, harmony, or melody: though every tone of music might be in the sounds, surely no person could discern a tune in such sounds, nor receive pleasure from such discords: even so is the person who speaks in an unknown tongue, but does not interpret. His speech tends no more to edification, than those discordant and unmeaning sounds do to pleasure and delight.

8. If the trumpet give an uncertain sound] If, when the soldier should prepare himself for the battle, the trumpet should give a different sound to that which is ordinarily used on such occasions; the soldier is not informed of what he should do, and therefore does not arm himself; consequently, that vague, unintelligible sound of the trumpet, is of no use.

9. Likewise ye] If ye do not speak in the church so as to be understood, your labour is useless: ye shall speak into the air; your speech will be lost and dissipated in the air, without conveying any meaning to any person: there will be a noise or sound, but nothing else. Gifts of that kind, thus used, are good for nothing.

10. There are it may be] Εἰ τινοί, for example.

So many kinds of voices] So many different languages; each of which has its distinct articulation, pronunciation, emphasis, and meaning; or there may be so many different nations, each possessing a different language, &c.

11. If I know not the meaning of the voice] Τὴν ὁμιλίαν τῆς φωνῆς, the power and signification of the language.

I shall be unto him that speaketh a barbarian] I shall appear to him, and be to me, as a person who had no distinct, and articulate sounds which can convey any kind of meaning. This observation is very natural, when we hear persons speaking in a language of which we know nothing; we wonder how they can understand each other; as, in their speech, there appears to us no regular distinction of sounds or words. For the meaning and origin of the word barbarian, see the note on Acts xviii. 2.

12. Forasmuch as ye are zealous] Seeing ye affect so much to have spiritual gifts; seek that you may get those by which ye may excel to edifying the church.

13. Pray that he may interpret] Let him who speaks or reads the prophetic declarations in the Old Testament, in that tongue in which they were originally spoken and written, pray to God that he may so understand them himself, and receive the gift of interpretation, that he may be able to explain them in all their depth and latitude to others.

14. For if I pray in an unknown tongue] If my prayers are composed of sentences and sayings taken out of the prophets, &c. and in their own language: my spirit prayeth; my heart is engaged in the work, and my prayers answer all the purpose of prayers to myself: but my understanding is unfruitful to all others, because they do not understand my prayers; and I either do not, or cannot interpret them. See the note on ver. 19.

15. I will pray with the spirit] I will endeavour to have all my prayers influenced and guided by the Spirit of God; and to have my own heart deeply affected in and by the work.

And I will pray with the understanding also] I will endeavour so to pray, that others may understand me; and thus be edified and improved by my prayers. And therefore I will pray in a language, in the public congregation, that may be understood by all present: so that all may join, not only in the act, but in the spirit of devotion.

I will sing with the spirit] It does appear that singing psalms, or spiritual hymns, was one thing that was implied in what is termed prophesying in the Old Testament, as is evithat occupieth the room of the unlearned say Amen! at thy giving of thanks, seeing he understandeth not what thou sayest? 17 For thou verily givest thanks well, but the other is not edified.

18 I thank my God, I speak with tongues more than ye all: 19 Yet in the church I had rather speak five words with my understanding, than by my voice I might teach others also, than ten thousand words in an unknown tongue.

20 Brethren, ¹ be not children in understanding; howbeit in unbelief ² be ye children, but in understanding be ye ³ men.

21 ⁴ In the law it is ⁵ written, With men of other tongues and other lips will I speak unto this people; and yet for all that will they not hear me, saith the Lord.

1 Ch. 11:34.—n. Ps. 138:2. Matt. 13:12 & 13:35 & 13:41. Rom. 16:19. Ch. 14:1. Eph. 4:14. Heb. 5:12, 13.

dent from 1 Sam. x. 5, 6, 10, &c. And when this came through an immediate afflatus or inspiration of God, there is no doubt that it was exceedingly edifying; and must have served greatly to improve and excite the devotional spirit of all that were present. But I rather suppose that their singing consisted in solemn well-measured recitative, than in the jingling and often fool's h sounds which we use when a single monosyllable is sometimes shivered into thirty-six demisemiquavers!

Here it may not be improper to remark that the spirit and the understanding are seldom united in our congregational singing. Those whose hearts are right with God, have generally no skill in music; and those who are well skilled in music, have seldom a devotional spirit; but are generally proud, self-willed, contentious, and arrogant. Do not these persons entirely overrate themselves? Of all the liberal arts, surely music is the least useful, however ornamental it may be. And should any thing be esteemed in the church of God, but in proportion to its utility? A good singer, among the people of God, who has not the life of God in his soul, is vox præterea nihil, as Helioagabalus said of the nightingale's brains on which he desired to sup, he is nothing but a sound. Some of those persons, I mean they who sing with the understanding, without the spirit; suppose themselves of great consequence in the church of Christ; and they find foolish, superficial people, whom they persuade to be of their own mind, and soon raise parties and contentions if they have not every thing their own way; and that way is generally as absurd as it is unscriptural, and contrary to the spirit and simplicity of the Gospel.

16. He that occupieth the room of the unlearned One who is not acquainted with the language in which you speak, sing, or pray:

Say Amen Give his assent and ratification to what he does not understand. It was very frequent in primitive times, to express their approbation in the public assemblies by Amen. This practice, soberly and piously conducted, might still be of great use in the church of Christ.

This response was of the highest authority and merit among the Jews; they even promised the remission of all sins; the annihilation of the sentence of damnation; and the opening of the gates of Paradise, to those who fervently say Amen. And it is one of their maxims, that "greater is he who says Amen, than he who prays." See many testimonies of this kind in Schoettgen. Now, allowing that this was of so much consequence in the time of St. Paul: it was a very serious matter for a person to be in a congregation where prayer was offered, and who could not say Amen, because the prayers were in a language which he did not understand.

17. Thou verily givest thanks well Because he felt gratitude; and, from a sense of his obligation, gave praise to God: but because this was in an unknown tongue, those who heard him, received no edification.

18. I speak with tongues more than ye all He understood more languages than any of them did; and this was indispensably necessary, as he was the apostle of the Gentiles in general; and had to preach to different provinces where different dialects, if not languages, were used. In the Hebrew, Syriac, Greek, and Latin, he was undoubtedly well skilled from his education; and how many he might understand, by miraculous gift, we cannot tell. But, even literally understood, it is very probable that he knew more languages than any man in the church of Corinth.

19. Yet in the church As the grand object of public worship is the edification of those who attend; five words, spoken so as to convey edification, were of much more consequence than ten thousand, which not being understood, could convey none. By the word known, tongue, to which we add unknown, I suppose the apostle always means the Hebrew, for the reasons offered in the note on ver. 1.

One of the greatest difficulties, says Bishop Pearce, in this epistle, is contained in the words νενοια, and νοης, spirit and understanding, which are frequently used in this chapter; and, fixing the true meaning of these words, will solve the difficulty. In this verse the apostle explains λαλειν τοις νοις, to speak with the understanding, by αυα δαλον κατανοω, that I might teach others; so that the sense of νοης, understanding, seems to be that understanding which the hearer has of what is said, and this sense will agree well with, I will sing with the spirit; and with the understanding, ver. 15.

He observes also, that νενοια, spirit, and νοης, understanding, have a sense opposite to each other: so that if νοης, is 22 Wherefore tongues are for a sign, not to them that believe, but to them that believe not: but prophesying seeth not for them that believe not, but for them which believe.

23 If therefore the whole church be come together into one place, and all speak with tongues, and there come in those that are unlearned, or unbelievers, will they not say that ye are mad?

24 But if all prophesy, and there come in one that believeth not, or one unlearned, he is convinced of all, he is judged of all: 25 And thus are the secrets of his heart made manifest; and so falling down on his face he will worship God, and report that God is in you of a truth.

26 How is it then, brethren? when ye come together, every rightly rendered, the understanding which another has of what is said; then νενοια, will signify a man's own mind; i. e. his own understanding of what he himself speaks; and this sense agrees well with ver. 2. In the spirit he speaketh mysteries.

20. Be not children in understanding There are three words here to which we must endeavour to affix the proper sense—1. Naïdes, signifies children in general, but particularly such as are grown up, so as to be fit to send to school, in order to receive instruction—2. Narvos, from νη, not, and ειπω, I speak, signifies an infant, one that cannot yet speak, and is in the lowest stage of infancy—3. Telētoi, from τελειος, I complete or perfect, signifies those who are arrived at perfect maturity, both of growth and understanding. We shall now see the apostle's meaning, Brethren, be not, naïdes, as little children, just beginning to go to school, in order to learn the first elements of their mother tongue; and, with an understanding only sufficient to apprehend those elements.

In malice Kakia, in richesness πνηστει, be ye as infants, who neither speak, do, nor purpose evil.

But in understanding Telētoi γινεσθε, be ye perfect men, whose vigour of body, and energy of mind, show a complete growth; and a well cultivated understanding.

21. In the law it is written But the passage quoted is in Isa. xxviii. 11. Here is no contradiction, for the term torah, LAW, was used by the Jews to express the whole Scriptures, law, prophets, and hagiography; and they used it to distinguish the sacred writings from the words of the scribes.

With men of other tongues. Rp. Pearce paraphrases this verse as follows: "With the tongues of foreigners, and with the lips of foreigners, will I speak to this people; and yet, for all that, will they not hear me, saith the Lord." To enter into the apostle's meaning, we must enter into that of the prophet. The Jewish people were under the teaching of the prophets who were sent from God; these instructed, reproofed, and corrected them by this Divine authority. They however became so refractory and disobedient, that God proposed to cast them off, and abund in them to the Babylonians; then, they had a people to teach, correct, and reprove them, whose language they did not understand. The discipline that they received in this way, was widely different from that which they received while under the teaching of the prophets, and the government of God: and yet for all this, they did not humble themselves before their Maker, that this affliction might be removed from them.

22. Wherefore tongues are for a sign The miraculous gift of tongues was never designed for the benefit of those who have already believed, but for the instruction of unbelievers; that they might see from such a miracle, that this is the work of God; and so embrace the Gospel. But as in the times of the prophet, the strange Babylonish tongues came in the way of punishment, and not in the way of mercy, take heed that it be not the case now; that by dwelling on the gift, ye forget the giver, and what was designed for you as a blessing, may prove to you to be a curse. For, if, because ye have the gift of tongues, ye will choose for your aggrandizement, to use them in the public congregation where none understand them, God may curse your blessings.

Prophesying Teaching the things of God in a known language, is of infinitely more consequence than speaking in all the foreign tongues in the universe.

23. Will they not say that ye are mad? So they well might, finding a whole assembly of people talking languages, which those who had most need of instruction could not understand.

24. But if all prophesy If all those who teach, do it in the tongue which all understand; if an unbeliever, or one who knows nothing of the sacred language, come in, and hears things just suited to his own state, he is convicted by all, and he is judged by all.

25. And thus are the secrets of his heart As those, who were the prophets or teachers, had often the discernment of spirits, they were able in certain cases, and probably very frequently, to tell a man the secrets of his own heart; and where this was not directly the case, God often led his ministers to speak those things that were suitable to the case before them, though they themselves had no particular design. The sinner, therefore, convinced that God alone could uncover the secrets of his heart; would be often obliged to fall down on his face, abashed and confounded, and acknowledged that God was truly among them. This seems to be the plain meaning of the passages before us.

26. How is it—every one of you hath a psalm, &c. Dr one of you hath a psalm, [†] hath a doctrine, hath a tongue, hath a revelation, hath an interpretation. [‡] Let all things be done unto edifying.

27 If any man speak in an unknown tongue, let it be by two, or at the most by three, and that by course; and let one interpret.

28 But if there be no interpreter, let him keep silence in the church; and let him speak to himself, and to God.

29 Let the prophets speak two or three, and [‡] let the other judge.

30 If any thing be revealed to another that sitteth by, [‡] let the first hold his peace.

31 For ye may all prophesy one by one, that all may learn, and all may be comforted.

32 And [‡] the spirits of the prophets are subject to the prophets.

1 Ver. 6. Chap. 12 § 8, 10.—u Chap. 12 § 7. 2 Cor. 12 § 13. Eph. 4 § 12.—v Chap. 12 § 10.—w 1 Thess. 5 § 19, 20.—x 1 John 1 § 1.—y Gr. tumult, or, unquietness.—z Co. 11 § 16.

Lightfoot understands this in the following manner:—When the congregation came together, some were for spending the time in psalmody; others, in explaining particular doctrines; others, in reading, praying, or speaking in the Hebrew tongue; others, were curious to hear of farther revelations; and others, wished to spend the time in the interpretation of what had already been spoken. This may be specious, but to me it is not satisfactory. It seems more likely that, when the whole church came together, among whom there were many persons with extraordinary gifts, each of whom wished to put himself forward, and occupy the time and attention of the congregation: hence confusion must necessarily take place; and perhaps, not a little contention. This was contrary to that edifying, which was the intention of these gifts.

27. Speak in an unknown tongue] The Hebrews, as has already been conjectured.

Let it be by two, or at the most by three, and that by course] Let only two or three, in one assembly, act in this way, too much time may not be taken up with one exercise; and let this be done by course, the one after the other, that two may not be speaking at the same time: and let one interpret, for all that shall thus speak.

28. But if there be no interpreter] If there be none present who can give the proper sense of this Hebrew reading and speaking, then let him keep silence, and not occupy the time of the church by speaking in a language which only himself can understand.

29. Let the prophets] Those who have the gift of speaking to men, to edification, and exhortation, and comfort, ver. 3.

Two or three] As prophesying implied psalmody, teaching, and exhortation, Dr. Lightfoot thinks that the meaning of the place is this: Let one sing who has a psalm; let another teach who has a doctrine; and let a third exhort or comfort, who has a gift of that kind.

And let the other judge.] The other prophets, or qualified persons, judge of the propriety of what had been spoken; or let them discern, διακρίνωσαν, how the revelation under the New Covenant, confirmed and illustrated the revelation granted under the Old Testament. It appears to have been taken for granted, that a man might pretend to this spirit of prophecy, who was not sent of God; and therefore it was the duty of the accredited teachers, to examine whether what he spoke was according to truth, and the analogy of faith. For the spirits of the prophets are subject to the prophets: Every man's gift was to be judged of by those whose age, experience, and wisdom, gave them a right to decide. Besides, though the person who did speak, might do it from an impulse of God; yet, if he was not sufficiently known, his testimony ought to be received with caution; and therefore the aged prophets should judge of his gifts, lest false doctrines should slide into the church.

But all these provisions, as Schoettgen justly observes, were in imitation of the practice in the Jewish synagogues; for there, it was customary for them to object, interrogate, judge, refute, &c.

30. Be revealed to another that sitteth by] Probably those who were teachers, sat on a particular seat, or place from which they might most readily address the people: and this may be the meaning of sitting by. If such a person could say, I have just received a particular revelation from God; then let him have the liberty immediately to speak it: as it might possibly relate to the circumstances of that time and place.

31. For ye may all prophesy one by one] The gifts which God grants are given for the purpose of edification; but there can be no edification where there is confusion; therefore let them speak one by one.

32. And the spirits of the prophets, &c.] Let no one interrupt another; and let all be ready to prefer others before themselves: and let each feel a spirit of subjection to his brethren. God grants no ungovernable gifts.

33. For God is not the author of confusion] Let not the persons who act in the congregation in this disorderly manner, say that they are under the influence of God; for he is not the author of confusion: but two, three, or more, praying or teaching in the same place, at the same time, is confusion; and God is not the author of such work; and let men beware how they attribute such disorder to the God of order and 33 For God is not the author of [‡] confusion, but of peace, [‡] as in all churches of the saints.

34 [‡] Let your women keep silence in the churches: for it is not permitted unto them to speak; but [‡] they are commanded to be under obedience, as also saith the [‡] law.

35 And if they will learn anything, let them ask their husbands at home; for it is a shame for women to speak in the church.

36 What? came the word of God out from you? or came it unto you only?

37 [‡] If any man think himself to be a prophet, or spiritual, let him acknowledge that the things that I write unto you are the commandments of the Lord.

38 But if any man be ignorant, let him be ignorant.

39 Wherefore, brethren, [‡] covet to prophesy, and forbid not to speak with tongues.

40 [‡] Let all things be done decently, and in order.

a 1 Tim. 2 § 11, 12.—h Chap. 11, 3. Eph. 5 § 22. Col. 3 § 18. Tit. 2 § 5. 1 Cor. 11 § 16.—i 2 Cor. 10 § 17.—j 1 John 4 § 6.—k Ch. 12 § 1. 1 Thess. 5 § 20.—l Ver. 33.

peace. The apostle calls such conduct καταστασις, tumults, seditions; and such they are in the sight of God, and in the sight of all good men. How often is a work of God marred and discredited by the folly of men! for nature will always, and Satan too, mingle themselves, as far as they can, in the genuine work of the Spirit, in order to discredit and destroy it. Nevertheless, in great revivals of religion, it is almost impossible to prevent wild-fire from getting in among the true fire; but it is the duty of the ministers of God, to watch against, and prudently check this: but if themselves encourage it, then there will be confusion and every evil work.

34. Let your women keep silence in the churches] This was a Jewish ordinance: women were not permitted to teach in the assemblies, or even to ask questions. The rabbins taught, that "a woman should know nothing but the use of her distaff." And the saying of Rabbi Eliezer, as delivered, Bammothbar Rabba, sect. 9. fol. 204. are both worthy of remark and of execration; they are these, רבינו יהודה יספיקו יספיקו יספיקו yestepu dibrey Torah veal yestepu lenashim—"Let the words of the Law be burned, rather than that they should be delivered to women."

This was their condition till the time of the Gospel, when, according to the prediction of Joel, the Spirit of God was to be poured out on the women as well as the men, that they might prophesy, i. e. teach. And that they did prophesy or teach, is evident from what the apostle says, chap. xi. 5. where he lays down rules to regulate this part of their conduct, while ministering in the church.

But does not what the apostle says here contradict that statement; and show that the words in chap. xi. should be understood in another sense? For, here it is expressly said, that they should keep silence in the church; for it was not permitted to a woman to speak? Both places seem perfectly consistent. It is evident from the context, that the apostle refers here to asking questions, and what we call dictating, in the assemblies. It was permitted to any man to ask questions, to object, altercate, attempt to refute, &c. in the synagogue; but this liberty was not allowed to any woman: St. Paul confirms this, in reference also to the Christian church; he orders them to keep silence: and, if they wished to learn any thing, let them inquire of their husbands at home; because it was perfectly indecorous for women to be contending with men in public assemblies, on points of doctrine, cases of conscience, &c. But this by no means intimated that, when a woman received any particular influence from God, to enable her to teach, that she was not to obey that influence: on the contrary, she was to obey it, and the apostle lays down directions in chap. xi. for regulating her personal appearance when thus employed. All that the apostle opposes here, is their questioning, finding fault, &c. in the Christian church, as the Jewish men were permitted to do in their synagogues; together with the attempts to usurp any authority over the man, by setting up their judgment in opposition to them; for the apostle has in view, especially, acts of disobedience, arrogance, &c. of which no woman would be guilty who was under the influence of the Spirit of God.

But to be under obedience, as also saith the law.] This is a reference to Gen. iii. 16. Thy desire shall be to thy husband, and he shall rule over thee. From this, it is evident, that it was the disorderly and disobedient that the apostle had in view; and not any of those on whom God had poured out his Spirit.

35. For it is a shame for women to speak in the church] The Jews would not suffer a woman to read in the synagogue; though a servant, or even a child, had this permission; but the apostle refers to irregular conduct; such conduct as proved that they were not under obedience, ver. 34.

36. Came the word of God out from you?] Was it from you that other churches received the Gospel? Are you the mother church? that you should have rules, and orders, and customs, different from all others; and set yourselves up for a model to be copied by all the churches of Christ?

Or came it unto you only? Are you the only church of God? Are there not many others founded before you, that have no such customs, and permit no such disorders?

37. If any man think himself to be a prophet, &c.] He who is really a spiritual man, under the influence of the Spirit of God, and capable of teaching the Divine will, he will acknowledge that what I now say, is from the same Spirit; and that the things which I now write, are the commandments of God, and must be obeyed, on pain of his displeasure.

33. But if any man be ignorant [If he affect to be so, or pretend that he is ignorant; let him be ignorant. Let him be so at his peril.

39. Corset to prophesy [Let it be your endeavour and prayer, to be able to teach the way of God to the ignorant; this is the most valuable, because the most useful gift of the Spirit.

And forbid not to speak with tongues [Let every gift have its own place and operation; let none envy another; nor prevent him from doing that part of the work to which God, by giving the qualification, has evidently called him.

40. Let all things be done decently [Εὐσεβῶς, in their proper forms, with becoming reverence; according to their dignity and importance. Every thing in the church of God should be conducted with gravity and comp. sure suitable to the importance of the things; the infinite dignity of the object of worship, and the necessity of the souls in behalf of which those religious ordinances are instituted.

And in order, [Κατὰ τάξιν, every thing in its place, every thing in its time, and every thing suitably.

Let all things be done decently and in order, is a direction of infinite moment in all the concerns of religion; and of no small consequence in all the concerns of life. How much pain, confusion, and loss would be prevented, were this rule followed! There is scarcely an embarrassment in civil or domestic life, that does not originate in a neglect of this precept. No business, trade, art or science, can be carried on to any advantage or comfort, unless peculiar attention be paid to it. And as to religion there can be absolutely none without it. Where decently and order are not observed in every part of the worship of God, no spiritual worship can be performed. The manner of doing a thing is always of as much consequence as the act itself. And often the act derives all its consequence and utility from the manner in which it is performed.

CHAPTER XV.

The Gospel which the apostle preached to the Corinthians; viz. that Christ died for our sins, and rose again the third day, 1-4. The witnesses of his resurrection, Peter, James, and more than five hundred brethren, 5-7. Lastly, Paul himself saw him, and was called by him to the apostleship, 8-11. Objections against the resurrection of the dead answered, 12-34. The manner in which this great work shall be performed, 35-49. The astonishing events that shall take place in the last day, 50-57. The use we should make of this doctrine, 58. [A. M. 4060. A. D. 56. A. U. C. 809. An. Imp. Neronis Cæs. 3.]

MOREOVER, brethren, I declare unto you the Gospel ^a which I preached unto you, which also ye have received, and ^b wherein ye stand;

^c By which also ye are saved, if ye ^d keep in memory ^e what I preached unto you, unless ye have believed in vain.

^f For ^g I delivered unto you first of all that ^h which I also received, how that Christ died for our sins ⁱ according to the Scriptures;

^j And that he was buried, and that he rose again the third day ^k according to the Scriptures:

which was bestowed upon me was not in vain; but I laboured more abundantly than they all: "yet not I, but the grace of God which was with me."

11 Therefore whether it were I or they, so we preach, and so ye believed.

12 Now, if Christ be preached that he rose from the dead, how say some among you that there is no resurrection of the dead?

13 But, if there be no resurrection of the dead, v then is Christ not risen:

14 And if Christ be not risen, then is our preaching vain, and your faith is also vain.

15 Yea, and we are found false witnesses of God; because we have testified of God that he raised up Christ: whom he raised not up, if so be that the dead rise not.

were called arctini, persons who had assumed the senatorial dignity after the death of Julius Cæsar, pretending that they had derived that honour from him.

9. I am the least of the apostles) This was literally true, in reference to his being chosen last, and chosen not in the number of the twelve, but as an extra apostle. How much pains do some men take to make the apostle contradict himself, by attempting to show that he was the very greatest of the apostles; though he calls himself the least. Taken as a man, and a minister of Christ, he was greater than any of the twelve; taken as an apostle, he was less than any of the twelve, because not originally in that body.

And not meet to be called an apostle] None of the twelve had ever persecuted Christ, nor withstood his doctrine: Saul of Tarsus had been, before his conversion, a grievous persecutor; and therefore he says, not as boasting, I am not proper to be called an apostle, because I persecuted the church of God, i. e. of Christ, which none of the apostles ever did.

10. But by the grace of God I am what I am] God by his mere grace and good will, has called me to be an apostle, and has denominated me such.

And his grace, &c.] Nor have I been unfaithful to the Divine call; I used the grace which he gave me; and when my labours, travels, and sufferings are considered, it will be evident, that I have laboured more abundantly than the whole twelve. This was most literally true.

Yet not I, but the grace of God] It was not through my own power or wisdom, that I performed these things; but through the Divine influence which accompanied me.

11. Whether it were I or they] All the apostles of Christ agree in the same doctrines; we all preach one and the same thing; and, as we preached, so ye believed; having received from us the true apostolical faith, that Jesus died for our sins, and rose again for our justification; and that His resurrection is the pledge and proof of ours. Whoever teaches contrary to this, does not preach the true apostolic doctrine.

12. Now, if Christ be preached, &c.] Seeing it is true that we have thus preached Christ, and ye have credited this preaching, hence say some among you, who have professed to receive this doctrine from us, that there is no resurrection of the dead? though we have shown that his resurrection is the proof and pledge of ours. That there was some false teacher or teachers among them who were endeavouring to incorporate Mosaic rites and ceremonies with the Christian doctrines, and even to blend Sadduceism with the whole, appears pretty evident. To confute this mongrel Christian, and overturn his bad doctrine, the apostle writes this chapter.

13. If there be no resurrection of the dead] As Christ was partaker of the same flesh and blood with us; and he promised to raise mankind from the dead, through his resurrection; if the dead rise not, then Christ has had no resurrection. There seems to have been some at Corinth, who, though they denied the resurrection of the dead, admitted that Christ had risen again: the apostle's argument goes therefore to state, that if Christ was raised from the dead, mankind may be raised: if mankind cannot be raised from the dead, then the body of Christ was never raised.

14. Then is our preaching vain] Our whole doctrine is useless, nugatory, and false.

And your faith is also vain.] Your belief of a false doctrine, must necessarily be to you unprofitable.

15. False witnesses] As having testified the fact of Christ's resurrection, as a matter which ourselves had witnessed; when we knew that we bore testimony to a falsehood. But could five hundred persons agree in this imposition? And if they did, is it possible that some one would not discover the cheat, when he could have no interest in keeping the secret; and might greatly promote his secular interest by making the discovery? Such a case never occurred, and ever can occur. The tesimony, therefore, concerning the resurrection of Christ, is incontrovertibly true.

If so be that the dead rise not] This clause is wanting in DE, Syriac, some of the Slavonian and Italic: several also of the primitive Fathers omit it. Its great similarity to the following words might be the cause of its omission by some copyists.

17. Ye are yet in your sins] If Christ has not risen from the dead, there is no proof that he has not been justly put to death. If he were a malefactor, God would not work a miracle to raise him from the dead. If he have not been raised

16 For, if the dead rise not, then is not Christ raised;

17 And if Christ be not raised, your faith is vain; v ye are yet in your sins.

18 Then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished.

19 v If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable.

20 But now v is Christ risen from the dead, and become the first-fruits of them that slept.

21 For, since by man came death, v by man came also the resurrection of the dead.

22 For, as in Adam all died, even so in Christ shall all be made alive.

23 But v every man in his own order: Christ the first-fruits; afterward they that are Christ's at his coming.

x Rom. 4:25.—y 2 Tim. 2:12.—z 1 Pet. 1:3.—a Acts 26:23. Ver. 23. Col. 1:18. Rev. 1:5.—b Rom. 5:12, 17.—c John 11:25. Rom. 6:23.—d Ver. 23. 1 Thess. 4:15, 16, 17.

from the dead, there is a presumption that he has been put to death justly; and if so, consequently he has made no atonement: and ye are yet in your sins, under the power, guilt, and condemnation of them. All this reasoning of the apostle, goes to prove that at Corinth, even among those false teachers, the innocency of our Lord was allowed, and the reality of his resurrection not questioned.

18. They also which are fallen asleep] All those who, either by martyrdom or natural death, have departed in the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ, are perished: their hope was without foundation, and their faith had not reason and truth for its object. Their bodies are dissolved in the earth, finally decomposed and destroyed, notwithstanding the promise of Christ to such, that he would raise them up at the last day. See John v. 28, 29. xi. 25, 26, &c.

19. If in this life only we have hope] It would be better to translate and point this verse as follows:

And, if in this life we have hoped in Christ only, we are more to be pitied than all men.—If, in this life, we have no other hope and confidence but in Christ (and if he be still dead, and not yet risen,) we are more to be pitied than any other men: we are sadly deceived: we have denied ourselves, and been denied by others: have mortified ourselves, and been persecuted by our fellow-creatures on account of our belief and hope in one who is not existing; and therefore can neither succour us here, nor reward us hereafter. Bp. Pearce.

20. But now is Christ risen] On the contrary, Christ is raised from the dead, and is become the first-fruits of them that slept. His resurrection has been demonstrated, and our resurrection necessarily follows: as sure as the first-fruits are the proof that there is a harvest; so surely the resurrection of Christ is a proof of ours. The Judaizing teacher at Corinth would feel the force of this observation much sooner than we can, who are not much acquainted with Jewish customs. "Although," says Dr. Lightfoot, "the resurrection of Christ, compared with some first-fruits, has very good harmony with them; yet especially it agrees with the offering of the sheaf, commonly called ῥῶν ὀμῖν, not only as to the thing itself, but also as to the circumstances of the time. For, first, there was the pass-over, and the day following was a sabbath day, and on the day following that, the first-fruits were offered. So Christ, our pass-over, was crucified; the day following his crucifixion, was the Sabbath; and the day following that, he, the first-fruits of them that slept, rose again. All who died before Christ, and were raised again to life, died afterward; but Christ is the first-fruits of all who shall be raised from the dead to die no more.

21. For, since by man came death] Mortality came by Adam, immortality by Christ; so sure as all have been subjected to natural death by Adam, so sure shall all be raised again by Christ Jesus. Mortality and immortality, on a general ground, are the subject of the apostle's reasoning here: and, for the explanation of the transgression of Adam, and the redemption by Christ, see the notes on Rom. v. 10, &c.

23. But every man in his own order] The apostle mentions three orders here.—1. Christ who rose from the dead by his own power. 2. Them that are Christ's; all his apostles, martyrs, confessors, and faithful followers.—3. Thirdly, then cometh the end, when the whole mass shall be raised. Whether this order be exactly what the apostle intends, I shall not assert. Of the first, Christ's own resurrection, there can be no question. The second, the resurrection of his followers, before that of the common dead, is thought by some, very reasonable. "They had here a resurrection from a death of sin, to a life of righteousness, which he others had not; because they would not be saved in Christ's way. That they should have the privilege of being raised first, to behold the astonishing changes and revolutions which shall then take place, has nothing in it contrary to propriety and fitness;" but it seems contrary to ver. 52, in which all the dead are said to arise in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye. "And, thirdly, that all the other mass of mankind should be raised last, just to come forward and receive their doom, is equally reasonable;" but it is apparently inconsistent with the manner in which God chooses to act, see ver. 53. Some think that, by them that are Christ's at his coming, "we are to understand Christ" coming to reign on earth a thousand years with his saints previously to the general judgment; but I must confess, I find nothing in the Sacred Writings distinctly enough marked, to support this opinion of the millennium or thousand years.

24 Then cometh the end, when he shall have delivered up the kingdom to God, even the Father; when he shall have put down all rule, and all authority and power.

25 For he must reign till he hath put all enemies under his feet.

26 The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death.

27 (For he hath put all things under his feet. But when he saith, all things are put under him, it is manifest that he is excepted, which did all things under him.)

e Dan 7:13, 22—h Psal 113:1, Aco 2:33, Eph 1:22, Heb 1:13 & 10:18—g 2 Tim. 1:10, Rev 3:14—h Psal 8:6, Matt 5:18, Heb 1:12—i 1 Pe 3:22—l Paul 7:1

reign: nor can I conceive any important end that can be answered by this procedure.

We should be very cautious how we make a figurative expression, used in the most figurative book in the Bible, the foundation of a very important literal system, that is to occupy a measure of the faith, and no small portion of the hope of Christians. The strange conjectures formed on this very uncertain basis, have not been very creditable either to reason or religion.

24 When he shall have delivered up the kingdom! The mediatorial kingdom; which comprehends all the displays of his grace in saving sinners; and all his spiritual influence in governing the church.

All rule, and all authority, and power.] Αὐτοῦ καὶ δυνατεῖς. As the apostle is here speaking of the end of the present system of the world; the rule, authority, and power, may refer to all earthly governments, empires, kings, princes, &c. though angels, principalities, and powers, and the rulers of the darkness of this world, and all spiritual wickedness in high places, may be also intended. Our Lord Jesus is represented here as administering the concerns of the kingdom of grace in this lower world, during the time that this divine economy lasts; and when the end, the time determined by the wisdom of God, comes; then, as there is no longer any need of this administration, the kingdom is delivered up unto the Father; an allusion to the case of Roman viceroys, or governors of provinces, who, when their administration was ended, delivered up their kingdom or government into the hands of the emperor.

The apostle may refer also to an opinion of the ancient Jews; that there should be ten kings, who should have the supreme government of the whole world: the first and last of which should be God himself; but the ninth should be the Messiah, after whose empire the kingdom should be delivered up into the hands of God for ever. See the place in Schoettgen on this verse, and on Luke i. 33.

25. For he must reign, &c.] This is according to the promise, Psal. cx. 1. "The Lord said unto my Lord, Sit thou on my right hand, till I make thine enemies thy footstool." Therefore the kingdom cannot be given up, till all rule and government be cast down. So that while the world lasts, Jesus, as the Messiah and Mediator, must reign; and all human beings are properly his subjects, are under his government, and are accountable to him.

26. The last enemy.] Death shall be destroyed; καταστροφή, shall be counter-worked, subverted, and finally overturned. But death cannot be destroyed by there being simply no farther death: death can only be destroyed and annihilated by a general resurrection; if there be no general resurrection, it is most evident that death will still retain his empire. Therefore, the fact that death shall be destroyed, assures the fact that there shall be a general resurrection; and this is a proof also, that, after the resurrection, there shall be no more death.

27. For he hath put all things under his feet.] The Father hath put all things under the feet of Christ, according to the prophecy, Psal. cx.

He is excepted] i. e. The Father: who hath put all things under him, the Son. This observation seems to be introduced by the apostle to show, that he does not mean that the Divine Nature shall be subjected to the human nature: Christ, as Messiah, and mediator between God and man, must ever be considered inferior to the Father: and his human nature, however dignified in consequence of its union with the Divine Nature, must ever be inferior to God. The whole of this verse should be read in a parenthesis.

28. The Son also himself be subject] When the administration of the kingdom of grace is finally closed; when there shall be no longer any state of probation; and consequently no longer need of a distinction between the kingdom of grace, and the kingdom of glory; then the Son, as being man, shall cease to exercise any distinct dominion; and God be all in all, there remaining no longer any distinction in the persons of the glorious Trinity, as acting any distinct or separate parts in either the kingdom of grace, or the kingdom of glory; and so the one infinite essence shall appear undivided and eternal.

29. Else what shall they do which are baptized for the dead? This is certainly the most difficult verse in the New Testament; for, notwithstanding the greatest and wisest men have laboured to explain it, there are to this day nearly as many different interpretations of it as there are interpreters. I shall not employ my time, nor that of my reader, with a vast number of discordant and conflicting opinions: I shall make a few remarks—1. The doctrine of the resurrection of our Lord, was a grand doctrine among the apostles: they considered and preached this as the demonstration of the truth of the Gospel. 2. The multitudes who embraced Christianity, became converts on the evidence of this resurrection.—3. This resurrection was considered the pledge and proof of the resurrection of all believers in Christ, to the possession of the same glory into which he had entered.—4. The baptism which they received, they considered as an emblem of their natural death and resurrection. This doctrine St. Paul most pointedly preaches. Rom. vi. 3, 4, 5. Know ye not that so many of us were baptized into Jesus Christ, were baptized into his death? Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death; that like as Christ was raised up from the dead, even so we also should walk in newness of life: for, if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in his resurrection.—5. It is evident from this, that all who died in the faith of Christ, died in the faith of the resurrection: and therefore cheerfully gave up their lives to death, as they took joyfully the spoiling of their goods, knowing in themselves that they had in heaven a better and an enduring substance, Heb. x. 34.—6. As is the body, so are we members; those who were properly instructed, and embraced Christianity, believed that, as all who had died in the faith of Christ should rise again, so they were baptized in the same faith.—7. As so many of the principal followers of Christ, sealed the truth with their blood; and when their faith was continued unchanged: every man who took on him the profession of Christianity, which was done by receiving baptism, considered himself as exposing his life to the most imminent hazard, and offering his life with those who had already offered and laid down theirs.—8. He was therefore baptized in reference to this martyrdom; and having regard to those dead he cheerfully received baptism, that, whether he was taken off by a natural or violent death, he might be raised in the likeness of Jesus Christ's resurrection, and that of his illustrious martyrs.—9. As martyrdom and baptism were thus so closely and intimately connected, βαπτίζεσθαι, to be baptized, was used to express being put to a violent death by the hands of persecutors. So Matt. xx. 22, 23. "But Jesus answered and said, Are ye able to drink of the cup that I shall drink of," &c. (can ye go through my sufferings?)—They say unto him, We are able. He saith unto them, Ye shall indeed drink of my cup." (Ye shall bear your part of the afflictions of the gospel.)—"And he baptized with the baptism that I am baptized with;"—(that is, we shall suffer martyrdom,) see also Mark x. 38. So Luke xii. 50. "I have a baptism to be baptized with; and how am I straitened till it be accomplished?" That is, I must die a violent death, for the salvation of men.—10. The sum of the apostle's meaning appears to be this: If there be no resurrection of the dead, those who, in becoming Christians, expose themselves to all manner of privations, crosses, severe sufferings, and a violent death, can have no compensation, nor any motive sufficient to induce them to expose themselves to such miseries. But as they receive baptism as an emblem of death, in voluntarily going under the water; so they receive it as an emblem of the resurrection unto eternal life, in coming up out of the water; thus they are baptized for the dead, in perfect faith of the resurrection. The three following verses seem to confirm this sense.

30. And why stand we in jeopardy every hour? Is there any reason why we should voluntarily submit to so many sufferings, and every hour be in danger of losing our lives, if the dead rise not? On the conviction of the possibility and certainty of the resurrection, we are thus baptized for the dead. We have counted the cost, despised sufferings, and exult at the prospect of death, because we know we shall have a resurrection unto eternal life.

31. I protest by your rejoicing.] Νῦν τὴν υπερλαίαν καυχασθε, by your exultation or boasting. Dr. Lightfoot understands this of the boasting of the Corinthians against the apostle; that he considered himself continually trampled on by them; rejected and exposed to infamy and contempt; but that he took this as a part of the reproach of Christ, and was happy in the prospect of death and a glorious resurrection, when all those troubles and wrongs would terminate for ever. Instead of υπερλαίαν, your exultation, or boasting, καυχασθε, your exultation, is the reading of the Codex Alexandrinus, and several others, with the Æthiopic, Origen, and Theophylact. This will lead to an easier sense: I declare by the exultation which I have in Christ Jesus, as having died for my offences, and risen again for my justification, that I neither fear sufferings nor death; and am daily ready to be offered up, and feel myself continually exposed to death. But the common reading is probably to be preferred: for, your glorying, is the same as glorying on your account. I profess by the glorying or exultation which I have on account of your salvation; that I anticipate, with pleasure, the end of my earthly race.

32 If, ^p after the manner of men, ^q I have fought with beasts at Ephesus, what advantageth it me, if the dead rise not? ^r let us eat and drink; for to-morrow we die.

33 Be not deceived: ^s evil communications corrupt good manners.

34 ^t Awake to righteousness, and sin not; ^u for some have not the knowledge of God; ^v I speak this to your shame.

^p Or, to speak after the manner of men.—^q 2 Cor. 1:3.—^r Isa. 32:13, 14, 55:12. Eccles. 2:24. Wisd. 1:2. Luke 12:13.

I die daily. A form of speech for, I am continually exposed to death. The following passages will illustrate this. So Philo, pag. 990. Flaccus, who was in continual fear of death, says, καθ' ἑκάστην ἡμέραν, πολλὰ καὶ ὅς ὡραν, πρὸς τὸ θάνατον, πολλὰ θανάτους ὑπομένων ἀπὸ ἑνὸς τῶν τέλειων. "Every day, rather every hour, I anticipate death; enduring many deaths before that last one comes." So Libanius, speaking of his own miseries, and those of the people of Antioch, Epist. 1320. pag. 615, says, εἰς ζωὴν τεύχοντες. "Though living, we are dead." Livy has a similar form of expression to signify continual danger, xxix. 17. Quotidie capitur urbs nostra, quotidie diripitur. "Daily is our city taken; daily is it pillaged."

32. If, after the manner of men, &c. Much learned criticism has been employed on this verse, to ascertain whether it is to be understood literally, or metaphorically. Does the apostle mean to say, that he had literally fought with wild beasts at Ephesus; or, that he had met with brutish, savage men, from whom he was in danger of his life? That St. Paul did not fight with wild beasts at Ephesus, may be argued, 1. From his own silence on this subject, when enumerating his various sufferings, 2 Cor. xi. 23, &c. 2. From the silence of his historian Luke, who, in the Acts of this Apostle, gives no intimation of this kind; and it certainly was too remarkable a circumstance to be passed over, either by Paul, in the catalogue of his own sufferings, or by Luke, in his history. 3. From similar modes of speech, which are employed metaphorically, and are so understood. 4. From the improbability that a Roman citizen, as Paul was, should be condemned to such a punishment, when, in other cases, by pleading his privilege, he was exempted from being scourged, &c. And, 5. From the positive testimony of Tertullian, and Chrysostom, who deny the literal interpretation.

On the other hand, it is strongly argued, that the apostle is to be literally understood; and that he did, at some particular time, contend with wild beasts at Ephesus: from which, he was miraculously delivered. 1. That the phrase κατ' ἀνθρώπων, signifies, as men used to do, and never means according to the manner of men, as implying their purposes, or, to use their forms of speech, &c. 2. From the circumstance of the case in Ephesus, usually referred to, viz. the insurrection by Demetrius, and his fellow-craftsmen; where, though Paul would have been in danger had he gone into the theatre, he was in little or none, as he did not venture himself. 3. From his having endured much greater conflicts at Lystra and at Philippi, than at Ephesus, at the former of which he was stoned to death, and again miraculously raised to life: see the notes on Acts xiv. 19, &c. And yet he calls not these greater dangers by this name. 4. That it cannot refer to the insurrection of Demetrius and his fellows, for St. Paul had no contention with them, and was scarcely in any danger, though Grius and Aristarchus were; see the whole of Acts xix. And, 5. As we do not read of any other imminent dangers to which he was exposed at Ephesus, and that already mentioned is not sufficient to justify the expression, I have fought with beasts at Ephesus; therefore, we must conclude that he was, at some time, not directly mentioned by his historian or himself, actually exposed to wild beasts at Ephesus. 6. That this is the case that he refers to, 2 Cor. i. 8, 9, 10. For we could not, brethren, have you ignorant of our trouble which came to us in Asia, that we were pressed out of measure above strength, καθ' ὑπερβολὴν ἐβάρησεν ὑπερ δύναμιν, inasmuch that we despaired even of life. But we had the sentence of death in ourselves, that we should not trust in ourselves, but in God, which raiseth the dead: who delivered us from so great a death: for these expressions refer to some excessive and unprecedented danger, from which no thing less than a miraculous interference could have saved him; and that it might have been an actual exposure to wild beasts, or any other danger, equally great, or even greater.

What advantage it me, if the dead rise not? I believe the common method of pointing this verse is erroneous: I propose to read it thus: If after the manner of men, I have fought with beasts at Ephesus, what doth it advantage me? If the dead rise not, let us eat and drink; for to-morrow we die.

What the apostle says here, is a regular and legitimate conclusion from the doctrine, that there is no resurrection; for if there be no resurrection, then there can be no judgment; no future state of rewards and punishments; why, therefore, should we bear crosses, and keep ourselves under continual discipline! Let us eat and drink, take all the pleasure we can, for to-morrow we die; and there is an end of us for ever. The words, Let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we die, are taken from Isa. xxiii. 13, as they stand now in the Septuagint; and are a pretty smooth, proverbial saying, which might be paralleled from the writings of several epicurean heathens, φαγομεν καὶ πινόμεν ἀντὶ τοῦ ἀποθνήσκειν. The words of Isaiah are אכלו ושתו כי כחרב אכלו akol ve shathu, ki machar namuth: "In eating and drinking, for to-morrow we die." i. e. Let us spend our time in eating and drinking, &c. See a similar speech by Trimalchio, in Petronius Arbitr, Satiric cap. xxxvii.

33. Be not deceived! Do not impose on yourselves; and permit not others to do it.

Evil communications corrupt good manners. There are many sayings like this among the Greek poets; but this of the apostle, and which, according to the best MSS. makes an imbecile verse, is generally supposed to have been taken from Mendaxer's lost comedy of Thais.

ἄθαρ ναὶ καὶ ἡβή χορηγῶ ὀφθαλμοὶ κακαί.

Bad company good morals doth corrupt.

There is a proverb much like this among the rabbins: חרי אורי ויבש יבש ויבש יבש There were two dry logs of wood, and one green log; but the dry logs burnt up the green log.

There is no difficulty in this saying; he who frequents the company of bad, or corrupt men, will soon be as they are. He may be sound in the faith, and have the life and power of godliness, and, at first, frequent their company only for the sake of their pleasing conversation, or their literary accomplishments; and he may think his faith proof against their infidelity; but he will soon find, by means of their glozing speeches, his faith weakened; and, when once he gets under the empire of doubt, unbelief will soon prevail; his bad company will corrupt his morals, and the two dry logs will soon burn up the green one.

The same sentiment, in nearly the same words, is found in several of the Greek writers: Aeschylus, vii. Theb. ver. 605. Ἐν παντὶ παύει δ' ἐσθ' ὁμιλίας κακῶν κακὸν οὐδέν. "In every matter, there is nothing more deleterious than evil communication." Diodorus Siculus, lib. xvi. cap. 54. Ταῖς πονηραῖς ὁμιλίαις ἐσθλὰ φθαίνει τὰ ἡθῶν ἀνθρώπων. "With these evil communications he corrupted the morals of men."

Ταῦτα μὴ συνῶς ἐσθ' ἑκατοῖς δ' μὴ προσμιλῇ

Ἀνδραῖν, ἀλλ' αἵμα των ἀσθῶν ἐσθ'.

Καὶ μετὰ ταῖς πῶς καὶ ἐσθλὰ καὶ μετὰ τοῖς

Ἐσθλὸν μὲν γὰρ αὐτ' ἐσθλὰ μαθήσεται ἐν δὲ κακοῖς

Συμμεχῶς ἀπολεῖ καὶ τὸν εὐνοῦ τὸν.

Theogn. Sent. ver. 30—35.

"Know this—Thou must not keep company with the wicked, but converse always with good men. With such, eat, drink, and associate. Please those who have the greatest virtue. From good men thou mayest learn good things: but if thou keep company with the wicked, thou wilt lose even the intelligence which thou now possesseth."

34. Awake to righteousness! Shake off your slumber; awake fully, thoroughly, ὁκτώως, as ye ought to do: so the word should be rendered; not awake to righteousness. Be in earnest: do not trifle with God, your souls, and eternity.

Sin not! For this will lead to the destruction both of body and soul. Life is but a moment; improve it; Heaven has blessings without end.

Some have not the knowledge of God! The original is very emphatic, ἀγνοοῦν γὰρ Θεὸν τίνες ἔχουσιν, some have an ignorance of God: they do not acknowledge God. They have what is their hane; and they have not what would be their happiness and glory. To have an ignorance of God, a sort of substantial darkness, that prevents the light of God from penetrating the soul, is a worse state than to be simply in the dark; or without the divine knowledge. The apostle probably speaks of those who were once enlightened; and had once good morals, but were corrupted by bad company. It was to their shame or reproach that they had left the good way, and were now posting down to the chambers of death.

35. But some man will say Ἀλλὰ εἰ τις. It is very likely that the apostle by tis, some, some one, some man, means particularly the false apostle, or teacher at Corinth; who was chief in the opposition to the pure doctrine of the Gospel; and to whom, in this covert way, he often refers.

The second part of the apostle's discourse begins at this verse. What shall be the nature of the resurrection body?

1. The question is stated, ver. 35. 2. It is answered; first, by a similitude, ver. 36—38; secondly, by an application, ver. 39—41; and, thirdly, by explication, ver. 42—50.

36. Thou fool! ἄφρων. If this be addressed, as it probably is, to the false apostle, there is a peculiar propriety in it; as this man seems to have magnified his own wisdom, and set it up against both God and man; and none but a fool could act so. At 36 But God giveth it a body, as it hath pleased him, and to every seed his own body.

40 There are also celestial bodies, and bodies terrestrial: but the glory of the celestial is one, and the glory of the terrestrial is another.

41 There is one glory of the sun, and another glory of the

the same time, it is folly in any to assert the impossibility of a thing, because he cannot comprehend it.

That which thou sowest is not quickened, except it die. I have showed the propriety of this simile of the apostle in the note on John xii. 24. to which I must refer the reader. A grain of wheat, &c. is composed of the body or lobes, and the germ. The latter forms an inconsiderable part of the mass of the grain: the body, lobes, or furunculous part, forms nearly the whole. This body dies, becomes decomposed, and forms a fine earth, from which the germ derives its first nourishment; by the nourishment thus derived, the germ is quickened, receives its first vegetative life; and through this means, is rendered capable of deriving the rest of its nourishment and support from the grosser earth in which the grain was deposited. Whether the apostle would intimate here, that there is a certain germ in the present body, which shall become the seed of the resurrection body, this is not the place to inquire: and on this point I can with pleasure refer to Mr. Drew's work on the "Resurrection of the Human Body," where this subject as well as every other subject connected with this momentous question, is considered in a very luminous and cogently argumentative point of view.

37. Thou sowest not that body that shall be! This is decomposed, and becomes the means of nourishing the whole plant, root, stalk, leaves, ear, and full corn in the ear.

38. But God giveth it a body! And is there any other way of accounting for it, but by the miraculous working of God's power? For, out of that one bare grain, is produced a system of roots, a tall and vigorous stalk, with all its appendages of leaves, &c. besides the full corn in the ear; the whole making several hundred times the quantum of what was originally deposited. There are no proofs that what some call nature, can effect this: it will ever be a philosophical as well as a scriptural truth that God giveth it a body as it pleaseth him; and so doth he manage the whole of the work, that every seed shall have its own body; that the wheat germ shall never produce barley; nor the rye, oats. See the note on Gen. i. 12.

39. All flesh is not the same flesh! Though the organization of all animals is, in its general principles, the same; yet, there are no two different kinds of animals that have flesh of the same flavour; whether the animal be beast, fowl, or fish. And this is precisely the same with vegetables.

In opposition to this general assertion of St. Paul, there are certain people who tell us that fish is not flesh: and while their religion prohibits, at one time of the year, the flesh of quadrupeds and fowls, it allows them to eat fish, fondly supposing that fish is not flesh: they might as well tell us that a lily is not a vegetable, because it is not a cabbage. There is a Jewish canon produced by Schoettgen, which my readers may not be displeased to find inserted here: Nederim, fol. 40. הכל אשר נשמה נפש חיה הוא בשר He who is bound by a vow to abstain from flesh, is bound to abstain from the flesh of fish and of beasts. From this it appears that they acknowledged that there was one flesh of beasts, and another of fishes; and that he was religiously bound to abstain from the one, who was bound to abstain from the other.

40. There are also celestial bodies, and bodies terrestrial! The apostle certainly does not speak of celestial and terrestrial bodies in the sense in which we use those terms: we invariably mean by the former, the sun, moon, planets, and stars; by the latter, masses of inanimate matter. But the apostle speaks of human beings; some of which were clothed with celestial, others with terrestrial bodies. It is very likely therefore, that he means by the celestial bodies such as those refined human bodies with which Enoch, Elijah, and Christ himself appear in the realms of glory: to which we may add the bodies of those saints which arise after our Lord's resurrection; and, after having appeared to many, doubtless were taken up to Paradise. By terrestrial bodies, we may understand those in which the saints now live.

But the glory of the celestial is one! The glory, the excellence, beauty, and perfection. Even the present frail human body, possesses an indescribable degree of contrivance, art, economy, order, beauty, and excellence. But the celestial body, that in which Christ now appears, and according to which ours shall be raised, Phil. iii. 21. will exceed the excellence of this beyond all comparison. A glory or splendour, will belong to that which does not belong to this: here there is a glory of excellence; there, there will be a glory of height, and effulgence; for the bodies of the saints shall shine like the sun in the kingdom of their Father. See Matt. xiii. 43.

41. There is one glory of the sun! As if he had said. This may be illustrated by the present appearance of the celestial bodies which belong to our system. The sun has a greater degree of splendour than the moon; the moon than the planets; and the planets, than the stars. And even in the fixed moon and another glory of the stars: for one star differeth from another star in glory.

42. So also is the resurrection of the dead. It is sown in corruption; it is raised in incorruption:

43. It is sown in dishonour; it is raised in glory: it is sown in weakness; it is raised in power:

44. It is sown a natural body: it is raised a spiritual body. There is a natural body, and there is a spiritual body.

45 And so it is written, The first man Adam was made a

stars, one has a greater degree of splendour than another; which may proceed either from their different magnitudes, or from the comparative proximity of some of them to our earth; but from which of these causes, or from some other cause unknown, we cannot tell; as it is impossible to ascertain the distance of any of the fixed stars; even the nearest of them being too remote to afford any sensible parallax, without which their distances cannot be measured. See the concluding observations.

42. So also is the resurrection of the dead! That is, the bodies of the dead, though all immortal, shall possess different degrees of splendour and glory, according to the state of holiness in which their respective souls were found. The rabbins have some crude notions concerning different degrees of glory, which the righteous shall possess in the kingdom of heaven. They make out seven degrees: "The first at which is possessed by צדיקים tsedikim, the just, who observe the covenant of the holy blessed God, and subjugate all evil affections." "The second is possessed by those who are ישרים yesharim, the upright, whose delight it is to walk in the ways of God, and please him." "The third, is for תמימים tamimim, the perfect; those who, with integrity, walk in the ways of God; and do not curiously pry into his dispensations." "The fourth, is for קדושים kadoshim, the holy ones; those who are the excellent of the earth, in whom is all God's delight." Psa. xvi. 3. "The fifth, is for מטהרים metharim, the chief of the penitents, who have broken through the brazen doors and returned to the Lord." "The sixth, is for שומרי מצוות shomeri mitzvot shel beith raban, the scholars and tender ones; who have not transgressed." "The seventh, is for עובדי ה' evdei ha', the godly; and this is the innermost of all the departments." These seven degrees require a comment by themselves.

There is a saying among the rabbins, very like that of the apostle, in this and the preceding verse. Siphri, in Yalec: Sinonni, page 2, fol. 10.—"The faces of the righteous shall be in the world to come, like suns, moons, the heaven, stars, lightnings; and like the lilies and candlesticks of the temple."

It is sown in corruption! The body is buried in a state of degradation, decay, and corruption. The apostle uses the word sown to intimate that the body shall raise again, as a seed springs up that has been sown in the earth.

It is raised in incorruption! Being no more subject to corruption, dissolution, and death.

43. It is sown in dishonour! Being now stripped of all the glory it had as a machine, fearfully and wonderfully made by the hands of God; and also consigned to death and destruction because of sin. This is the most dishonourable circumstance.

It is raised in glory! It is raised a glorious body, because immortal, and far exalted redeemed from the empire of death.

It is sown in weakness! The principles of dissolution, corruption, and decay, have prevailed over it; disease undermined it, and death made it prey.

It is raised in power! To be no more liable to weakness through labour; decay, by age; wasting, by disease; and dissolution, by death.

44. It is sown a natural body! Σωμα φυσικον, an animal body, having a multiplicity of solids, and fluids of different kinds, with different functions; composed of muscles, fibres, tendons, cartilages, bones, arteries, veins, nerves, blood, and various juices, requiring continual support from aliment; and hence the necessity of labour to provide food, and skill to prepare it; which food must be masticated, digested, and refined; what is proper for nourishment secreted, brought into the circulation, further elaborated, and prepared to enter into the composition of every part: hence growth and nutrition; without which, no organized body can possibly exist.

It is raised a spiritual body! One perfect in all its parts; no longer dependent on natural productions for its support; being built up on indestructible principles; and existing in a region where there shall be no more death; no more causes of decay leading to dissolution; and consequently, no more necessity for food, nutrition, &c. The body is spiritual, and has a spiritual existence, and spiritual support.

What the apostle says here, is quite consistent with the views his countrymen had on this subject.

In Sukar Chinkash, fol. 43, it is said, "So shall it be in the resurrection of the dead; only the old uncleanness shall not be found."

R. Jerohai, on the law, fol. 14, says, "When the godly shall arise, their bodies shall be pure and innocent; obedient to the instinct of the soul; there shall be no adversary, nor any evil disease."

Rab. Pinchas says, "The holy blessed God shall make the bodies of the righteous as beautiful as the body of Adam was, when he entered into paradise."

Rab. Levi says, "When the soul is in heaven, it is clothed with celestial light; when it returns to the body, it shall have the same light; and then the body shall shine like the splendour of the firmament of heaven." Then shall men gain the knowledge of what is perfect. ⁱ Sukar, Gen. fol. 69.

The Jews have an opinion that aszendizeh, the lower joint of the backbone, survives the corruption of the body; and that it is out of this bone that the resurrection body is formed. In the place last quoted, fol. 70. we have the following teachings on this subject: "Let us borrow an example from what relates to the purifying of silver. First, the ore is cast into the burning furnace, that it may be separated from its earthly impurities; it is then silver, but not perfect silver. They put it in the furnace a second time, and then all its scoriae are separated from it, and it becomes perfect silver, without any adulteration. Thus does the holy blessed God: He first buries our bodies under the earth, where they putrefy and corrupt, that nothing remains but that one bone: from this, a new body is produced, which is indeed a body, but not a perfect body. But in that great day, when all bodies are hidden in the earth, and the soul departs, then even that bone decays, and the body which was formed out of it remains, and is as the light of the sun, and the splendour of heaven. Thus, as the silver was purified, so is the body; and no imperfect mixture remains." See Schoettgen.

These things must not be treated as rabbinical stages; the different similes used by the apostle, have the same spirit and design: as the seed which is sown in the earth rots, and out of the germ contained in it, God in his providence, produces a root, stalk, leaves, ear, and a great numerical increase of grains; it is not likely, that God, out of some essential parts of the body that now is, will produce the resurrection body; and will then give the soul a body as it pleases him; and so completely preserve the individuality of every human being, as he does of every grain; giving to each its own body 1 ver. 38. So that as surely as the grain of wheat shall produce wheat, after it is cast in the earth, corrupts and dies, so surely shall our bodies produce the same bodies as to their essential individuality. As the germination of seeds is produced by his wisdom and power, so shall the pure and perfect human body be, in the resurrection. Hence he does not say the body is hurried, but the body is sown; it is sown in weakness, it is sown in dishonour, &c. &c.

There is a natural body, and there is a spiritual body] This very saying is found in so many words, in Yalcut Rubeni, fol. 196. "There are different kinds of men" אדם רגילי אדם רפואי אדם רשעניא אדם ארסי אדם גופא. "There is a spiritual Adam, and there is also a corporeal Adam."

45. The first man Adam was made a living soul] These forms of expression are also common among the Jews; hence אדם הראשון אדם הרשון, "Adam the first;" and אדם קדמאי, "Adam the last." They assert that there are two Adams, 1. The mystical heavenly Adam; and 2. The mystical earthly Adam. See Sukar Exod. fol. 29. and the several examples in Schoettgen. The apostle says this is written; the first man Adam was made a living soul: this is found Gen. ii. 7. in the words נשמת חיים נשמת חיים, the breath of lives; which the apostle translates ψυχην (soul), a living soul.

The last Adam—a quickening spirit] This is also said to be written; but where, says Dr. Lightfoot, is this written in the whole sacred book? Schoettgen replies, In the very same verse, and in these words אדם נפשית חיים ayeli ha Adam le-nephesh chayim, and Adam became a living soul; which the apostle translates spiritus. Co-mo-mo, a quickening, or life-giving spirit. Among the cabalistic Jews נפש Nephesh, is considered as implying greater dignity than נשמה Nishmah. The former may be considered as pointing out the rational, the latter the sensitive soul. All these references to Jewish opinions and forms of speech, the apostle uses to convince them that the thing was possible and that the resurrection of the body was generally credited by all their wise and learned men. The Jews, as Dr. Lightfoot observes, speak frequently of the Spirit of the Messiah; and they allow that it was this Spirit that moved on the face of the waters, Gen. i. 2. And they assert that the Messiah shall quicken those who dwell in the dust.

"It ought not to be passed by," says the same author, "that Adam, receiving from God the promise of Christ, The seed of the woman shall bruise the head of the serpent, and believing it, named his wife חַוָּה Chavah, that is, life; so the Septuagint, καὶ ἐκάλεσεν Ἀδάμ τὴν ἑαυτοῦ γυναῖκα ἡν ὀνόματι Ζωή, And Adam called the name of his wife, Life. What! Is she called Life that brought death into the world? But Adam perceived ὅτι ἐξ ἁρῶν Ἀδάμ, the last Adam, exhibited to him in the promise, to be πνεῦμα ζωοποιόν, a quickening or life-giving spirit; and had brought in a better life of the soul; and should at last bring in a better life of the body. Hence is that saying, John i. 4. Εὐ ἀντὶ ζῶν ἡν—In HIM was LIFE."

Some contend that the first Adam and the last Adam, mean

45 As is the earthly, such are they also that are earthly: 1 and as is the heavenly, such are they also that are heavenly.

49 And ^h as we have borne the image of the earthy, ⁱ we shall also bear the image of the heavenly.

50 Now thus I say, brethren, that ^m flesh and blood cannot the same person in two different states. The first man with the body of his creation; the same person with the body of his resurrection. See on ver. 49.

46. That was first which is spiritual] The natural or animal body described, ver. 44, was the first; it was the body with which Adam was created. The spiritual body is the last, and is that with which the soul is to be clothed in the resurrection.

47. The first man is of the earth] That is, Adam's body was made out of the dust of the earth; and hence the apostle says, he was χρῖς, of the dust; for the body was made אפר מן האדמה aphar min ha-adamah; dust from the ground, Gen. ii. 7.

The second man is—from heaven] Heavenly, αἰθρῖος, as several good MSS. and Versions read. The resurrection body shall be of a heavenly nature, and not subject to decay or death. What is formed of earth, must live after an earthly manner! must be nourished and supported by the earth: what is from heaven, is of a spiritual nature, and shall have no further connexion with, nor dependence upon earth. I conceive both these clauses to relate to man, and to point out the difference between the animal body, and the spiritual body. or between the bodies which we now have, and the bodies which we shall have in the resurrection. But can this be the meaning of the clause, the second man is the Lord from heaven? In the quotation, I have omitted ὁ Kyrios, the Lord, on the following authorities; first, MSS. BCD'EFG, and two others.—Versions.—Coptic, Ethiopic, Armenian, in the margin, Ulgate, and Itala. FATHERS.—Origen, who quotes it once and omits it once; Athanasius, Basil, the two Gregories, Nyssen and Nazianzen; Isidore, Cyril, Tertullian, Cyprian, Hilary, Zeno, Ambrose, Augustin, Jerom, Ambrosiaster, Philaster, Leo, Pacianus, Primasius, Sedulius, Bede, and others. See these authorities more at large in Wetstein. Some of the most eminent of modern critics leave out the word, and Tertullian says that it was put in by the heretic Marcion. I do think that the word is not legitimate in this place. The verse is read by the MSS., Versions, and Fathers, above referred to, thus, The first man is of the earth, earthy; the second man is of heaven, heavenly; Kyrios, being omitted, and αἰθρῖος, added. The first man, and the second man, of this verse, are the same as the first Adam, and the second Adam of ver. 45. and it is not clear that Christ is meant in either place. Some suppose that there is a reference here to what Eve said, when she brought forth Cain, I have gotten a man from the Lord, יָהוָה אֱשֶׁר אֶתְּתֶנִּי לִּי יְהוָה, I have possessed or obtained a man, the Lord; that is, as Dr. Lightfoot explains it, that the Lord himself should become man: and he thinks that Eve had respect to the promise of Christ when she named her son; as Adam had when he named his wife. If Eve had this in view, we can only say, she was sadly mistaken: indeed the conjecture is too refined.

The term first man of the earth, and second man from heaven, are frequent among the Jews: לַעֲלִי אֱדָם the superior Adam; and אֱדָם הַתַּחְתִּי Adam the inferior; that is, the earthly and the heavenly Adam: Adam before the resurrection, and Adam after it.

48. As is the earthy, &c.] As Adam was, who was formed from the earth; so are all his descendants, frail, decaying, and subject to death.

As is the heavenly] As is the heavenly state of Adam and all glorified beings, so shall be the state of all those who, at the resurrection, are raised up for glory.

49. And as we have borne the image of the earthy] As being descendants from Adam, we have all been born in his likeness, and subject to the same kind of corruption, disgrace, and death; we shall also be raised to a life immortal, such as he now enjoys in the kingdom of God. This interpretation proceeds on the ground that, what is here spoken, belongs to Adam in his two-fold state, viz. of mortality and immortality; of disgrace and honour, of earth and heaven.

But by many commentators, the words are understood to refer to Adam and Christ, in ver. 45, 47, 48, and 49. By these, Christ is called the second Adam, the quickening Spirit, the second man, and the heavenly, whose image of righteousness and true holiness we are to bear.

But when I consider, 1st. How all these terms are used and applied in the Jewish writings, it appears to me that, as this was not their import among them, so it was not the design of Paul; and it would be very difficult to find any place where Jesus Christ is called the second Adam, in either Old or New Testament. The discourse of the apostle, Rom. v. 14—19, will not prove it, though in those verses there is a comparison drawn between Adam and Christ: but that comparison refers to the extent of the sin and condemnation brought upon all men by the transgression of the first; and the redemption purchased for all men by the sacrifice of the last; and the superabundant grace procured by that sacrifice. But here, the comparison most evidently is between the state of man in this mortal life, and his state after the resurrection. Here, all men are corrupt and mortal; and here all men die. There, all men shall be incorrupt and immortal; and whether holy or unholy, shall be eternally immortal.

Of the image of Adam, in his heavenly or paradisaical state, the rabbins talk largely: they say that "God created Adam with a double image, earthly and heavenly; that he was the most perfect of all beings: that his splendour shone from one extremity of the earth to the other; that all feared before him: that he knew all wisdom, both earthly and heavenly; but when he sinned, his glory was diminished, and his wisdom departed from him." Valent. Rubeni, fol. 10.

They add farther, that, "In the time in which Adam received עֵלֶיזָרָה the heavenly image, that all the creatures came to him, and acknowledged him king of the earth." Ibid. fol. 21.

2. From all this, and much more might be produced on the subject, (see Schoetgen.) it appears that the apostle follows, as far as it could comport with his design, the sentiments of his countrymen; and that he adopts their very phraseology, and that it is through the medium of these sentiments, and this phraseology, that he is to be understood and interpreted. Others may understand all these passages differently; and still consider them as a parallel between Adam and Christ, which is the general view of interpreters. The view which I have taken of them appears to me to be much more consistent with the nature of the discourse, and the scope and design of the apostle. The common opinion is orthodox: what I here propose is no heresy. There are many difficulties in the chapter; and not a few in the verses immediately under consideration.

50. Flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom This is a Hebrew periphrasis for man; and man in his present state of infirmity and decay. Man, in his present state, cannot inherit the kingdom of God; his nature is not suited to that place; he could not in his present weak state endure an exceeding great and eternal weight of glory. Therefore, it is necessary that he should die, or be changed; that he should have a celestial body suited to the celestial state. The apostle is certainly not speaking of flesh and blood in a moral sense, to signify corruption of mind and heart; but in a natural sense; as such flesh and blood cannot inherit glory, for the reasons already assigned.

51. I show you a mystery That is, a thing which you have never known before. But what is this mystery? Why, that we shall not all sleep; we shall not all die; but we shall all be changed; of this the Jews had not distinct notions. For, as flesh and blood cannot inherit glory, and all shall not be found dead, at the day of judgment; then all must be changed; undergo such a change that their bodies may become spiritual, like the bodies of those who shall be raised from the dead.

52. In a moment Ev anem, in an atom; that is, an indivisible point of time. In the twinkling of an eye; as soon as a man can wink; which expressions show that this mighty work is to be done by the Almighty power of God, as he does all his works: He calls, and it is done. The resurrection of all the dead, from the foundation of the world to that time, and the change of all the living then upon earth, shall be the work of a single moment.

At the last trump This as well as all the rest of the peculiar phraseology of this chapter, is merely Jewish; and we must go to the Jewish writers to know what is intended. On this very subject, the rabbins use the very same expression. Tanis Rabbi Akiba, "How shall the holy blessed God raise the dead? We are taught that God has a trumpet, a thousand ells long, according to the ell of God: this trumpet he shall blow, so that the sound of it shall extend from one extremity of the earth to the other. At the first blast, the earth shall be shaken; at the second, the dust shall be separated; at the third, the bones shall be gathered together; at the fourth, the members shall rear again; at the fifth, the heads shall be covered with skin; at the sixth, the souls shall be rejoined to their bodies; at the seventh, all shall revive and stand clothed." See Wetstein. This tradition shows us what we are to understand by the last trump of the apostle: it is the seventh of Rab. Akiba, when the dead shall be all raised, and being clothed upon with their eternal vehicles, they shall be ready to appear before the judgment-seat of God.

For the trumpet shall sound By this the apostle confirms the substance of the tradition; there shall be the sound of a trumpet on this great day; and thus other scriptures teach. See Zech. ix. 14. Matt. xxiv. 31. John v. 25. 1 Thess. iv. 16. in which latter place the apostle treats this subject among the Thessalonians; as he does here among the Corinthians. See the notes there.

brought to pass the saying that is written, "Death is swallowed up in victory."

53 O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?

56 The sting of death is sin; and the strength of sin is the law.

57 But thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ.

58 Therefore, my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, unmoveable, always abounding in the work of the Lord; forasmuch as ye know that your labour is not in vain in the Lord.

Should be raised incorruptible Fully clothed, with a new body, to die no more.

We shall be changed.] That is, those who shall then be found alive.

53. For this corruptible, &c.] Because flesh and blood cannot inherit glory; therefore, there must be a refinement by death, or a change without it.

54. Death is swallowed up in victory.] Κατεσθῆναι ὁ θάνατος εἰς νίκην. These words are a quotation from Isaiah xxv. 8. where the Hebrew is בָּשָׁר וְדָמַי בִּלְבָב הַמָּוֶתֶת לֹא-נִשְׁאָר; He, (God,) hath swallowed up death in victory; or, for ever. These words in the Septuagint are thus translated, κατεσθῆναι ὁ θάνατος ὑπὸ νίκης; death, having prevailed or conquered, hath swallowed up. But, in the version of Theodotion, the words are the same with those of the apostle. The Hebrew בָּשָׁר, la-netsach, the Septuagint sometimes translate εἰς νίκην, in victory; but most commonly, εἰς ἄρκον, for ever; both, as Bishop Pearce observes, in such kind of phrases, signifying the same thing; because eternity conquers all things; and accordingly, in 2 Sam. ii. 26. where the Septuagint have καὶ εἰς νίκην καταπαύεται ἡ πομπή; our English version has, Shall the sword devour for ever? And the same may be seen in Job xxiv. 7. Lxx. v. 20. Amos i. 11. and viii. 7. from which authority the bishop translated the clause here, Death is swallowed up for ever.

Death is here personified, and represented as a devouring being, swallowing up all the generations of men; and, by the resurrection of the body, and the destruction of the empire of death, God is represented as swallowing him up; or that eternity gulps him down; so that he is endlessly lost and absorbed in its illimitable waste. How glorious a time to the righteous, when the inhabitant shall no more say, I am sick; when God shall have wiped away all tears from off all faces, and when there shall be no more death. This time must come. Hallelujah! The Lord God Omnipotent reigneth.

55. O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory? Ὁ θάνατος θάνατος, ποῦ σου ἡ δόξα; ὁ σῆμα σῆμα ἄδῃ τοῦ νίκης; These words are generally supposed to be taken from Hos. xiii. 14. where the Hebrew text stands thus: אֲדָרְבָּרִי מָוֶת עֲלֵי מִשְׁכָּבִי עֲלֵי מִשְׁכָּבִי עֲלֵי מִשְׁכָּבִי; chi debaregei marathi; chi katubeni shadi; which we translate, O death! I will be thy plagues; O grave! I will be thy destruction; and which the Septuagint translate very nearly as the apostle, ὁ θάνατος ὁ θάνατος; ὁ σῆμα τοῦ σῆματος ἄδῃ; O death, where is thy revenge, or judicial process? O grave, where is thy sting! &c. And it may be remarked, that almost all the MSS., Versions, and many of the Fathers, interchange the two members of this sentence, as they appear in the Septuagint, attributing victory to Death; and the sting to Hades, or the grave: only the Septuagint, probably by mistake or corruption of copyists, have ἄδῃ, δόξα, revenge, or a judicial process, for νίκην, νίκην, victory: a mistake which the similarity of the words, both in letters and sound, might readily produce. We may observe also, that the ἄδῃ chi (I will be,) of the Hebrew text, the Septuagint, and the apostle following them, have translated σῆμα, where, as if the word had been written σῆμα where, the two last letters interchanged; but ἄδῃ chi, is rendered where in other places; and our translators, in the 16th verse of this same chapter (Hos. xiii.) render מָוֶת chi mulea, "I will be thy king," but have this note in the margin, "Rather, where is thy king? King Hoshai being then in prison." The apostle, therefore, and the Septuagint, are sufficiently vindicated by the use of the word elsewhere; and the best Jewish commentators allow this use of the word. The Targum, Syriac, Arabic, Vulgate, and some MSS. of Kennicott and De Rossi, confirm this reading.

Having vindicated the translation, it is necessary to inquire into the meaning of the apostle's expressions. Both Death and Hades are here personified: death is represented as having a sting, dagger, or goad, by which, like the driver of oxen, he is continually irritating and urging on; these irritations are the distresses by which men are urged on till they fall into Hades, the empire of death. To Hades, victory is attributed, having overcome and conquered all human life, and subdued all to its own empire. By the transposition of these two members of the sentence, the victory is given to Death, who has extinguished all human life; and the sting is given to Hades, as in his empire, the evil of death is fully displayed by the extinction of all annual life, and the destruction of all human bodies. We have often seen a personification of death in ancient paintings; a skeleton crowned, with a dart in his hand; probably taken from the apostle's description. The Jews represent the angel of death as having a sword, from which deadly drops of gall fall into the mouths of all men.

Hades, which we here translate grave, is generally understood to be the place of separate spirits. See the note on Matt. xi 23.

59. The sting of death is sin) The apostle explains himself particularly here: Death could not have entered into the world if sin had not entered first: it was sin that not only introduced death, but has armed him with all his destroying force; the goad, or dagger of death is sin; by this, both body and soul are slain.

The strength of sin is the law) The law of God forbids all transgression, and sentences those who commit it, to temporal and eternal death. Sin has its controlling and binding power from the law. The law curses the transgressor, and provides no help for him; and if nothing else intervene, he must, through it, continue ever under the empire of death.

57. But thanks be to God) What the law could not do, because it is law, and law cannot provide pardon, is done by the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ; he has died to slay death: he has risen again to bring mankind from under the empire of Hades. All this he has done through his mere unmerited mercy; and eternal thanks are due to God for this unspeakable gift. He has given us the victory over sin, Satan, death, the grave, and hell.

58. Be ye steadfast) ἑσθαι, from ἵστα, a seat; be settled, confide in the truth of this doctrine of the resurrection, and every thing that pertains to it, as confidently as a man sits down on a seat; which he knows to be solid, firm, and safe: and on which he has often sat.

Unmoveable) Αμετακίνητοι, from α, negative, and μετακίω, to move away; let nothing shake your faith: let nothing move you away from this hope of the Gospel which is given unto you. What I tell you, I receive from God; your false teachers cannot say so: in a declaration of God you may unshakenly confide.

Always abiding in the work of the Lord) The work of the Lord is obedience to his holy word: every believer in Christ is a workman of God. He that works not, to bring glory to God, and good to man, is not acknowledged as a servant of Christ: and, if he be not a servant, he is not a son; and if not a son, then not an heir. And he must not only work, but abound in that work; ever exceeding his former self; and this, not for a time, but always; beginning, continuing, and ending every act of life to God's glory, and the good of his fellows.

Your labour is not in vain.) Your labour in the Lord, is not in vain: you must not only work, but you must labour, put forth all your strength: and you must work and labour in the Lord, under his direction, and by his influence; for, without Him, you can do nothing. And this labour cannot be in vain: you shall have a resurrection unto eternal life: not because you have laboured, but because Christ died, and gave you grace to be faithful.

1. The chapter through which the reader has passed, is a chapter of great importance and difficulty; and, on its difficulties, much has been written in the preceding notes. Though I have used all the helps in my power to guide me in explaining it, I have, upon the whole, been obliged to think for myself, and claim only the praise of severe labour, ever directed by honest intention; and an earnest desire to find out the truth.

2. There are many questions connected with the doctrine of the resurrection, which I could not introduce here, without writing a book, instead of short notes on a very long chapter. On such subjects, I again beg leave to direct the reader to Mr. Samuel Drew's Essay on that subject.

3. One remark I cannot help making; the doctrine of the resurrection appears to have been thought of much more consequence among the primitive Christians than it is now! How is this? The apostles were continually insisting on it, and exciting the followers of God to diligence, obedience, and cheerfulness, through it. And their successors in the present day seldom mention it! So apostles preached; and so primitive Christians believed; so we preach, and so our hearers believe. There is not a doctrine in the Gospel on which more stress is laid; and there is not a doctrine in the present system of preaching which is treated with more neglect!

4. Though all men shall rise again: yet it will be in widely different circumstances: some will rise to glory and honour; others, to shame and everlasting contempt. Those alone who here received the salvation of God, and continued faithful unto death, shall have a resurrection to everlasting glory; not every believer, but every loving, obedient believer, shall enter into the Paradise of God; and have a body fashioned like unto his Lord's glorious body.

5. All glorified spirits will not have the same degree of glory. Two things will necessarily cause great difference: 1. The quantum of mind; and, 2. The quantum of grace.

(1.) It is idle to suppose that God has made all human souls with the same capacities: he has not. There is an infinite diversity; he who has the greatest mind, can know most, do most, suffer most, and enjoy most.

(2.) The quantum of grace will be another great cause of diversity in glory. He who received most of Christ here, and was most devoted to his service, shall have the nearest approach to him in his own kingdom. But all equally holy, and equally faithful souls, shall not have equal degrees of glory, for the glory will be according to the capacity of the mind, as well as the degree of grace and improvement. The greater the capacity, provided it be properly influenced by the grace of Christ, the greater will be the enjoyment.

6. That there will be great diversity in the states of glorified saints is the apostle's doctrine; and he illustrates it by the different degrees of splendour between the sun, moon, planets, and stars. This needs little application. There are some of the heavenly bodies that give heat, light, and splendour, as the sun; and are of the utmost service to the world: some that give light, and comparative splendour, without heat as the moon; and yet are of very great use to mankind: others again, which give a steady but not a splendid light, as the PLANETS; and are serviceable in their particular spheres; and, lastly, others which twinkle in their respective systems, as the stars of different magnitudes.

7. One star, says the apostle, differs from another in glory, i. e. in splendour, according to what is called their different magnitudes. I will state a remarkable fact: The northern and southern hemispheres of the heavens, have been divided into 102 constellations, and in these constellations professor Bode has set down the places of 17,240 stars; simple, nebulous, conglobate, and double.—The stars have been distinguished by their apparent magnitudes, or rather splendour, into stars of the first, second, third, fourth, fifth, sixth, seventh, eighth, &c. magnitudes: of these 17,240, only sixteen are, by astronomers in general, agreed to be of the first magnitude; all of which are set down in the following catalogue; with some of those that are remarkable in the second, third, fourth, fifth, and sixth magnitudes. The reader will observe, that the name of the constellation, or star, is first mentioned: the Greek letters, &c. are those by which they are distinguished on maps and globes; and they are, by astronomers, referred to by these letters and numbers.

OBSERVATIONS ON THE TABLE.—The first stars of the second magnitude in the above list, marked with an asterisk, are, by some writers, denominated of the first magnitude; and those named of the third, fourth, fifth, and sixth magnitudes, (the stars of the last-mentioned order being barely visible to the naked eye,) are such as the moon can occult, or make a near approach to; except the last sixteen, in the column of stars of the third magnitude, and the last twenty-nine in that of the sixth magnitude, which never set in the latitude of London. The stars Algal and a Ceti, are set down according to their brightest appearance; the former varying from the second to the fourth magnitude every two days, 20 hours, 48 minutes, 53 seconds, 18 thirds, and 25 fourths; and the latter, from the second to the seventh, and sometimes to the tenth, every 331 days, 10 hours, and 19 minutes. The stars of the first magnitude, Capellæ and Lyra, never set in the latitude of London; Achernar, Canopus, β in Argo, and a in the Cross and Centaur, never rise. Of the stars of the second magnitude, in the preceding list, Algal, in the head of Medusa, a in Perseus, the Two Pointers, the Dragon's tail, and the Swan's tail, never set; the head of the Phoenix, and the bright star in the Crane, never rise. The stars marked with an asterisk in the third column, are between the third and fourth magnitudes; and those in the last column, with the same mark, are between the fifth and sixth magnitudes. Stars fainter than those of the sixth magnitude, cannot be discerned without the help of a glass, and are therefore called telescopic. The 2^h, and 3^h, in Aquarius, are of this last description, both of the seventh magnitude, and such as the moon can occult.

8. This subject, as far as it concerns the present place, admits of few remarks or reflections. It has already been observed, that, of all the stars which our best astronomers have been able to describe and lay down in tables and maps, only sixteen are of the first magnitude; i. e. appear more luminous than any other stars in the firmament: some indeed increase the number to twenty-one, by taking in Castor and Pollux, the upper pointer, Altair in the Eagle, and β in the ship Argo, which I have placed among those of the second magnitude, because astronomers are not agreed on the subject, some ranking them with stars of the first magnitude; others, with stars of the second.

The reader is probably amazed at the paucity of large stars in the whole firmament of heaven! Will he permit me to carry his mind a little farther, and either stand astonished at, or deplore with me the fact, that, out of the millions of Christians in the vicinity and splendour of the eternal Sun of righteousness, how very few are found of the first order!

How very few can stand examination by the test laid down in the 13th chapter of this epistle! How very few love God with all their heart, soul, mind, and strength; and their neighbour as themselves! How few mature Christians are found in the church! How few are in all things living for eternity! How little light, how little heat, and how little influence and activity are to be found among them that bear the name of Christ! How few stars of the first magnitude will the Son of God have to deck the crown of his glory! Few are striving to excel in righteousness; and it seems to be a principal concern with many, to find out how little grace they may have, and yet escape hell! How little conformity to the will of God they may have, and yet get to heaven! In the fear of God I register this testimony, that I have perceived it to be the labour of many to lower the standard of Christianity; and to soften down, or explain away, those promises of God that himself has linked with duties; and because they know that they cannot be saved by their good works, they are contented to have no good works at all; and thus the necessity of Christian obedience, and Christian holiness, makes no prominent part of some modern creeds. Let all those who retain the apostolic doctrine, that the blood of Christ cleanseth from all sin in this life, press every believer to go on to perfection; and expect to be saved, while here below, into the fulness of the blessing of the Gospel of Jesus. To all such, my soul says, labour to show yourselves approved unto God; workmen that need not be ashamed; rightly dividing the word of truth; and may the pleasure of the Lord prosper in your hands!—Amen.

CHAPTER XVI.

The apostle exhorts the Corinthians to make a contribution for the relief of the poor Christians at Jerusalem; and directs, to the best mode of doing it, 1-4. Promises to pay them a visit after Pentecost, 5-9. Gives directions about the treatment of Timothy and Apollos, 10-12. And concerning watchfulness, &c. 13, 14. Commends the house of Stephanus, and expresses his satisfaction at the visit paid him by Stephanus, Fortunatus, and Achaicus, 15-18. Sends the salutations of different persons, 19-21. Shows the awful state of those who were enemies to Christ, 22. And concludes the epistle with the apostolical benediction, 23, 24. [A. M. 4090. A. D. 56. A. U. C. 809. An. Imp. Neronis Cæs. 3.]

NOW concerning "the collection for the saints, as I have given order to the churches of Galatia, even so do ye. 2. Upon the first day of the week let every one of you lay by him in store, as God hath prospered him, that there be no gatherings when I come."

Rev. A. 11: 29 & 24: 17. Rom. 15: 26. 2 Cor. 5: 4 & 9: 1, 12. Gal. 2: 10.—Acts 20: 7.

NOTES.—Verse 1. The collection for the saints! Hept—της λογίας, from λογος, to gather, or collect; translated by the Valdeute, de collectis, a contribution made by the rich for the relief of the poor. The Christians living at Jerusalem, we may naturally suppose, were greatly straitened; as the enmity of their countrymen to the Gospel of Christ led them to treat those who professed it, with cruelty, and spoil them of their goods. See Heb. x. 34, and Rom. x. 26; and see the note on the 27th verse of that chapter; and the apostle hereby teaches that it was the duty of one Christian congregation to help another when in distress.

2. Upon the first day of the week. The apostle prescribes the most convenient and proper method of making this contribution. 1. Every man was to feel it his duty to succour his brethren in distress. 2. He was to do this according to the ability which God gave him. 3. He was to do this at the conclusion of the week, when he had cast up his weekly earnings; and had seen how much God had prospered his labour. 4. He was then to bring it on the first day of the week, as is most likely, to the church or assembly, that it might be put in the common treasury. 5. We learn from this, that the weekly contribution could not be always the same, as each man was to lay by as God had prospered him; now some weeks he would gain more; others, less. 6. It appears from the whole, that the first day of the week, which is the Christian Sabbath, was the day on which their principal religious meetings were held in Corinth, and the churches of Galatia; and, consequently, in all other places where Christianity had prevailed. This is a strong argument for the keeping of the Christian Sabbath. 7. We may observe, that the apostle follows here the rule of the synagogue; it was a regular custom among the

3. And when I come, whomsoever ye shall approve by your letters, them will I send to bring your liberality unto Jerusalem.

4. And if it be meet that I go also, they shall go with me.

5. Now I will come unto you, when I shall pass through Macedonia: for I do pass through Macedonia.

Jews, to make their collections for the poor on the Sabbath-day, that they might not be without the necessities of life, and might not be prevented from coming to the synagogue. 8. For the purpose of making this provision, they had a purse which was called אֲרֻנְכִי שֶׁל חֵסֶד Arunki shel Hisekah, "The purse of the alms," or what we would term the poor's box. This is what the apostle seems to mean, when he says, Let him lay by him in store; let him put it in the alms purse, or in the poor's box. 9. It was a maxim also with them, that, if they found any money, they were not to put it in their private purse, but in that which belonged to the poor. In the Epistles Jews believed that, as salt seasoned food, so did alms riches; and that he who did not give alms of what he had, his riches should be dispersed. The moth would corrupt the bags, and the canker corrupt the money, unless the mass was sanctified by giving a part to the poor.

3. Whomsoever ye shall approve by your letters. Why should Paul require letters of approbation in behalf of certain persons, when he himself should be among them, and could have their characters virâ vocâ? It is probable that he refers here to the letters of recommendation which they had sent to him, while he was away; and he now promises, that, when he should come to Corinth, he would appoint these persons whom they had recommended, to carry the alms to Jerusalem. If δοκιμασθῆτε, be read ye shall have approved, as Ep. Pearce does, the difficulty will vanish.

Some MSS. and several Versions, join ἐν ἐπιστολαῖς by letters, to the following words; and read the verse thus: When I come, those whom ye shall approve, I will send with letters relating your liberality to Jerusalem. This seems most natural.

4. And if it be meet that I go also, they shall go with me.

6 And it may be that I will abide, yea, and winter with you, that ye may bring me on my journey whithersoever I go.
7 For I will not see you now by the way: but I trust to tarry awhile with you, if the Lord permit.
8 But I will tarry at Ephesus until pentecost.
9 For I a great door and effectual is opened unto me, and there are many adversaries.
10 Now, if Timothy come, see that he may be with you without fear; for he worketh the work of the Lord, as I also do.
11 No man therefore despise him: but conduct him forth in peace, that he may come unto me: for I look for him with the brethren.

my attendance, and it be judged proper for me to go to Jerusalem, I will take those persons for my companions. On the delicacy with which St. Paul managed the business of a collection for the poor, archdeacon Paley makes the following appropriate remarks:—

"The following observations will satisfy us concerning the purity of our apostle's conduct in the suspicious business of a pecuniary contribution.

"1st. He disclaims the having received any inspired authority for the directions which he is giving: 'I speak not by commandment, but by occasion of the forwardness of others, and to prove the sincerity of your love.' (2 Cor. chap. viii. 8.) Who, that had a sinister purpose to answer by the recommending of subscriptions, would thus distinguish, and thus lower the credit of his own recommendation?

"2d. Although he asserts the general right of Christian ministers to a maintenance from their ministry, yet he protests against the making use of this right in his own person: 'Even so hath the Lord ordained, that they which preach the Gospel, should live of the Gospel; but I have used none of these things; neither have I written these things that it should be so done unto me; for it were better for me to die, than that any man should make my glorying, i. e. my professions of disinterestedness, void.' (1 Cor. chap. ix. 14, 15.)

"3d. He repeatedly proposes that there should be associates with himself in the management of the public bounty; not colleagues of his own appointment, but persons elected for that purpose by the contributors themselves. 'And when I come, whosoever ye shall approve by your letters, them will I send to bring your liberality unto Jerusalem; and if it be meet that I go also, they shall go with me.' (1 Cor. chap. xvi. 3, 4.) And in the second epistle, what is here proposed, we find actually done, and done for the very purpose of guarding his character against any imputation that might be brought upon it, in the discharge of a pecuniary trust: 'And we have sent with him the brother, whose praise is in the Gospel throughout all the churches; and not that only, but who was also chosen of the churches to travel with us with this grace, (gift,) which is administered by us to the glory of the same Lord, and the declaration of your ready mind: avoiding this, that no man should blame us in this abundance which is administered by us; providing for things honest, not only in the sight of the Lord, but also in the sight of men?' i. e. not resting in the consciousness of our own integrity, but, in such a subject, carefully also to approve our integrity to the public judgment. (2 Cor. chap. viii. 18—21.)" Hora Pauline, p. 95.

5. I will come unto you when I shall pass through Macedonia. St. Paul was now at Ephesus; for, almost all allow, in opposition to the subscription, at the end of this epistle, that states it to have been written from Philippi, that it was written from Ephesus; and this is supported by many strong arguments; and the 5th verse here seems to put it past all question: I will tarry at Ephesus, i. e. I am in Ephesus, and here I purpose to remain until Pentecost. Though Macedonia was not in the direct way from Ephesus to Corinth, yet the apostle intended to make it in his way. And it was because it was not in the direct road, but lay at the upper end of the Ægean Sea, and very far out of his direct line, that he says, I do pass through Macedonia; I have purposed to go thither before I go to Corinth.

6. Yea, and winter with you. He purposed to stay till Pentecost, at Ephesus; after that, to go to Macedonia, and probably to spend the summer there; and to come in the autumn to Corinth, and there spend the winter.

That ye may bring me on my journey. That ye may furnish me with the means of travelling. It appears that, in most cases, the different churches paid his expenses to other churches: where this was not done, then he laboured at his business, to acquire the means of travelling.

7. I will not see you now by the way. From Ephesus to Corinth, was merely across the Ægean Sea, and comparatively a short passage.

8. I will tarry at Ephesus. And it is very probable that he did so; and that all these journeys were taken as he himself had projected. See on ver. 5.

9. A great door and effectual is opened. Ὅμοια γὰρ μοι ἀνεῳγμένη ἐστὶν καὶ ἐνεργεῖς, ἡ μεγάλη καὶ ἐνεργετικὴ θύρα ἐστὶν ἀνεῳγμένη ὑμῖν: that is, God has made a grand opening to me in those parts, which I perceive will require much labour; and besides, I shall have many adversaries to oppose me. So Bp. Pearce understands the word ἐνεργεῖς, not as signifying effectual, but as implying full of labour. Door, often signifies oc-

12 As touching our brother P Apollos, I greatly desired him to come unto you with the brethren; but his will was not at all to come at this time; but he will come when he shall have convenient time.

13 Watch ye, stand fast in the faith, quit you like men, be strong.

14 Let all your things be done with charity.

15 I beseech you, brethren, (ye know the house of Stephanas, that it is the first-fruits of Achaia, and that they have added themselves to the ministry of the saints;)

16 That ye submit yourselves unto such, and to every one that helpeth with us, and laboureth.

casion or opportunity; but here, the apostle may allude to the throwing open of the great doors of the Circus Maximus, before the chariot races began; and the many adversaries, may refer to the numerous competitors in those races.

God gave him a grand opportunity to preach the Gospel, but he was not to expect that either Satan, or wicked men, would leave him unmolested.

10. Now, if Timothy come. Of Timothy we have heard before, chap. iv. 17. And we learn from Acts xii. 22, that Paul sent him with Erastus, from Ephesus to Macedonia. It is evident, therefore, in opposition to the very exceptionable subscription at the end of this epistle, that the epistle itself was not sent by Timothy, as there stated.

That he may be with you without fear. That he may be treated well, and not perplexed and harassed with your divisions and jealousies; for, he worketh the work of the Lord; he is divinely appointed, as I also am.

11. Let no man despise him. Let none pretend to say that he has not full authority from God, to do the work of an evangelist.

But conduct him forth in peace. I believe with Bp. Pearce, that this clause should be translated and pointed thus: accompany him upon his journey, that he may come unto me in peace, (ἐν εἰρήνῃ,) in safety, as the word is used in Mark v. 31. and Luke vii. 50.

For I look for him with the brethren. Ἐκδεχόμενοι—ἀντὶ τῆς ἰδέας ἀδελφῶν. This clause should not be understood as if Paul was expecting certain brethren with Timothy; but it was the brethren that were with Paul, that were looking for him: I, with the brethren, are looking for him.

12. As touching our brother Apollos. It appears from this, that the brethren, of whom the apostle speaks in the preceding verse, were then with him at Ephesus: I, with the brethren, greatly desired him to come.

But his will was not at all to come. As there had been a faction set up in the name of Apollos, at Corinth; he probably thought it not prudent to go thither at this time, lest his presence might be the means of giving it either strength or countenance.

13. Watch ye. You have many enemies, be continually on your guard; be always circumspect;—1. Watch against evil.—2. Watch for opportunities to receive good.—3. Watch for opportunities to do good.—4. Watch over each other in love.—5. Watch that none may draw you aside from the belief and unity of the Gospel.

Stand fast in the faith. Hold, in conscientious credence, what you have already received as the truth of God: for it is the Gospel by which ye shall be saved: and by which ye are now put into a state of salvation: see chap. xv. 1, 2.

Quit you like men. Be not like children tossed to and fro with every wind of doctrine; let your understanding receive the truth; let your judgment determine on the absolute necessity of retaining it; and give up life rather than give up the testimony of God.

Be strong. Put forth all the vigour and energy which God has given you, in maintaining and propagating the truth, and your spiritual strength will increase by usage. The terms in this verse are all military: Watch ye, γρηγορεῖτε, watch, and be continually on your guard, lest you be surprised by your enemies; keep your scouts out, and all your sentinels at their posts, lest your enemies steal a march upon you. See that the place you are in be properly defended; and that each be alert to perform his duty.

Stand fast in the faith—Στηρεῖτε ἐν τῇ πίστει. Keep in your ranks; do not be disorderly; be determined to keep your ranks unbroken; keep close together. On your unity your preservation depends: if the enemy succeed in breaking your ranks, and dividing one part of this sacred army from another, your rout will be inevitable.

Quit yourselves like men—Ἀντιέταξθε. When you are attacked, do not flinch; maintain your ground; resist; press forward; strike home; keep compact; conquer.

Be strong—Καρτερεῖτε. If one company or division be opposed by too great a force of the enemy, strengthen that division, and maintain your position: if an attack is to be made on any part or intrenchment of the foe, summon up all your courage, sustain each other; fear not, for fear will enervate you. Your cause is good; it is The Faith, the religion of Jesus; he is your captain in the field; and, should you even die in the contest, the victory is yours.

14. Let all your things be done with charity. Let love to God, to man, and to one another, be the motive of all your conduct.

15. Ye know the house of Stephanas. Ye know that Stephanas and his family have addicted them to the help of the followers of Christ; they have been the chief instruments of supporting the work of God in Achaia; of which work they themselves have been the first-fruits. See on Rom. xvi. 5.

16. That ye submit yourselves unto such [That ye have due regard to them, and consider them as especial instruments in the hand of God, for countenancing and carrying on his great work. The submission here recommended does not imply obedience, but kind and courteous demeanour. Kypke vindicates this sense of the word from Eph. v. 21. 1 Pet. v. 5.]

17. I am glad of the coming of Stephanas [It was by these that the Corinthians had sent that letter to the apostle, to answer which was a main part of the design of St. Paul in this epistle.]

Fortunatus [This man is supposed to have survived St. Paul; and to be the same mentioned by Clement in his Epistle to the Corinthians, sect. 59, as the bearer of that epistle from Clement at Rome, to the Christians at Corinth.]

For that which was lacking on your part [This may either refer to additional communications, besides those contained in the letter which the Corinthians sent to the apostle; which additional circumstances were furnished by the persons above, and from whom St. Paul had a fuller account of their spiritual state than was contained in the letter; or to some contributions on their part, for the support of the apostle in his peregrinations and labours.]

18. They have refreshed my spirit and yours [They have been a means of contributing greatly to my comfort; and what contributes to my comfort, must increase yours. This is probably the meaning of the apostle.]

Therefore acknowledge ye them [Pay them particular respect; and let all be held in esteem in proportion to their work and usefulness. When this is made the rule of respect and esteem, then foolish and capricious attachments will have no place. A man will then be honoured in proportion to his merit; and his merit will be estimated by his usefulness among men.]

19. The churches of Asia salute you i. e. The churches in Asia Minor. Ephesus was in this Asia, and it is clear from this that the apostle was not at Philippi; had he been at Philippi, as the subscription states, he would have said, the churches of Macedonia, not the churches of Asia, salute you.

How these places lay in reference to each other, the reader will at once perceive, by consulting the Map in Acts.

Aquila and Priscilla [Of these eminent persons we have heard before. See Acts xviii. 2, 18, 26, and Rom. xvi. 3.]

With the church that is in their house [That is, the company of believers who generally worshipped there. There were no churches or chapels at that time built; and the assemblies of Christians were necessarily held in private houses. It appears that Aquila and Priscilla devoted their house to this purpose. The house of Philemon was of the same kind, Philem. ver. 2. So was likewise the house of Nymphas, Coloss. iv. 15. See the note on Rom. xvi. 5.]

20. With a holy kiss [The ancient patriarchs, and the Jews in general, were accustomed to kiss each other whenever they met; and this was a token of friendship and peace with them, as shaking of hands is with us. The primitive Christians naturally followed this example of the Jews. See on Rom. xvi. 16.]

21. The salutation of me Paul with mine own hand [This should be rendered, The salutation is written by the hand of me Paul. * ὑγρασθαι, is written, being understood. It is very likely that the apostle wrote this and the following verses with his own hand. The rest, though dictated by him, was written by an amanuensis.]

22. If any man love not the Lord Jesus [This is directed immediately against the Jews.—From chap. xii. 3, we find that the Jews who pretended to be under the Spirit and teaching of God, called Jesus, αἰνέται, or accursed; i. e. a person who should be devoted to destruction; see the note there. In this place, the apostle reverts the whole upon themselves, and says, If any man love not the Lord Jesus Christ, let him be accursed, accursed, and devoted to destruction. This is not said in the way of a wish or imprecation, but as a prediction of what would certainly come upon them if they did not repent; and, of what did come on them because they did not repent; but continued to hate and execrate the Lord Jesus: and of what still lies upon them, because they continue to hate and execrate the Redeemer of the world. It is generally allowed, that the apostle refers here to some of the modes of excommunication among the Jews, of which there were three, viz.

1. Niddui, נידוי which signified a simple separation, or exclusion of a man from the synagogue, and from his wife and family, for thirty days.

2. Cherem, כרם which was inflicted on him who had borne the Niddui; and who had not, in the thirty days, made proper compensation, in order to be reconciled to the synagogue. This was inflicted with dire execrations, which he was informed must all come upon him if he did not repent; but the Cherem always supposed place for repentance.

3. Shammatha, שַׁמְטָה: this was the dirtest of all, and cut off all hope of reconciliation and repentance; after which, the man was neither reconcilable to the synagogue, nor acknowledged as belonging even to the Jewish nation. See these different forms in Buxtorf's Rabbinical and Talmudical Lexicon, under their respective words.

In the lexicon just now quoted, Buxtorf gives a form of the Cherem, which he says he copied from an ancient Hebrew MS. Of this awful piece I shall lay a translation before the reader.

By the sentence of the Lord of lords, let P. the son of P. be anathematized in both houses of judgment, the superior and inferior. Let him be anathematized among the highest saints; let him be anathematized among the Seraphim and Ophuntim; and, finally, let him be anathematized by all the congregations of the great and small! Let great and continued plagues rest upon him: with great and horrible diseases! Let his house be the habitation of dragons! and let his constellation be darkened in the clouds! Let him be for indignation and wrath, and burning! Let his carcass be thrown to the wild beasts and serpents! Let his enemies, and his adversaries, triumph over him! Let his silver and gold be given to others! And let all his children be exposed at the doors of their enemies! And let posterity be astonished at his day! Let him be accursed by the mouth of Addiriron and Achariel; by the mouth of Sandalphon and Hadraniel; by the mouth of Anissiel and Patchiel; by the mouth of Seraphiel and Saganassiel; by the mouth of Michael and Gabriel; by the mouth of Raphael and Meskariel! Let him be anathematized by the mouth of Zafzarif, and by the mouth of Hafarif, who is the great God; and by the mouth of the seventy names of the Supreme King; and, lastly, by the mouth of Tsootuk, the great chancellor.

Let him be swallowed up like Korah and his companions! Let his soul depart with fear and terror! Let the chiding of the Lord slay him! Let him be confounded as Achiophel was in his counsel! Let the leprosy of Gehazi be his leprosy! and let there be no resurrection of his ruins! In the sepulchres of the children of Israel, let him not be buried! Let his wife be given to another; and let others bow themselves upon her in his death! In this anathema, let P. the son of P. be; and let this be his inheritance! But upon me, and upon all Israel, may God extend his peace and blessing. Amen." To this is added the 18th, 19th, and 20th verses of Deut. xxix. which the reader may read at his leisure. There are many things in this Cherem which require a comment, but this is not the place.

Anathema, Maranatha. [Let him be accursed; our Lord cometh.] I cannot see the reason why these words were left untranslated. The former is Greek, and has been already explained; the latter is Syriac מָרָנָא maran atha, our Lord is coming; i. e. to execute the judgment denounced. Does not the apostle refer to the last verse in the Bible? Let I come and smite the land, (כִּרְכַּם כֶּרֶם,) with a curse? And does he not intimate that the Lord was coming to smite the Jewish land with that curse? Which took place a very few years after, and continues on that gainsaying and rebellious people to the present day. What the apostle has said, was prophetic, and indicative of what was about to happen to that people. God was then coming to inflict punishment upon them: He came; and they were broken and dispersed.

23. The grace of our Lord Jesus [May the favour, influence, mercy, and salvation procured by Jesus Christ, be with you! prevail amongst you, rule in you, and be exhibited by you, in your life and conversation.] Amen.

24. My love be with you all in Christ Jesus [It appears exceedingly strange, that the apostle should say, My love be with you; as he said, The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you. We can easily conceive what the latter means: the grace of Christ is an active, powerful, saving principle; it is essential to the existence of the Christian church, that this grace should be ever with it; and, without this grace, no individual can be saved. But what could the love of the apostle do with them? Has it any meaning? I confess I can see none, unless it be intended to say, I love you; or, I continue to love you. The pronoun you, my, is wanting in the Codex Alexandrinus, and in 74 an excellent MS. in the Vatican, written about the eleventh century. This will help us to a better sense; for it either says, May love prevail among you! or, supplying the word Our, God, as in 2 Cor. xiii. 13. The love of God be with you! This gives a sound sense; for the love of God is as much a principle of light, life and salvation, as the grace of Christ. And probably MY, my, is a corruption for ΘΕΟΥ, God. And this is the more likely, because he uses this very form in the conclusion of this second epistle to this church, as we have seen above. I conclude, therefore, that the reading of the two MSS above, is the true reading; or else that you is a corruption for God, and that the verse should be read thus, The love of God be with you all, in (or by) Christ Jesus.

[Anon.] So be it: but this word is wanting in most MSS. of reputation; and certainly was not written by the apostle.

1. The subscription to this epistle, in our common English Bibles, and in the common editions of the Greek text, is palpably absurd. That it was not written from Philippi, but from Ephesus, see the notes on ver. 5, 8, 10, and 19. and that it could not be "written by Silvanus, and Fortunatus, and Achaicus, and Timotheus;" needs no proof. But this subscription is wanting in all the best MSS. and Versions, either in whole or in part. In some, it is simply said, The first to the Corinthians; in others, The first to the Corinthians is finished;—written from Ephesus;—from Asia;—from Ephesus of Asia;—from Philippi of Macedonia;—from Philippi of Macedonia, and sent by the hands of Timothy, so the SRIAC. Written from Ephesus, by Stephanas and Fortunatus, Coptic. Written from Philippi by Stephanas, and Fortunatus, and Achaicus, SLAVONIC. Written, &c. by Paul and Sosthenes. Written from the city of Philippi, and sent by Stephanas, and Fortunatus, and Achaicus, and Timotheus, ARABIC. There are other variations which need not be set down. Those only appear to be correct that state the epistle to have been sent from Ephesus; of which there can be no reasonable doubt.

2. In closing my observations on this epistle, I feel it necessary, once more, to call the reader's attention to the many difficulties contained in it, as an excuse for any thing he may find handled in an unsatisfactory manner. Perhaps it will be of little consequence for him to know, that this epistle has cost me more labour and difficulty than any portion of the same quantity which I have yet passed over, either in the Old or New Testament.

3. It has been already noticed, that the church at Corinth, had written to the apostle for advice, direction, and information on a variety of points; and that this epistle is in the main an answer to the epistle from Corinth. Had we that epistle, all difficulty would vanish in this: but, as the apostle only refers to their questions, by mere catch words from their letter, it is impossible to know, in all cases, what the questions contained; to them the answers would be clear, because they knew on what they had consulted him: to us the answers must be as they really are, in some cases, necessarily obscure, because we know not the whole bearing and circumstances of the questions. Indeed the epistle contains more local matter, and more matter of private application, than any other in the New Testament: and there is in it, on the whole, less matter for general use, than in most other parts of the sacred writings. Yet it is both very curious and useful; it gives insight into several customs, and not a few forms of speech, and matters relative to the discipline of the primitive church, which we can find nowhere else; and it reads a very awful lesson to those who disturb the peace of society, make schisms in the church of Christ; and endeavour to set up one preacher at the expense of another.

4. It shows us also, how many improper things may, in a state of ignorance, or Christian infancy, be consistent with a sincere belief in the Gospel of Christ; and a conscientious and zealous attachment to it.

5. In different parts of the epistle we find the apostle speaking very highly of the knowledge of this church; and its various gifts and endowments. How then can we say that its blemishes arose from ignorance? I answer that, certainly only a few of the people of Corinth could possess those eminent spiritual qualifications: because the things that are attributed to this church, in other places, are utterly inconsistent with that state of grace for which the apostle, in other places, appears to give them credit, the solution of the difficulty is this: there were in the church at Corinth, many highly gifted, and very gracious people; there were also there many more, which, though they might have been partakers of some extraordinary gifts, had very little of that religion which the apostle describes in the thirteenth chapter of this epistle.

6. Besides, we must not suppose that eminent endowments necessarily imply gracious dispositions. A man may have much light, and little love: he may be very wise in secular matters; and know but little of himself, and less of his God. There is as truly a learned ignorance, as there is a refined and useful learning. One of our old writers said, "Knowledge that is not applying, is only like a candle which a man holds to light himself to hell." The Corinthians abounded in knowledge, and science, and eloquence, and various extraordinary gifts; but, in many cases, distinctly enough marked in this epistle, they were grossly ignorant of the genius and design of the Gospel. Many, since their time, have put words and observances in place of the weightier matters of the law; and the spirit of the Gospel. The apostle has taken great pains to correct these abuses among the Corinthians, and to insist on that great, unchangeable, and eternal truth, that love to God and man, filling the heart, hallowing the passions, regulating the affections, and producing universal benevolence and beneficence, is the fulfilling of all law; and that all professions, knowledge, gifts, &c. without this, are absolutely useless. And did this epistle contain no more than what is found in the 13th chapter, yet that would be an unparalleled monument of the apostle's deep acquaintance with God; and an invaluable record of the sum and substance of the Gospel, left by God's mercy to the church; as a touch-stone for the trial of creeds, confessions of faith, and ritual observances, to the end of the world.

7. I have often had occasion to note, that the whole epistle refers so much to Jewish affairs, customs, forms of speech, ceremonies, &c. that it necessarily supposes the people to have been well acquainted with them: from this I infer, that a great majority of the Christian church at Corinth, was composed of converted Jews; and it is likely that this was the case in all the churches of Asia Minor and Greece. Many Gentiles were undoubtedly brought to the knowledge of the truth; but the chief converts were from among the Hellenistic Jews. In many respects, Jewish phraseology prevails more in this epistle than even in that to the Romans. Without attention to this, it would be impossible to make any consistent sense out of the 15th chapter, where the apostle treats so largely on the doctrine of the resurrection; as almost every form and turn of expression, is Jewish; and we must know what ideas they attached to such words and forms of speech, in order to enter into the spirit of the apostle's meaning. His ignorance of this, caused a late eminent writer and philosopher, to charge the apostle with "inconsistent reasoning." Had he understood the apostle's language, he would not have said so: and, as he did not understand it, he should have said nothing. A man may be qualified to make great and useful discoveries in the doctrine of gases, or factitious airs: who may be ill-qualified to elucidate the meaning of the Holy Spirit.

8. Before I finish my concluding observations on this epistle, I must beg leave to call the reader's attention once more, to the concluding words of the apostle, If any man love not the Lord Jesus Christ, let him be Anathema, Maran-atha. These words have been as often misunderstood, and perhaps as dangerously applied, as another passage in this epistle, He that eateth and drinketh unworthily, eateth and drinketh damnation to himself, &c. Though I am ready to grant that the bad Christian, i. e. the man who professes Christianity, and yet lives under the power of sin, is in a very dangerous state; and that he, who while he credits Christianity, is undecided as to the public part he should take in its profession and practice, is putting his eternal interests to the most awful hazard; yet I must also grant, that the meaning generally put on the words in question, is not correct. The words apply to the gainsaying and blasphemous Jews; to those who were calling Christ Anathema, or accursed; and cannot be applied to any person who respects his name, or confides in him for his salvation: much less do they apply to him, who finds through the yet prevalence of evil in his heart, and the power of temptation, that he has little, and, to his own apprehension, no love to the Lord Jesus. The Anathema of the apostle is denounced against him only who gives the Anathema to Christ. Of this, not one of my readers is capable. It is the duty of all to love Him with an undivided heart; if any be not yet able to do it, let him not be discouraged; if the Lord cometh to execute judgment on him who calleth Jesus accursed, he cometh also to fulfil the desire of them who fear him; to make them partake of the Divine nature, and so cleanse their hearts by the inspiration of his Holy Spirit, that they shall perfectly love him, and worthily magnify his name.

INTRODUCTION TO THE SECOND EPISTLE TO THE CORINTHIANS.

For an account of Corinth, the reader is referred to the Preface to the first epistle; where every thing relative to the geographical, political, and religious situation of that celebrated city, as far as such subjects are proper for a work of this kind, is amply detailed.

As I have borrowed from the learned and accurate Archbishop Paley, several arguments to prove the authenticity of the first epistle; and the same able writer having bestowed equal pains on the second, I shall make those extracts which bear particularly on the subject; referring my reader to the work itself, for ample information.

SECTION I.—I will not say that it is impossible, having seen the First Epistle to the Corinthians, to construct a second with ostensible allusions to the first; or that it is impossible that both should be fabricated, so as to carry on an order and continuation of story, by successive references to the same events. But I say, that this, in either case, must be the effect of craft and design. Whereas, whoever examines the allusions to the former epistle which he finds in this, whilst he will acknowledge them to be such as would rise spontaneously to the hand of the writer, from the very subject of the correspondence, and the situation of the corresponding parties, supposing these to be real, will give no particle of reason to suspect, either that the clauses containing these allusions were insertions for the purpose, or that the several transactions of the Corinthian church were feigned, in order to form a train of narrative, or to support the appearance of connexion between the two epistles.

1. In the first epistle St. Paul announces his intention of passing through Macedonia, in his way to Corinth; "I will come to you when I shall pass through Macedonia." In the second epistle, we find him arrived in Macedonia, and about to pursue his journey to Corinth. But observe the manner in which this is made to appear: "I know the forwardness of your mind, for which I boast of you to them of Macedonia, that Achaia was ready a year ago, and your zeal hath provoked very many; yet have I sent the brethren, lest our boasting of you should be in vain in this behalf; that, as I said, ye may be ready; lest, haply, if they of Macedonia come with me, and find you unprepared, we (that we say not you) be ashamed in this same confident boasting." (Chap. ix. 2, 3, 4.) St. Paul's being in Macedonia at the time of writing the epistle, is, in this passage, inferred only from his saying that he had boasted to the Macedonians of the alacrity of his Achaian converts; and the fear which he expresses, lest, if any of the Macedonian Christians should come with him unto Achaia, they should find his boasting unwarranted by the event. The business of the contribution is the sole cause of mentioning Macedonia at all. Will it be insinuated that this passage was framed merely to state that St. Paul was now in Macedonia; and, by that statement, to produce an apparent agreement with the purpose of visiting Macedonia, notified in the first epistle? Or will it be thought probable, that, if a sophist had meant to place St. Paul in Macedonia, for the sake of giving countenance to his forgery, he would have done it in so oblique a manner as through the medium of a contribution? The same thing may be observed of another text in the epistle, in which the name of Macedonia occurs: "Furthermore, when I came to Troas to preach the Gospel, and a door was opened unto me of the Lord, I had no rest in my spirit, because I found not Titus, my brother; but taking my leave of them, I went from thence unto Macedonia." I mean that it may be observed of this passage also, that there is a reason for mentioning Macedonia, entirely distinct from the purpose of showing St. Paul to be there. The text, however, in which it is most strongly implied that St. Paul wrote the present epistle from Macedonia, is found in the fourth, fifth, and sixth verses of the seventh chapter. Yet even here, I think, no one will contend, that St. Paul's coming to Macedonia, or being in Macedonia, was the principal thing intended to be told, or that the telling of it, indeed, was any part of the intention with which the text was written; or that the mention even of the name of Macedonia was not purely incidental, in the description of those tumultuous sorrows with which the writer's mind had been lately agitated, and from which he was relieved by the coming of Titus. The first five verses of the eighth chapter, which commend the liberality of the Macedonian churches, do not, in my opinion, but they will be thought Paul to have been at Macedonia at the time of writing the epistle.

2. In the first epistle, St. Paul denounces a severe censure against an incestuous marriage, which had taken place amongst the Corinthian converts, with the connivance, not to say with the approbation, of the church; and enjoins the church to purge itself of this scandal, by expelling the offender from its society, (Chap. v. 1-5.) In the second epistle, we find this sentence executed, and the offender to be so affected with the punishment, that St. Paul now intercedes for his restoration. "Sufficient to such a man is this punishment, which was inflicted of many; so that, contrariwise, ye ought rather to forgive him and comfort him, lest perhaps such a one should be swallowed up with overmuch sorrow: wherefore, I beseech you, that ye would confirm your love towards him." (2 Cor. chap. ii. 7, 8.) Is this whole business feigned for the sake of carrying on a continuation of story through the two epistles? The church also, no less than the offender, was brought by St. Paul's reproof to a deep sense of the impropriety of their conduct. Their penitence and their respect to his authority, were, as might be expected, exceedingly grateful to St. Paul: "He vere comforted not by Titus's coming only, but by the consolation where with he was comforted in you, when he told us your earnest desire, your mourning, your fervent mind towards me, so that I rejoiced the more; for, though I made you sorry with a letter, I do not repent, though I did repent: for I perceive that the same epistle made you sorry, though it were but for a season. Now I rejoice, not that ye were made sorry, but that ye sorrowed to repentance; for ye were made sorry after a godly manner, that ye might receive damage by us in nothing." (Chap. vii. 7-9.) That this passage is to be referred to the incestuous marriage, is proved by the twelfth verse of the same chapter: "Though I wrote unto you, I did it not for his cause that had done the wrong, nor for his cause that suffered wrong; but that our care for you, in the sight of God, might appear unto you." There were, it is true, various topics of blame noticed in the first epistle; but there was none, except this of the incestuous marriage, which could be called a transaction between private parties, or of which it could be said that one particular person had "done the wrong," and another particular person "had suffered it." Could all this be without foundation?

3. In the sixteenth chapter of the first epistle, a collection for the saints is recommended to be set forwards at Corinth, (Chap. xvi. 1.) In the ninth chapter of the second epistle, such a collection is spoken of, as in readiness to be received: "As touching the ministering to the saints, it is superfluous for me to write to you, for I know the forwardness of your mind, for which I boast of you to them of Macedonia, that Achaia was ready a year ago, and your zeal hath provoked very many." (Chap. ix. 1, 2.) This is such a continuation of the transaction as might be expected; or, possibly, it will be said, as might easily be counterfeited; but there is a circumstance of nicety in the agreement between the two epistles, which, I am convinced, the author of a forgery would not have hit upon, or which, if he had hit upon it, he would have set forth with more clearness. The second epistle speaks of the Corinthians as having begun this eleemosynary business a year before: "This is expedient for you, who have begun before, not only to do, but also to be forward a year ago." (Chap. viii. 10.) "I boast of you to them of Macedonia, that Achaia was ready a year ago." (Chap. ix. 2.) From these texts it is evident, that something had been done in the business a year before. It appears, however, from other texts in the epistle, that the contribution was not yet collected or paid; for brethren were sent from St. Paul to Corinth, "to make up their bounty." (Chap. ix. 5.) They are urged to "perform the doing of it." (Chap. viii. 11.) And every man was exhorted to give as he purposed in his heart." (Chap. ix. 7.) The contribution, therefore, as represented in our present epistle, was in readiness, yet not received from the contributors; was begun, was forward long before, yet not hitherto collected. Now this representation agrees with one, and only with one, supposition, namely, that every man had laid by in store, had already provided the fund, from which he was afterward to contribute—the very case which the first epistle authorises us to suppose to have existed; for in that epistle St. Paul had charged the Corinthians "upon the first day of the week, every one of you, to lay by in store as God had prospered him." (1 Cor. chap. xvi. 2.)

SECTION II.—In comparing the Second Epistle to the Corinthians with the Acts of the Apostles, we are soon brought to observe, not only that there exists no vestige either of the epistle having been taken from the history, or the history from the epistle; but also that there appears in the contents of the epistle, positive evidence that neither was borrowed from the other. Titus, who bears a conspicuous part in the epistle, is not mentioned in the Acts of the Apostles at all. St. Paul's sufferings, enumerated, chap. xi. 24. "Of the Jews five times received I forty stripes, save one; thrice was I beaten with rods; once was I stoned; thrice I suffered shipwreck; a night and a day I have been in the deep," cannot be made out from his history as delivered in the Acts; nor would this account have been given by a writer, who either drew his knowledge of St. Paul from that history, or who was careful to preserve a conformity with it. The account in the epistle of St. Paul's escape from Damascus, though agreeing in the main fact with the account of the same transaction in the Acts, is related with such difference of circumstance, as renders it utterly improbable that one should be derived from the other. The two accounts, placed by the side of each other, stand as follows.

2 Cor. chap. xi. 32, 33. In Damascus, the governor under Aretas the king, kept the city by the gates, with a garrison, desirous to apprehend me; and through a window, in a basket, was I let down by the wall, and escaped his hands.	Acts, chap. ix. 23-25. And after many days were fulfilled, the Jews took counsel to kill him; but their laying in wait was known of Saul, and they watched the gates day and night to kill him: then the disciples took him by night, and let him down by the wall in a basket.

Now if we be satisfied in general concerning these two ancient writings, that the one was not known to the writer of the other, or not consulted by him; then the accordances which may be pointed out between them, will admit of no solution so probable, as the attributing of them to truth and reality, as to their common foundation.

SECTION III.—The opening of this epistle exhibits a connexion with the history, which alone would satisfy my mind that the epistle was written by St. Paul, and by St. Paul in the situation in which the history places him. Let it be remembered, that in the nineteenth chapter of the Acts, St. Paul is represented as driven away from Ephesus; or as leaving, however, Ephesus, in consequence of an uproar in that city, excited by some interested adversaries of the new religion. "Great is Diana of the Ephesians"—and after the uproar was ceased, Paul called unto him the disciples, and embraced them, and departed for to go into Macedonia." When he was arrived in Macedonia, he wrote the Second Epistle to the Corinthians, which is now before us; and he begins his epistle in this wise: "Blessed be God, even the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of mercies, and the God of all comfort, who comforteth us in all our tribulation, that we may be able to comfort them which are in any trouble, by the comfort wherewith we ourselves are comforted of God, &c. For we would not, brethren, have you ignorant of our trouble which came to us in Asia, that we were pressed out of measure, above strength, inasmuch that we despaired even of life but we had the sentence of death in ourselves, that we should not trust in ourselves, but in God, which raised the dead, and delivered us from so great a death, and doth deliver; in whom we trust that he will yet deliver us." Nothing could be more expressive of the circumstances in which the history describes St. Paul to have been, at the time when the epistle purports to be written; or rather, nothing could be more expressive of the sensations arising from these circumstances, than this passage. It is the calm recollection of a mind emerged from the confusion of instant danger. It is that devotion and solemnity of thought, which follows a recent deliverance. There is just enough of particularity in the passage to show that it is to be referred to the tumult at Ephesus; "We would not, brethren, have you ignorant of our trouble which came to us in Asia." And there is nothing more; no mention of Demetrius, or of the seizure of St. Paul's friends, of the interference of the town-clerk, of the occasion or nature of the danger which St. Paul had escaped, or even of the city where it happened; in a word, no recital from which a suspicion could be conceived, either that the author of the epistle had made use of the narrative in the Acts; or, on the other hand, that he had sketched the outline, which the narrative in the Acts only filled up. That the forger of an epistle, under the name of St. Paul, should borrow circumstances from a history of St. Paul then extant; or that the author of a history of St. Paul should gather materials from letters bearing St. Paul's name, may be credited; but I cannot believe that any forger whatever should fall upon an expedient so refined, as to exhibit sentiments adapted to a situation, and to leave his readers to seek out that situation from the history; still less that the author of a history should go about to frame facts and circumstances, fitted to supply the sentiments which he found in the letter.

SECTION IV.—It has already been remarked, that St. Paul's original intention was to have visited Corinth in his way to Macedonia: "I was minded to come unto you before, and to pass by you into Macedonia." (2 Cor. chap. i. 15, 16.) It has also been remarked, that he changed his intention, and ultimately resolved upon going through Macedonia first. Now upon this head there exists a circumstance of correspondence between our epistle and the history, which is not very obvious to the reader's observation; but which, when observed, will be found, I think, close and exact. Which circumstance is this: that though the change of St. Paul's intention be expressly mentioned only in the second epistle; yet it appears, both from the history and from this second epistle, that the change had taken place before the writing of the first epistle; that it appears however from neither, otherwise than by an inference, unnoted perhaps by almost every one who does not sit down professedly to the examination.

First, then, how does this point appear from the history? In the nineteenth chapter of the Acts, and the twenty-first verse, we are told, that "Paul purposed, in the spirit, when he had passed through Macedonia and Achaia, to go to Jerusalem. So he sent into Macedonia two of them that ministered unto him, Timothy and Erastus; but he himself stayed in Asia for a season." A short time after this, and evidently in pursuance of the same intention, we find, (chap. xx. 1, 2,) that "Paul departed from Ephesus for to go into Macedonia; and that, when he had gone over those parts, he came into Greece." The resolution, therefore, of passing first through Macedonia, and from thence into Greece, was formed by St. Paul previously to the sending away of Timothy. The order in which the two countries are mentioned, shows the direction of his intended route, "when he had passed through Macedonia and Achaia." Timothy and Erastus, who were to precede him in his progress, were sent by him from Ephesus into Macedonia. He himself a short time afterward, and, as hath been observed, evidently in continuation and pursuance of the same design, "departed for to go into Macedonia." If he had ever, therefore, entertained a different plan of his journey, which is not hinted in the history, he must have changed that plan before this time. But, from the 17th verse of the fourth chapter of the First Epistle to the Corinthians, we discover, that Timothy had been sent away from Ephesus before that epistle was written: "For this cause have I sent unto you Timothy, who is my beloved son." The change, therefore, of St. Paul's resolution, which was prior to the sending away of Timothy, was necessarily prior to the writing of the First Epistle to the Corinthians.

This stands the order of dates, as collected from the history, compared with the first epistle. Now let us inquire, secondly, how this matter is represented in the epistle before us. In the sixteenth verse of the first chapter of this epistle, St. Paul speaks of the intention which he had once entertained of visiting Achaia, in his way to Macedonia: "In this confidence I was minded to come unto you before, that ye might have a second benefit; and to pass by you into Macedonia." After protesting, in the seventeenth verse, against any evil construction that might be put upon his laying aside of this intention, in the twenty-third verse he discloses the cause of it: "Moreover I call God for a record upon my soul, that, to spare you, I came not as yet unto Corinth." And then he proceeds as follows: "But I determined this with myself, that I would not come again to you in heaviness; for, if I make you sorry, who is he then that maketh me glad, but the same which is made sorry by me? And I verily write this same unto you, lest when I came I should have sorrow from them of whom I ought to rejoice; having confidence in you all, that my joy is the joy of you all; for out of much affliction and anguish of heart, I wrote unto you with many tears; not that ye should be grieved, but that ye might know the love which I have more abundantly unto you; but if any have caused grief, he hath not grieved me but in part, that I may not over-charge you all. Sufficient to such a man is this punishment, which was inflicted of many." In this quotation, let the reader first direct his attention to the clause marked by Italics, "and I wrote this same unto you," and let him consider whether from the context, and from the structure of the whole passage, it be not evident that this writing was after St. Paul had "determined with himself, that he would not come again to them in heaviness?" whether, indeed, it was not in consequence of this determination, or at least with this determination upon his mind? And, in the next place, let him consider, whether the sentence, "I determined this with myself that I would not come again to you in heaviness," do not plainly refer to that postponing of his visit, to which he had alluded in the verse but one before, when he said, "I call God for a record upon my soul, that, to spare you, I came not as yet unto Corinth;" and whether this be not the visit of which he speaks in the sixteenth verse, wherein he informs the Corinthians, "that he had been minded to pass by them into Macedonia;" but that, for reasons which argued no levity or fickleness in his disposition, he had been compelled to change his purpose. If this be so, then it follows that the writing here mentioned was posterior to the change of his intention. The only question, therefore, that remains, will be, whether this writing relate to the letter which we now have under the title of the First Epistle to the Corinthians, or to some other letter not extant? And upon this question, I think Mr. Locke's observation decisive; namely, that the second clause marked in the quotation by Italics, "I wrote unto you with many tears," and the first clause so marked, "I wrote this same unto you," belong to one writing, whatever that was; and that the second clause goes on to advert to a circumstance which is found in our present First Epistle to the Corinthians; namely, the ease and punishment of the incestuous person. Upon the whole, then, we see, that it is capable of being inferred, from St. Paul's own words, in the long extract which we have quoted, that the First Epistle to the Corinthians was written after St. Paul had determined to postpone his journey to Corinth; in other words, that the change of his purpose with respect to the course of his journey, though expressly mentioned only in the second epistle, had taken place before the writing of the first; the point which we made out to be implied in the history, by the order of the events there recorded, and the allusions to those events in the first epistle. Now this is a species of congruity of all others the most to be relied upon. It is not an agreement between two accounts of the same transaction, or between different statements of the same fact, for the fact is not stated; nothing that can be called an account is given; but it is the junction of two conclusions, deduced from independent sources, and deducible only by investigation and comparison.

SECTION V.—But if St. Paul had changed his purpose before the writing of the first epistle, why did he defer explaining himself to the Corinthians, concerning the reason of that change, until he wrote the second? This is a very fair question; and we are able, I think, to return to it a satisfactory answer. The real cause, and the cause at length assigned by St. Paul for postponing his visit to Corinth, and not travelling by the route which he had at first designed, was the disorderly state of the Corinthian church at the time, and the painful severities which he should have found himself obliged to exercise, if he had come amongst them during the existence of these irregularities. He was willing therefore to try, before he came in person, what a letter of authoritative exhortation would do amongst them, and to leave time for the operation of the experiment. That was his scheme in writing the first epistle. But it was not for him to acquaint them with the scheme. After the epistle had produced its effect, (and to the utmost extent, as it should seem, of the apostle's hopes;) when he had wrought in them a deep sense of their fault, and an almost passionate solicitude to restore themselves to the approbation of their teacher; when Titus, (chap. vii. 6, 7, 11,) had brought him intelligence "of their earnest desire, their mourning, their fervent mind towards him, of their sorrow and their penitence; what carefulness, what clearing of themselves, what indignation, what fear, what vehement desire, what zeal, what revenge," his letter, and the general concern occasioned by it, had excited amongst them; he then opens himself fully upon the subject. The affectionate mind of the apostle is touched by this return of zeal and duty. He tells them that he did not visit them at the time proposed, lest their meeting should have been attended with mutual grief; and with grief to him embittered by the reflection, that he was giving pain to those, from whom alone he could receive comfort: "I determined this with myself, that I would not come again to you in heaviness; for, if I make you sorry, who is he that maketh me glad, but the same which is made sorry by me?" (chap. i. 1, 2,) that he had written his former epistle to warn them beforehand of their fault, "lest when he came he should have sorrow of them of whom he ought to rejoice;" (chap. ii. 3,) that he had the farther view, though perhaps unperceived by them, of making an experiment of their fidelity, "to know the proof of them, whether they are obedient in all things," (chap. ii. 9.) This full discovery of his motive came very naturally from the apostle, after he had seen the success of his measures, but would not have been a seasonable communication before. The whole composes a train of sentiment and of conduct resulting from real situation, and from real circumstance; and as remote as possible from fiction or imposture.

SECTION VI.—Chap. xi. 9. "When I was present with you and wanted, I was chargeable to no man; for that which was lacking to me, the brethren which came from Macedonia supplied." The principal fact set forth in this passage, the arrival at Corinth of brethren from Macedonia during St. Paul's first residence in that city, is explicitly recorded, Acts, chap. xviii. 1, 5. "After these things Paul departed from Athens, and came to Corinth. And when Silas and Timotheus were come from Macedonia, Paul was pressed in spirit, and testified to the Jews that Jesus was Christ."

SECTION VII.—The above quotation from the Acts proves that Silas and Timotheus were assisting to St. Paul in preaching the Gospel at Corinth. With which corresponds the words of the epistle (chap. i. 19.) "For the Son of God, Jesus Christ, who was preached among you by us, even by me, and Silvanus, and Timotheus, was not yea and nay, but in him was yea." I do admit that the correspondence, considered by itself, is too direct and obvious; and that an impostor, with the history before him, might, and probably would, produce agreements of the same kind. But let it be remembered, that this reference is found in a writing, which, from many discrepancies, and especially from those noted SECT. II. we may conclude, was not composed by any one who had consulted, and who pursued the history. Some observation also arises, upon the variation of the name. We read Silas in the Acts, Silvanus in the epistle. The similitude of these two names, if they were the names of different persons, is greater than could easily have proceeded from accident; I mean that it is not probable, that two persons placed in situations so much alike, should bear names so nearly resembling each other. On the other hand, the difference of the name in the two passages negatives the supposition of either the passages, or the account contained in them, being transcribed from the other. That they were the same person, is further confirmed by 1 Thess. chap. i. 1, compared with Acts, chap. xvii. 10.

SECTION VIII.—Chap. ii. 12, 13. "When I came to Troas to preach Christ's Gospel, and a door was opened unto me of the Lord, I had no rest in my spirit, because I found not Titus my brother; but taking my leave of them, I went from thence unto Macedonia."

To establish a conformity between this passage and the history, nothing more is necessary to be presumed, than that St. Paul proceeded from Ephesus to Macedonia, upon the same course by which he came back from Macedonia to Ephesus, or rather to Miletus, in the neighbourhood of Ephesus; in other words, that, in his journey to the peninsula of Greece, he went and returned the same way. St. Paul is now in Macedonia, where he had lately arrived from Ephesus. Our quotation imports that in his journey he had stopped at Troas. Of this, the history says nothing, leaving us only the short account, that "Paul departed from Ephesus, for to go in Macedonia." But the history says, that in his return from Macedonia to Ephesus, "Paul sailed from Philippi to Troas;" and that, when the disciples came together on the first day of the week to break bread, Paul preached unto them all night; that from Troas he went by land to Assos, from Assos, taking ship, and coasting along the front of Asia Minor, he came by Mitylene to Miletus." Which account proves, first, that Troas lay in the way by which St. Paul passed between Ephesus and Macedonia; secondly, that he had disciples there. In one journey between these two places, the epistle, and in another journey between the same places, the history makes him stop at this city. Of the first journey he is made to say, "that a door was in that city opened unto me of the Lord;" in the second, we find disciples there collected around him, and the apostle exercising his ministry, with what was even in him, more than ordinary zeal and labour. The epistle, therefore, is in this instance confirmed, if not by the terms, at least by the probability of the history; a species of confirmation by no means to be despised, because, as far as it reaches, it is evidently uncontrived.

SECTION IX.—Chap. xi. 21, 23. "Of the Jews five times received I forty stripes save one; thrice was I beaten with rods; once was I stoned; thrice I suffered shipwreck; a night and a day I have been in the deep."

These particulars cannot be extracted out of the Acts of the Apostles; which proves, as hath been already observed, that the epistle was not framed from the history; yet they are consistent with it, which, considering how numerically circumstantial the account is, is more than could happen to arbitrary and independent fictions. When I say that these particulars are consistent with the history; I mean, first, that there is no article in the enumeration which is contradicted by the history; secondly, that the history, though silent with respect to many of the facts here enumerated, has left space for the existence of these facts, consistent with the fidelity of its own narrative.

First, no contradiction is discoverable between the epistle and the history. When St. Paul says, thrice was I beaten with rods, although the history record only one beating with rods, viz. at Philippi, Acts xvi. 22, yet is there no contradiction. It is only the omission in one book of what is related in another. But had the history contained accounts of four beatings with rods at the time of writing this epistle, in which St. Paul says, that he had only suffered thrice, there would have been a contradiction, properly so called. The same observation applies generally to the other parts of the enumeration, concerning which the history is silent; but there is one clause in the quotation particularly deserving of remark; because, when confronted with the history, it furnishes the nearest approach to a contradiction, without a contradiction being actually incurred, of any I remember to have met with. "Once," saith St. Paul, "was I stoned." Does the history relate that St. Paul, prior to the writing of this epistle, had been stoned more than once? The history mentions distinctly one occasion upon which St. Paul was stoned, viz. at Lystra in Lycania. "Then came thither certain Jews from Antioch and Iconium, who persuaded the people; and having stoned Paul, drew him out of the city, supposing he had been dead." (Chap. xiv. 19.) And it mentions also another occasion, in which "an assault was made both of the Gentiles, and also of the Jews with their rulers, to use them despitefully, and to stone them; but they were aware of it," the history proceeds to tell us, "and fled into Lystra and Derbe." This happened at Iconium prior to the date of the epistle. Now had the assault been completed; had the history related that a stone was thrown, as it relates that preparations were made both by Jews and Gentiles to stone Paul and his companions; or even had the account of this transaction stopped, without going on to inform us that Paul and his companions were "aware of their danger and fled," a contradiction between the history and the epistle would have ensued. Truth is necessarily consistent; but it is scarcely possible that independent accounts, not having truth to guide them, should thus advance to the very brink of contradiction without falling into it.

Secondly, I say, that if the Acts of the Apostles be silent concerning many of the instances enumerated in the epistle, this silence may be accounted for, from the plan and fabric of the history. The date of the epistle synchronises with the beginning of the twentieth chapter of the Acts. The part, therefore, of the history which precedes the twentieth chapter, is the only part in which can be found any notice of the persecutions to which St. Paul refers. Now it does not appear that the author of the history was with St. Paul until his departure from Troas, on his way to Macedonia, as related chap. xvi. 10, or rather indeed the contrary appears. It is in this point of the history that the language changes. In the seventh and eighth verses of this chapter the third person is used. "After they were come to Mysia, they assayed to go in to Bithynia, but the Spirit suffered them not; and they passing by Mysia came to Troas;" and the third person is in like manner constantly used throughout the foregoing part of the history. In the fourth verse of this chapter, the first person comes in: "After Paul had seen the vision, immediately we endeavoured to go into Macedonia; assuredly gathering that the Lord had called us to preach the Gospel unto them." Now, from this time to the writing of the epistle, the history occupies four chapters; yet it is in these, if any, that a regular or continued account of the apostle's life is to be expected; for how succinctly his history is delivered in the preceding part of the book, that is to say, from the time of his conversion to the time when the historian joined him at Troas, except the particulars of his conversion itself, which are related circumstantially, may be understood from the following observations:

The history of a period of sixteen years is comprised in less than three chapters; and of these, a material part is taken up with discourses. After his conversion, he continued in the neighbourhood of Damascus, according to the history, for a certain considerable, though indefinite length of time, according to his own words (Gal. i. 18.) for three years; of which no other account is given than this short one, that "straightway he preached Christ in the synagogues, that he is the Son of God: that all that heard him were amazed, and said, Is not this he that destroyed them which called on this name in Jerusalem? that he increased the more in strength, and confounded the Jews which dwelt at Damascus; and that, after many days were fulfilled, the Jews took counsel to kill him." From Damascus he proceeded to Jerusalem, and of his residence there nothing more particular is recorded, than that "he was with the apostles, coming in and going out; that he spake boldly in the name of the Lord Jesus, and disputed against the Grecians, who went about to kill him." From Jerusalem the history sends him to his native city of Tarsus. (Acts, chap. ix. 30.) It seems probable, from the order and disposition of the history, that St. Paul's stay at Tarsus was of some continuance; for we hear nothing of him, until, after a long apparent interval, and much interjacent narrative, Barnabas, desirous of Paul's assistance upon the enlargement of the Christian mission, "went to Tarsus for to seek him." (Chap. xi. 25.) We cannot doubt that the new apostle had been busied in his ministry; yet of what he did, or what he suffered, during this period, which may include three or four years, the history professes not to deliver any information. As Tarsus was situated upon the sea-coast, and as, though Tarsus was his home, yet it is probable he visited from thence many other places, for the purpose of preaching the Gospel, it is not unlikely that in the course of three or four years he might undertake many short voyages to neighbouring countries, in the navigating of which we may be allowed to suppose that some of those disasters and shipwrecks befell him, to which he refers in the quotation before us, "thrice I suffered shipwreck, a night and a day I have been in the deep." This last clause I am inclined to interpret of his being obliged to take to an open boat, upon the loss of the ship, and his continuing out at sea in that dangerous situation, a night and a day. St. Paul is here recounting his sufferings, not relating miracles. From Tarsus, Barnabas brought Paul to Antioch, and there he remained a year: but of the transactions of that year no other description is given than what is contained in the last four verses of the eleventh chapter. After a more solemn dedication to the ministry, Barnabas and Paul proceeded from Antioch to Cilicia, and from thence they sailed to Cyprus, of which voyage no particulars are mentioned. Upon their return from Cyprus, they made a progress together through the Lesser Asia; and though two remarkable speeches be preserved, and a few incidents in the course of their travels circumstantially related, yet is the account of this progress, upon the whole, given professedly with conciseness: for instance, at Iconium it is said, that they abode a long time, (Chap. xiv. 3.) yet of this long abode, except concerning the manner in which they were driven away, no memoir is inserted in the history. The whole is wrapped up in one short summary. "They spake boldly in the Lord, which gave testimony unto the word of his grace, and granted signs and wonders to be done by their hands." Having completed their progress, the two apostles returned to Antioch, "and there they abode long time with the disciples." Here we have another large portion of time passed over in silence. To this succeeded a journey to Jerusalem, upon a dispute which then much agitated the Christian church, concerning the obligation of the law of Moses. When the object of that journey was completed, Paul proposed to Barnabas to go again and visit their brethren in every city where they had preached the word of the Lord. The execution of this plan carried our apostle through Syria, Cilicia, and many provinces of the Lesser Asia; yet is the account of the whole journey despatched, in four verses of the sixteenth chapter.

SECTION X.—Chap. iii. 1. "Do we begin again to commend ourselves? or need we, as some others, epistles of commendations to you?"

"As some others." Turn to Acts xviii. 27. and you will find that, a short time before the writing of this epistle, Apollos had gone to Corinth with letters of commendation from the Ephesian Christians: "and when Apollos was disposed to pass into Achaia, the brethren wrote, exhorting the disciples to receive him." Here the words of the epistle bear the appearance of alluding to some specific instance, and the history supplies that instance; it supplies at least an instance as apposite as possible to the terms which the apostle uses, and to the date and direction of the epistle, in which they are found. The letter which Apollos carried from Ephesus, was precisely the letter of commendation which St. Paul meant; and it was to Achaia, of which Corinth was the capital, and indeed to Corinth itself, (Acts, chap. xix. 1.) that Apollos carried it; and it was about two years before the writing of this epistle. If St. Paul's words be rather thought to refer to some general usage which then obtained among Christian churches, the ease of Apollos exemplifies that usage; and affords that species of confirmation to the epistle, which arises from seeing the manners of the age, in which it purports to be written, faithfully preserved.

SECTION XI.—Chap. xiii. 1. "This is the third time I am coming to you?" τρίτον τῷτο ἐρχομαι.

Do not these words import that the writer had been at Corinth twice before? Yet, if they import this, they overset every congruity we have been endeavouring to establish. The Acts of the Apostles record only two journeys of St. Paul to Corinth. We have all along supposed, what every mark of time except this expression indicates, that the epistle was written between the first and second of these journeys. If St. Paul had been already twice at Corinth, this supposition must be given up; and every argument or observation which depends upon it, falls to the ground. Again, the Acts of the Apostles not only record no more than two journeys of St. Paul to Corinth, but do not allow us to suppose that more than two such journeys could be made or intended by him within the period which the history comprises; for, from his first journey into Greece to his first imprisonment at Rome, with which the history concludes, the apostle's time is accounted for. If, therefore, the epistle were written after the second journey to Corinth, and upon the view and expectation of a third, it must have been written after his first imprisonment at Rome, i. e. after the time to which the history extends. When I first read over this epistle, with the particular view of comparing it with the history, which I choose to do without consulting any commentary whatever, I own that I felt myself confounded by the text. It appeared to contradict the opinion to which I had been led, by a great variety of circumstances, to form, concerning the date and occasion of the epistle. At length, however, it occurred to my thoughts to inquire, whether the passage did necessarily imply that St. Paul had been at Corinth twice; or, whether, when he says, "This is the third time I am coming to you," he might mean only that this was the third time that he was ready, that he was prepared, that he intended to set out upon his journey to Corinth. I recollected that he had once before this purposed to visit Corinth, and had been disappointed in this purpose; which disappointment forms the subject of much apology and protestation, in the first and second chapters of the epistle. Now, if the journey in which he had been disappointed was reckoned by him one of the times in which "he was coming to them," then the present would be the third time, i. e. of his being ready and prepared to come; although he had been actually at Corinth only once before. This conjecture being taken up, a farther examination of the passage and the epistle, produced proofs which placed it beyond doubt. "This is the third time I am coming to you:" in the verse following these words, he adds, "I told you before, and foretold you, as if I were present the second time; and being absent, now I write to them which heretofore have sinned, and to all other, that if I come again, I will not spare." In this verse, the apostle is declaring beforehand what he would do in his intended visit: his expression therefore, "as if I were present the second time," relates to that visit. But, if his future visit would only make him present among them a second time, it follows that he had been already there but once.—Again, in the fifteenth verse of the first chapter, he tells them, "In this confidence I was minded to come unto you before, that ye might have a second benefit." Why a second, and not a third benefit? why fourth, and not third? if the τρίτον ἐρχομαι in the thirteenth chapter, meant a third visit? for, though the visit in the first chapter be that visit in which he was disappointed, yet, as it is evident from the epistle, that he had never been at Corinth from the time of the disappointment to the time of writing the epistle, it follows, that if it were only a second visit in which he was disappointed now, it could only be a second visit which he proposed now. But the text which I think is decisive of any question, if any question remain upon the subject, is the fourteenth verse of the twelfth chapter: "Behold the third time I am ready to come to you" ὁν τρίτον ετοιμους ἐχθι εἶδεν. It is very clear that the τρίτον ετοιμους ἐχθι εἶδεν of the twelfth chapter, and the τρίτον τῷτο ἐρχομαι of the thirteenth chapter, are equivalent expressions, were intended to convey the same meaning, and to relate to the same journey. The comparison of these phrases gives us St. Paul's own explanation of his own words; and it is that very explanation which we are contending for, viz. that τρίτον τῷτο ἐρχομαι does not mean that he was coming a third time, but that this was the third time he was in readiness to come, τρίτον ετοιμους ἐχθι. Upon the whole, the matter is sufficiently certain: nor do I propose it as a new interpretation of the text which contains the difficulty; for the same was given by Crotius long ago; but I thought it the clearest way of explaining the subject, to describe the manner in which the difficulty, the solution, and the proofs of that solution, successively presented themselves to my inquiries. Now, in historical researches, a reconciled inconsistency becomes a positive argument. First, because an impostor generally guards against the appearance of inconsistency; and, secondly, because, when apparent inconsistencies are found, it is seldom that any thing but truth renders them capable of reconciliation. The existence of the difficulty proves the want or absence of that caution, which usually accompanies the consciousness of fraud; and the solution proves, that it is not the collusion of fortuitous propositions which we have to deal with, but that a thread of truth winds through the whole, which preserves every circumstance in its place.

SECTION XII.—Chap. x. 14—16. "We are come as far as to you also, in preaching the Gospel of Christ; not boasting of things without our measure, that is, of other men's labours; but having hope, when your faith is increased, that we shall be enlarged by you, according to our rule, abundantly to preach the Gospel in the regions beyond you."

This quotation affords an indirect, and therefore unsuspicious, but at the same time a distinct and indubitable recognition of the truth and exactness of the history. I consider it to be implied by the words of the quotation, that Corinth was the extremity of St. Paul's travels hitherto. He expresses to the Corinthians his hope, that in some future visit, he might "preach the Gospel to the regions beyond them;" which imports that he had not hitherto proceeded "beyond them," but that Corinth was as yet the farthest point or boundary of his travels. Now, how is St. Paul's first journey into Europe, which was the only one he had taken before the writing of the epistle, traced out in the history? Sailing from Asia, he landed at Philippi; from Philippi, traversing the eastern coast of the peninsula, he passed through Amphipolis and Apollonia to Thessalonica: from thence through Berea to Athens, and from Athens to Corinth, where he stopped; and from whence, after a residence of a year and a half, he sailed back into Syria. So that Corinth was the last place which he visited in the peninsula; was the place from which he returned into Asia; and was, as such, the boundary and limit of his progress; He could not have said the same thing, viz. "I hope hereafter to preach to the regions beyond you," in an epistle to the Philippians, or in an epistle to the Thessalonians, inasmuch as he must be deemed to have already visited the regions beyond them, having proceeded from those cities to other parts of Greece. But from Corinth he returned home; every part therefore beyond that city, might properly be said, as it is said in the passage before us, to be unvisited. Yet is this propriety the spouse taneous effect of truth, and produced without meditation or design.

For St. Paul's journeys, the reader is referred to the Map which accompanies the Acts of the Apostles.

Dr. Lightfoot, in his Chronology of the New Testament, has made some good observations on the date of this epistle; and the circumstances by which that date is ascertained: collating, as Dr. Paley has done, the epistle with those parts of the history in the Acts, which refer to it.

The following is the substance of what he says on the subject:—

A new year being now entered, and Paul intending for Syria, as soon as the spring was a little up, he sends Titus before hand to Corinth, to hasten their collections for the saints in Judea, that they might be ready against Paul should come thither. And with Titus he sends two other brethren; and by them all, he sends the second epistle to the Corinthians. The proof that it was written and sent at this time, and in this manner, is plain, by these places and passages in it: Chap. ix. 2, 3, 4. I know the forwardness of your mind; for which I boast of you to them of Macedonia: yet have I sent the brethren, lest our boasting of you should be in vain: lest, haply they of Macedonia come with me, &c. Chap. xii. 11. Behold the third time I am coming to you. Chap. xiii. 1. This is the third time I am coming to you. And, Chap. viii. 16. But thanks be unto God, who put the same earnest care into the heart of Titus for you. Ver. 17. Being more forward of his own accord, he went unto you. Ver. 18. And with him we have sent the brother whose praise is in the Gospel. Ver. 22. And we have sent with them our brother, whom we have often-times proved diligent in many things, &c.

The apostle in this second epistle to Corinth, first excuses his not coming to them, according as he had promised in his first epistle, 1 Cor. xvi. 5. clearing himself from all lightness in talking, and from all unfaithfulness in breaking that promise; and fixing the principal reason upon themselves and their present condition; because he had not yet intelligence, when he went first into Macedonia, of any reformation among them of those enormities that he had reproved in his first epistle; therefore he was unwilling to come to them in heaviness, and with a scourge. This, his failing to come, according to his promise, had opened the mouths of several in his disgrace, and false teachers took any other occasion to vilify him, which he copiously satisfies, and vindicates himself all along in the epistle. His exceeding zealous plainness with them, and dealing so home and thoroughly against their misdeemeanors as he did, was one advantage that his enemies took to open their mouths against him, and to withdraw the hearts of the Corinthians from him; and chiefly because he was so urgent against the works of the law as to justification, and those rites which the Jews, even the most of these that were converted to the Gospel, too much doted on.

After he had sent away this epistle by Titus, Erastus, and Mark, if our conjecture fail not, and had given notice to the Corinthians of his speedy coming to them, and warning them to get their collections ready against he came, he provided for his journey into Syria, which he had intended so long: partly to visit the churches in these parts, and partly to bring up the collections he had got for the poor of Judea; of which, he had promised to the three ministers of the circumcision, Peter, James, and John, that he would be careful, Gal. ii. 10. Acts, Chap. xx. 1. And there accompanied him into Asia, Sopater of Berea: and of the Thessalonians, Aristarchus, and Secundus; and Gaius of Derbe, and Timotheus: and of Asia, Tychicus and Trophimus. Ver. 5. These going before tarried for us at Troas. Ver. 6. And we sailed away from Philippi, after the days of unleavened bread.

But when Paul, and this his company, are all going for Asia together, why should they not set out together; but these go before, and tarry at Troas, and Paul and some other of his company come after? Nay, they were all to meet at Troas, as it appeareth, ver. 6. Why might they not then have gone all together to Troas?

The reason of this was, because Paul himself was to go by Corinth; and not minding to stay there but very little, because he hastened to Jerusalem, he would not take his whole train thither, but sends them off the next way they could go to Troas, himself promising and resolving to be speedily with them there. He had promised a long time to the church of Corinth to come unto them, and he had newly sent word in that epistle that he had lately sent, that now his coming would be speedy, 2 Cor. xii. 14. Behold the third time I am ready to come to you: and chap. xiii. 1. This is the third time that I am coming to you. Not that he had been there twice before, for since his first departing thence, (when he had stayed a long time together, at his first planting of the Gospel in that place,) there is neither mention nor probability of his being there again; but this was the third time that he was coming, having promised and intended a journey thither once before, but was prevented, 2 Cor. i. 15, 16, 17. But now he not only promises by the epistle that he will come, but skaketh the three brethren that he had sent thither, for witnesses and surities of that promise, 2 Cor. xiii. 1, 2, that in the mouth of these witnesses his promise might be established and assured. See the Introduction, Sect. xi.

Now the time is come that he makes good his promise; and whilst the rest of his company go directly the next cut to Troas, he himself and Luke, and whom else he thought good to retain with him, go about by Corinth.

And now to look a little farther into the reason of their thus parting company, and of Paul's short stay at Corinth when he came there, we may take into our thoughts, besides, (how much he hastened to Jerusalem) the jealousy that he had, lest he should not find all things at Corinth so comfortable to himself and so creditable to them, before those that should come with him, as he desired. He has many passages in the second epistle that he wrote to them, that glance that way: for though, as to the general, there was reformation wrought among them, upon the receiving his first epistle, and thereupon he speaks very excellent things of them; yet were there not a few that thought basely of him, 2 Cor. x. 12. and traduced him and his doctrine, Chap. xi. and xii. and gave him cause to suspect that his boasting of that church to the churches of Macedonia might come off but indifferently, if the Macedonians should come with him to see how all things were there, 2 Cor. ix. 1. And therefore it was but the good policy of just fear, grief, and prudence, to send them by another way, and he had very just cause to stay but a little while when he came there.

PREFACE TO SECOND EPISTLE TO THE CORINTHIANS.

It is a general opinion among learned men, that this epistle was written about a year after the former: and this seems to be supported by the words, chap. ix. 2. Achaia was ready a year ago: for the apostle having given instructions for that collection, to which he refers in these words at the close of the preceding epistle, they would not have had the forwardness there mentioned, till a year had elapsed. As the apostle had purposed to stay at Ephesus till Pentecost, 1 Cor. xvi. 8. and he staid some time in Asia after his purpose to leave Ephesus, and go to Macedonia, Acts ix. 21, 22. and yet making here his apology for not reentering in Corinth, as he thought to do, 1 Cor. xvi. 6. this epistle must have been written after the winter; and consequently when a new year was begun. It therefore, says Dr. Whitby, seems to have been written after his second coming to Macedonia, mentioned Acts x. 3. For, (1.) it was written after he had been at Troas, and had left that place to return to Macedonia: now that was at his second going thither; see chap. ii. 12. (2.) It was written when Timothy was with him: now, when he left Ephesus to go into Macedonia, Timothy went not with him, but was sent before him, Acts xix. 22. but at his second going through Macedonia, Timothy was with him, Acts xx. 4. (3.) He speaks of some Macedonians, who were likely to accompany him, chap. ix. 4. Now, at his second going from Macedonia, there accompanied him Aristarchus, Secundus, and Gaius of Thessalonica, the metropolis of Macedonia, Acts xx. 4. (1.) The postscript says, that this epistle was written from Philippi, where Paul was till the days of unleavened bread, Acts xv. 6. it therefore seems to have been sent from thence to them by Titus, and some other person, not long before St. Paul's coming to them; which he speaks of as instant, chap. xiii. 1. and that which he was now ready to do, chap. xii. 11. And did, according to Dr. Lightfoot, in his journey from Philippi to Troas; he sailing about from Philippi to Corinth, to make good his promise; whilst the rest that were with him, Acts xx. 4. went directly the next cut to Troas, and there waited for him. See Whitby.

That the first epistle had produced powerful effects among the Corinthians, is evident, from what the apostle mentions in this. Titus had met him in Macedonia, and told him of the reformation produced by this epistle; see chap. vii. 5. that the church had excommunicated the incestuous man; that the epistle had overwhelmed them with great distress; and had led them to a close examination of their conduct and state; and &c. Hearing this, St. Paul wrote this second epistle, to comfort, to commend them, and to complete the work which he had begun; by causing them to finish the contribution for the poor saints at Jerusalem; and also to vindicate his own apostolic character; and to unmask the pretended apostle, who had led them so long astray. See the preceding Introduction.

Its principal divisions are—

I.—THE PREFACE, chap. i. ver. 1—7.

II.—THE NARRATION, comprehending an account of what had happened to himself; his answer to their questions concerning the incestuous person, with different other matters; among which the following are the chief: (1.) The persecution which he had suffered in Asia, and from which he had been miraculously rescued, chap. i. 8—14. (2.) His purpose to pay them a visit, chap. i. 15—21. (3.) Concerning the sorcery which they had suffered, on account of the excommunication of the incestuous person, chaps. ii. and vii. (4.) His own vindication against the false apostle; in which he gives an account of his doctrine, chap. iii. 6—15. His conduct, chap. iv. 1—6. His bodily infirmities, chap. iv. 7. and chap. v. (5.) Strongly exhorts them to a holy life, chap. vi. and vii.

III.—Of the ALMS that had been collected, and were yet to be collected, chaps. viii. and ix.

IV.—His DEFENCE against the false apostle and his calumniators in general, chaps. x—xii.

V.—MISCELLANEOUS matters, chap. xiii.

It may be remarked, once for all, that none of these, or such artificial divisions are made by the apostle himself; nor more than the divisions into chapters and verses. All these are the work of man: and certainly contribute nothing to a proper understanding of the epistle itself. The apostle appears to have sat down, and, under the influence of the Divine Spirit, he wrote on the different subjects treated of in the epistle, just in the order that these things occurred to his mind; without intending particular heads, divisions, or subdivisions. And as he probably wrote the whole with very little intermission of time; his sense will be best apprehended by those who carefully read over the whole at one sitting.

THE SECOND EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE TO THE CORINTHIANS.

For Chronological Eras, see at the end of the Acts.

Mean time of the Paschal Full Moon, at Corinth, (its longitude being twenty-three degrees to the east of London,) according to Ferguson's Tables, which are sufficiently exact for this purpose, April 7, or the VIIIth of the Ides of April, at forty-eight minutes and thirty-eight seconds past eight in the evening. True time of the Paschal Full Moon at Corinth, according to Ferguson's Tables, April 8, or the VIth of the Ides of April, at thirty-seven minutes and one second past five in the morning; the true time of the Paschal Full Moon being eight hours, forty-eight minutes, and twenty-three seconds after the mean. [N. B. The reader will observe in the table of remarkable eras, at the end of the Acts, that the date of this epistle agrees with the 804th year of the Nabonassar era, whereas, in the London copy, it is placed in the 805th year of that era. This discrepancy arises from the Nabonassar era containing only 365 days; by which means the 804th year corresponded with A. D. 57, until the 9th of August, which was the commencement of the 805th year: and this epistle being written, as supposed, in October, consequently the date corresponds both with 804 and 805.]

D. 140, according to others. Polemon the rhetorician, and master of Persius, the celebrated satirist; died in the reign of Nero. Sceleucus, the mathematician, intimate with the emperor Vespasian. Serrius Nonianus, the Latin historian; flourished under Nero. Caius Cornelius Tacitus, the celebrated Roman historian; born in the reign of Nero, and died at an advanced age in the former part of the second century.

CHAPTER I.

St. Paul encourages them to trust in God in all adversities, from a consideration of the support which he had granted them already in times of afflictions; and expresses his strong confidence of their fidelity, 1—7. Mentions the heavy tribulation which he had passed through in Asia; as also his deliverance, 8—11. Shows in what the exaltation of a genuine Christian consists, 12. Appeals to their own knowledge of the truth of the things which he wrote to them, 13, 14. Mentions his purpose of visiting them; and how sincere he was in forming it, and the reason why he did not come, as he had purposed, 15—24. [A. M. 4061. A. D. 57. A. U. C. 810. An. Imp. Neronis Cæs. 4.]

P PAUL, an apostle of Jesus Christ by the will of God, and Timothy our brother, unto the church of God which is at Corinth; with all the saints which are in all Achaia:

2 Grace be to you, and peace from God our Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ.

3 O Blessed be God, even the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of mercies, and the God of all comfort; at Cor. i. 1. Eph. i. 1. Col. i. 1. 1 Tim. i. 1. 2 Tim. i. 1.—b Phil. i. 1. Col. i. 2.—c Romans i. 7. 1 Cor. i. 3. Gal. i. 3. Phil. i. 2. Col. ii. 2. 1 Thess. i. 2.

NOTES.—Verse 1. Paul, an apostle] Paul commissioned immediately by Jesus Christ himself, according to the will of God, to preach the Gospel to the Gentiles. See on 1 Cor. i. 1. In all Achaia] The whole of the Peloponnesus, or that country separated from the main land, by the Isthmus of Corinth. From this we may learn, that this epistle was not only sent to the church of Corinth, but to all the churches in that country.

2. Grace be to you and peace] See on Rom. i. 7.

3. Blessed be God] Let God have universal and eternal praise: 1. Because he is the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who is the gift of his endless love to man, John i. 16. 2. Because he is the Father of mercies, ὁ Πατήρ τῶν ἀστεριῶν; the source whence all mercy flows, whether it respect the body or the soul; time or eternity: the source of tender mercy, for so the word implies. See on Rom. xii. 1. And, 3. Because he is the God of all comfort; the fountain whence all consolation, happiness, and bliss flow, to angels and to men.

4. Who comforteth us] Who shows himself to be the God of tender mercy, by condescending to notice us who have never descended any good at his hand: and also the God of all consolation, by comforting us in all our tribulation; never leaving us a prey to anxiety, carking care, persecution, or temptation; but, by the comforts of his Spirit, bearing us up, in, through, and above all, our trials and difficulties.

4 Who comforteth us in all our tribulation, that we may be able to comfort them which are in any trouble, by the comfort wherewith we ourselves are comforted of God.

5 For as the sufferings of Christ abound in us, so our consolation also aboundeth by Christ.

6 And whether we be afflicted, it is for your consolation and salvation, which is effectual in the enduring of the same sorrow. 2 Thess. i. 2. Phil. 3.—d Eph. i. 3. 1 Pet. 1. 3.—e Acts 9. 4. Chap. 4. 10. Col. i. 24.—f Chap. 4. 15.—g Or, is wrought.

That we may be able to comfort them] Even spiritual comforts are not given us for our use alone; they, like all the gifts of God, are given that they may be distributed, or become the instruments of help to others. A minister's trials and comforts are permitted and sent for the benefit of the church. What a miserable preacher must he be, who has all his divinity by study and learning, and nothing by experience. If his soul have not gone through all the travail of regeneration; if his heart have not felt the love of God shed abroad in it by the Holy Ghost, he can neither instruct the ignorant, nor comfort the distressed. See ver. 6.

5. The sufferings of Christ] Suffering endured for the cause of Christ; such as persecutions, hardships, and privations of different kinds.

Our consolation also aboundeth] We stood as well, as ferings which we also suffer : or whether we be comforted, it is for your consolation and salvation.

7 And our hope of you is steadfast, knowing, that ^has ye are partakers of the sufferings, so ⁱshall ye be also of the consolation.

8 For we would not, brethren, have you ignorant of our trouble which came to us in Asia, that we were pressed out of measure, above strength, inasmuch that we despaired even of life :

9 But we had the ^ksentence of death in ourselves, that we should ^lnot trust in ourselves, but in God which raiseth the dead :

10 ^mWho delivered us from so great a death, and doth deliver : in whom we trust that he will yet deliver us ;

11 Ye also ⁿhelping together by prayer for us, that ^ofor the firmly, and as easily, in the heavenly trial, as in the lightest ; because the consolation was always proportioned to the trial and difficulty. Hence we learn, that he who is upheld in a slight trial, need not fear a great one : for, if he be faithful, his consolation shall abound, as his sufferings abound. Is it not as easy for a man to lift one hundred pounds weight, as it is for an infant to lift a few ounces ? The proportion of strength destroys the comparative difficulty.

6 And whether we be afflicted] See on ver. 4. Which is effectually] There is a strange and unusual variation in the MSS. and Versions in this passage. Perhaps the whole should be read thus : For, if we be afflicted, it is for your encouragement and salvation ; and if we be comforted, it is also for your encouragement, which exerted itself by enduring the same sufferings, which we also suffer.

This transposition of the middle and last clause, is authorised by the best MSS. and Versions. The meaning seems to be this : While ye abide faithful to God, no suffering can be prejudicial to you ; on the contrary, it will be advantageous, God having your comfort and salvation continually in view by all the dispensations of his Providence ; and while you patiently endure, your salvation is advanced. Sufferings and consolations, all becoming energetic means of accomplishing the great design ; for all things work together for good to them that love God. See the variations in Griesbach.

7. And our hope of you is steadfast] We have no doubt of your continuing in the truth ; because we see that you have such a full experimental knowledge of it, that no sufferings or persecutions can turn you aside. And we are sure that, as ye suffer, so shall ye rejoice.

8. Our trouble which came to us in Asia] To what part of his history, the apostle refers, we know not ; some think it is to the Jeirs, lying in wait to kill him, Acts xv. 3 ; others to the insurrection raised against him by Demetrius and his fellow-craftsmen, Acts xiv. 23 ; others, to his fighting with beasts at Ephesus, 1 Cor. xv. 32, which they understand literally ; and others think that there is a reference here to some persecution which is not recorded in any part of the apostle's history.

We were pressed out of measure, above strength] The original is exceedingly emphatic, καθ' υπερβολην επισημῶντες υπερ μετρον, we were weighed down beyond what is credible ; even beyond what any natural strength could support. There is no part of St. Paul's history known to us, which can justify these strong expressions, except his being stoned at Lystra ; which, if not what is here intended, the facts to which he refers are not on record. As Lystra was properly in Asia, (unless he mean Asia Minor), and his stoning at Lystra did most evidently destroy his life ; so that his being raised was an effect of the miraculous power of God, he might be supposed to refer to this. See the notes on Acts xiv. 19, &c. But it is very likely that the reference is to some terrible persecution which he had endured some short time before his writing this epistle : and, with the outlines of which, the Corinthians had been acquainted.

9. We had the sentence of death in ourselves] The tribulation was so violent and overwhelming, that he had no hope of escaping death.

That we should not trust in ourselves] The tribulation was of such a nature, as to take away all expectation of help, but from God alone.

But in God which raiseth the dead] This is very like the business at Lystra ; and would be sufficient to fix the apostle's reference to that fact, could the time and other circumstances serve.

10. Who delivered us from so great a death] For the circumstances were such, that no human power could avail.

Will yet deliver us] Having had such a signal evidence of his interposition already, we will confide in him with an unshaken confidence, that he will continue to support and deliver us.

11. Ye also helping together by prayer] Even an apostle felt the prayers of the church of God necessary for his comfort and support. What innumerable blessings do the prayers of the followers of God draw down on those who are the objects of them ?

The gift bestowed—by the means of many persons] The blessings communicated by means of their prayers.

Thanks may be given by many] When they who have prayed, hear that their prayers are so particularly answered, gift bestowed upon us by the means of many persons, thanks may be given by many on our behalf.

12 For our rejoicing is this, the testimony of our conscience, that in simplicity and ^pgodly sincerity, ^qnot with fleshly wisdom, but by the grace of God, we have had our conversation in the world, and more abundantly to you-ward.

13 For we write none other things unto you, than what ye read or acknowledge ; and I trust ye shall acknowledge even to the end ;

14 As also ye have acknowledged us in part, ^rthat we are your rejoicing, even as ^sye also are ours in the day of the Lord Jesus.

15 And in this confidence ^tI was minded to come unto you before, that ye might have a ^usecond ^vbenefit ;

16 And to pass by you into Macedonia, and ^wto come again then all that have prayed will feel themselves led to praise God, for his gracious answers. Thus, the prayers of many, obtain the gift : and the thanksgivings of many, acknowledge the mercy.

The gift, or χαρισμα, which the apostle mentions was his deliverance from the dangers and deaths to which he was exposed.

12. For our rejoicing is this] Η καυχησις ; our boasting, exaltation, subject of glorying.

The testimony of our conscience] Μαρτυριον της συνειδησεως : that testimony or witness which conscience, under the light and influence of the Spirit of God, renders to the soul, of its state, sincerity, safety, &c.

In simplicity] Απλοτητι : from α, denoting unity, or together, and πλος, to be ; or from α, negative, and πλος, many, not compounded, having one end in view : having no sinister purpose, no bye end to answer. Instead of απλοτητι, many MSS. and Versions have αγωγητι, holiness.

In godly sincerity] Εδωκεμεν Θεω ; the sincerity of God : that is, such a sincerity as comes from his work in the soul. Εδωκεμεν, sincerity, and Εδωκεμεν, sincere, come from εδω, the splendour, or bright shining of the sun, and here signifies such simplicity of intention, and purity of affection, as can stand the test of the light of God shining upon it, without the discovery being made of a single blemish or flaw.

Not with fleshly wisdom] The cunning and duplicity of man, who is unimbuished by the Spirit of God, and has his secular interest, ease, profit, pleasure, and worldly honour in view.

But by the grace of God] Which alone can produce the simplicity and godly sincerity before-mentioned : and inspire the wisdom that comes from above.

13. Have had our conversation] Αναστροφην ; we have conducted ourselves. The word properly refers to the whole tenor of a man's life ; all that he does, says, and intends ; and the object or end he has in view ; and in reference to which he speaks, acts, and thinks ; and is so used by the best Greek writers. The verb αναστροφή, is compounded of ανα, again, and στροφή, to turn ; a continual coming back again to the point from which he set out ; a circulation ; beginning, continuing, and ending every thing to the glory of God ; setting out with divine views, and still maintaining them : beginning in the Spirit, and ending in the Spirit : acting in reference to God, as the planets do in reference to the sun, deriving all their light, heat, and motion from him ; and incessantly and regularly revolving round him. Thus acted Paul : thus acted the primitive Christians ; and thus must every Christian act who expects to see God in his glory. The word conversation, is not an unapt Latinism for the Greek term, as conversatio comes from con, together, and verba, I turn, and is used by the Latins in precisely the same sense, as the other is by the Greeks, signifying the whole of a man's conduct, the tenor and practice of his life ; and conversio astrorum, and conversiones caelestis, is by Cicerro, used for the course of the stars and heavenly bodies.—De Leg. c. 8. Caelum una conversioe atque eadem ipse circum se torquitor et vertitur.—Cic. de Univ. c. 8. “ The heaven itself is, with one and the same revolution, whirled about, and revolves round itself.”

In the world] Both among Jews and Gentiles, have we always acted as seeing Him who is invisible.

More abundantly to you-ward.] That is, we have given the fullest proof of this in our conduct towards you ; you have witnessed the holy manner in which we have always acted ; and God is witness of the purity of the motives by which we have been actuated ; and our conscience tells us, that we have lived in uprightness before him.

13. Than what ye read] Viz. in the first epistle which he had sent.

Or acknowledge] To be the truth of God ; and which he hoped they would continue to acknowledge, and not permit themselves to be turned aside from the hope of the Gospel.

14. Have acknowledged us in part] Απο μερους, may signify here, not in part, but some of you ; and it is evident from the distracted state of the Corinthians, and the opposition raised there against the apostle, that it was only a part of them that did acknowledge him ; and receive and profit by his epistles and advice.

15. As our want rejoicing, &c.] You boast of us as the ministers of Christ, through whom ye have believed ; as we boast of you as genuine converts to the Christian faith, and worthy members of the church of God.

out of Macedonia unto you, and of you to be brought on my way towards Judea.

17 When I therefore was thus minded, did I use lightness? or the things that I purpose, do I purpose? according to the flesh, that with me there should be yea yea, and nay nay?

18 But as God is true, or ⁷ word towards you was not yea and nay.

19 For ⁸ the Son of God, Jesus Christ, who was preached among you by us, even by me and Sylvanus and Timotheus, was not yea and nay, ⁹ but in him was yea.

¹⁰ Ch. 10:2—y Or, preach.—¹¹ Mk. 1:1, Lk. 1:33, Ac. 2:29—¹² Heb. 13:8—¹³ b Rom. 15:59, c 1 Jn. 2:23, 2—¹⁴ Eph. 1:13 & 4:39, 2 Tim. 2:19, Rev. 2:17.

15. And in this confidence [Under the conviction or persuasion that this is the case, that ye exult in us, as we do in you. I was minded] I had purposed to come to you before, as he had intimated, 1 Cor. xvi. 5, for he had intended to call on them in his way from Macedonia, but this purpose he did not fulfil: and he gives the reason, ver. 23.

A second benefit [He had been with them once, and they had received an especial blessing in having the seed of life sown among them by the preaching of the Gospel: and he had purposed to visit them again, that they might have a second blessing, in having that seed watered. Instead of yapuv, grace, or benefit, several MSS. read xapav, joy, pleasure: but the word grace, or benefit, seems to express the apostle's meaning best. 16. To pass by you into Macedonia] He had purposed to go to Macedonia first, and then from Macedonia return to them and probably winter in Corinth. Therefore, we must understand the di' yvav, by you, as implying that he would sail up the Ægean Sea, leaving Corinth to the west, though he might have taken it in his way, and have gone by land through Greece up to Macedonia. Some think that the meaning is, that he purposed to take Achaia in his way to Macedonia, without calling at Corinth; but Achaia was out of his way considerably; and he could scarcely go through Achaia without passing close by Corinth. I consider the words, therefore, as implying that he purposed not to call at Corinth at that time, but to pass by it, as before said.

17. Did I use lightness? When I formed this purpose, was it without due consideration? and did I abandon it through fickleness of mind? That with me there should be yea, &c.] That I should act as carnal men, who change their purposes, and falsify their engagements according as may seem best to their secular interest?

18. But as God is true] Setting the God of truth before my eyes, I could not act in this way, and as sure as he is true, so surely were my purposes sincere: and it was only my uncertainty about your state, that induced me to postpone my visit. See ver. 23.

19. For the Son of God, &c.] If I could have changed my purpose through carnal or secular interest, then I must have had the same interest in view when I first preached the Gospel to you, with Sylvanus and Timotheus. But did not the whole of our conduct prove, that we neither had, nor could have, such interest in view?

20. For all the promises of God] Had we been light, fickle, worldly-minded persons; persons who could only be bound by our engagements as far as comported with our secular interest, would God have confirmed our testimony among you? Did we not lay before you the promises of God? And did not God fulfil those promises by us, by our instrumentality, to your salvation and his own glory? God is true; therefore, every promise of God is true, and, consequently, each must have its due fulfilment. God will not make use of trifling, worldly men, as the instruments by which he will fulfil his promises. But he has fulfilled them by us: therefore we are just and spiritual men, else God would not have used us.

In him are yea, and in him amen] All the promises which God has made to mankind, are yea, true in themselves, and amen, faithfully fulfilled to them who believe in Christ Jesus. The promises are all made in reference to Christ: for it is only on the Gospel system that we can have promises of grace; for it is only on that system that we can have mercy. Therefore the promise comes originally by Christ, and is yea; and it has its fulfilment through Christ, and is amen; and this is to the glory of God, by the preaching of the apostles.

From what the apostle says here, and the serious and solemn manner in which he vindicates himself, it appears, that his enemies at Corinth had made a handle of his not coming to Corinth, according to his proposal, to defame his character, and to depreciate his ministry: but he makes use of it as a means of exalting the truth and mercy of God through Christ Jesus; and to show that the promises of God not only come by him, but are fulfilled through him.

21. Now he which stablisheth us with you] It is God that has brought both us and you to this sure state of salvation through Christ; and he has anointed us, given us the extraordinary influences of the Holy Ghost, that we might be able effectually to administer this Gospel to your salvation. Through this unction we know and preach the truth; and are preserved by it from dissimulation and falsity of every kind.

22. Who hath also sealed us] Not only deeply impressed his truth and image upon our hearts; but by the miraculous gifts of the Holy Spirit, attested the truth of our extraordinary unction or calling to the ministry.

20 b For all the promises of God in him are yea, and in him amen, unto the glory of God by us.

21 Now he which stablisheth us with you in Christ, and ^c hath anointed us, is God;

22 Who ^d hath also sealed us, and ^e given the earnest of the Spirit in our hearts.

23 Moreover I call God for a record, upon my soul, ^f that to spare you I came not as yet unto Corinth.

24 Not for ^g that we have dominion over your faith, but are helpers of your joy: for ^h by faith ye stand.

ⁱ Ch. 5:5, Eph. 1:14—^j Rom. 1:9, Ch. 11:2, Gal. 1:39, Phil. 1:8—^k 1 Cor. 4:21, Ch. 2:3 & 12:29, 13:2, 10:16—^l 1 Cor. 3:15, 1 Pet. 5:3—^m Rom. 11:29, 1 Cor. 15:1.

And given us the earnest of the Spirit] Ton apophavav rov Pnevματος; from this unction and sealing we have a clear testimony in our souls, the Divine Spirit dwelling constantly in us, of our acceptance with God, and that our ways please him. The apophavav of the apostle, is the same as the עֲרָבון Aravon of Moses, Gen. xxviii. 17, 18, and 20, which we there translate pledge. The word properly signifies an earnest of something promised, a part of the price agreed for between a buyer and seller; by giving and receiving of which, the bargain was ratified; or a deposit—which was to be restored when the thing promised was given. From the use of the term in Genesis, which the apostle puts here in Greek letters, we may at once see his meaning above; and in Eph. i. 14, the Holy Spirit being an earnest in the heart, and an earnest of the promised inheritance, means a security given in hand for the fulfilment of all God's promises relative to grace and eternal life. We may learn from this, that eternal life will be given in the great day, to all who can produce the aravon or pledge. He who is found then, with the earnest of God's Spirit in his heart, shall not only be saved from death, but have that eternal life of which it is the pledge, the earnest, and the evidence. Without this aravon there can be no glory. See the whole case of Judah and Tamar, Gen. xxviii. 13, &c. and the notes there.

23. I call God for a record upon my soul] The apostle here resumes the subject which he left, ver. 16, and in the most solemn manner calls God to witness, and consequently to punish, if he asserted any thing false; that it was through tenderness to them that he did not visit Corinth at the time proposed. As there were so many scandals among them, the apostle had reason to believe, that he should be obliged to use the severe and authoritative part of his function, in the excommunication of those who had sinned; and delivering them over to Satan for the destruction of the flesh, &c. but to give them space to amend, and to see what effect his epistle might produce, (not having heard as yet from them,) he purposed to delay his coming. It is plain, as several commentators have observed, 1. that St. Paul's doctrine had been opposed by some of Corinth, 1 Cor. xv. 12. His apostleship questioned, 1 Cor. ix. 1, 2, and 2 Cor. xiii. 13. 2. Himself despised, and treated as a person, who, because of the consciousness he had of his own worthlessness, dared not to come, 1 Cor. iv. 18. His letters, say they, are weighty and powerful, full of boasts of what he can, and what he will do: but his bodily presence is weak, and his speech contemptible, 2 Cor. x. 10. 3. This being the state in which his reputation was then at Corinth, and he having promised to come to them, 1 Cor. xvi. 5, he could not but think it necessary to vindicate his failing them, by reasons which should be both convincing and kind, such as those contained in the preceding verses. See Dodd and others.

24. Not for that we have dominion over your faith] I will not come to exercise my apostolic authority in punishing them who have acted sinfully and disorderly: for this would be, to several of you, a cause of distress, the delinquents being friends and relatives: but I hope to come to promote your joy, to increase your spiritual happiness, by watering the seed which I have already sown. This I think to be the meaning of the apostle. It is certain that the faith which they had already received, was preached by the apostles; and, therefore, in a certain sense, according to our meaning of the term, they had a right to propound to them the articles which they ought to believe: to and to forbid them, in the most solemn manner, to believe any thing else as Christianity, which was opposed to those articles. In that sense they had dominion over their faith: and this dominion was essential to them as apostles.—But, shall any others, persons who are not apostles, who are not under the unerring and infallible influence of the Holy Ghost, arrogate to themselves this dominion over the faith of mankind? not only by insisting on them to receive new doctrines, taught no where by apostles or apostolic men; but also threatening them with perdition if they do not credit doctrines which are opposed to the very spirit and letter of the word of God? These things, men, not only not apostles, but wicked, profligate, and ignorant, have insisted on as their right. Did they succeed? Yes, for a time; and that time was a time of thick darkness: a darkness that might be felt; a darkness producing nothing but misery; and lengthening out and deepening the shadow of death. But the light of God shone; the Scriptures were read; those vain and wicked pretensions were brought to the eternal touchstone; and what was the consequence? The splendour of truth, pierced, dissipated, and annihilated them for ever!

British Protestants have learned, and Europe is learning, that the SACRED WRITINGS, and them alone, contain what is necessary to faith and practice, and that no man, number of men, society, church, council, presbytery, consistory, or conclave, has dominion over any man's faith. The word of God alone is his rule; and to its Author he is to give account of the use he has made of it.

For by faith ye stand.] Ye believe not in us, but in God. We have prescribed to you, on his authority, what you are to believe; you received the Gospel as coming from him; and ye stand in and by that faith.

The subjects in this chapter, which are of the most importance, have been carefully considered in the preceding notes. That alone of the apostle's oath has been passed by with general observations only. But that it is an oath, has been questioned by some. An oath, properly speaking, is an appeal to God, as the searcher of the heart, for the truth of what is spoken; and an appeal to him as the Judge of right and wrong, to punish the falsity and perjury. All this appears to me to be implied in the awful words above, I call God for a record upon my soul; and this is not the only place in which the apostle uses words of the same import. See Rom. i. 9. and ix. 1. and the note on this latter passage.

On this subject I have spoken pretty much at large, at the end of the vi. chap. of Deuteronomy; but as it appears that there I have made a mistake, (Quarto Edit.) in saying, that the people called Quakers hold up their hand in a court of justice, when called upon to make affirmation, I take this opportunity to correct that expression, and to give the form of the oath, for so the law considers it, which the statute 7 and 8 of William III. cap. 34. sect. 1. required of this sect of Christians:—“I, A. B. do declare in the presence of Almighty God, the witness of the truth of what I say.” Though this Act was only intended, at first, to continue in force for seven years, yet it was afterwards made perpetual. See Burn, Vol. III. page 651.

A more solemn and more awful form of an oath, was never presented, nor taken by man, than this: no kissing of the book, holding up the hand, nor laying hand on the Bible, can add either solemnity or weight to such an oath! It is as awful, and as binding, as any thing can be: and him who would break this, no obligation can bind.

But the religious people in question, found their consciences aggravated by this form, and made application to have another substituted for it: in consequence of this the form has undergone a little alteration, and the solemn affirmation, which is to stand instead of an oath, taken in the usual manner, as finally settled by the 8 Geo. cap. 6. is the following:—“I, A. B. do solemnly, sincerely, and truly declare and affirm.” Burn, Vol. III. page 656.

It may be well to examine the solemn affirmation; and see whether it do not contain the essential principles of an oath, and whether it should not be reputed by all people, as being equal to any oath taken in the common form, and sufficiently binding on every conscience that entertains the belief of a God, and the doctrine of a future state. The word solemnly refers to the presence and the word sincerely, to the consciousness that the person has of the uprightness of his own soul, and the total absence of guile and deceit; and the word truly, refers to the state of his understanding as to his knowledge of the fact in question. The word declare refers to the authority requiring, and the persons before whom this declaration is made; and the term affirm, refers back to the words solemnly, sincerely, and truly, on which the declaration and affirmation are founded. This, also, contains all that is vital to the spirit and essence of an oath; and the honest man who takes or makes it, feels that there is no form used among men, by which his conscience can be more solemnly bound. As to the particular form, as long as it is not absurd or superstitious, it is a matter of perfect indifference as to the thing itself, as long as the declaration or affirmation contains the spirit and essence of an oath; and that the law considers this as an oath, is evident from the following clause: “that if any one be convicted of having wilfully or falsely made this declaration or affirmation, such offender shall incur the same penalties and forfeitures as are enacted against persons convicted of wilful and corrupt perjury.” I believe it may be said, with strict truth, that few instances can be produced where this affirmation, which I must consider as a most solemn oath, was corruptly made by any accredited member of that religious society, for whose peace and comfort it was enacted. And when this most solemn affirmation is properly considered, no man of reason will say that the persons who take it, are not bound by a sufficient and available oath.

CHAPTER II.

The apostle further explains the reasons why he did not pay his intended visit to the Corinthians, 1. And why he wrote to them in the manner he did, 2—5. He exhorts them also to forgive the inexcusable person, who had become a true penitent; and therefore he had forgiven him in the name of Christ, 6—11. He mentions the disappointment he felt when he came to Troas, in not meeting with Titus, from whom he expected to have heard an account of the state of the Corinthian church, 12, 13. Gives thanks to God for the great success he had in preaching the Gospel, so that the influence of the name of Christ was felt in every place, 14. Shows that the Gospel is a savour of life to them that believe, and of death to them that believe not, 15, 16. And that he and his brethren preached the pure unadulterated doctrine of God among the people, 17. [A. M. 4061. A. D. 57. A. U. C. 830. An. hap. Neronis Cæs. 4.]

BUT I determined this with myself, * that I would not come again to you in heaviness.

2 For, if I make you sorry, who is he then that maketh me glad, but the same which is made sorry by me?

3 And I wrote this same unto you, lest when I came, I should have sorrow from them of whom I ought to rejoice; * having confidence in you all, that my joy is the joy of you all.

4 For, out of much affliction and anguish of heart, I wrote unto you with many tears; * not that ye should be grieved, but, that ye might know the love which I have more abundantly unto you.

NOTES.—Verse 1. But I determined this [The apostle continues to give further reasons why he did not visit them at the proposed time. Because of the scandals that were among them, he could not see them comfortably; and, therefore, he determined not to see them at all, till he had reason to believe that those evils were put away.]

2. For, if I make you sorry [Should he have come, and used his apostolical authority, in inflicting punishment upon the transgressors, this would have been a common cause of distress. And though he might expect that the sound part of the Church would be a cause of consolation to him, yet as all would be overwhelmed with trouble, at the punishment of the transgressors, he could not rejoice to see those whom he loved in distress.]

3. And I wrote this same unto you [Thus, I particularly marked in my first epistle to you; earnestly desiring your reformation, lest, if I came before this had taken place, I must have come with a rod, and have inflicted punishment on the transgressors. See 1 Cor. v.]

My joy is the joy of you all. [I know that ye wish my comfort, as much as I wish yours.]

For out of much affliction, &c. [It is very likely that the apostle's enemies had represented him as a harsh, austere, authoritative man; who was better pleased with inflicting wounds than in healing them. But he vindicates himself from this charge, by solemnly asserting, that this was the most painful part of his office; and that the writing of his first epistle to them cost him much affliction and anguish of heart, and many tears.]

5. But, if any have caused grief [Here he seems to refer particularly to the case of the incestuous person.]

Grieved me but in part [I cannot help thinking, that the

5 But * if any have caused grief, he hath not grieved me, but in part: that I may not overcharge you all.]

6 Sufficient to such a man is this * punishment, which was inflicted of me only.

7 * So that contrariwise ye ought rather to forgive him, and comfort him, lest perhaps such a one should be swallowed up with overmuch sorrow.

8 Wherefore I beseech you that ye would confirm your love toward him.

9 For, to this end also did I write, that I might know the proof of you, whether ye be * obedient in all things.

ek pepon; and ara pepon; which we render in part, and which the apostle uses so frequently in these epistles, are to be referred to the people. A part of them had acknowledged the apostle, chap. i. 14. and were a part of them had given him cause of grief; and, therefore, he immediately adds, that I may not overcharge you all, as only a part of you has put me to pain, (viz. the transgressor, and those who had taken his part,) it would be unreasonable that I should load you all, επιβαρος παντας υμεις, with the blame which attaches to that party alone.

6. Sufficient to such a man is this punishment [That is, the man has already suffered sufficiently. Here he gives a proof of his parental tenderness towards this great transgressor. He had been disowned by the Church; he had deeply repented; and now the apostle pleads for him.]

7. Ye ought rather to forgive him [He had now suffered enough: for the punishment inflicted had answered the end for which it was inflicted; and there was some danger that if this poor culprit were not restored to the bosom of the Church, his distress and anguish would destroy his life, or drive him to despair.]

8. That ye would confirm your love toward him [You do love him, notwithstanding the reproach he has brought on the Gospel; and, notwithstanding your love to him, ye were obliged to cut him off for the credit of the Gospel. Now that he has repented, I beseech you to confirm, επιβαρος, to rally, by a public act of the Church, your love to him; give him the fullest proof that ye do love him, by forgiving him, and restoring him to his place in the Church.]

9. For to this end, also, did I write [Eπαυλα, I have written this also, the advice and commands which I now give you, that I might know whether ye be obedient in all things.]

10 To whom ye forgive any thing, I forgive also: for, if I forgive any thing, to whom I forgive it, for your sakes forgive I it¹ in the person of Christ;

11††† Satan should get an advantage of us; for we are not ignorant of his devices.

12 Furthermore, when I came to Troas to preach Christ's Gospel, and a door was opened unto me of the Lord;

13 I had no rest in my spirit, because I found not Titus my brother: but taking my leave of them, I went from thence into Macedonia.

10. To whom ye forgive any thing] Here he farther shows them, that his sole object in the punishment inflicted on the transgressor, was his amendment; and, therefore, promises to ratify in the name and authority of Christ, the free pardon which he exhorts them to dispense.

In the person of Christ] As I believe Christ acts towards his penitent soul, so do I. Christ forgives his sin, and takes him to his favour; let us forgive him his offence against the Church, and restore him to its communion.

11. Satan should get an advantage] If the man who has given sufficient proof of the sincerity of his repentance, and sink into despair: and then the discipline of the Church will be represented, not as emendatory, but as leading to destruction. Of this, our enemies would most gladly avail themselves, as they wish to discredit this ministry: and there is always at hand a devil to suggest evil, and prompt men to do it; for in this respect we have a thorough acquaintance with his devices. Let us, therefore, be careful to remove both from Satan and his partizans, all those occasions which might turn to the disadvantage or disparagement of the Gospel of Christ.

12. When I came to Troas] After having written the former epistle, and not having heard what effect it had produced on your minds; though the Lord had opened me a particular door to preach the Gospel, in which I so especially rejoice and glory.

13. I had no rest in my spirit] I was so concerned for you, through the love I bear you, that I was greatly distressed, because I did not find Titus returned to give me an account of your state.

But taking my leave of them] I went thence into Macedonia, expecting to find him there, and thither he did come, and gave me a joyous account of your state. See chap. vii. 6, 7.

14. Now, thanks be unto God] His coming dispelled all my fears, and was the cause of the highest satisfaction to my mind; and filled my heart with gratitude to God, who is the author of all good: and who always causeth us to triumph in Christ; not only gives us the victory, but such a victory as involves the total ruin of our enemies; and gives us cause of triumphing in him, through whom we have obtained this victory.

A triumph among the Romans, to which the apostle here alludes, was a public and solemn honour, conferred by them on a victorious general, by allowing him a magnificent procession through the city.

This was not granted by the senate, unless the general had gained a very signal and decisive victory; conquered a province, &c. On such occasions, the general was usually clad in a rich purple robe, interwoven with figures of gold, setting forth the grandeur of his achievements: his buskins were beset with pearls, and he wore a crown, which at first was of laurel, but was afterward of pure gold. In one hand, he had a branch of laurel, the emblem of victory; and, in the other, his truncheon. He was carried in a magnificent chariot, adorned with ivory, and plates of gold; and usually drawn by two white horses. Other animals were also used: when Pompey triumphed over Africa, his chariot was drawn by elephants; that of Mark Antony by lions; that of Helio-gabalus by tigers; and that of Aurelius by deer. His children either sat at his feet in the chariot, or rode on the chariot horses. To keep him humble amidst these great honours, a slave stood at his back, casting out incessant railings and reproaches; and carefully enumerating all his vices, &c. Musicians led up the procession, and played triumphal pieces in praise of the general; and these were followed by young men, who led the victims which were to be sacrificed on the occasion, with their horns gilded, and their heads and necks adorned with ribbands and garlands. Next followed carts, loaded with the spoils taken from the enemy, with their horses, chariots, &c. These were followed by the kings, princes, or generals, taken in the war, loaded with chains. Immediately after these, came the triumphal chariot, before which, as it passed, the people strewed flowers, and shouted Iotriumphe!

The triumphal chariot was followed by the senate, and the procession was closed by the priests and their attendants, with the different sacrificial utensils; and a white ox, which was to be the chief victim. They then passed through the triumphal arch, along the via sacra to the capitol, where the victims were slain.

During this time, all the temples were opened, and every altar smoked with offerings and incense.

The people at Corinth were sufficiently acquainted with the nature of a triumph: about two hundred years before this, Luc-umph in Christ; and maketh manifest the savour of his knowledge by us in every place.

15 For we are unto God a sweet savour of Christ, in them that are saved, and in them that perish:

16 To the one we are the savour of death unto death; and to the other the savour of life unto life. And who is sufficient for these things?

17 For we are not as many, which corrupt the word of God; but as of sincerity, but as of God, in the sight of God speak we in Christ.

1 Cor 15.10. Ch. 3.5, 6.—n Or, deal deceitfully with.—v Ch. 4.2 & 11.13. 2 Pet. 2.8.—w Ch. 1.12 & 4.2.—x Or, of.

cus Mummius, the Roman consul, had conquered all Achææ, destroyed Corinth, Thebes, and Chalcis; and, by order of the senate, had a grand triumph, and was surnamed Achæicus. St. Paul had now a triumph, (but of a widely different kind,) over the same people; his triumph was in Christ, and to Christ he gives all the glory; his sacrifice was that of thanksgiving to the Lord; and, the incense offered on the occasion, caused the savour of the knowledge of Christ to be manifested in every place. As the smoke of the victims, and incense offered on such an occasion, would fill the whole city and their perfume; so the odour of the name and doctrine of Christ, filled the whole of Corinth, and the neighbouring regions; and the apostles appeared as triumphing, in and through Christ, over devils, idols, superstition, ignorance, and vice, wherever they came.

15. For we are unto God a sweet savour of Christ] The apostle still alludes to the case of a triumph; the conqueror always represented the person of Jupiter; as even the heathens supposed, that God alone could give the victory; and, as the punishment of death was inflicted on some of the captives, who had often rebelled, and broken leagues and covenants; so others were spared, made tributaries, and often became allies: alluding to this, the apostle says, we are a sweet savour to God, we have fulfilled his will in faithfully proclaiming the Gospel, and fighting against sin. And, as he has determined, that those who believe, shall be saved, and those who believe not, shall perish; we are as equally acceptable to him, though we unsuccessfully preach the Gospel to some who obstinately reject it, and so perish; as we are in preaching to others who believe, and are saved.

16. To the one we are the savour of death unto death] There are several sayings among the ancient Jewish writers similar to this. In Debarin Rabba, sect. i. fol. 218, it is said, "As the bee brings home honey to its owner, but stings others; so is it with the words of the law." מִיָּדָם עֲשֵׂה שֶׁנֶּאֱמָר לֵיטְרָאֵל לֵיטְרָאֵל; "They are a savour of lives to the Israelites." וְהָיָה לָהֶם לֵיטְרָאֵל לֵיטְרָאֵל; "And a savour of death to the people of this world." The learned reader may see much more to this effect in Schoettgen. The apostle's meaning is plain; those who believe and receive the Gospel, are saved; those who reject it, perish. The meaning of the rabbins is not less plain; the Israelites received the law and the prophets as from God; and thus possessed the means of salvation. The Gentiles ridiculed and despised them, and thus continued in the path of death. The same happens to the present day, to those who receive, and to those who reject the Gospel: it is the means of salvation to the former; it is the means of destruction to the latter; for they are not only not saved, because they do not believe the Gospel; but they are condemned because they reject it. For, how can they escape who neglect so great a salvation? The sun, which nourishes the tree that is planted in a good soil, decomposes and destroys it, if plucked up and laid on the surface.

That the saved, σῶζομενοι, and they that perish, ἀπολλυμενοι, mean those who receive and obey the Gospel, and those who reject it, and live and die in sin, needs no proof. No other kinds of reprobate and elect, in reference to the eternal world, are known in the Books of God; though they abound in the books of men. The Jews were possessed with such an exalted opinion of their own excellence, that they imagined that all the love and mercy of God were concentrated among themselves; and that God never would extend his grace to the Gentiles.

Such sentiments may become Jews; but when we find some Gentiles arrogating to themselves all the salvation of God, and endeavouring to prove that he has excluded the major part even of their own world, the Gentiles, from the possibility of obtaining mercy; and that God has made an eternal purpose, that the death of Christ shall never avail them; and that no saving grace shall ever be granted to them; and that they shall infallibly and eternally perish! What shall we say to such things? It is Judaism in its worst shape; Judaism with innumerable deteriorations. The propagators of such systems, must answer for them to God.

Who is sufficient for these things? Is it the false apostle that has been labouring to pervert you? Or, is it the men to whom God has given an extraordinary commission, and sealed it by the miraculous gifts of the Holy Ghost? That this is the apostle's meaning, is evident from the following verse.

17. For we are not as many, which corrupt the word of God] God has made us sufficient for these things, by giving us his own pure doctrine, the ministry of reconciliation, which we conscientiously preserve and preach: and we act, not like many among you, who, having received that doctrine, corrupt it; mingling with it their own inventions; and explaining away its force and influence, so as to accommodate it to men of carnal minds.

The word κατασκευαστες, from κατασκευα, a tavern-keeper, signifying acting like an unprincipled vintner; for this class of men have ever been notorious for adulterating their wines; mixing them with liquors of no worth, that thereby they might increase their quantity; and thus the mixture was sold for the same price as the pure wine. Isa. i. 22. Thy wine is mixed with water; the Septuagint thus translates α καπαλου σου μισχοισι τον ουνον σου, "Thy vintners mix thy wine with water;" that is, thy false prophets and corrupt priests adulterate the word of God, and render it of none effect, by their explanations and traditions.

The word has been used, both among the Greeks and Latins, to signify a prostitution of what was right and just, for the sake of gain. So Herodian, lib. vi. cap. 11. Επιποιον καπηλευσεις, "Making peace for money." So Caiopani Bellum, is "To make war for money." In short, the word is used to signify any artifice employed to get gain, by making a thing look more or better than it is; or mingling, that which is excellent with what is not so, to promote the gain of the adulterator.

It is used by Aristophanes, Plato, Act. iv. scene 5. ver. 1051. to express an old woman, who was painted and painted, to hide her deformity.

Ουδ' οτι, επι χειρην καπηλευσις εχει

Ει δ' επιβουλιαι τωτοι τα Φυμιδιου.

Ουδ'ε καταδολα τινος προσ γε τα οαχη.

Not at all: the old woman is painted:

If the print were washed off, then you

Would plainly see her wrinkled face.

Where see the note of the scholiast, who observes, that the term is applied to those who deal in clothes, padding, mingling, &c. as well as to those who mix bad wine with good. Καπηλευσις εχει. If an αρχιεπισκοπος or καταδολα γαρ εν κατασκευαστην τα ιερατα ενδοξαι, και τον ουνον δε υποδολωσιν, συμμιγνυστας αμεινον σαρπον. Vid. Kusteri Aristoph. pag. 15.

But as of sincerity Εξ αληκειας. See the note on chap. v. ver. 12. We receive the doctrine pure from God; we keep it pure; and deliver it in its purity to mankind. For we speak in Christ, in the things of his Gospel, as being in the sight of God; our whole souls, and all their motives, being known to him. As the unprincipled vintner knows that he adulterates the wine, his conscience testifying thus; so we know that we deliver the sincere truth of God, our conscience witnessing that we deliver it to you, as we receive it, by the inspiration of the Spirit of truth.

1. That St. Paul was a man of a very tender and loving spirit, is evident from all his epistles; but especially from this; and particularly from the chapter before us. It was not an easy thing with him to give a reproof; and nothing but a sense of his duty to God and his church could have led him to use his apostolical power, to inflict spiritual punishment on transgressors. He felt like a loving and tender father, who, being obliged to correct his forward and disobedient child, feels in his own heart the pain of a hundred blows, for that occasioned by one lash on the body of his son. There are some ministers who think nothing of cutting off members from the church of Christ; they seem to do it, if not cheerfully, yet with indifference and unconcern! How can this be! Nothing but absolute duty to God should induce any man to separate from the visible church any person; and then, it must be on the conviction that the case is totally hopeless. And who, even in those circumstances, that knows the worth of a soul, can do it without torment of heart!

2. We must not only love the doctrines, but also the morality of the Gospel. He who loves this, will not corrupt it; but as Quesset says truly, in order to love the truth, a man must practise it; as, in order to practise it, he must love it. That a minister, says he, may preach the word of God in such a manner as is worthy of him; he must, with St. Paul, be always mindful of these three things: 1. That he be sent by God, and that he speak directly from him; and as his ambassador. 2. That he speak as in his presence, and under his immediate inspiration. 3. That he consider himself as being in the place of Christ, and endeavour to minister to the souls of men, as he has reason to believe Christ would do, were he in the place; and as he knows Christ did, when he sojourned among men. The minister of the Gospel is Christ's ambassador, and he prays men in Christ's stead to be reconciled to God.—See chap. v. 20. The people should consider the nature of this ambassage; receive it as coming immediately from God, that it may accomplish the end for which he has sent it.

CHAPTER III.

The apostle shews, in opposition to his detractors, that the faith and salvation of the Corinthians was a sufficient testimony of his Divine mission; that he needed no letters of recommendation, the Christian converts at Corinth being a manifest proof that he was an apostle of Christ, 1-3. He extols the Christian ministry as being infinitely more excellent than that of Moses, 4-12. Compares the different modes of announcing the truth, under the Law and under the Gospel; in the former it was obscurely delivered; and the veil of darkness, typified by the veil which Moses wore, is still on the hearts of the Jews; but when they turn to Christ, this veil shall be taken away, 13-15. On the contrary, the Gospel dispensation is spiritual; leads to the nearest views of heavenly things; and those who receive it, are changed into the glorious likeness of God, by the agency of his Spirit, 17, 18. fulfil these promises; and he fulfils only those which he makes himself. All those promises have been anzen; ratified and fulfilled to you who have believed on Christ Jesus, according to our preaching. Therefore ye are God's workmanship; and it is only by God's sufficiency, that we have been able to do any thing: this I believe to be the apostle's meaning in this place; and that he speaks here merely of the Gospel scheme; and the inability of human wisdom to invent it: and the words λογισθέντες τι, which we translate to think any thing, signify properly, to find any thing out by reasoning; and as the Gospel scheme of salvation is the subject in hand, to that subject the words are to be referred and limited. The words, however, contain also a general truth; we can neither think, act, nor be without God. From him we have received all our powers, whether of body or of mind; and without him we can do nothing. But we may abuse both our power of thinking and acting; for we are power to think, and the power to act, are widely distinct from the act of thinking, and the act of doing. God gives us the power of capacity to think and act, but he neither thinks nor acts for us. It is on this ground that we may abuse our powers, and think evil, and act wickedly; and it is on this ground that we are accountable for our thoughts, words, and deeds.

6. Who hath made us able ministers? This is a more formal answer to the question, Who is sufficient for these things? ἡμεῖς ταπεινοὶ καὶ ἄνθρωποι; clap. ii. 16. God, says the apostle, has made us able ministers of these things; ὁ θεὸς ἡμᾶς ἐκέννηκεν, he has made us sufficient for these things; for the reader will observe, that he uses the same word in both places. We apostles excited, under the Divine influence, what God himself has devised. We are ministers of the new covenant; of this new dispensation of truth, light, and life, by Christ Jesus. A system which not only proves itself to have come from God; but necessarily implies, that God himself by his own Spirit, is a continual agent in it; ever bringing its mighty purposes to pass. On the words καὶν διαθήκη, new covenant, see the PREFACE to the Gospel of St. Matthew.

Not of the letter, but of the spirit] The apostle does not mean here, as some have imagined, that he states himself to be a minister of the New Testament, in opposition to the Old: and that it is the Old Testament that kills, and the New that gives life; but that the New Testament gives the proper meaning of the Old; for the old covenant had its letter and its spirit; its literal and its spiritual meaning. The law was founded on the very supposition of the Gospel; and all its sacrifices, types, and ceremonies, refer to the Gospel. The Jews rested in the letter, which not only afforded no means of life, but killed, by condemning every transgressor to death. They did not look at the spirit; did not endeavour to find out the spiritual meaning; and therefore they rejected Christ, who was the end of the law for justification; and so, for redemption from death, to every one that believes. The new covenant set all these spiritual things at once before their eyes; and showed them the end, object, and design of the law; and thus the apostles who preached it, were ministers of that Spirit which gives life.

Every institution has its letter, as well as its spirit; as, every word must refer to something, of which it is the sign or signifier. The Gospel has both its letter and its spirit; and multitudes of professing Christians, by resting in the LETTER, receive not the life which is calculated to impart. Water, in baptism, is the letter that points out the purification of the soul; they who rest in this letter, are without this purification; and dying in that state, they die eternally. Bread and wine, in the sacrament of the Lord's supper, are the letter; the atonement efficacy of the death of Jesus, and the grace, communicated by this to the soul of a believer, are the spirit. Multitudes rest in this letter; simply receiving these symbols, without reference to the atonement, or to their guilt; and thus lose the benefit of the atonement and the salvation of their souls. The whole Christian life is comprehended by our Lord under the letter follow me. Does not any one see, that a man, taking up this letter only and following Christ through Judaea, Galilee, Samarita, &c. to the city, temple, villages, sea-coast, mountains, &c. fulfilled no part of the spirit, and might, with all this following, lose his soul? Whereas the spirit, viz. receive my doctrine, believe my sayings, look by faith for the fulfilment of my promises, imitate my example, would necessarily lead him to life eternal. It may be safely asserted, that the Jews, in no period of their history, ever rested more in the letter of their law; than the vast majority of Christians are doing in the letter of their Gospel. Unto multitudes of Christians Christ may truly say, Ye will not come unto me that ye may have life.

7. The ministration of death Here the apostle evidently

9 For, if the ministration of condemnation be glory, much more doth the ministration ¹ of righteousness exceed in glory.

10 For, even that which was made glorious had no glory in this respect, by reason of the glory that excelleth.

11 For, if that which is done away was glorious, much more that which remaineth is glorious.

12 Seeing then that we have such hope, ^u we use great v plain-ness of speech:

13 And not as Moses, w^h which put a veil over his face, that intends the law. It was a ministration δικαίωμα, or service of duty. It was the province of the law to ascertain the duty of man; to assign his duties; to fix penalties for transgression, &c. and by it is the knowledge of sin. As man is prone to sin, and is continually committing it; this law was to him a continual ministration of death. Its letter killed; and it was only the Gospel to which it referred, that could give life; because that Gospel held out the only available atonement.

Yet, this ministration of death, the ten commandments, written on stones, a part of the Mosaic institution, being put for the whole, was glorious; was full of splendour; for the apostle refers to the thunderings and lightnings, and luminous appearances, which took place in the giving of the law; so that the very body of Moses partook of the effulgence in such a manner that the children of Israel could not look upon his face; and he, to hide it, was obliged to use a veil. All this was intended to show the excellency of that law, as an institution coming immediately from God: and the apostle gives all its highlightings, that he may compare it to the Gospel, and thereby prove, that, glorious as it was, it had no glory that could be compared with that of the Gospel: and that even the glory it had was a glory that was to be done away; to be absorbed, as the light of the stars, planets, and moon, are absorbed in the splendour of the sun. See the notes on the viith chap. of Romans; and see those on Exod. xix. xx. and xxxiv. 29, &c. where this siphict is treated in all its details.

8. The ministration of the spirit] The Gospel dispensation, which gives the true spiritual sense of the law.

Be rather glorious] Forasmuch as the thing signified is of infinitely more consequence than that by which it is signified. The thing bread, will preserve a man alive: the word bread, can give life to nothing.

9. The ministration of condemnation] The law which ascertained sin, and condemned it to just punishment.

The ministration of righteousness] The Gospel, the grand business of which was to proclaim the doctrine, δικαιοσύνης, of justification; and to show how God could be just, and yet the justifier of him who believeth in Jesus.

Breeds in glory! For great, glorious, and awful as the law may be, in its opposition to sin, which is a reproach to man, and a dishonour to God; and in its punishment of sin; yet, it must be vastly exceeded by that system which, evidencing an equal abhorrence of sin, finds out a method to forgive it; to take away its guilt from the conscience; and remove all its infection from the soul. That this could be done, the law pointed out by its blood of bulls and of goats; but every considerate mind must see, that it was impossible for these to take away sin: it is the Gospel that does what the law signified; and, by its precious blood, procures the remission of a conscience that is guilty; and, by its substance, the substance of a man is greater than the shadow projected by that substance; so is the Gospel of Jesus Christ greater than the law with all its promises, types, ceremonies, and shadows.

10. For, even that which was made glorious! The law, which was exhibited for a time in great glory and splendour; partly when it was given, and partly by the splendour of God in the tabernacle, and first temple; but all this ceased, and was done away; was intended to give place to the Gospel: and has actually given place to that system; so that now, in no part of the world, is that law performed, even by the people who are attached to it, and reject the Gospel.

The glory that excelleth.] The Gospel dispensation, giving supereminent displays of the justice, holiness, goodness, mercy, and majesty of God.

1). For, if that which is done away, &c.] Here is another striking difference between the law and the Gospel. The former is termed καταργημενον, that which is counter-worked and abolished: the latter το μνον, that which continues, which is not for a particular time, place, and people, as the law was: but for ALL times, all places, and all people. As a great, universal, and permanent good vastly excels a good that is small, partial, and transitory, so does the Gospel dispensation that of the law.

12. Seeing—we have such hope] Such glorious prospects as those blessings which the Gospel sets before us; producing such confidence, as the fulfilment of so many promises has already done; and that God will still continue to work for us and by us.

We use great plainness of speech Πόλη παρησυχία χρῶμεθα, we speak not only with all confidence, but with all imaginable plainness; keeping back nothing; disguising nothing; concealing nothing; and here we differ greatly from the Jewish doctors, and from the Gentile philosophers, who affect obscurity; and endeavour, by figures, metaphors, and allegories, to hide every thing from the vulgar. But we wish that all may hear; and we speak so, that all may understand.

the children of Israel could not steadfastly look to ^a the end of that which is abolished:

14 But ^b their minds were blinded: for until this day remaineth the same veil untaken away in the reading of the old testament; which veil is done away in Christ.

15 But even unto this day, when Moses is read, the veil is upon their heart.

^a Rom. 10. 1. Gal. 3. 23.—^b Isa. 6. 10. Matt. 13. 11. John 12. 40. Acts 28. 16. Rom. 11. 7, 8, 25. Ch. 4. 4.—^c Exod. 34. 34. Rom. 11. 23, 25.

13. And not as Moses]. The splendour of Moses's countenance was so great, that the Israelites could not bear to look upon his face; and therefore he was obliged to veil his face: this, it appears he did typically, to represent the types and shadows by which the whole dispensation of which he was the minister, was covered. So that the Israelites could not steadfastly look, could not then have the full view or discernment of that, in which the Mosaic dispensation should issue and terminate.

14. But their minds were blinded]. By resting in the letter, shutting their eyes against the light that was granted to them, they contracted a hardness or stupidity of heart. And the veil that was on the face of Moses, which prevented the glory of his face from shining out, may be considered as emblematical of the veil of darkness and ignorance that is on their hearts; and which hinders the glory of the Gospel from shining in.

Until this day, remaineth the same veil]. They are still ignorant of the spiritual meaning and intention of their own law, called here παλαια διαθηκη, the old covenant. See the word explained in the Preface to St. Matthew.

In the reading of the Old Testament]. Here is an evident allusion to the conduct of the Jews in their synagogues: when they read the law, they cover their whole head with a veil, which they term the תחתית talith, veil, from שבת talat, to cover; and this voluntary usage of theirs, the apostle tells us, is an emblem of the darkness of their hearts, while they are employed even in sacred duties.

Which veil is done away in Christ]. It is only by acknowledging Christ, that the darkness is removed; and the end and spiritual meaning of the law discerned.

16. When it shall turn to the Lord]. When the Israelitish nation shall turn to the Lord Jesus, the veil shall be taken away; the true light shall shine; and they shall see all things clearly.

There is an evident allusion here to the case of Moses, mentioned Exod. xxxiii. 34. When he came from the Lord, and spoke to the Israelites, he put the veil over his face; but when he returned to speak with the Lord, then he took off the veil. So when the Israelitish nation shall return to speak with, and pray to the Lord Jesus, the veil of darkness and ignorance shall be taken away from their hearts; but never before that time. The words seem to imply: 1. That there will be a conversion of the Jews to Christianity: and, 2. That this conversion will be en masse: that a time will come, when the whole nation of the Jews, in every place, shall turn to Christ; and then the Gentiles and Jews make one fold, under one Shepherd and Bishop of all souls.

17. Now the Lord is that spirit]. In ver. 6 and 8, the word πνευμα, spirit, evidently signifies the Gospel; so called, because it points out the spiritual nature and meaning of the law; because it produces spiritual effects; and because it is especially the dispensation of the Spirit of God. Here Jesus Christ is represented as that Spirit, because he is the end of the law for justification to every one that believes; and because the residue of the Spirit is with him; and he is the dispenser of all its gifts, graces, and influences.

And where the Spirit of the Lord is]. Wherever this Gospel is received, there the Spirit of the Lord is given: and wherever that Spirit lives and works, there is liberty, not only from the Jewish bondage, but from the slavery of sin; from its power, its guilt, and its pollution. See on John viii. 33—36.

18. But see all, with open face]. The Jews were not able to look on the face of Moses, the mediator of the old covenant; and therefore he was obliged to veil it; but all we Christians, with faces uncovered, behold, as clearly as we can see our own natural face in a mirror, the glorious promises and privileges of the Gospel of Christ; and while we contemplate, we anticipate them by desire and hope, and apprehend them by faith; and are changed from the glory there represented, to the enjoyment of the thing which is represented; even the glorious Image (righteousness and true holiness,) of the God of Glory.

As by the Spirit of the Lord]. By the energy of that Spirit of Christ which gives life and being to all the promises of the Gospel; and thus we are made partakers of the Divine nature,

16. Nevertheless, ^a when it shall turn to the Lord, ^b the veil shall be taken away.

17. Now, ^c the Lord is that Spirit; and where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty.

18. But we all, with open face beholding ^d as in a glass ^e the glory of the Lord, ^f are changed into the same image from glory to glory, even as ^g by the Spirit of the Lord.

^a 1 Cor. 13. 12.—^b Ver. 6. 1 Cor. 15. 45.—^c 1 Cor. 13. 12.—^d Ch. 4. 4, 6. 1 Tim. 1. 11.—^e Rom. 8. 29. 1 Cor. 15. 49. Gal. 3. 10.—^f Ver. 6. of the Lord the Spirit.

and escape all the corruptions that are in the world. This appears to me to be the general sense of this verse; its peculiar terms may be more particularly explained.

The word καρποφωρεσθαι, which we translate beholding in a glass, comes from καρ, against, and αφωρει, I look; and properly conveys the sense of looking into a mirror. Now as mirrors, among the Jews, Greeks, and Romans, were made of highly polished metal, (see the note on 1 Cor. xiii. 12.) it would often happen, especially in strong light, that the face would be greatly illuminated, and to this circumstance the apostle seems here to allude. So, by earnestly contemplating the Gospel of Jesus, and believing on him who is its author, the soul becomes illuminated with his Divine splendour, and we see the glorious form after which our minds are to be fashioned; and, by believing and receiving the influence of his Spirit, περισφαιρηθη, our form is changed, επὶ αὐτῷ εικονα, into the same image which we behold there; and this is the image of God, lost by our fall, and now recovered and restored by Jesus Christ: for, the shining of the face of God upon us, i. e. approbation, through Christ, is the cause of our transformation into the Divine image.

Dr. Whitby, in his notes on this chapter, produces six instances in which the apostle shows the Gospel to be superior to the law: 1. shall transcribe them, with further illustrations.

1. The glory appearing on Mount Sinai, made the people afraid of death, saying, Let not God speak to us any more, lest we die, Exod. xx. 19. Deut. xviii. 16, and thus they received the spirit of bondage to fear, Rom. viii. 15. Whilst we have given to us the spirit of power, and love, and of a sound mind, 2 Tim. i. 7. and the spirit of adoption, whereby we cry Abba Father! and to this difference the Epistle to the Hebrews alludes, chap. xii. 18—21.

2. Moses, with all his glory, was only the minister of the law written on tables of stone: the apostles are ministers of the Gospel, written on the hearts of believers. Moses gave the Jews only the letter that killeth: the apostles gave the Gospel, which is accompanied with the spirit that gives life.

3. The glory which Moses received at the giving of the law, did more and more diminish, because his law was a curtain aracy: but the glory which is received from Christ, is an increasing glory; the doctrine and the Divine influence remaining for ever.

4. The law was veiled under types and shadows; but the Gospel has scarcely any ceremonies; baptism and the Lord's supper being all that can be properly called such; and BELIEVE, LOVE, OBEY, the great precepts of the Gospel, are delivered with the utmost perspicuity. And indeed the whole doctrine of Christ crucified, is made as plain as human language can make it.

5. The Jews only saw the shining of the face of Moses through a veil; but we behold the glory of the Gospel of Christ in the person of Christ our lawgiver, with open face.

6. They saw it through a veil, which prevented the reflection, or shining of it, upon them; and so this glory shone only on the face of Moses, but not at all upon the people. Whereas, the glory of God, in the face of Jesus Christ, shines as in a mirror, which reflects the image upon Christian believers, so that they are transformed into the same image, deriving the glorious gifts and graces of the Spirit, with the Gospel, from Christ the Lord and distributor of them, 1 Cor. xii. 5. and so, the glory which he had from the Father, he has given to his genuine followers, John xvii. 22. It is, therefore, rather with true Christians, as it was with Moses himself, concerning whom God speaks thus: With him will I speak mouth to mouth, even apparently, and not in dark speeches: and the similitude of the Lord, εὐδοξασθαι Κυρίου, the glory of the Lord, shall he behold, Num. xii. 8. For, as he saw the glory of God apparently, so we with open face behold the glory of the Lord: as he, by seeing of this glory, was changed into the same likeness, and his face shone, or was δοξαζομεν, made glorious; so we, beholding the glory of the Lord in the face of Jesus Christ, chap. iv. 6. are changed into the same glory.

Thus we find that in every thing, the Gospel has a decided superiority over the law and its institutions.

CHAPTER IV.

St. Paul shows the integrity with which he had preached the Gospel of Christ, 1, 2. And, that if it was unprofitable to any who had heard it, it was because their unbelieving hearts were blinded, 3, 4. How he preached, and how he was qualified for the work, 5—7. The troubles and difficulties he met with in his labours, and the hope and consolations by which he was supported, 8—15. And the prospect he had of eternal blessedness, 16—18. [A. M. 4061. A. D. 57. NOTES.—Verse 1. Seeing we have this ministry]. The Gospel of which he gave that noble account which we read in the preceding chapter.

2 But have renounced the hidden things of ^c dishonesty, not walking in craftiness, ^d nor handling the word of God deceit-

We faint not]. We meet with many tribulations, but are supported in and through all by the grace of the Gospel. In stead of οὐκ ἐκασομεν, we faint not; οὐκ ἐκασομεν, we ac-fully; but * by manifestation of the truth, † commending ourselves to every man's conscience in the sight of God.

3 But, if our Gospel be hid, ‡ it is hid to them that are lost; not wickedly, is the reading of ADFG. and some others. Wakefield thinks it the genuine reading; it certainly makes a very good sense with what goes before and what follows. If we follow this reading, the whole verse may be read thus: Wherefore, as we have obtained mercy; or been graciously entrusted, πληθυνεν, with this ministry, we do not act wickedly, but have renounced the hidden things of dishonesty, &c.

2 But have renounced! Απειπαρεβα, we have disclaimed the hidden things of dishonesty; τα κρυπταρες ανωνυμς, the hidden things of shame; those things which wicked men do; and which they are ashamed to have known, and ashamed to own. Dr. Worthy thinks that the apostle refers to carnal abominations, of which the Jews and their rabbins were notoriously guilty. And it does appear, from the first epistle, that there were persons in Corinth who taught that fornication was no sin; and it appears also, that several had taken the part of the incestuous person.

Not talking in craftiness. Πανογογια; in subtilty, and clever cunning, as the false teachers did; who were accomplished fellows, and capable of any thing. The word is compounded of πω, all, and γωγω, work.

Not handling the word of God deceitfully. Not using the doctrines of the Gospel to serve any secular or carnal purpose; nor explaining away their force, so to palliate or excuse sin; nor generalizing its precepts, so as to excuse many, in particular circumstances, from obedience; especially in that which most crossed their inclinations. There were deceitful leaders of this kind, in Corinth; and there are many of them still in the garb of Christian ministers; persons who disguise that part of their creed, which, though they believe is of God, yet would make them unpopular; affecting moderation, in order to procure a larger audience, and more extensive support. Not attacking prevalent and popular vices: calling dissipation of mind, relaxation; and worldly and carnal pleasures, innocent amusements, &c. In a word, turning with the tide, and shifting with the wind of popular opinion, prejudice, fashion, &c.

But by manifestation of the truth. An open explicit acknowledgment of what we know to be the truth; what we are assured is the Gospel of Jesus; concealing nothing; blunting the edge of no truth; explaining spiritual things, not in the words of man's wisdom, but in those taught by the Spirit of God.

Commending ourselves to every man's conscience. Speaking so, that every man's conscience shall bear its testimony that we proclaim the truth of God. This is one characteristic of Divine truth; even every man's conscience will acknowledge it, though it speak decidedly against his own practices.

In the sight of God. Whose eye is ever on the heart and conscience of man; and who always bears testimony to his own word.

3 But if our Gospel be hid. Κεκαλυμμενον, veiled; he refers to the subject that he had treated so particularly in the conclusion of the preceding chapter. If there be a veil on the Gospel, it is cast to the wilfully blind; and if any man's heart be veiled that hears this Gospel, it is a proof that he is among the lost, απωλημενος; those who are fully under the power of sin; who have given up themselves to work wickedness; persons who are mere heathens, or live like such; and yet such as Jesus Christ came to seek and save: for the word does not necessarily imply those that will perish eternally; but is a common epithet to point out a man without the Gospel, and without God in the world. Christ commands his disciples in preaching the Gospel, to φυ, προβατα τα απολωλατα, to the lost sheep of the house of Israel; Matt. vi. 10, for himself says, Matt. xviii. 11. and Luke xxi. 10. The son of man is come, ζητησαι και σωσαι τα απολωλα, to seek and to save that which is lost. And such persons he represents under the parable of the lost sheep; for to find, το απολωλος, that which is lost, the good shepherd leaves the ninety and nine in the wilderness, and goes in search of it. Matt. xviii. 12. Luke xv. 4. The word more properly signifies in all those connexions, and in the parallel passages not those who are lost, but those who are perishing; and will perish, if not sought and saved.

4 In whom the God of this world, &c. We see here that those whose minds were blinded, are they who believe not; and because they believe not, their minds continue in darkness; and are proper subjects for Satan to work on; and he deepens the darkness; and increases the hardness. But who is meant by the god of this world? It is generally answered, the same who is called the Prince of this world, John xvi. 11. But the question recurs, who is the Prince of this world? and the answer to both is, SATAN. The reader will do well to consult the notes on John xii. 31. and the concluding observations on John xiv. I must own I feel considerable reluctance to assign the epithet, ο θεος, The God to Satan; and were there not a noted prejudice in favour of the common opinion; the contrary might be well vindicated, viz. that by the God of this world, the Supreme Being is meant, who in his judgment of Christ, † who is the image of God, should shine unto them.

5 For we preach not ourselves, but Christ Jesus the Lord, and ourselves your servants for Jesus' sake.

6 For God † who commanded the light to shine out of dark-ment gave over the minds of the unbelieving Jews to spiritual darkness, so that destruction came upon them to the uttermost. Satan, it is true, has said that the kingdoms of the world and their glory are his; and that he gives them to whomsoever he will: Matt. iv. 8, 9. but has God ever said so? and are we to take this assertion of the boasting devil and father of lies for truth? certainly not. We are not willing to attribute the blinding of men's minds to God, because we sometimes forget that he is the God of justice, and may in judgment remove mercies from those that abuse them: but this is repeatedly attributed to him in the Bible; and the expression before us is quite a parallel to the following: Isa. vi. 9. — Go and tell this people; hear ye indeed, but understand not; and see ye indeed, but perceive not. MAKE THE HEART OF THIS PEOPLE FAT, AND MAKE THEIR EARS HEAVY, AND SHUT THEIR EYES, LEST THEY SEE WITH THEIR EYES, AND HEAR WITH THEIR EARS, AND UNDERSTAND WITH THEIR HEART, &c. and see the parallel places, Matt. xiii. 14, 15. Mark iv. 12. John xii. 40. and particularly Rom. xi. 8—10. GOD HATH GIVEN THEM THE SPIRIT OF SLUMBER, EYES THAT THEY SHOULD NOT SEE, AND EARS THAT THEY SHOULD NOT HEAR: let their EYES BE DARKENED, &c. Now all this is spoken of the same people, in the same circumstances of wilful rebellion, and obstinate unbelief; and the great God of heaven and earth, is he who judiciously blinds their eyes; makes their hearts fat, i. e. stupid; gives them the spirit of slumber, and binds down their back, &c. On these very grounds it is exceedingly likely, that the apostle means the true God, by the words the God of this world.

And as to the expression this world, αινος τωτον, we are not to imagine that it necessarily means wicked men, or a wicked age; for it is frequently used to express the whole mundane system, and all that is called time: Whosoever speaketh against the Holy Ghost, it shall not be forgiven him neither, to τωτον το κοινον, in this world, nor in the world to come, Matt. xii. 32. In Luke xx. 34, the children, υιοι ταυ αινος τωτου, of this world, mean simply mankind at large, in their state of probation in this lower world, in opposition to their state in the world to come. The same meaning the word has in several other places, to which I need not refer; it simply implying the present state of things, governed by the Divine Providence, in contradistinction from the eternal state; and it is very remarkable that in 1 Tim. i. 17. God himself is called Βασιλεως του αιωνος, the king of the world; what we call king eternal; but here evidently means Him who governs both worlds; and rules in time and eternity. This character among the Asiatics is considered essential to God; and therefore in the very first sura of the Koran he is called رب العالمين Rubbi alalameen, "The Lord of both worlds," an expression perfectly similar to that above. But it is needless to multiply examples, they exist in abundance. Some, and particularly the ancient fathers, have connected τω αιωνος τωτον, with των αιωνων, and have read the verse — But God hath blinded the minds of the unbelievers of this world, &c. Irenaeus, Tertullian, Chrysostom, Theodoret, Photius, Theophylact, and St. Augustin, all plead for the above meaning; and St. Augustin says, that it was the opinion of almost all the ancients.

Lest the light of the glorious Gospel. They have resisted the grace which God gave them; and have refused to yield to the evidences which amply prove the Messiahship of Jesus; and therefore their eyes were judiciously darkened; as it is said in the prophet, He hath closed their eyes, and hath given them the spirit of slumber. That is, they have shut their eyes against the light, and their blindness and stupor are the consequence.

By glorious Gospel, we are to understand the bounteous Gospel; that which comes with so much light and evidence to every candid mind.

Who is the image of God. Christ is called, Heb. i. 3. the brightness of God's glory, and the express image of his person. See the note there.

5 For we preach not ourselves. We neither proclaim our own wisdom nor power; we have nothing but what we have received; we do not wish to establish our own authority; nor to procure our own ennoblement.

But Christ Jesus the Lord. We proclaim the author of this glorious Gospel as CHRIST, ο Χριστος, the same as משיח ha-mashiach, the MESSIAH, the anointed one; Him of whom the prophets wrote; and who is the expectation, as he is the glory of Israel. We proclaim him as JESUS יהושע Yehoshua, the Saviour and Deliverer, who saves men from their sins. See Matt. i. 21. And we proclaim Jesus of Nazareth to be the long expected Messiah; and that there will be none other. And further, we proclaim this Jesus, the Messiah, to be the Lord, ο Κυριος, the great Ruler who has all power in heaven and earth; who made and governs the world; and who can save to the uttermost all that come to God through him. Such was the Redeemer preached by St. Paul.

We belong to Jesus; and are your servants on his account and by his order.

6. For God, who commanded the light to shine out of darkness] The apostle refers here to Gen. 1. 3. For, when God created the heavens and the earth, DARKNESS was on the face of the deep, and God said, let there be light, and there was light. Thus he caused the light to shine out of darkness.

7. But we have this treasure in earthen vessels] He has given our hearts the glorious light of the Gospel; as he has given the world the glorious light of the sun. As sure, therefore, as God is the author of the light, and the creator of the universe, so sure is he the author of the Gospel: it is no human invention; and is as far beyond the power of man's wisdom and might, as the creation of the world is beyond all created power, energy, and skill.

The light of the knowledge] To give us that light, that we might enlighten others; this appears to me to be the design of the apostle's τὴν φωταῖαν τῆς γνώσεως τῆς δοξῆς τοῦ Θεοῦ, or, as Dr. Wadley paraphrases it, to give us, and enable us to give to others, the light of the knowledge of God through Christ.

In the face of Jesus Christ] It is in and through Jesus that we can receive the Divine light: and it is in and by him that we can be made partakers of the Divine glory. The light, glory, holiness, and glory of God, are reflected upon, and communicated to us through Jesus the Christ. And it is ἐν παρουσίᾳ, in the appearance and person of Jesus Christ, that these blessings are communicated to us.

7. But we have this treasure in earthen vessels] The original, σπαικίνοις αὐταῖς, signifies more literally vessels made of shells, which are very brittle; and, as a shell is the outward part of a fish, it is very fit, as Dr. Hammond observes, to resemble our bodies in which our souls dwell. The Platonists make two bodies of a man; the one they call σῶμα ψυχῆς, the churiot of the soul; the other, that which we see and touch; and this they call σπαικίνοις, which is the same to us as the shell is to the fish. The word σπαικίνοις, not only signifies a shell, or vessel made of shell, but also σπῆλον σπῆλαιον, an earthen vessel, which has been burnt in the kiln; and earthen vessels, or pottery in general: the difference between σπῆλον σπαικίνοις, earthen ware, and σπῆλον κεραμῆος, the potter's vessel, is this: the latter implies the vessel as it comes out of the hands of the potter, before it is burnt; and the other is the vessel as it has passed through the kiln. St. Chrysostom, speaking of this difference, observes, that the vessels once baked in the kiln, if broken, are incapable of being restored, οὐ τὰς ἐκ τοῦ πῦρος, ἐγγὺς ἐστὶν αὐτῶν ἀπὸ τοῦ πῦρος, because of the hardness once gotten by fire; whereas the other are of clay unbaked, if they be spoiled, πάλιν πῦρος τὸ ἐκείνου ἐκινῶν σῶμα, they may easily, by the skill of the potter, be restored to some second form. See Hammond. This comports excellently with the idea of St. Paul: our bodies are in a recoverable form; they are very frail, and easily marred; but by the skill of the workman, they may be easily built up anew, and made like unto his glorious body. The light and salvation of God in the soul of man, is a heavenly treasure in a very mean casket.

The rabbins have a mode of speech very similar to this. "The daughter of the emperor thus addressed Rab. Joshua, the son of Chananiah:—Oh! how great is thy skill in the law, and yet how deformed thou art! what a great deal of wisdom is laid up in a sordid vessel!" The rabbin answered, Tell me, I pray thee, of what are those vessels in which you keep your wines? She answered,—they are earthen vessels. He replied,—how is it, seeing ye are rich, that ye do not lay up your wine in silver vessels, for the common people lay up their wine in earthen vessels? She returned to her father, and persuaded him to have all the wine put into silver vessels; but the wine turned acid; and when the emperor heard it, he inquired of his daughter, who it was, that had given her that advice? she told him that it was Rabbi Joshua. The rabbi told the whole story to the emperor, and added this sentence:—The wisdom and study of the law cannot endure in a comely man. Cesar objected, and said:—There are comely persons who have made great progress in the study of the law.—The rabbi answered,—Had they not been so comely, they would have made greater progress, for a man who is comely, has not a humble mind; and therefore he soon forgets the whole law." See Schottgen. There is a great deal of good sense in this allegory; and the most superficial reader may find it out.

11 For, we which live ² are always delivered unto death for Jesus' sake, that the life also of Jesus might be made manifest in our mortal flesh.

12 So then ² death worketh in us, but life in you.

That the excellency of the power may be of God, and not of us.] God keeps us continually dependent upon himself; we have nothing but what we have received: and we receive every necessary supply, just when it is necessary; and have nothing at our own command. The good, therefore, that is done, is so evidently from the power of God, that none can pretend to share the glory with him.

8. We are troubled on every side] We have already seen in the notes on the ninth chapter of the preceding epistle, that St. Paul has made several allusions to those public games which were celebrated every fifth year at the Isthmus of Corinth; and those games have been in that place, particularly described. In this, and the three following verses, the apostle makes allusions to the contests at those games; and the terms which he employs in these verses cannot be understood, but in reference to those agonistical exercises to which he alludes. Dr. Hammond has explained the whole on this ground; and I shall here borrow his help. There are four pairs of expressions taken from the customs of the agonists. 1. Troubled on every side, yet not distressed. 2. Perplexed, but not in despair. 3. Persecuted, but not forsaken. 4. Cast down, but not destroyed. Three of these pairs belong to the customs of wrestling; the fourth, to that of running in the race.

Troubled on every side, &c.] ἐν παντὶ θλιβομένοις—The word θλιβομαι, belongs clearly to τάλω, wrestle. So says Aristotle, Rhet. lib. i. cap. 5. (the scholiast on that place) α γὰρ ἀνταγωνιστὴς—θλιβει, καὶ κερταται ποδῶν αἰκας: "He that can gripe his adversary, and take him up is a good wrestler;" there being two dexterities in that exercise; 1. To gripe, and 2. To throw down, which Hesychius calls ὀρεω, and κρατειν the first of these is here mentioned, and expressed by θλιβομαι, to be pressed down; to which is here opposed, as in a higher degree, σπαικίνοισι, to be brought to distress, as when one cannot get out of his antagonist's hands, nor make any resistance against him. So Isa. xxviii. 20. σπαικίνοισι ἐν ὀμαῖς ἐπὶ μαχέθαι, we are brought to such extremities that we can fight no longer.

Perplexed, but not in despair] Αἰσχρομένοι, ἀλλ' οὐκ ἐλπίσμενοι. The word αἰσχρομαι, to be in perplexity, is fit for the wrestler, who, being puzzled by his antagonist's skill, knows not what to do; so in Hesychius, ἀπαρτερες, ἀμεινωμετες, they are that are not able to do, or attempt any thing, yet are not ἐλπίσμενοι, they miscarry not finally, οὐδὲ ἀγόμενοι, stand after all upright; οὐκ ἀποκινωσκοντες καὶ ἡττομένοι, despair not, nor are they overcome, but find a happy issue out of all, being at last conquerors.

9. Persecuted, but not forsaken] Διωκόμενοι ἀλλ' οὐκ εγκαταλείπονται. The διωκόμενοι, pursued, is peculiar to the ἄγους, or race, when one being foremost, others pursue, and get up close after him, endeavouring to outstrip him, but cannot succeed: this is the meaning of οὐκ εγκαταλείπονται, not out-stripped, or out-gone, as the word implies. So in Plutarch, τὰς ἀντιδιώκοντας ὁ σολωνιστὴς, they do not crown them that are distanced, or left behind. So says the apostle, 1 Cor. ix. all run, but only one receiveth the prize.

Cast down, but not destroyed] Καταβαλλόμενοι ἀλλ' οὐκ ἀπολλύμενοι. This also belongs to wrestlers, where he that throws the other first, is conqueror. And so Hesychius, καταβαλλειν, νικησαι, ὀρεω, to cast down is to overcome, to throw.—And then, the being not destroyed, signifies, that although they were thrown down, cast into troubles and difficulties, yet they rose again, and surmounted them all.

10. Always bearing about in the body, &c.] Being every moment in danger of losing our lives in the cause of truth, as Jesus Christ was. We, in a word, bear his cross, and are ready to offer up our lives for him. There is probably an allusion here to the marks, wounds, and bruises, which the contenders in those games got, and continued to carry throughout life.

That the life also of Jesus might be made manifest] That in our preservation, the success of our ministry, and the miracles we work, we might be able to give the fullest demonstration, that Jesus is risen again from the dead; and that we are strengthened by him to do all these mighty works.

11. For we which live] And yet, although we are preserved alive, we are in such continual dangers, that we carry our life in our hands, and are constantly in the spirit of sacrifice. But the life, the preserving power of Christ, is manifest in our continual support.

12. Death worketh in us, &c.] We apostles are in continual danger, and live a dying life: while you who have received this Gospel from us, are in no danger.

13. We, having the same spirit of faith] As David had when he wrote Psal. cxvi. 10. I believed, therefore have I grace might through the thanksgiving of many redound to the glory of God.

16 For which cause we faint not; but though our outward man perish, yet the inward man is renewed day by day.

17 For, our light affliction, which is but for a moment, g Rom 7:22. Eph 3:16. Col. 3:10. 1 Pet. 3:4.—h Matt. 5:12. Rom 8:18.

spoken; we also believe that we shall receive the fulfilment of all God's promises; and being fully convinced of the truth of the Christian religion, we speak, and testify that our deliverance is from God; that he does not fail those who trust in him; and that he saves to the uttermost them who come unto him through Christ Jesus.

14. Knowing, that he which raised up the Lord, &c. And though we shall at last, seal this truth with our blood; we fear not, being persuaded that as the body of Christ was raised from the dead by the power of the Father, so shall our bodies be raised; and that we shall have an eternal life with him in glory.

15. For, all things are for your sakes We proclaim all these truths, and bear all these sufferings for your sakes; thinking all our sufferings nothing if we can gain converts to Christ, and build believers up on their most holy faith.

That the abundant grace Η χάρις πλεονακεία; the abundant benefit; the copious outpouring of the gifts and graces of the Holy Spirit by which we have been favoured and enriched; may, through the thanksgiving of many, redound to the glory of God, i. e. that the gratitude of the multitudes which have been converted, may keep place with the blessings which they have received, and περισσεύωσι, abound, as these blessings have abounded.

16. For which cause we faint not Ουκ εκκακούμεν. See on verse i. Here we have the same various reading εκακούμεν, we do no wickedness; and it is supported by BDEFG, and some others; but it is remarkable that Mr. Wakefield follows the common reading here, though the various reading is at least as well supported in this verse as in verse first. The common reading, faint not, appears to agree best with the apostle's meaning.

But though our outward man That is, our body: that part of us that can be seen, heard, and felt—perish, be slowly consumed by continual trials and afflictions; and be martyred at last.

Yet the inward man Our soul; that which cannot be felt or seen by others; is renewed, is revived, and receives a daily increase of light and life from God: so that we grow more holy, more happy, and more meet for glory every day.

It was an opinion among the Jews, that even spirits stood in need of continual renovation. They say that "God renews the angels daily, by putting them into the fiery river from which they proceeded, and then gives them the same name they had before." And they add, that in like manner, he renews the hearts of the Israelites every year, when they turn to him by repentance. It is a good antidote against the fear of death, to find, as the body grows old and decays, the soul grows young, and is invigorated. By the outward man, and the inward man, St. Paul shows that he was no materialist; he believed that we have both a body and a soul; and so far was he from supposing that when the body dies, the whole man is decomposed, and continues so to the resurrection: that he asserts that the decays of the one, lead to the invigorating of the other; and that the very decomposition of the body itself leaves the soul in the state of renewed youth. The vile doctrine of materialism, is not apostolic.

17. For our light affliction, &c. Mr. Blackwall, in his sacred classics, has well illustrated this passage. I shall here produce his paraphrase as quoted by Dr. Dodd.—"This is one of the most emphatic passages in all St. Paul's writings, in which he speaks as much like an orator, as he does as an apostle. The lightness of the trial is expressed by το ελαφρόν της θλίψεως, the lightness of our affliction; as if he had said, it is even levity itself in such a comparison. On the other hand, the καθ' υπερβολήν εἰς ὑπερβολήν, which we render far more exceeding, is infinitely emphatical, and cannot be fully expressed by any translation. It signifies that all hyperboles fall short of describing that weight of eternal glory, so solid and lasting, that you may pass from hyperbole to hyperbole, and yet when you have gained the last, are infinitely below it. It is every where visible what influence St. Paul's Hebrew had on his Greek: ἄβυσσος signifies to be heavy, and to be glorious: the apostle in his Greek, unites these two significations, and says WEIGHT OF GLORY.

worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory;

18 While we look not at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen: for the things which are seen are temporal; but the things which are not seen are eternal.

1 Pet. 1:6 & 5:10.—1 Rom. 1:17 & 8:24. Ch 5:7. Gal. 3:11. Heb. 10:33 & 11:1.

St. Chrysostom's observations on these words are in his very best manner; and are both judicious and beautiful: ΤΙΘΗΣΙ παραλληλὰ τὰ παρόντα τοῖς μέλλουσιν: το παρὰ νῦν καὶ πρὸς τὸ αἰώνιον· τὸ ελαφρόν πρὸς τὸ βαρὺν τὴν θλίψιν πρὸς τὴν δόξαν· καὶ οὐδὲ ταῦτα ἀρκεῖται, ἀλλ' ἑτέραν τιμὴν λέγειν, ὑπερλατύνει αὐτήν, καὶ λεγόμεν, καθ' ὑπερβολήν εἰς ὑπερβολήν—τούτῃ, μέγας ὑπερβολικὸς ὑπερβολοῦς.

"The apostle opposes things present, to things future: a moment to eternity: lightness to weight: affliction to glory. Nor is he satisfied with this; but he adds another word, and doubles it, saying, καθ' υπερβολήν εἰς υπερβολήν: this is a magnitude excessively exceeding." See Parkhurst, sub voce υπερβολή.

18. While we look not at the things which are seen Μη σκοποῦνται; while we aim not at the things which are seen; do not make them our object; are not striving to obtain them, for they are not worthy the pursuit of an immortal spirit, because they are seen: they are objects to which the natural eye can reach; and they are προσωποια, temporary; they are to have a short duration; and must have an end. But the things which we make our scope and aim, are not seen; they are spiritual, and therefore invisible to the eye of the body; and besides, they are αἰώνια, eternal, things that are permanent; that can have no end: they are things which belong to God; holiness, happiness, and the endless communication and fruition of himself.

But we must remark that the light afflictions work out this far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory, only to those who do not look at the things which are seen. A man may be grievously afflicted, and yet have his eye bent on temporal good; from his afflictions he can derive no benefit; though many think that their glorification must be a necessary consequence of their afflictions; and hence we do not unfrequently hear among the afflicted poor—"Well, we shall not suffer both here and in the other world too." Afflictions may be means of preparing us for glory, if during them, we receive grace to save the soul: but afflictions of themselves, have no spiritual nor saving tendency: on the contrary, they sour the unregenerated mind, and cause murmurings against the dispensations of Divine Providence. Let us, therefore, look to God, that they may be sanctified; and when they are, then we may say exultingly, these light afflictions, which are but for a moment, work for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory. O world to come, in exchange for the present! O eternity, for a moment! O eternal communion in the holy blessed and eternal life of God, for the sacrifice of a poor, miserable, and corrupted life here on earth!—Whoever sets no value on this seed of a blessed eternity, knows not what it comprehends. That which the eyes of the flesh are capable of perceiving, is not worthy of a soul capable of possessing God. Nothing which is of a perishable nature can be the chief good of a being that was made for eternity!—Quesset.

CHAPTER V.

The apostle's strong hope of eternal glory, and earnest longings after that state of blessedness, 1—4. The assurance that he had of it from the Holy Spirit, and his carefulness to be always found pleasing to the Lord, 5—9. All must appear before the judgment seat of Christ, 10. Knowing that this awful event must take place, he laboured to convince men of the necessity of being prepared to meet the Lord, being influenced in this work by his love of Christ, 11—13. Jesus Christ having died for all, is a proof that all were dead, 14. Those for whom he died, should live to him, 15. We should know no man after the flesh, 16. They who are in Christ are new creatures, 17. The glorious ministry of reconciliation, 18—21. [A. M. 4061. A. D. 57. A. U. C. 810. An. Imp. Nerous Cæs. 4.]

FOR we know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens.

a Job 4:19. Ch. 4:7. 2 Pet. 1:13, 14.

NOTES.—Verse 1. If our earthly house of this tabernacle By earthly house, the apostle most evidently means the body in which the soul is represented as dwelling or sojourning for a time: and from which it is to be liberated at death: for, as death dissolves the tabernacle, it can then be no habitation for the soul. The apostle also alludes here to the ancient Jewish tabernacle, which, on all removals of the congregation, was dissolved, and taken in pieces; and the ark of the covenant, covered with its own curtains, was carried by itself; and when they came to the place of rest, then the dissolved parts of the tabernacle were put together as before. When we consider this simile, in connexion with the doctrine of the resurrection, which the apostle has treated so much at large in these epistles; and which he keeps constantly in view; then we shall see that he intends to convey the following meaning: that, as the tabernacle was taken down in order to be again put together, so the body is to be dissolved, in order to be re-edified: that, as the ark of the covenant subsisted by itself, while the tabernacle was down, so can the soul, when separated from the body. That, as the ark had then its own veil for its covering, Exod. xl. 21. so the soul is to have some vehicle in which it shall subsist, till it receives its body at the resurrection.

5 Now ^e he that hath wrought us for the selfsame thing is God, who also ^f hath given unto us the earnest of the Spirit.

A building of God] Some think this refers to a certain ecclesiastical vehicle with which God invests holy souls on their dismissal from the body: others suppose it relates to the resurrection body; and some imagine that it relates merely to the state of blessedness which the saints shall possess in the kingdom of glory. See the following note.

2. For in this we groan] While in this state, and in this body, we are encompassed with many infirmities, and exposed to many trials, so that life is a state of discipline and affliction; and every thing within and around us, says, "Arise, and depart, for this is not your rest!" Those who apply these words to what they call the apostle's sense of indolence sin, abuse the passage. There is nothing of the kind either mentioned or intended.

Desiring to be clothed upon with our house] This, and the following verses, are, in themselves, exceedingly obscure, and can be only interpreted by considering that the expressions used by the apostles are all Jerish, and should be interpreted according to their use of them. Schoettgen has entered largely into the argument here employed by the apostle, and brought forth much useful information.

He observes, first, that the Hebrew word בֵּית beith, which answers to the apostle's ἐνδομαχαια, to be clothed, signifies to be surrounded, covered, or invested with any thing. So, to be clothed with the uncircumcision, signifies to be uncircumcised. Valent Rubeni, fol. 163.

On the words Exod. xxiv. 18. Moses went into the midst of the cloud, and gat him up into the mount, Solar, Exod. fol. 77. has these words, He went into the midst of the cloud, as if one put on a garment: so he was clothed with the cloud. Solar, Levit. fol. 29. "The righteous are in the terrestrial Paradise, where their souls are clothed with the lucid crown;" i. e. they are surrounded, encompassed with light, &c.

2. The word בֵּית beith, house, in Hebrew, often denotes a robert, case, or clothing. So in the Targum of Onkelos, בֵּית beith aphi, the house of the face, is a veil: and so בֵּית beith atsabim, the house of the fingers; and בֵּית beith yah, the house of the hand; signify gloves; בֵּית beith regalim, the house of the feet; shoes. Therefore, ἐνδομαχαια—ἐνδομαχαια, to be clothed on with a house, may signify any particular qualities of the soul; what we, following the very same form of speech, call a habit; i. e. a coat or vestment. So we say the man has got a habit of vice, a habit of virtue, a habit of swearing, of humility, &c. &c.

3. The Jews attribute garments to the soul, both in this and the other world: and as they hold that all human souls pre-exist, they say that previously to their being appointed to bodies, they have a covering which answers the same end to them, before they come into life, as their bodies do afterwards. And they state, that the design of God, in sending souls into the world is, that they may get themselves a garment by the study of the law, and good works. See several proofs in Schoettgen.

4. It is plain also, that, by this garment or covering of the soul, they mean simply what we understand by acquiring the image of God; being made holy. This image they assert "Adam lost by his fall, and they represent man in a sinful state, as being naked." So they represent the Israelites before their making the molten calf, as having received holy garments from Mount Sinai; but afterward having worshiped the calf, they were stripped of these and left naked.

5. But notwithstanding they speak of this clothing as implying righteous and holy dispositions, and heavenly qualities; yet they all agree in assigning certain vehicles to separate spirits, in which they act; but of these vehicles they have strange notions; yet they acknowledge that without them, whether they be of light, fire, &c. or whatever else, they cannot see and contemplate the Supreme Wisdom. In Synopsis Solar, page 137. we have these words—"When the time draws near in which man is to depart from this world, the angel of death takes off his mortal garment, and clothes him with one from Paradise, in which he may see and contemplate the Supreme Wisdom: and therefore the angel of death is said to be very kind to man, because he takes off from him the garment of this world, and clothes him with a much more precious one prepared in Paradise."

When the apostle says that they earnestly desired to be clothed upon with our house which is from heaven, he certainly means, that the great concern of all the genuine followers of God, was to be fully prepared to enjoy the beatific vision of their Maker and Redeemer.

3. If so be, that being clothed] That is, fully prepared in this life for the glory of God.

We shall not be found naked] Destitute in that future state, of that Divine image, which shall render us capable of enjoying an endless glory.

4. For we that are in this tabernacle] We who are in this we are at home in the body, we are absent from the Lord: 7 (For ^g we walk by faith, not by sight.)

8 We are confident, I say, and ^h willing rather to be absent from the body, and to be present with the Lord.

9 Wherefore we labour, that, whether present or absent, we may be accepted of him.

g Rom. 8:24, 25. Ch. 1:13. 1 Cor. 13:12. Heb. 11:1.—h Phil. 1:23.—i Or, endeavour.

state of trial and difficulty, do groan being burdened; as if he had said, the whole of human life is a state of suffering; and especially our lot, who are troubled on every side; persecuted, persecuted, east down; bearing about in the body the dying of our Lord Jesus; and being always delivered unto death on the account of Jesus, chap. iv. 8—11. These were sufficient burdens, and sufficient causes of groaning.

Not for that we would be unclothed] We do not desire death, nor to die, even with the full prospect of eternal glory before our eyes, an hour before that time which God in his wisdom has assigned:

But clothed upon] To have the fullest preparation for eternal glory. We wish not to die, whatever tribulation we may be called to pass through, till the whole will of God is accomplished in us and by us.

That mortality might be swallowed up of life] Being fully prepared for the eternal state, we shall scarcely be said to die; all that is mortal being absorbed and annihilated by immortality and glory. See the notes on 1 Cor. xv. 51—56. From the use of these expressions among the Jews, this seems to be the general meaning of the apostle.

5. Now he that hath wrought us for the selfsame thing] God has given us our being and our body for this very purpose: that both might be made immortal, and both be glorified together. Or, God himself has given us this insatiable hungering and thirsting after righteousness and immortality. Mr. Addison has made a beautiful paraphrase of the sense of the apostle, whether he had his words in view or not:

—"Whence this pleasing hope, this fond desire,

This longing after immortality?

Or, whence this secret dread and inward horror,

Of falling into nought? Why shrinks the soul

Back on herself, and startles at destruction?

'Tis the Divinity that stirs within us:

'Tis heaven itself that points out an hereafter,

And intimates Eternity to man.

The soul secured in her existence, smiles

At the drawn dagger, and defies its point.

The stars shall fade away, the sun himself

Grow dim with age, and Nature sink in years;

But thou shalt flourish in immortal youth,

Unhurt, amidst the war of elements,

The wreck of matter, and the crush of worlds."

The earnest of the Spirit.] See the note on chap. i. 22.

6. We are always confident] Ουαπερες ουν παυετε, we are always full of courage; we never despond: we know where our help lies; and, having the earnest of the Spirit; we have the full assurance of hope.

Whilst we are at home in the body, &c.] The original words in this sentence are very emphatic; ἐνδομαχαια signifies to dwell among one's own people; ἐκδομαχαια, to be a sojourner among a strange people. Heaven is the home of every genuine Christian, and is claimed by them as such: see Phil. i. 23. Yet, while here below, the body is the proper home of the soul; but, as the soul is made for eternal glory, that glory is its country; and therefore, it is considered as being from its proper home while below in the body. As all human souls are made for this glory, therefore all are considered, while here, to be absent from their own country. And it is not merely heaven that they have in view, but the Lord; without whom, to an immortal spirit, possessed of infinite desires, heaven would neither be a home nor a place of rest. We see plainly that the apostle gives no intimation of an intermediate state between being at home in the body, and being present with the Lord. There is not the slightest intimation here that the soul sleeps; or, rather, that there is no soul; and when the body is decomposed, that there is no more of the man till the resurrection. I mean according to the sentiments of those who do condescend to allow us a resurrection, though they deny us a soul. But this is a philosophy in which St. Paul got no lessons, either from Gamaliel, Jesus Christ, the Holy Ghost, or in the third heavens, where he heard even unutterable things.

7. For we walk by faith] While we are in the present state, faith supplies the place of direct vision. In the future world we shall have sight, the utmost evidence of spiritual and eternal things; as we shall be present with them, and live in them. Here, we have the testimony of God, and believe in their reality, because we cannot doubt his word. And, to make this more convincing, he gives us the earnest of his Spirit: which is a foretaste of glory.

8. We are confident] We are of sound courage, notwithstanding our many difficulties; because we have this earnest of the Spirit, and the unfailing testimony of God. And, notwithstanding this, we are willing rather to be absent from the body; we certainly prefer a state of glory to a state of suffering; and the enjoyment of the beatific vision, to even the anticipation of it, by faith and hope; but as Christians, we cannot desire to die before our time

10 For we must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ; ¹ that every one may receive the things done in his body, according to that he hath done, whether it be good or bad.

11 Knowing therefore ¹ the terror of the Lord, we persuade men; but ² we are made manifest unto God; and I trust also are made manifest in your consciences.

12 For ³ we commend not ourselves again unto you, but give you occasion ⁴ to glory on our behalf, that ye may have something to answer them who glory ⁵ in appearance and not in heart.

13 For ⁶ whether we be beside ourselves, it is to God; or whether we be sober, it is for your cause.

14 Wherefore we labour ⁷ Φιλοτιμομεθα, from ελος, loving, and τιμη, honour; we act at all times on the principles of honour; we are, in the proper sense of the word, ambitious to do and say every thing consistently with our high vocation; and, as we claim kindred to the inhabitants of heaven, to act as they do.

We may be accepted of him. Εωρασε η αληθεια, to be pleasing to him. Through the love we have to God, we study and labour to please him. This is, and will be our heaven, to study to love, please, and serve him from whom we have received both our being and his blessings.

10. For we must all appear before the judgment seat We labour to walk so as to please Him, because we know that we shall have to give a solemn account of ourselves before the judgment seat of Christ; where He, whose religion we profess, will judge us according to His precepts: and according to the light and grace which it affords.

That every one may receive the things Κοπιηται εκας, that each may receive to himself, into his own hand, his own reward and his own wages.

The things done in his body That is, while he was in this lower state; for in this sense the term body is taken, often in this epistle. We may observe also that the soul is the grand agent: the body is but its instrument. And it shall receive, according to what it has done in the body.

11. Knowing therefore the terror of the Lord This, I think, is too harsh a translation of εφοβησιν ημιν τον κυριον, which should be rendered, knowing therefore the fear of the Lord: which, strange as it may at first appear, often signifies the worship of the Lord, or that religious reverence which we owe to him. Acts ix. 31. Rom. xiii. 18. xiii. 7. 1 Pet. i. 17. ii. 18. iii. 2. As we know therefore what God requires of man, because we are favoured with His own revelation; we persuade men to become Christians, and to labour to be acceptable to him; because they must all stand before the judgment seat: and if they receive not the grace of the Gospel here, they must there give up their accounts with sorrow, and not with joy. In short, a man who is not saved from his sin in this life, will be separated from God and the glory of his power in the world to come. This is a powerful motive to persuade men to accept the salvation provided for them by Christ Jesus. The fear of God is the beginning of wisdom; the terror of God confounds and overpowers the soul. We lead men to God through his fear and love; and with the fear of God, the love of God is ever consistent: but where the terror of the Lord reigns, there can neither be fear, faith, nor love; nay, nor hope either. Men who vindicate their constant declamations on hell and perdition, by quoting this text, know little of its meaning; and, what is worse, seem to know but little of the nature of man, and perhaps less of the spirit of the Gospel of Christ. Let them so and learn a lesson from Christ weeping over Jerusalem.—“O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, how oft would I have gathered you together, as a hen would her brood under her wings!” And another, from his last words on the cross, “Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do.”

But we are made manifest unto God God who searches the heart, knows that we are upright in our endeavours to please him; and because we are fully persuaded of the reality of eternal things: therefore, we are fully in earnest to get sinners converted to him.

Manifest in your consciences We have reason to believe, that you have had such proof of our integrity and disinterestedness, that your consciences must acquit us of every unworthy motive, and of every sinister view.

12. For we commend not ourselves I do not say these things to bespeak your good opinion, to procure your praise; but to give you an occasion to glory; to exult on our behalf; and to furnish you with an answer to all those who either malign us or our ministry; and who only glory in appearance, have no solid ground of exultation; and whose heart is dishonest and impure: St. Paul probably speaks here concerning the false apostle, who had been dividing the church, and endeavoured to raise a party to himself, by vilifying both the apostle and his doctrine.

13. Beside ourselves Probably he was reputed by some to be deranged: Festus thought so; Paul, thou art beside thyself; too much learning hath made thee mad. And his enemies at Corinth might insinuate not only that he was deranged, but attribute his derangement to a less worthy cause than intense study and deep learning.

14 For the love of Christ constraineth us; because we thus judge, that ¹ if one died for all, then were all dead:

15 And that he died for all, ² that they which live should not henceforth live unto themselves, but unto him which died for them, and rose again.

16 ³ Wherefore, henceforth know we no man after the flesh; yea, though we have known Christ after the flesh, yet now henceforth know we him no more.

17 Therefore, if any man ⁴ be in Christ, ⁵ he is ⁶ a new creature: ⁷ old things are passed away; behold, all things are become new.

It is to God [1] If we do appear, in speaking of the glories of the eternal world, to be transported beyond ourselves, it is through the good hand of our God upon us; and we do it to promote his honour.

Whether we be sober [2] Speak of divine things in a more cool and dispassionate manner; it is, that we may the better instruct and encourage you.

14. For the love of Christ constraineth us We have the love of God shed abroad in our hearts; and this causes us to love God intensely; and to love and labour for the salvation of men. And it is the effects produced by this love, which ενεργησιν ημιν, bears us away with itself: which causes us to love after the similitude of that love by which we are influenced; and, as God so loved the world as to give his Son for it; and as Christ so loved the world as to pour out his life for it; so we, influenced by the very same love, desire to spend, and be spent, for the glory of God, and the salvation of immortal souls.

If one died for all, then were all dead [3] The first position the apostle takes for granted: viz. that Jesus Christ died for all mankind. This, no apostolic man, or primitive Christian, ever did doubt, or could doubt.

The second position he infers from the first, and justly too; for if all had not been guilty, and consigned to eternal death, because of their sin, there could have been no need of his death. Therefore, as he most certainly died for all; then, all were dead, and needed his sacrifice, and the quickening power of his Spirit.

15. And that he died for all, that they which live, &c. [4] This third position he draws from the preceding: [If all were dead, and in danger of endless perdition, and he died for all, to save them from that perdition; then it justly follows, that they are not their own, that they are bought by his blood; and should not live unto themselves; for this is the way to final ruin: but unto him who died for them, and thus made an atonement for their sins; and rose again for their justification.]

16. Know we no man after the flesh As we know that all have sinned and come short of the glory of God; and as we know that all are alienated from God, and are dead in trespasses and sin, therefore we esteem no man on account of his family relations: or the stock whence he proceeded; because we see all are shrouded up in unbelief, and all are children of wrath. Yea, though we have known Christ after the flesh, We cannot esteem a man who is a sinner, were he even allied to the blood royal of David: and were of the same family with the man Christ himself; nor can we prize a man because he has seen Christ in the flesh, for many have seen him in the flesh to whom he will say, Depart from me, for I never knew you: so we—nothing weighs with us; nor in the sight of God, but redemption from this death, and living to him who died for them.

We know that the Jews valued themselves much in having Abraham for their father; and some of the Judaizing teachers at Corinth might value themselves in having seen Christ in the flesh, which certainly St. Paul did not: hence he takes occasion to say here, that this kind of privilege availed nothing; for the old creature, however noble, or well descended in the sight of men, is under the curse; and the new creature only, is such as God can approve.

17. If any man be in Christ, he is a new creature It is vain for a man to profess affinity to Christ, according to the flesh, while he is unchanged in his heart and life; and dead in trespasses and sins; for he that is in Christ, that is, a genuine Christian, having Christ dwelling in his heart by faith, is a new creature: his old state is changed: he was a child of Satan; he is now a child of God. He was a slave of sin, and his works were death; he is now made free from sin, and has his fruit unto holiness; and the end, everlasting life. He was before full of pride and wrath; he is now meek and humble. He formerly had his portion in this life, and lived for this world alone: he now has God for his portion; and he looks not at the things which are seen, but at the things which are eternal. Therefore, old things are passed away.

Behold all things are become new [5] The man is not only mended, but he is new made: he is a new creature: κενωται, a new creature, a little world in himself: formerly, all was in chaotic disorder; now, there is a new creation, which God himself owns as his workmanship; and which he can look on and pronounce very good. The conversion of a man from idolatry and wickedness, was among the Jews denominated a new creation. He who converts a man to the true religion, is the same, says R. Eliezer, as if he had created him.

self by Jesus Christ, and hath given to us the ministry of reconciliation;

19 To wit, that God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself, not imputing their trespasses unto them; and hath committed unto us the word of reconciliation.

Rom 9:1, 5.—Or, put in us.—Job 3:21. Mal 2:7. Chap. 3:6 Eph 2:10.—Chap. 6:1.

18. And all things are of God As the thorough conversion of the soul is compared to a new creation; and creation is the proper work of an all-wise, Almighty Being; then, this total change of heart, soul, and life, which takes place under the preaching of the Gospel, is effected by the power and grace of God; this is salvation; and salvation must ever be of the Lord; and therefore men should apply to Him, who alone can work this wondrous change.

Who hath reconciled us to himself by Jesus Christ Having given Jesus Christ to die for sinners, they have through him access unto God; for his sake, and on his account, God can receive them: and it is only by the grace and Spirit of Christ, that the proud, fierce, and diabolic nature of man, can be changed and reconciled to God: and by and through this sacrifice, God can be propitious to them. There is an enmity in the heart of man against sacred things: the grace of Christ alone can remove this enmity.

The ministry of reconciliation Διακονία της καταλλαγής; the office or function of this reconciliation; called, ver. 19. the word: τὸν λόγον της καταλλαγής; the doctrine of this reconciliation. Καταλλαγής; reconciliation, comes from καταλλάσσω, to change thoroughly; and the grand object of the Gospel is to make a complete change in men's minds and manners; but the first object is the removal of enmity from the heart of man, that he may be disposed to accept of the salvation God has provided for him, on the terms which God has promised. The enmity in the heart of man is the grand hindrance to his salvation.

19. That God was in Christ This is the doctrine which this ministry of reconciliation holds out; and the doctrine which it uses to bring about the reconciliation itself.

God was in Christ—1. Christ is the same as Messiah, the anointed One; who was to be prophet, priest, and king to the human race; not to the Jews only, but also to the Gentiles. There had been prophets, priests, and kings, among the Jews and their ancestors; and some who had been priest and prophet: king and priest; and king and prophet; but none had ever sustained in his own person, the three-fold office, except Christ; for none had ever ministered in reference to the whole world but He. The functions of all the others were restrained to the ancient people of God alone. 2. Now all the others were appointed of God, in reference to this Christ; and as his types, or representatives, till the fullness of the time should come: 3. And that this Christ might be adequate to the great work of reconciling the whole human race to God, by making atonement for their sins, God was in him. The man Jesus was the temple and shrine of the eternal Divinity; for, in him dwelt all the fullness of the Godhead bodily, Col. ii. 9. and he made peace by the blood of his cross. 4. Christ, by his offering upon the cross, made atonement for the sins of the world; and therefore one important branch of the doctrine of this reconciliation was, to show that God would not impute or account their trespasses to them, so as to exact the penalty; because this Jesus had died for their sakes.

The whole of this important doctrine was short, simple, and plain. Let us consider it in all its connexions: 1. You believe there is a God. 2. You know He has made you. 3. He requires you to love and serve him. 4. To show you how to do this, He has given a revelation of himself, which is contained in his law, &c. 5. You have broken this law, and incurred the penalty, which is death. 6. Far from being able to undo your offences, or make reparation to the offended majesty of God, your hearts, through the deceitfulness and influence of sin, are blinded, hardened, and filled with enmity against your Father and your Judge. 7. To redeem you out of this most wretched and accursed state, God, in his endless love, has given his Son for you; who has assumed your nature, and died in your stead. 8. In consequence of this, he has commanded repentance towards God; and remission of sins to be published in his name in all the earth. 9. All who repent and believe in Christ as having died for them as a sin-offering, ver. 21, shall receive remission of sins. 10. And if they abide in Him, they shall have an eternal inheritance among them that are sanctified.

20. We are ambassadors for Christ Υπερ Χριστον—πρεσβευται; we execute the function of ambassadors in Christ's stead. He came from the Father to mankind on this important embassy. He has left the world, and appointed us in his place. Ambassador is a person sent from one sovereign power to another: and is supposed to represent the person of the sovereign by whom he is deputed. Christ, while on earth, represented the person of the Sovereign of the world; his apostles, and their successors, represent the person of Christ. Christ declared the will of the Father to mankind; apostles, &c. declare the will of Christ to the world; we are ambassadors for Christ.

As though God did beseech you by us What we say to you, we say on the authority of God: our entreaties are his entreaties: our warm love to you, a faint reflection of his infinite love; we pray you to return to God: it is his will that you should do so; we promise you remission of sins; we are authorized to do so by God himself. In Christ's stead we pray you to lay aside your enmity, and be reconciled to God; i. e. accept pardon, peace, holiness, and heaven, which are all procured for you by His blood; and offered to you on his own authority.

20 Now then we are ambassadors for Christ, as though God did beseech you by us: we pray you in Christ's stead, be ye reconciled to God.

21 For, the hath made him to be sin for us, who knew no sin, that we might be made the righteousness of God in him.

1 John 3:16, 17. Romans 5:12, 13. Gal 3:13. 1 Peter 2:24, 21. 1 John 3:16.

"What unparalleled condescension, and divinely tender mercies are displayed in this verse! Did the judge ever beseech a condemned criminal to accept of pardon? Does the creditor ever beseech a ruined debtor to receive an acquaintance in full? Yet our almighty Lord, and our eternal Judge, not only vouchsafes to offer these blessings, but invites us, entreats us; and with the most tender opportunity, solicits us not to reject them." The Rev. J. Wesley's Notes in loc.

This sentiment is further expressed in the following beautiful poetic version of this place, by the Rev. Charles Wesley.

"God, the offended God most high,

Ambassadors to rebels sends;

His messengers his place supply,

And Jesus begs us to be friends.

Us, in the stead of Christ, they pray,

Us, in the stead of Christ, entreat,

To cast our arms, our sins away,

And find forgiveness at his feet.

Our God, in Christ, thine embassy,

And proffered mercy we embrace;

And gladly reconciled to thee,

Thy condescending mercy praise.

Poor debtors, by our Lord's request,

A full acquaintance we receive!

And criminals with pardon blest,

We, at our Judge's instance live."

21. For he hath made him to be sin for us Τὸν ἡμῶν ἁμαρτίαν, ὅτι ἡμῶν ἁμαρτίαν ἔθηκεν; He made him who knew no sin, (who was innocent, a sin-offering for us. The word ἁμαρτία occurs here twice; in the first place, it means sin; i. e. transgression and guilt; and of Christ it is said, he knew no sin; i. e. was innocent; for not to know sin, is the same as to be conscious of innocence; συνίεναι σὺν, to be conscious of nothing against one's self: is the same as, αὐτὰ πάσχειν ἐλπίδα, to be unimpeachable.

In the second place, it signifies a sin-offering, or sacrifice for sin, and answers to the חַטָּאת chataah and זֶבַח זָכוּת zebach zachuth of the Hebrew text; which signifies both sin and sin-offering, in a great variety of places in the Pentateuch. The Septuagint translate the Hebrew word by ἁμαρτία in ninety-four places in Exodus, Leviticus, and Numbers, where a sin-offering is meant; and where our version translates the word not sin, but an offering for sin. Had our translators attended to their own method of translating the word in other places, where it means the same as here, they would not have given this false view of a passage which has been made the foundation of a most blasphemous doctrine, viz. that our sins were imputed to Christ, and that he was a proper object of the indignation of Divine justice, because he was blakened with imputed sin; and some have proceeded so far in this blasphemous error, as to say, that Christ may be considered as the greatest of sinners, because all the sins of mankind, or of the elect, as they say, were imputed to him, and reckoned as his own. One of these writers translates the passage thus, Deus Christum pro nostra peccatorum habuit, ut nos essemus maxime justi, God accounted Christ the greatest of sinners, that we might be supremely righteous. Thus they have confounded sin with the punishment due to sin: Christ suffered in our stead: died for us; bore our sins, (the punishment due to them) in his own body upon the tree, for the punishment due to them; explained by making his soul, his life, an offering for sin; and healing us by his stripes.

But that it may be plainly seen that sin-offering, not sin, is the meaning of the word in this verse, I shall set down the places from the Septuagint, where the word occurs; and where it answers to the Hebrew words already quoted; and where our translators have rendered correctly what they render here incorrectly.

In Exodus, chap. xxix. 14, 36; LEVITICUS, chap. iv. 3, 5, 20, 21, 24, 25, and 29 twice; 32, 33, and 34; chap. v. 6, 7, 8, 9 twice, 11 twice, 12; chap. vi. 17, 25 twice, 30; chap. vii. 7, 37; chap. viii. 2, 14 twice; chap. ix. 2, 3, 7, 8, 10, 13, 22; chap. x. 16, 17, 19 twice; chap. xii. 6, 8; chap. xiv. 13 twice, 19, 22, 31; chap. xv. 15, 30; chap. xvi. 3, 5, 6, 9, 11 twice, 15, 25, 27 twice; chap. xviii. 19. NUMBERS, chap. vi. 11, 14, 16; chap. vii. 16, 22, 25, 34, 40, 46, 52, 58, 70, 76, 82, 87; chap. viii. 5, 12; chap. ix. 24, 25, 27; chap. xviii. 9; chap. xxviii. 13, 22; chap. xxix. 5, 11, 16, 22, 25, 28, 31, 34, 38.

Besides the above places, it occurs in the same signification, and is properly translated in our version, in the following places:

2 CHRONICLES, chap. xxix. 21, 23, 24; EZRA, chap. vi. 17; chap. viii. 35; NEHEMIAH, chap. x. 33; JOB, chap. i. 5; EZRA, chap. xiii. 24, 25; chap. xiv. 27, 29; chap. xiv. 17.

19, 22, 23, 25. In all, one hundred and eight places, which, in the course of my own reading in the Septuagint, I have marked.

That we might be made the righteousness of God in him.] The righteousness of God signifies here the salvation of God; as comprehending justification through the blood of Christ; and sanctification through his Spirit: or, as the mountains of God, the hail of God, the wind of God; mean exceeding high mountains, extraordinary hail, and most tempestuous wind; so here the righteousness of God may mean a thorough righteousness; complete justification; complete sanctification; such as none but God can give; such as the sinful nature and guilty conscience of man require; and such as is worthy of God to impart. And all this righteousness, justification, and holiness, we receive in, by, for, and through him; as the grand sacrificial, procuring, and meritorious cause of these, and every other blessing. Some render the passage, We are justified through him, before God: or, We are justified, according to God's plan of justification, through him.—In many respects, this is a most important and instructive chapter:

1. The terms house, building, tabernacle, and others connected with them, have already been explained from the Jewish writings. But it has been thought by some, that the apostle mentions these as readily offering themselves to him, from his own avocation, that of a tent-maker: and it is supposed that he borrows these terms from his own trade, in order to illustrate his doctrine. This supposition would be natural enough, if we had not full evidence that these terms were used in the Jewish theology, precisely in the sense in which the apostle uses them here. Therefore, it is more likely that he borrowed them from that theology, than from his own trade.

2. In the terms tabernacle, building of God, &c. we may refer also to the tabernacle in the wilderness, which was a building of God, and a house of God; and as God dwelt in that building, so he will dwell in the souls of those who believe in, love, and obey him. And this will be his transitory temple till mortality is swallowed up of life, and we have a glorified body and soul to be his eternal residence.

3. The doctrines of the resurrection of the same body; the witness of the Spirit; the immateriality of the soul; the fall and miserable condition of all mankind; the death of Jesus, as an atonement for the sins of the whole world; the necessity of obedience to the Divine will, and of the total change of the human heart, are all introduced here: and, although only a few words are spoken on each, yet these are so plain and so forcible, as to set those important doctrines in the most clear and striking point of view.

4. The chapter concludes with such a view of the mercy and goodness of God in the ministry of reconciliation, as is nowhere else to be found. He has here set forth the Divine mercy in all its heightenings; and who can take this view of it without having his heart melted down with love and gratitude to God, who has called him to such a state of salvation?

5. It is exceedingly remarkable that, through the whole of this chapter, the apostle speaks of himself in the first person plural; and though he may intend other apostles, and the Christians in general, yet it is very evident that he uses this form when only himself can be meant, as in verses 12 and 13, as well as in several places of the following chapter. This may be esteemed rather more curious than important.

CHAPTER VI.

We should not receive the grace of God in vain, having such promises of support from Him, 1, 2. We should act so, as to bring no disgrace on the Gospel, 3. How the apostles behaved themselves; preached, suffered, and rejoiced, 4—10. St. Paul's affectionate concern for the Corinthians, 11—13. He counsels them not to be yoked with unbelievers, and advances several arguments why they should avoid them, 14—16. a 1 Cor. 3.9.—b Ch. 5. 20.—c Heb. 12. 13.—d 1ss 49. 8.

NOTES.—Verse 1. We then, as workers together with him Συμπαράκλητοι ἐκ αὐτοῦ κατακληρόντες. The two last words, with him, are not in the text, and some supply the place thus: we then, as workers together with you, and the Armenian version seems to have read it so: but no MS. has this reading; and no other version. For my own part, I see nothing wanting in the text if we only suppose the term apostles; we (i. e. apostles,) being fellow-workers, also entreat you not to receive the grace of God in vain.

By the grace of God, τῇ χάριτι τοῦ Θεοῦ, this grace or benefit of God, the apostle certainly means the grand sacrificial offering of Christ, for the sin of the world, which he had just before mentioned in speaking of the ministry of reconciliation. We learn, therefore, that it was possible to receive the grace of God, and not ultimately benefit by it; or, in other words, to begin in the Spirit and end in the flesh. Should any one say, that it is the ministry of reconciliation, that is, the benefit of apostolic preaching, that they might receive in vain: I answer, that the apostolic preaching, and the whole ministry of reconciliation, could be no benefit to any man, farther than it might have been a means of conveying to him the salvation of God. And it is most evident that the apostle has in view that grace or benefit that reconciles us to God, and makes us divinely righteous. And this, and all other benefits of the death of Christ, may be received in vain.

2. For he saith That is, God hath said it, by the prophet Isaiah, chap. xlix. 8, which place the apostle quotes verbatim literatim from the Septuagint. And from this we may at once see, what is the accepted time; and what the day of salvation. The advent of the Messiah was the πῶτον χρόνον, the time of God's pleasure, or benevolence; for which all the faithful were in expectation; and the day of salvation, ἡμέρα γομν γεσούδ, was the time in which this salvation should be manifested and applied. The apostle, therefore, informs them that this is the time predicted by the prophet; and, the ministry of reconciliation being exercised in full force, is a proof that the prophecy is fulfilled: and therefore the apostle confidently asserts, Behold, now is this accepted time; now, the Messiah reigns; now, is the Gospel dispensation; and therefore, now is the day of salvation: that is, the very time in which the power of God is present to heal; and in which every sinner, believing on the Lord Jesus, may be saved.

I rather think that this second verse should be read immediately after the last verse of the preceding chapter; as where it now stands, it greatly disturbs the connexion between the first and the third verses. I will set down the whole in the order in which I think they should stand. Chap. v. 20. Now then, we are ambassadors for Christ, as though God did beseech you by us; we pray you in Christ's stead to be reconciled to God. For he hath made him a sin-offering for us, who knew no sin, that we might be made the righteousness is the accepted time; behold, now is the day of salvation.) 3 * Giving no offence in any thing, that the ministry be not blamed:

4 But in all things approving ourselves as the ministers of God in him: for he saith, "I have heard thee in a time accepted, and in the day of salvation have I succoured thee:" Behold, now is the accepted time; behold, now is the day of salvation. Immediately after this, the sixth chapter will very properly commence, and we shall see that the connexion will be then undisturbed.

We then, as fellow-workers, beseech you also, that ye receive not this grace of God in vain, giving no offence in any thing, that this ministry be not blamed. This change of the place of the second verse, which every one allows must, if it stand here, be read in a parenthesis, preserves the whole connexion of the apostle's discourse; and certainly sets his argument before us in a stronger light. Let us review the whole: 1. God was in Christ, reconciling the world to himself, chap. v. 18. 2. He appointed the apostles to proclaim to mankind the doctrine of reconciliation, ch. v. 19. 3. The apostles, in consequence, proclaim this doctrine, and show that Christ was a sacrifice for sin: and that, through him, we may be perfectly saved, chap. v. 20, 21. 4. They show also, that all this was agreeable to the declaration of God by the prophet Isaiah, chap. xlix. 8, where he predicts the days of the Messiah, and the grace then to be communicated, chap. vi. 2. 5. The apostle then, speaking in the person of all his fellow-labourers, who had this ministry of reconciliation entrusted to them, exhorts them not to receive such a benefit of God in vain, chap. vi. 1. 6. He exhorts those who had embraced the Gospel not to put a stumbling-block in the way of others, by acting irreligiously, lest this ministry of reconciliation should be reproached on their account, chap. vi. 3. 7. He shows what conscientious and scrupulous care he and his fellow-apostles took to preach and walk so, that this ministry might have its full effect, chap. vi. 4, &c.

This view of the subject, if I mistake not, shows a beautiful consistency throughout the whole.

3. Giving no offence The word προσηκούω, read προσηκούω, Rom. xiv. 13, signifies a stumbling-block, in general; or any thing over which a man stumbles or falls; and here means any transgression or scandal that might take place among the ministers, or the Christians themselves, whereby either Jews or Gentiles might take occasion of offence, and vilify the Gospel of Christ.

4. But in all things approving ourselves The apostle now proceeds to show how conscientiously himself and his fellow-labourers acted, in order to render the ministry of reconciliation effectual to the salvation of men. They not only gave no offence in any thing, but they laboured to manifest themselves to be the genuine ministers of God, in much patience, bearing calmly up under the most painful and oppressive afflictions.

In afflictions Εἰς θλίψεις. This may signify the series of persecutions and distresses in general; the state of cruel suffering in which the church of God and the apostles then existed 14 * Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers: for what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness? and what communion hath light with darkness?

15 And what concord hath Christ with Belial? or what part hath he that believeth with an infidel?

16 And what agreement hath the temple of God with idols? for ye are the temple of the living God; as God hath said, "I

^{Deu. 2, 3. 1 Cor. 5, 9 & 10. 1 Sam. 15, 21. 1 Kin. 19, 21. Eccl. 13, 17. 1 Cor. 10, 21. Eph. 5, 7, 11—1 Cor. 5, 18. 19. Eph. 5, 21. 22. Heb. 9, 5.}

The verb ἐκκοινωνεω, signifies to leave one's own rank, place, or order, and go into another; and here it must signify not only that they should not associate with the Gentiles in their idolatrous feasts; but that they should not apostatize from Christianity; and the questions which follow, show that there was a sort of fellowship that some of the Christians had formed with the heathens, which was both wicked and absurd; and if not speedily checked, would infallibly lead to final apostasy.

Some apply this exhortation to pious persons marrying with those who are not decidedly religious, and converted to God. That the exhortation may be thus applied, I grant; but it is certainly not the meaning of the apostle in this place.

For what fellowship, &c.] As righteousness cannot have communion with unrighteousness, and light cannot dwell with darkness; so Christ can have no concord with Belial: nor can he that believeth, have any with an infidel. All these points were self-evident: how then could they keep up the profession of Christianity, or pretend to be under its influence, while they associated with the unrighteous, had communion with darkness, concord with Belial, and partook with infidels?

16 What agreement hath the temple of God with idols? Nothing could appear more abominable to a Jew, than an idol in the temple of God: here, then, could be no agreement; the worship of the two is wholly incompatible. An idolater never worships the true God: a Christian never worships an idol. If ye join in idolatrous rites, it is impossible that ye should be Christians.

Ye are the temple of the living God] God intends to make the heart of every believer his own house.

I will dwell in them, and walk in them.] The words are very emphatic, ἐνοικνω ἐν αὐτοῖς; ἡ ἐγὼ ἡμιῶν ἐν αὐτοῖς. I will not be as a wayfaring man, who turns aside to tarry as for a night; but I will take up my constant residence with them: I will dwell in and among them.

I will be their God.] They shall have no other God; they shall have none besides me; and if they take me for their God, I will be to them all that an infinite, eternal, and self-sufficient Being can be to his intelligent offspring.

They shall be my people.] If they take me for their God, their supreme and eternal Good: I will take them for my people, and instruct, enlighten, defend, provide for, support, and bless them, as if I had none else to care for in the creation.

17. Wherefore come out from among them] Is it not plain will dwell in them, and walk in them; and I will be their God, and they shall be my people.

17 * Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing; and I will receive you,

18 And will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty.

^{Exod. 22, 43. Lev. 26, 12. Jer. 31, 34, & 32, 38. Ezek. 11, 20, & 36, 29, & 37, 25, &c. Zech. 8, 8, & 11, 9—12, 11. Ch. 7, 1. Rev. 18, 4—Jer. 31, 13. Rev. 21, 7.}

from this, and the following verse, that God would be their God, only on the ground of their taking him for such: and that this depended on their being separated from the works and workers of iniquity: for God could not inhabit in them, if they had concord with Belial, a portion with infidels, &c. Those who will have the promises of God fulfilled to them, must come under the conditions of these promises: if they are not separate—if they touch the unclean thing, God will not receive them; and therefore, will not be their God; nor shall they be his people.

18. Will be a Father unto you] I will act towards you as the most affectionate father can act towards his most tender and best beloved child.

And ye shall be my sons and daughters] Ye shall all be of the household of God; the family of heaven; ye shall be holy, happy, and continually safe.

Saith the Lord Almighty.] Κυριος παντοκράτωρ; the Lord, the governor of all things.

Earthly fathers, however loving and affectionate, may fail to provide for their children, because every thing is not at their disposal; they may frequently lack both the power and the means, though to will may be present with them: but the Lord who made, and who governs all things, can never lack will, power, nor means. The promise is sure to the children; and the children are those who take the Almighty for their God. For the promise belongs to no soul that is not separate from sinful ways, works, and men: those who touch the unclean thing, i. e. who do what God forbids, and hold communion with unrighteousness, can never stand in the endearing relation of children to God Almighty: and this is most forcibly stated by God himself in these verses, and in the beginning of the following chapter; the first verse of which should conclude this.

To the Jews the promises were originally made: they would not have God for their God; but would work iniquity. What was the consequence? God cast them off: and those who were joined to iniquity were separated from Him. "Then, said God, call his name Leammi: for ye are not my people, and I will not be ye God." Hos. 1, 9. The Jews were therefore cast off, and the Gentiles taken in their place; but even these, under the new covenant, are taken in expressly under the same conditions as the apostle here most fully states. Those who apply these words in any other way, pervert their meaning, and sin against their souls.

CHAPTER VII.

The apostle's inference from the preceding exhortation, 1. He presses them to receive him with affection, because of his great love towards them, 2—4. He tells them what distress he felt on their account at Macedonia, till he had met with Titus, and heard of their prosperity, 5—7. He rejoices that his first epistle was made the means of their reformation, 8, 9. States how they were affected by his letter, and the process of their reformation, 10, 11. Shows why he had written to them, 12. Rejoices that his boasting of them to Titus, is found to be a truth; and takes occasion to mention the great affection of Titus for them; and his own confidence in them, 13—16. [A. M. 4061. A. D. 57. A. U. C. 810. An. Imp. Neronis Cæs. 4.]

HAVING therefore these promises, dearly beloved, let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God.

2 Receive us; we have wronged no man, we have corrupted no man, we have defrauded no man.

^{1 Ch. 5, 17, 18. 1 Joh. 3, 3. Isaiah 1, 16 & 5, 13, & 29, 23. 1 Thess. 5, 23. 1 Tim. 4, 1—2. Acts 23, 78. Ch. 12, 17.}

NOTES.—Verse 1. Having therefore these promises] The promises mentioned in the three last verses of the preceding chapter; to which this verse should certainly be joined.

Let us cleanse ourselves.] Let us apply to him for the requisite grace of purification; and avoid every thing in spirit and practice which is opposite to the doctrine of God; and which has a tendency to pollute the soul.

Filthiness of the flesh] The apostle undoubtedly means drunkenness, fornication, adultery, and all such sins as are done immediately against the body: and by filthiness of the spirit, all impure desires, unholy thoughts, and polluting imaginations. If we avoid and abhor evil inclinations, and turn away our eyes from beholding vanity, incentives to evil being thus lessened, for the eye affects the heart, there will be the less danger of our falling into outward sin. And if we avoid all outward occasions of sinning, evil propensities will certainly be lessened. All this is our work under the common aids of the grace of God. We may turn away our eyes and ears from evil; or we may indulge both in what will infallibly beget evil desires and tempers in the soul; and under the same influence we may avoid every act of iniquity; for even Satan himself cannot, by any power he has, constrain us to commit uncleanness, robbery, drunkenness, murder, &c. These are things in which both body and soul must consent. But still, withholding the eye, the ear, the hand, and the body in general, from sights, reports, and acts of evil, will not pu-

3 I speak not this to condemn you: for I have said before, that ye are in our hearts to die and live with you.

4 Great is my boldness of speech towards you, great is my glorying of you: for I am filled with comfort, I am exceeding joyful in all our tribulation.

^{1 Ch. 6, 11, 12—4 Ch. 5, 12—1 Cor. 1, 4. Ch. 1, 14.—1 Cor. 1, 4. Phil. 2, 17. Col. 1, 24. Acts 19, 28. 1 Cor. 3, 12 & 15, 23.}

rify a fallen spirit: it is the grace and spirit of Christ alone, powerfully applied for this very purpose, that can purify the conscience and the heart from all dead works. But if we do not withhold the food by which the man of sin is nourished and supported, we cannot expect God to purify our hearts. While we are striving against sin, we may expect the Spirit of God to purify us by his inspiration from all unrighteousness, that we may perfectly love and magnify our Maker. How can those expect God to purify their hearts, who are continually indulging their eyes, ears, and hands in what is forbidden; and in what tends to increase and bring into action all the evil propensities of the soul?

Perfecting holiness] Getting the whole mind of Christ brought into the soul. This is the grand object of a genuine Christian's pursuit. The means of accomplishing this are, 1. Resisting and avoiding sin, in all its inviting and seducing forms. 2. Setting the fear of God before our eyes, that we may dread his displeasure, and abhor whatever might excite it; and whatever might provoke him to withhold his manna from our mouth. We see, therefore, that there is a strong and orthodox sense in which we may cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and of the spirit; and thus perfect holiness in the fear of God.

2. Receive us] Ναπαράλαβete. This address is variously understood. Receive us into your affections; love us as we love you; receive us as your apostles and teachers; we have given you full proof that God hath both sent and owned us. Receive, comprehend what we now say to you, and carefully mark it.

We have wronged no man] We have never acted contrary to the strictest justice.

We have corrupted no man] With any false doctrine or pernicious opinion.

We have defrauded no man] Of any part of his property. But what have your false teachers done? They have beguiled you from the simplicity of the truth, and thus corrupted your minds. Chap. xi. 3. They have brought you into bondage; they have taken of you; devoured you; exalted themselves against you; and ye have patiently suffered all this, chap. xi. 20. It is plain that he refers here to the false apostle, or teacher, which they had among them.

I speak not this to condemn you] I do not speak to reproach, but to correct you. I wish you to open your eyes, and see how you are corrupted, spoiled, and impoverished by those whom ye have incautiously preferred to the true apostles of Jesus Christ.

I have said before, that ye are in our hearts] He has in effect and substance said this, chap. i. 6—8. ii. 4, 12. iii. 2, and ver. 15, where see the passages at length, and the notes.

To die and live with you] An expression which points out the strongest affection, as in cases where love blinds us to the faults of those whom we love; and causes us to prefer them to all others, like that in Horace:

Quantum sidere pulchrior

Ille est, tu levior cortice, et improbo

Inacridur Adria :

Tecum vivere amem, tecum obeam libens.

Odor. lib. iii. Od. ix. ver. 21.

'Though he exceed in beauty far

The rising lustre of a star;

Though light as cork thy fancy strays,

Thy passions wild as angry seas

When w'old with storms; yet gladly I

With thee would live, with thee would die."—FRANCIS.

From all appearance, there never was a church less worthy of an apostle's affection than this church was at this time; and yet no one ever more beloved. The above quotation applies to this case in full force.

Great is my boldness of speech] He seems to refer to the manner in which he spoke of them to others.

Great is my glorying of you] They had probably been very loving and affectionate, previously to the time in which they were perverted by their false apostle. He therefore had boasted of them in all the churches.

I am filled with comfort] My affection for you has still the most powerful ascendancy in my soul. Here we may see the affection of the most tender father to his children.

I am exceeding joyful] Υπερπεπλησμαι : I superabound in joy. I have a joy beyond expression. This is an extremely rare verb. I have not met with it in any Greek author; and it occurs nowhere in the New Testament but here and in Rom. v. 20.

In all our tribulation] Perhaps ετι, here should be rendered under instead of in, as it signifies, Mark ii. 26. Luke iii. 2. Acts xi. 23. Under all our tribulations, I feel inexpressible joy on your account.

When we were come into Macedonia] St. Paul having left Ephesus, came to Troas, where he stopped some time; afterward he came to Macedonia; whence he wrote this epistle.

Our flesh had no rest] So exceedingly anxious was he to know the success of his first epistle to them.

Without were fightings] The oppositions of Pagans, Jews, and false brethren.

Within were fears] Uncertain conjectures relative to the success of his epistle; fears lest the severity of it should alienate their affections utterly from him; fears lest the party of the incestuous person should have prevailed; fears lest the teaching of the false apostle should have perverted their minds from the simplicity of the truth; all was uncertainty; all apprehension; and the Spirit of God did not think proper to remove the causes of these apprehensions in any extraordinary way.

Comforted us by the coming of Titus] Who brought him a most satisfactory account of the success of his epistle; and the good state of the Corinthian church.

10 For ^ε godly sorrow worketh repentance to salvation, not to be repented of: ^ε but the sorrow of the world worketh death.

11 For behold this selfsame thing, that ye sorrowed after a godly sort, what carefulness it wrought in you; yea, what clearing of yourselves, yea, what indignation; yea, what fear; yea, what vehement desire; yea, what zeal; yea, what revenge! In all things ye have approved yourselves to be clear in this matter.

12 Wherefore, though I wrote unto you, I did it not for his cause that had done the wrong, nor for his cause that suffered wrong; ^ε but that our care for you in the sight of God might appear unto you.

13 Therefore we were comforted in your comfort: yea, and exceedingly the more joyed we for the joy of Titus, because his spirit ^ε was refreshed by you all.

according to God.—o 2 Sam. 12.13. Mat. 26.75.—p Pro. 17.22.—q Ch.2.4.—r Ro. 15.22.

7. He told us your earnest desire] To see me, and correct what was amiss among yourselves.

Your mourning] Because you had sinned.

Your fervent mind] The zeal you felt to testify your affectionate regard for me.

I do not repent, though I did repent] Though I had many doubts in my mind, concerning the success of my letter; and though I grieved, that I was obliged to write with so much severity, the cause absolutely requiring it; yet now I am not sorry that I have written that letter, because I find it has completely answered the end for which it was sent.

Ye sorrowed to repentance] Ye had such a sorrow as produced a complete change of mind and conduct. We see that a man may sorrow, and yet not repent.

Made sorry, after a godly manner] It was not a sorrow because ye were found out, and thus solemnly reprobated; but a sorrow because ye had sinned against God, and which consideration caused you to grieve, more than the apprehension of any punishment.

Danger by us in nothing] Your repentance prevented that exercise of my apostolic duty, which would have consigned your bodies to destruction, that your souls might be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus.

For godly sorrow] That which has the breach of God's holy law for its object.

Worketh repentance] A thorough change of mind unto salvation; because the person who feels it, cannot rest till he find pardon through the mercy of God.

But the sorrow of the world worketh death] Sorrow for lost goods, lost friends, death of relatives, &c. when it is poignant and deep, produces diseases, increases those that already exist, and often leads men to lay desperate hands on themselves. This sorrow leads to destruction; the other leads to salvation; the one leads to heaven, the other to hell.

What carefulness it wrought in you] Carefulness of obeying my directions, ver. 15. yea, what clearing of yourselves from guilt, by inflicting censures on the guilty person; and putting away evil from among you. 1 Cor. xv. 18. yea, what indignation against him who had dishonoured his profession, and defiled the church; yea, what fear of my displeasure, and the rod which I threatened, 1 Cor. iv. 21. yea, what vehement desire to rectify what was amiss in this matter, ver. 7. yea, what zeal for me; yea, what revenge in punishing the delinquent. See Whitby.

In all things, &c.] In the whole of your conduct in this affair, since ye have received my letter, ye have approved yourselves to be clear, δυσως; not only to be clear of contumacy and obstinate persistence in your former conduct; but to have done all in the compass of your power to rectify the abuses which had crept in among you. The Corinthians were not clear, i. e. innocent, or void of blame in the fact; but they were clear of all blame in their endeavours to remove the evil.

Not for his cause that had done the wrong] viz. the incestuous person.

Nor for his cause that suffered wrong] Some think the apostle means himself; others, that he means the church at Corinth, the singular being put for the plural; others, the family of the incestuous person; and others, the father of the incestuous person: if this latter opinion be adopted, it would seem to intimate that the father of this person was yet alive, which would make the transgression more flagrant; but these words might be spoken in reference to the father, if dead; whose cause should be vindicated, as his injured honour might be considered like Abel's blood, to be crying from the earth.

But that our care for you—might appear] It was not to get the delinquent punished, nor merely to do justice to those who had suffered in this business, that the apostle wrote his epistle to them; but that they might have the fullest proof of his fatherly affection for them, and his concern for the honour of God; and that they might thereby see how unnatural their opposition to him was; and what cause they had to prefer him who was ready to give up his life in their service, to that false apostle or teacher, who was corrupting their minds, leading them from the simplicity of the truth, and making a gain of them.

For the joy of Titus] Titus, who had now met St. Paul at Macedonia, gave him the most flattering accounts of the improved state of the Corinthian church; and indeed their kind usage of Titus was a full proof of their affection for St. Paul.

14 For if I have boasted any thing to him of you, I am not ashamed; but as we spake all things to you in truth, even so our boasting, which I made before Titus, is found a truth.

15 And his inward affection is more abundant toward you, s Gr. howels. Ch. 6.12.—Ch. 2.9. Phil. 3.12.

14. For if I have boasted] The apostle had given Titus a very high character of this church; and of their attachment to himself: and doubtless this was the case previously to the evil teacher getting among them; who had succeeded in changing their conduct, and changing in a great measure their character also; but now they return to themselves, resume their lost ground, so that the good character which the apostle gave them before, and which they had for a time forfeited, is now as applicable to them as ever. Therefore his boasting of them is still found a truth.

15. And his inward affection] Τα σπλάχνα αὐτοῦ; those bowels of his; his most tender affection. For the meaning of this word, see the note on Matt. ix. 36.

Whilst he remembereth the obedience of you all] This is a very natural picture: he represents Titus as overjoyed, even while he is delivering his account of the Corinthian church. He expatiated on it with extreme delight, and thereby showed at once, both his love for St. Paul, and his love for them. He loved them because they so loved the apostle; and he loved them because they had shown such kindness to himself; and he loved them because he found so many excellent and rare gifts joined to so much humility, producing such an exemplary and holy life.

With fear and trembling ye received him] Ye revered his authority; ye were obedient to his directions; and ye dreaded lest any thing should be undone or ill done which he had delivered to you in the name of God.

16. I have confidence in you in all things] It appears that the apostle was now fully persuaded, from the accounts given by Titus, that every scandal had been put away from this church; and that the faction, which had long distracted and divided them, was nearly broken; that all was on the eve of being restored to its primitive purity and excellence; that their character was now so firmly fixed, that there was no reason to apprehend that they should be again tossed to and fro with every wind of doctrine.

whilst he remembereth the obedience of you all, how with fear and trembling ye received him.

16 I rejoice therefore that I have confidence in you, in all things.

u 2 Thess. 3.4. Phil. 3.21.

1. Thus a happy termination is put to an affair that seemed likely to ruin the Corinthian church, not only at Corinth but through all Greece: for, if this bad man, who had been chief in opposing the apostle's authority, bringing in licentious doctrines, and denying the resurrection of the dead, had ultimately succeeded at Corinth, his doctrine and influence might soon have extended over Greece and Asia Minor: and the great work of God which had been wrought in those parts would have been totally destroyed. This one consideration is sufficient to account for the apostle's great anxiety and distress, on account of the divisions and heresies at Corinth. He knew it was a most pernicious leaven, and, unless destroyed, must destroy the work of God. The loss of the affections of the church at Corinth, however much it might affect the tender fatherly heart of the apostle, cannot account for the awful apprehensions, poignant distress, and deep anguish, which he, in different parts of these epistles, so feelingly describes; and which he describes as having been invariably his portion from the time that he heard of their perversion, till he was assured of their restoration, by the account brought by Titus.

2. A scandal or heresy in the church of God is ruinous at all times; but particularly so when the cause is in its infancy: and therefore the messengers of God cannot be too careful to lay the foundation well in doctrine, to establish the strictest discipline; and to be very cautious who they admit and accredit as members of the church of Christ. It is certain that the door should be opened wide to admit penitent sinners; but the watchman should ever stand by, to see that no improper person enter in. Christian prudence should ever be connected with Christian zeal. It is a great work to bring sinners to Christ; it is a greater work to preserve them in the faith; and it requires much grace and much wisdom to keep the church of Christ pure; not only by not permitting the unholy to enter; but by casting out those who apostatize or work iniquity. Slackness in discipline generally precedes corruption of doctrine; the former generating the latter.

CHAPTER VIII.

The apostle stirs them up to make a collection for the poor Christians at Jerusalem, by the very liberal contributions of the people of Macedonia for the same purpose; who were comparatively a poor people, 1—5. He tells them that he had desired Titus to finish this good work among them, which he had begun, hoping that as they abounded in many excellent gifts and graces, they would abound in this also, 6—8. He exhorts them to this by the example of Jesus Christ; who, though rich, subjected himself to voluntary poverty, that they might be enriched, 9. He shows them that this contribution, which had been long begun, should have been long since finished, 10. And that they should do every thing with a ready and willing mind according to the ability which God had given them; that abundance should not prevail on one hand, while pinching poverty ruled on the other: but that there should be equality, 11—14. He shows, from the distribution of the manna in the wilderness, that the design of God was, that every member of his spiritual household, should have the necessities of life, 15. He tells them that he had now sent Titus and another with him, to Corinth, to complete this great work, 16—22. The character which he gives of Titus, and the others employed in this business, 23, 24. MOREOVER, brethren, we do you to wit of the grace of God bestowed on the churches of Macedonia;

2 How that in a great trial of affliction, the abundance of their joy and their deep poverty abounded unto the riches of their liberality.

3 For to their power, I bear record, yea, and beyond their power, they were willing of themselves;

NOTES.—Verse 1. Moreover, brethren, we do you to wit] In all our dignified version very few ill constructed sentences can be found: however here is one, and the worst in the book. We do you to wit, is in the original γινώσκετε ὅτι ὑμεῖς, we make known unto you. This is plain and intelligible; and the other is not so; and the form is now obsolete.

The grace of God bestowed] Dr. Whitby has made it fully evident that the χάρις Θεοῦ, signifies the charitable contribution made by the churches in Macedonia, to which they were excited by the grace or influence of God upon their hearts; and, that ἀδοῦναι εἰς, cannot signify bestowed on, but given to. That χάρις means liberality, appears from ver. 6. we desired Titus that as he had begun, so he would finish, τὴν χάριν ταύτην, this charitable contribution. And verse 7. that ye abound ἐν τῇ χάριτι ταύτῃ, in this liberal contribution. And ver. 19. who was chosen of the church to travel with us, εἰς τὴν χάριν ταύτην, with this charitable contribution, which is administered, which is to be dispensed by us. So chap. ix. 8. God is able to make, τὰς χάριτας, all liberality to abound towards you. And 1 Cor. xiii. 3. to bring, τὴν χάριν, your liberality to the poor saints. Hence χάρις, is Hesychius and Pharocritus, interpreted a gift, as it is here by the apostle, Thanks be to God for his unspeakable gift, chap. ix. 14, 15. This charity is styled the grace of God, either from its exceeding greatness, as the orders of God, and mountains of God, signify great orders, and great mountains; Psalm xxxi. 6. lxxx. 10. Or, rather, it is called so, as proceeding from God, who is the dispenser of all good; and the giver of this disposition; for the motive of charity must come from him. So in other places, the zeal of God, 2 Cor. xi. 2. The love of God, 2 Cor. v. 14. The grace of God, Tit. ii. 11. See the original.

4 Praying us with much entreaty that we would receive the gift, and take upon us the fellowship of the ministering to the saints.

5 And this they did, not as we hoped, but first gave their own selves to the Lord, and unto us by the will of God;

6 Inasmuch that I desired Titus, that as he had begun, so he would also finish in you the same grace also.

1 Cor. 16.1, 3, 4. Ch. 9.4.—d Ver. 17. Ch. 12.18.—e Or, gift. Ver. 4.13.

The churches of Macedonia] These were Philippi, Thessalonica, Berea, &c.

2. In a great trial of affliction] The sense of this verse is the following: The Macedonians, though both poor and persecuted, rejoiced exceedingly, that an opportunity was afforded them of doing good to their more impoverished and more persecuted brethren. We can scarcely ever speak of poverty and affliction in an absolute sense: they are only comparative. Even the poor are called to relieve those who are poorer than themselves; and the afflicted to comfort those who are more afflicted than they are. The poor and afflicted churches of Macedonia felt this duty; and therefore came forward to the uttermost of their power to relieve their more impoverished and afflicted brethren in Judea.

3. For to their power, &c.] In their liberality they had no rule but their ability; they believed they were bound to contribute all they could; and even this rule they transgressed: for they went beyond their power; they deprived themselves for a time of the necessities of life, in order to give to others who were destitute even of necessities.

4. Praying us with much entreaty] We had not to solicit them to this great act of kindness; they even entreated us to accept their bounty; and to take on ourselves the administration or application of it to the wants of the poor in Judea.

5. Not as we hoped] They far exceeded our expectations; for they consecrated themselves entirely to the work of God: giving themselves and all they possessed first unto the Lord; and then as they saw that it was the will of God that they should come especially forward in this charitable work, they gave themselves to us, to assist to the uttermost, in providing relief for the suffering Christians in Judea.

7 Therefore, as ye abound in every thing, in faith, and utterance, and knowledge, and in all diligence, and in your love to us, see ⁶ that ye abound in this grace also.

8 ¹ I speak not by commandment, but by occasion of the forwardness of others, and to prove the sincerity of your love.

9 For ye know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that, though he was rich, yet for your sakes he became poor, that ye through his poverty might be rich.

10 And herein ¹ I give my advice: for ¹ this is expedient for you, who have begun before, not only to do, but also to be ¹⁰ forward ⁹ a year ago.

11 Now therefore perform the doing of it; that as there was a readiness to will, so there may be a performance also out of that which ye have.

12 For ¹ if there be first a willing mind, it is accepted according to that a man hath, and not according to that he hath not.

13 For I mean not that other men be eased, and ye burdened: but in all things as ye have abounded, so ye must abound here also.

14 ¹ Cor. 15, 6, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 72, 73, 74, 75, 76, 77, 78, 79, 80, 81, 82, 83, 84, 85, 86, 87, 88, 89, 90, 91, 92, 93, 94, 95, 96, 97, 98, 99, 100.

6. That ye desired Titus] Titus had probably had the plan of this contribution when he was before at Corinth, according to the direction given by the apostle, 1 Cor. xvi. 1, &c.

The same grace] Liberality.—See note on ver. 1.

7. As ye abound in every thing] See the note on 1 Cor. i. 5. In faith, crediting the whole testimony of God: in utterance, words; in doctrine, knowing what to teach; knowledge of God's will, and prudence to direct you in teaching and doing it; in diligence, to amend all that is wrong among you, and to do what is right; and in love to us, whom none ye prize as the apostles of the Lord, and your pastors in him.

Abound in this grace also] Be as eminent for your charitable disposition, as ye are for your faith, doctrine, knowledge, diligence, and love.

8. I speak not by commandment] I do not positively order this: I assume no right or authority over your property; what you devote of your substance to charitable purposes must be your own work, and a free-will offering.

The forwardness of others] V. z. the churches of Macedonia, which had already exerted themselves so very much in this good work. And the apostle here intimates that he takes this opportunity to apprise them of the zeal of the Macedonians, lest those at Corinth, who excelled in every other gift, should be out-done in this. Their own honour, if better motives were absent, would induce them to exert themselves, that they might not be out-done by others. And then as they had possessed great love for the apostle, and this was a service that lay near his heart, they would prove the sincerity of that professed love, by a liberal contribution for the afflicted and destitute Jewish Christians.

9. For ye know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ] This was the strongest argument of all; and it is urged home by the apostle with admirable address.

Ye know] Ye are acquainted with God's endless love in sending Jesus Christ into the world; and ye know the grace, the infinite benevolence of Christ himself.

That, though he was rich] The Possessor, as he was the Creator of the heavens and the earth: For your sakes he became poor; he emptied himself, and made himself of no reputation; and took upon himself the form of a servant; and humbled himself unto death, even the death of the cross; that ye, through his poverty, through his humiliation and death, might be rich; might regain your forfeited inheritance, and be enriched with every grace of his Holy Spirit, and brought at last to his eternal glory.

If Jesus Christ, as some contend, were only a mere man, in what sense could he be said to be rich? His family was poor in Bethlehem; his parents were very poor also; he himself never possessed any property among men from the stable to the cross; nor had he any thing to bequeath at his death but his peace. And in what way could the poverty of one man make a multitude rich? These are questions, which on the Socinian scheme can never be satisfactorily answered.

10. Herein I give my advice] For I speak not by way of commandment, ver. 8.

For this is expedient for you] It is necessary you should do this to preserve a consistency of conduct; for ye began this work a year ago, and it is necessary that ye should complete it as soon as possible.

Not only to do, but also to be forward] Το ποιεῖν καὶ το ἀγωνεῖν, literally to do and to will; but as the will must be before the deed, βέβαιον must be taken here in the sense of delight, &c. it frequently means in the Old and New Testaments. See several examples in 1 Timothy.

Some MSS. transpose the words; allowing this, there is no difficulty.

A year ago] Ἄνω πάλαι. It was about a year before this, that the apostle, in his first epistle, ch. xvi. 2, had exhorted them to make this contribution; and there is no doubt that they, in obedience to his directions, had begun to lay up in store for this charitable purpose; he therefore wishes them to complete this good work, and thus show that they were not led to it by the example of the Macedonians, seeing they themselves had been first movers in this business.

11. A readiness to will, so there may be a performance] Ye have willed and purposed this: now, perform it.

Out of that which ye have] Give, as God has enabled you; and give as God has disposed you. He requires each man to

11. But by an equality, that now at this time your abundance may be a supply for their want; that their abundance also may be a supply for your want; that there may be equality:

15 As it is written, ¹ He that had gathered much, had nothing over; and he that had gathered little, had no lack.

16 But thanks be to God, which put the same earnest care into the heart of Titus for you.

17 For indeed he accepted ² the exhortation; but being more forward, of his own accord he went into you.

18 And we have sent with him ³ the brother, whose praise is in the Gospel throughout all the churches;

19 And not that only, but who was also ⁴ chosen of the churches to travel with us with this grace, which is administered by us ⁵ to the glory of the same Lord, and declaration of your ready mind.

20 Avoiding this, that no man should blame us in this abundance which is administered by us:

do as he can, and accepts the will where the means are wanting to perform the deed.

12. According to that a man hath] According to his real property; not tithing that which belongs to his own family, and is indisputably necessary for their support; and not tithing that which belongs to others; viz. what he owes to any man.

13. That other men be eased] I do not design that you should impoverish yourselves, in order that others may live abundantly.

14. But by an equality] That you may do to those who are distressed now; as on a change of circumstances, you would wish them to do to you. And I only wish that, of your abundance, you would now minister to their wants; and it may be, that their abundance may yet supply your wants; for, so liable are all human affairs to change, that it is possible that you, rich Corinthians, should need the charitable help of others; as it is, that those Jews who once had need of nothing, should now be dependant on your bounty.

That they may be equality] That ye may exert yourselves so, in behalf of those poor people, that there may be, between you, an equality in the necessities of life: your abundance supplying them with that of which they are utterly destitute.

15. He that had gathered much, had nothing over] On this passage to which the apostle alludes, Exod. xvi. 18. I have stated that, probably every man gathered as much manna as he could, and when he brought it home and measured it by the omer, (for this was the measure for each man's eating,) if he had a surplus, it went to the supply of some other family, that had not been able to collect enough; the family being large, and the time in which the manna might be gathered, before the heat of the day, not being sufficient to collect a supply for so numerous a household; several of whom might be so confined as not to be able to collect for themselves. Thus there was an equality among the Israelites in reference to this thing; and in this light, these words of St. Paul lead us to view the passage. To apply this to the present case, the Corinthians, in the course of God's providence, had gathered more than was absolutely necessary for their own support; by giving the surplus to the persecuted and impoverished Christian Jews, there would be an equality. Both would then possess the necessities of life, though still the one might have more property than the other.

16. But thanks be to God] He thanks God, who had already disposed the heart of Titus to attend to this business; and, with his usual address; considers all this as done in the behalf of the Corinthian church; and that though the poor Christians in Judea are to have the immediate benefit, yet God put honour upon them, in making them his instruments in supplying the wants of others. He who is an almoner to God Almighty, is highly honoured indeed.

17. He accepted the exhortation] I advised him to visit you, and excite you to this good work; and I found that he was already disposed in his heart to do it: God put this earnest care in the heart of Titus for you, ver. 16.

18. The brother, whose praise is in the Gospel] Who this brother was, we cannot tell: some suppose it was St. Luke who wrote a Gospel, and who was the companion of St. Paul in several of his travels; others think it was Silas; others, Barnabas; others, Mark; and others, Apollos. Neither ancient nor modern agree in either; but Luke, John, and Mark, soon to have the most probable opinions in their favour. Whoever the person was, he was sufficiently known to the Corinthians, as we learn by what the apostle says of him in this place.

19. Chosen of the churches to travel with us] Χρησάμενος, appointed by a show of hands, from αὐτοῖς, the band, and τρέφο, to extend. This appointment, by the suffrage of the churches, seems to refer more to St. Luke than any one else; unless we suppose he refers to the transaction, Acts xv. 40, 41, and then it would appear that Silas is the person intended.

With this grace] Liberal contribution.—See on verse 1.

Your ready mind] Your willingness to relieve them. But instead of ὑμῶν, your, ὑμῶν, our, is the reading of almost all the best MSS. and all the Versions. This is doubtless the true reading.

20. Avoiding this, that no man should blame us] Taking this prudent caution, to have witnesses of our conduct; and such as were chosen by the churches themselves; that we might

21. Providing for honest things] Taking care to act so, as not only to be clear in the sight of God, but also to be clear in the sight of all men; avoiding even the appearance of evil. I wish the reader to refer to the excellent note on 1 Cor. xvi. 4. which I have extracted from Dr. Paley.

22. We have sent with them] Titus, and probably Luke; our brother, probably Apollas.

Now much more diligent] Finding that I have the fullest confidence in your complete reformation, and love to me, he engages in this business with alacrity; and exceeds even his former diligence.

23. Whether any do inquire of Titus] Should it be asked, who is this Titus? I answer, he is my companion, and my fellow-labourer in reference to you.—2 Cor. ii. 13. vii. 6. 7. Should any inquire who are these brethren, Luke and Apollas? I answer, they are Ἀπολλῶν, apostles of the churches, and intensely bent on promoting the glory of Christ.

24. Wherefore show ye to them, and before the churches, &c.] Seeing they are persons every way worthy in themselves; and coming to you on such an important occasion, and so highly recommended, receive them affectionately; and let them thus see, that the very high character I have given of you is not exaggerated; and that you are as ready, in every work of charity, as I have stated you to be. 1. The whole of this chapter, and the following, is occupied in exciting the richer followers of Christ to be liberal to the poor: the obligation of each to be so. The reasons on which that obligation is founded; the arguments to enforce the obligation from those reasons; are all clearly stated, and most dexterously and forcibly managed. These two chapters afford a perfect model for a Christian minister, who is pleading the cause of the poor.

2. In the management of charities a man ought carefully to avoid the least suspicion of avarice, self-interest, and unfaithfulness. How few persons are entirely free from the upbraidings of their own consciences, in the matter of alms? But who will be able to bear the upbraidings of Christ at the time of death and judgment? No man can waste without injustice; or neglect, without sin, those things of which he is only the dispenser and steward.

3. God has not settled an equality among men by their birth, to the end that this quality might be the work of his grace. He has put the temporal portion of the poor into the hands of the rich: and the spiritual portion of the rich into the hands of the poor, on purpose to keep up a good understanding between the members of the same body, by a mutual dependance on one another. He who withholds the part belonging to the poor, steals more from himself than from them. Let every one answer this admirable design of God, and labour to re-establish equality: the poor in praying much for the rich, and the rich in giving much to the poor.—See Quésnel.

CHAPTER IX.

St. Paul intimates, that so ready were the Corinthians to make this charitable contribution, that it was scarcely necessary for him to write, 1, 2. But lest they should not be ready when he came, he had sent the brethren, Titus, &c. beforehand; lest, if any of the Macedonians should come with him, they should find them not prepared, though he had boasted so much of their ready mind, 3—5. He gives them directions how they shall contribute; and the advantage to be gained by it, in the fulfilment of the promises of God, 6—11. He shows them that, by this means, the poor shall be relieved, God glorified, their Christian temper manifested, and the prayers of many engaged in their behalf, 12—14. And concludes, with giving thanks to God, for his unspeakable gift, 15. [A. M. 4061. A. D. 57. A. U. C. 810. An. Imp. Neronis Cass. 4.]

FOR as touching ^a the ministering to the saints, it is superfluous for me to write to you:

3 * Yet have I sent the brethren, lest our boasting of you should be in vain in this behalf; that, as I said, ye may be ready:

4 Lest haply if they of Macedonia come with me, and find you unprepared, we (that we say not, ye) should be ashamed in this same confident boasting.

5 Therefore I thought it necessary to exhort the brethren, that they would go before unto you, and make up beforehand your ^e bounty, ^f whereof ye had notice before, that the same

NOTES.—Verse 1. It is superfluous for me to write to you] I need not enlarge, having already said enough.—See the preceding chapter.

2. I know the forwardness of your mind] You have already firmly purposed to contribute to the support of the poor and suffering saints.

That Achaia was ready a year ago] The whole of the Morea was anciently called Achaia, the capital of which was Corinth. The apostle means not only Corinth, but other churches in different parts about Corinth: we know there was a church at Cenchrea, one of the ports on the Corinthian Isthmus.

Your zeal hath provoked very many] Hearing that the Corinthians were so intent on the relief of the sufferers in Palestine, other churches, and especially they of Macedonia, came forward the more promptly and liberally.

3. Yet have I sent the brethren] Titus and his companions, mentioned in the preceding chapter.

That, as I said, ye may be ready] And he wished them to be ready, that they might preserve the good character he had given them: this was for their honour, and if they did not take care to do so, he might be reputed a liar; and thus, both they and himself, be ashamed before the Macedonians; should any of them, at this time, accompany him to Corinth.

5. Whereof ye had notice before] Instead of προκαρτεροῦμεν, spoken of before, BCDEFG, several others; with the Coptic, Vulgate, Itala, and several of the Fathers, have προκαρτεροῦμεν, what was promised before. The sense is not very different: probably the latter reading was intended to explain the former.—See the Margin.

Bounty, and not as of covetousness] Had they been backward, strangers might have attributed this to a covetous principle; as it would appear, that they were loth to give up their money, and that they parted with it only, when they could might be ready, as a matter of bounty, and not as of covetousness.

6 ^h But this I say, He which soweth sparingly, shall reap also sparingly; and he which soweth bountifully, shall reap also bountifully.

7 Every man according as he purposeth in his heart, so let him give; ⁱ not grudgingly, or of necessity: for ^k God loveth a cheerful giver.

8 ^l And God is able to make all grace abound toward you: that ye, always having all sufficiency in all things, may abound to every good work:

9 (As it is written, ^m He hath dispersed abroad; he hath given to the poor: his righteousness remaineth for ever.

10 Now he that ⁿ ministereth seed to the sower, both minister not, for shame, keep it any longer. This is the property of a covetous heart; whereas, readiness to give is the characteristic of a liberal mind. This makes a sufficiently plain sense; and we need not look, as some have done, for any new sense of καρτεροῦμεν, covetousness, as if it were here to be understood as implying a small gift.

6. He which soweth sparingly] This is a plain maxim: no man can expect to reap, but in proportion as he has sowed. And here almsgiving is represented as a seed sown, which shall bring forth a crop. If the sowing be liberal, the crop shall be so too.

Sowing is used among the Jews to express almsgiving: so they understand Isa. xxxii. 20. Blessed are ye who sow beside all waters: i. e. who are ready to help every one who is in need. And Hos. x. 12. they interpret, Sow to yourselves almsgiving, and ye shall reap in mercy. If you show mercy to the poor, God will show mercy to you.

7. Not grudgingly, or of necessity] The Jews had in the temple two chests for alms: the one was קופה of what was necessary; i. e. what the law required: the other was קופה of the free will offerings. To escape perdition, some would grudgingly give what necessity obliged them. Others would give cheerfully, for the love of God, and through pity to the poor. Of the first, nothing is said: they simply did what the law required. Of the second, much is said: God loves them. The benefit of almsgiving is lost to the giver, when he does it with a grumbling heart. And, as he does not do the duty in the spirit of the duty, even the performance of the letter of the law, is an abomination in the sight of God.

To these two sorts of alms in the temple, the apostle most evidently alludes. See Schoettgen.

8. God is able to make all grace abound] We have already seen, chap. vii. 1. that the word grace, χάρις, in the connexion in which the apostle uses it in these chapters, signifies a bread for your food, and multiply your seed sown, and increase the fruits of your righteousness.)

11 Being enriched in every thing to all ^P bountifulness, ^q which causeth through us, thanksgiving to God.

12 For the administration of this service not only ^s supplieth the wants of the saints, but is abundant also by many thanksgivings unto God;

o Hos 10.12. Matt. 6.1.—p Or, liberality.—q Gr. simplicity, Ch. 5.2.—r Ch. 1.11.

charitable gift; here it certainly has the same meaning—"God is able to give you, in his mercy, abundance of temporal good; that having a sufficiency, ye may abound in every good work;" This refers to the sowing plentifully; those who do so shall reap plentifully; they shall have an abundance of God's blessings.

9. He hath dispersed abroad Here is still the allusion to the sower. He sows much; not at home merely, or among those with whom he is acquainted, but abroad, among the strangers; whether of his own, or of another nation. The quotation is taken from Psal. cxii. 9.

He hath given to the poor This is the interpretation of He hath scattered abroad: and therefore it is said, His righteousness remaineth for ever; his good work is had in remembrance before God. By righteousness, we have already seen that the Jews understand alms-giving. See the note on Matt. vi. 1.

10. Now he that ministereth seed to the sower The sower, as we have already seen, is he that gives alms of what he hath: and God, who requires him to give these alms, is here represented as providing him with the means. As in the creation, if God had not created the earth with every tree and plant, with its seed in itself; so that a harvest came, without a previous ploughing and sowing, there could have been no seed to deposit in the earth; so if God had not, in the course of his Providence, given them the property they had, it would be impossible for them to give alms. And, as even the well cultivated and sowed field would be unfruitful if God did not, by his unseen energy and blessing, cause it to bring forth, and bring to maturity; so would it have been with their property; it could not have increased, for without his blessing, riches take wings, and flee away, as an eagle towards heaven. Therefore, in every sense, it is God who ministers seed to the sower, and multiplies the seed sown. And, as all this properly comes from God, and cannot exist without him, he has a right to require that it be dispensed in that way which he judges best.

The word ἐκτρέφω, he that ministereth, is very emphatic; it signifies, he who leads up the chorus, from ἐκ, to, and τρέφω, to lead the chorus: it means also, to join, to associate, to supply, or furnish one thing after another, so that there be no want, or chasm. Thus God is represented in the course of his Providence, associating and connecting causes and effects, keeping every thing in its proper place, and state of dependance on another; and all upon himself; so that summer and winter, heat and cold, seed-time and harvest, regularly succeed each other. Thus God leads up this grand chorus of causes and effects: provides the seed to the hand of the sower: gives him skill to discern the times when the earth should be prepared for the grain; and when the grain should be sowed; blesses the earth, and causes it to bring forth and bud, so that it may again minister seed to the sower, and bread to the eater; and, by a watchful Providence, preserves every thing. The figure is beautiful; and shows us the grand system of causes and effects, all directed by and under the immediate guidance and government of God himself.

The fruits of your righteousness Your beneficence, for ὁ δίκαιος, is here to be understood. See the note on Matt. vi. 1. already referred to.

11. Being enriched in every thing Observe—Why does God give riches?—That they may be applied to his glory, and the good of men. Why does he increase riches?—That those who have them may exercise all bountifulness. And if they be enriched in every thing, what will be the consequence if they do not exercise all bountifulness? Why? God will curse their blessings: the rust shall canker them, and the moth shall consume their garments. But if, on the other hand, they do thus apply them, then they do cause thanksgiving to God. The 9th and 10th verses should be read in a parenthesis; for this verse connects with the eighth.

12. For the administration of this service The poor are relieved, see the hand of God in this relief, and give God the glory of his grace.

13. By the experiment of this ministration In this, and in the preceding, and following verses, the apostle enumerates the good effects that would be produced by their liberal almsgiving to the poor saints at Jerusalem. 1. The wants of the saints would be supplied. 2. Many thanksgivings would thereby be rendered unto God. 3. The Corinthians would thereby give proof of their subjection to the Gospel. And, 4. The prayers of those relieved will ascend up to God in the behalf of their benefactors.

14. The exceeding grace of God in you By the ὑπερβαλλόντων χάριν, superabounding, or transcending grace of God, which was in them, the apostle most evidently means the merciful and charitable disposition which they had towards the suffering saints.

The whole connexion, indeed the whole chapter, proves this; and the apostle attributes this to its right source, the grace or goodness of God. They had the means of charity; but God had given these means: they had a feeling and charitable heart; but God was the author of it. Their charity was superabundant; and God had furnished both the disposition, the occasion, and the means, by which that disposition was to be made manifest.

15. Thanks be unto God for his unspeakable gift. Some contend that Christ only is here intended; others, that the alms-giving is meant.

After all the difference of commentators and preachers, it is most evident that the ἀνεκάνητος δῶρον, unspeakable gift, is precisely the same with the ὑπερβαλλόντων χάριν, superabounding grace, or benefit, of the preceding verse. If, therefore, Jesus Christ, the gift of God's endless love to man, be the meaning of the unspeakable gift in this verse; he is also intended by the superabounding grace, in the preceding. But it is most evident, that it is the work of Christ in them, and not Christ himself, which is intended in the 14th verse, and consequently that it is the same work, not the operator, which is referred to in this last verse.

A few farther observations may be necessary on the conclusion of this chapter.

1. JESUS CHRIST, the gift of God's love to mankind, is an unspeakable blessing: no man can conceive, much less declare, how great this gift is; for these things the angels desire to look into. Therefore, he may be well called the unspeakable gift, as he is the highest God ever gave, or can give to man; though this is not the meaning of this last verse.

2. The conversion of a soul from darkness to light; from sin to holiness; from Satan to God: is not less inconceivable. It is called a new creation; and creative energy cannot be comprehended. To have the grace of God to rule the heart, subduing all things to itself, and filling the soul with the Divine nature, is an unspeakable blessing; and the energy that produced it is an unspeakable gift. I conclude, therefore, that it is the work of Christ in the soul, and not Christ himself, that the apostle terms the superabounding, or exceeding great grace, and the unspeakable gift; and Dr. Whitby's paraphrase may be safely admitted as giving the true sense of the passage. Thanks be unto God for his unspeakable gift: i. e. "this admirable charity," (proceeding from the work of Christ in the soul,) "by which God is so much glorified; the Gospel receives such credit; others are so much benefited; and you will be, by God, so plentifully rewarded." This is the sober sense of the passage; and no other meaning can comport with it. The passage itself is a grand proof that every good disposition in the soul of man, comes from God; and it explodes the notion of natural good; i. e. good which God does not work; which is absurd; for no effect can exist without a cause. And God, being the fountain of good, all that can be called good, must come immediately from himself. See James, chap. i. 17.

3. Most men can see the hand of God in the dispensations of his justice; and yet these very seldom appear. How is it that they cannot equally see his hand in the dispensations of his mercy, which are great, striking, and unremitting? Our afflictions, we scarcely ever forget; our mercies, we scarcely ever remember! Our hearts are alive to complaint, but dead to gratitude. We have had ten thousand mercies for one judgment, and yet our complaints to our thanksgivings have been ten thousand to one! How is it that God endures this, and bears with us? Ask his own eternal clemency; and ask the Mediator before the throne. The mystery of our preservation and salvation can be there alone explained.

CHAPTER X.

The apostle vindicates himself against the aspersions cast on his person, by the false apostle; and takes occasion to mention his spiritual might and authority, 1-6. He shows them the impropriety of judging after the outward appearance, 7. Again refers to his apostolical authority, and informs them that, when he again comes among them, he will show himself in his deeds as powerful as his letters intimated, 8-11. He shows that these false teachers sat down in other men's labours, having neither authority nor influence from God, to break up new ground; while he, and the apostles in general, had the regions assigned to them through which they were to sow the seed of life; and that he never entered into any place where the work was made ready by his hand by others, 12-16. He concludes with intimating that the glorying of those false apostles was bad; that they had nothing but self-commendation; and that they who glory should glory in the Lord, 17, 18. [A. C. 4061. A. D. 57. A. U. C. 810. An. Imp. Neronis Cæs. 4.]

NOW ^a I Paul myself beseech you by the meekness and gentleness of Christ, ^b who ^c in presence am base among you, but being absent am bold toward you:

2 But I beseech you, ^d that I may not be bold when I am present with that confidence, wherewith I think to be bold against some, which I think of us as if we walked according to the flesh. 3 For though we walk in the flesh, we do not war after the flesh:

4 [For the weapons ^e of our warfare are not carnal, but ^f mighty ^g through God in the pulling down of strong holds;]

NOTES.—Verse 1. I Paul myself beseech you by the meekness] Having now finished his directions and advices relative to the collection for the poor, he resumes his argument relative to the false apostle, who had gained considerable influence, by representing St. Paul as despicable in his person, his ministry, and his influence. Under this obloquy, the apostle was supported by the meekness and gentleness of Christ: and through the same heavenly disposition, he delayed inflicting that punishment which, in virtue of his apostolical authority, he might have inflicted on him who had disturbed, and laboured to corrupt the Christian church.

Who in presence am base among you, but being absent am bold towards you] He seems to quote these as the words of his calumniator—as if he had said, “This apostle of yours is a mere braggadochio; when he is among you, you know how base and contemptible he is; when absent, see how he brags and boasts.” The word parousia, which we render here, signifies louty; and, as some think, short of stature. The insinuation is, that when there was danger or opposition at hand; St. Paul acted with great obsequiousness, fearing for his person and authority, lest he should lose his secular influence. See the following verse.

2. Some, which think of us as if we walked according to the flesh] As it is customary for cowards and overbearing men to threaten the weak and the timid when present; to bluster when absent; and to be very obsequious in the presence of the strong and courageous. This conduct they appear to have charged against the apostle, which he calls here walking after the flesh: acting as a man who had worldly ends in view; and would use any means in order to accomplish them.

3. Though we walk in the flesh] That is, although I am in the common condition of human nature, and must live as a human being, yet I do not war after the flesh; I do not act the coward or the poltroon, as they insinuate. I have a good cause, a good captain, strength at will, and courage at hand. I neither fear them nor their master.

4. The weapons of our warfare] The apostle often uses the metaphor of a warfare, to represent the life and trials of a Christian minister. See Ephes. vi. 10-17. 1 Tim. i. 18. 2 Tim. ii. 3, 4, 5.

Are not carnal] Here he refers to the means used by the false apostle, in order to secure his party; he calumniated St. Paul; traduced the truth; preached false and licentious doctrines; and supported these with sophistical reasonings.

But mighty through God] Our doctrines are true and pure: they come from God, and lead to him; and he accompanies them with his mighty power to the hearts of those who hear them: and the strong holds, the apparently solid and cogent reasoning of the philosophers, we, by these doctrines pull down; and thus the fortifications of heathenism are destroyed; and the cause of Christ triumphs, wherever we come; and we put to flight the armies of the aliens.

5. Casting down imaginations] λογισμοις, reasonings or opinions. The Greek philosophers valued themselves especially on their ethic systems, in which their reasonings appeared to be very profound and conclusive; but they were obliged to assume principles, which were either such as did not exist, or were false in themselves; as the whole of their mythologic system most evidently was: truly, from what remains of them, we see that their metaphysics were generally bombast; and, as to their philosophy, it was in general good for nothing.

When the apostles came against their gods many, and their lords many, with the extreme and eternal ban, and they were confounded, scattered, annihilated:—when they came against their various modes of purifying the mind, their sacrificial and mediatorial system, with the Lord Jesus Christ; his agony and bloody sweat; his cross and passion; his death and burial; and his glorious resurrection and ascension, they sunk before them; and appeared to be what they really were, as dust upon the balance; and lighter than vanity.

Every high thing] Even the pretendedly sublime doctrines

^b mightily ^g through God in the pulling down of strong holds;] 5 ^k Casting down ^l imaginations, and every high thing that exalteth itself against the knowledge of God, and bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ;

for instance of Plato, Aristotle, and the Stoics in general, fell before the simple preaching of Christ crucified.

The knowledge of God] The doctrine of the unity and eternity of the Divine nature; which was opposed by the plurality of their idols; and the generation of their gods, and their men-made deities. It is amazing how feeble a resistance heathenism made, by argument or reasoning, against the doctrine of the Gospel! It instantly shrunk from the Divine light, and called on the secular power to contend for it! Popery sunk before Protestantism in the same way, and defended itself by the same means. The apostles destroyed heathenism wherever they came: the Protestants confuted Popery wherever their voice was permitted to be heard.

Bringing into captivity every thought] HEATHENISM could not recover itself: in vain did its thousands of altars smoke with reiterated hecatombs; their demons were silent; and their idols were proved to be nothing in the world. Popery could never, by any power of self-reviviscence, restore itself after its defeat by the reformation: it had no Scripture consecutively understood: no reason, no argument; in vain were its bells rung; its candles lighted; its auto da fes exhibited: in vain did its fires blaze; and in vain were innumerable human victims immolated on its altars! The light of God penetrated its hidden works of darkness, and dragged its three-headed Cerberus into open day: the monster sickened, vomited his herbane, and fled for refuge to his native shades.

The obedience of Christ] Subjection to idols was annihilated by the progress of the Gospel among the heathens; and they soon had but one Lord, and his name one. In like manner the doctrines of the reformation, mighty through God, pulled down, demolished, and brought into captivity the whole Papal system: and instead of obedience to the pope, the pretended vicar of God upon earth, obedience to Christ, as the sole almighty head of the church, was established particularly in Great Britain, where it continues to prevail. Hallelujah! the Lord God omnipotent reigneth.

6. And having in a readiness to revenge all disobedience] I am ready, through this mighty armour of God, to punish those opposers of the doctrine of Christ; and the disobedience which has been produced by them.

When your obedience is fulfilled] When you have, in the fullest manner, discomfited those men, and separated yourselves from their communion. The apostle was not in haste to pull up the trees, lest he should pull up the wheat also.

All the terms in these two verses are military. Allusion is made to a strongly fortified city, where the enemy had made his last stand; entrenching himself about the walls; strengthening all his redoubts and ramparts; raising castles, towers, and various engines of defence and offence upon the walls; and neglecting nothing that might tend to render his strong hold impregnable. The army of God goes against the place, and attacks it; the strong holds, οχυρωματα, all the fortified places, are carried. The imaginings, λογισμοι, engines, and whatever the imagination or skill of man could raise, are speedily taken and destroyed. Every high thing, παιψωρα, all the castles and towers are sapped, thrown down, and demolished; the walls are battered into breaches; and the besieging army, carrying every thing at the point of the sword, enter the city, storm and take the citadel. Every where defeated, the conquered submit, and are brought into captivity, αρχαιλωτοιζοις, are led away captives; and thus the whole government is destroyed.

It is easy to apply these things, as far as may be consistent with the apostle's design. The general sense I have given in the preceding notes.

7. Do ye look on things after the outward appearance?] Do not be carried away with appearances; do not be satisfied with show and parade.

If any man trust to himself that he is Christ's] Here, as in several other places of this, and the preceding epistle, the ris, any, or certain person, most evidently refers to the false apostle, who made so much disturbance in the church. And this man trusted to himself, assumed to himself that he was

8 For though I should boast somewhat more ¹ of our authority, which the Lord hath given us for edification, and not for your destruction, ² I should not be ashamed:

9 That I may not seem as if I would terrify you by letters.

10 For his letters, ³ say they, are weighty and powerful; but

⁴ his bodily presence is weak, and his ⁵ speech contemptible.

11 Let such an one think this, that such as we are in word by letters when we are absent, such will we be also in deed when we are present.

12 ⁶ For we dare not make ourselves of the number, or compare ourselves with some that commend themselves: but they measuring themselves by themselves, and comparing themselves among themselves, ⁷ are not wise.

13 ⁸ For we will not boast of things without our measure, but Christ's messenger: it would not do to attempt to subvert Christianity at once, it had got too strong a hold of Corinth to be easily dislodged; he therefore pretended to be on Christ's side, and to derive his authority from him.

Let him of himself. Without any authority certainly from God; but, as he arrogates to himself the character of a minister of Christ, let him acknowledge that even so, we are Christ's ministers; and that I have, by my preaching, and the miracles which I have wrought, given the fullest proof that I am especially commissioned by Him.

8. For though I should boast, &c.] I have a greater authority, and spiritual power, than I have yet shown; both to edify and to punish; but I employ this for your edification in righteousness; and not for the destruction of any delinquent. "This," says Calmet, "is the rule which the pastors of the church ever propose to themselves in the exercise of their authority; whether to enjoin or forbid; to dispense or to oblige; to bind or to loose. They should use this power only as Jesus Christ used it, for the salvation, and not for the destruction of souls."

9. That I may not seem, &c.] This is an elliptical sentence, and may be supplied thus: "I have not used this authority; nor will I add any more concerning this part of the subject, lest I should seem, as my adversary has insinuated, to wish to terrify you by my letters."

10. For his letters, say they, are weighty and powerful.] He boasts of high powers, and that he can do great things. See on ver. 1, 2.

But his bodily presence is weak.] When you behold the man, you find him a feeble, contemptible mortal; and when you hear him speak, his speech, ὁ λόγος, probably his doctrine, ἡ διδασκαλία, is good for nothing; his person, matter, and manner, are altogether uninteresting, unimpressive, and too contemptible to be valued by the wise and the learned. This seems to be the spirit and design of this slander.

Many, both among the ancients and moderns, have endeavoured to find out the ground there was for any part of this calumny; as to the moral conduct of the apostle, that was invulnerable; his motives, it is true, were suspected and denounced by this false apostle and his partizans; but they could never find any thing in his conduct which could support their insinuations. What they could not attach to his character, they disingenuously attached to his person and his elocution.

If we can credit some ancient writers, such as Nicephorus, we shall find the apostle thus described—Ἰανθὸς μικρὸς ἢ καὶ εὐνοειδὲς, τὸν τοῦ σώματος μελέος. Καὶ ὥστε πᾶσι καλὸν αὐτὸν κεκρίσθαι. Σμικρὸν δὲ, καὶ κεκφύον. Τὴν οὖν ὄψιν λυγρὰ, καὶ τὸ προσωπεῖον πομφήριον, ψιλὸς τὴν κεφαλὴν, κ.τ.λ. Nicephor, lib. ii. cap. 17. Paul was a little man, crooked and almost bent like a bow; with a pale countenance, long and wrinkled; a bald head; his eyes full of fire and benevolence; his beard long, thick, and interspersed with gray hairs, as was his head, &c. I quote from Calmet, not having Nicephorus at hand.

An old Greek writer, says the same author, whose works are found among those of Chrysostom, Tom. vi. Hom. 30. page 263. represents him thus—Ἰανθὸς ὁ τριπύχος ἀνθρώπος, καὶ τὸν ὀνόματι ἀσπίονος. "Paul was a man about three cubits in height, (four feet six,) and yet, nevertheless, touched the heavens." Others say, that "he was a little man, had a bald head, and a large nose." See the above, and several other authorities in Calmet.—Perhaps there is not one of these statements correct; as to Nicephorus, he is a writer of the sixteenth century, weak and credulous, and worthy of no regard. And the writer found in the works of Chrysostom, in making the apostle little more than a pigmy, has rendered his account incredible.

That St. Paul could be no such diminutive person, we may fairly presume from the office he filled under the high priest, in the persecution of the church of Christ; and that he had not an impediment in his speech, but was a graceful orator, we may learn from his whole history; and especially from the account we have, Acts xiv. 12, where the Lycaonians took him for Mercury, the god of eloquence, induced thereto by his powerful and persuasive elocution. In short, there does not appear to be any substantial evidence of the apostle's deformity, pigmy stature, bald head, and crooked and wrinkled face, large nose, stammering speech, &c. &c. these are probably all figments of unbridled fancy, and foolish surmises.

11. Such as we are in word.] A threatening of this kind would, doubtless, alarm the false apostle; and it is very likely, according to the measure of the ² rule which God hath distributed to us, a measure to reach even unto you.

14 For we stretch not ourselves beyond our measure, as though we reached not unto you: ³ for we are come as far as to you also in preaching the Gospel of Christ:

15 Not boasting of things without our measure, that is, of other men's labours; but having hope, when your faith is increased, that we shall be ⁴ enlarged by you according to our rule abundantly,

16 To preach the Gospel in the regions beyond you, and not to boast in another man's ⁵ line of things made ready to our hand.

17 ⁶ But he that glorieth, let him glory in the Lord.

18 For ⁷ not he that commendeth himself is approved, but ⁸ whom the Lord commendeth.

² Or, line.—1 Cor. 3. 5, 10 & 4. 15, & 9. 1.—b. Romans 15. 20.—c. Or, magnified in you.—d. Or, rule.—e. Isaiah 55. 10. Jer. 9. 24. 1 Cor. 1. 31.—f. Proverbs 27. 2.—g. Rom. 9. 29. 1 Cor. 4. 5.

that he did not await the apostle's coming, as he would not be willing to try the fate of Elymus.

12. We dare not make ourselves, &c.] As if he had said, I dare neither associate with, nor compare myself to those who are full of self commendation.—Some think this to be an ironical speech.

But they measuring themselves by themselves.] They are not sent of God; they are not inspired by his Spirit; therefore they have no rule to think or act by. They are also full of pride and self-conceit; they look within themselves for accomplishments which their self-love will soon find out; for, to it, real and fictitious are the same. As they dare not compare themselves with the true apostles of Christ, they compare themselves with each other; and, as they have no perfect standard, they can have no excellence; nor can they ever attain true wisdom, which is not to be had from looking at what we are, but to what we should be; and, if without a directory, what we should be will never appear; and consequently, our ignorance must continue. This was the case with the self-conceited false apostles; but, ὡς ὁπίσθην, ἀνὴρ οὐκ ἔστιν, ὡς ὁπίσθην, Mr. Wakefield contends, is an elegant Gracism, signifying they are not aware that they are measuring themselves by themselves, &c.

13. Things without our measure.] There is a great deal of difficulty in this and the three following verses; and there is a great diversity among the MSS. and which is the true reading can scarcely be determined. Our version is, perhaps, the plainest that can be made of the text. By the measure mentioned here, it seems as if the apostle meant the commission he received from God to preach the Gospel to the Gentiles; a measure or district that extended through all Asia Minor and Greece, down to Achaia, where Corinth was situated, a measure to reach even unto you. But the expressions in these verses are all agnostical, and taken from the stadium or race-course in the Olympic and Isthmian games. The μέτρον, or measure, was the length of the δοκίμος, or course; and the κων, rule or line, ver. 15 and 16, was probably the same with the γύακκα, or white line, which marked out the boundaries of the stadium; and the verbs reach unto, stretch out, &c. are all references to the exertions made to win the race. As this subject is so frequently alluded to in these epistles, I have thought it of importance to consider it particularly in the different places where it occurs.

14. For we stretch not ourselves beyond.] We have not proceeded straight from Macedonia, through Thessaly, and across the Adriatic gulf into Italy, which would have led us beyond you westward; but knowing the mind of our God, we left this direct path, and came southward through Greece, down into Achaia; and there we planted the Gospel. The false apostle has therefore got into our province, and entered into our labours; and there boasts as if the conversion of the heathen Achaians had been his own work. As there is an allusion here to the stadium, and to the Olympic games in general; we may consider the apostle as laying to the charge of the disturber at Corinth that he had got his name surreptitiously inserted on the military list; that he was not striving lawfully; had no right to the stadium, and none to the crown. See the observations at the end of 1 Cor. ix. and the note on ver. 13. of this chapter.

15. Not boasting of things without our measure.] We speak only of the work which God has done by us; for, we have never attempted to enter into other men's labours, and we study to convert those regions assigned to us by the Holy Spirit. We enter the course lawfully; and run according to rule. See above.

When your faith is increased.] When you receive more of the life and power of godliness; and when you can better spare me to go to other places.

We shall be enlarged by you.] Μεγαλυνθῆναι probably signifies here, to be praised or commended; and the sense would be this:—We hope that shortly, on your gaining an increase of true religion, after your long distractions and divisions, you will plainly see that we are the true messengers of God to you; and that in all your intercourse with your neighbours, or to foreign parts, you will speak of this Gospel preached by us, as a glorious system of saving truth; and that in consequence, the heathen countries around you, will be the better prepared to receive our message, and thus, our rule or district will be abundantly extended. This interpretation agrees well with the following verse.

16. To preach the Gospel in the regions beyond you.] He probably refers to those parts of the Morea, such as Sparta, &c.; what lay southeast of them; and to Italy which lay on the west: for it does not appear that he considered his measure or province to extend to Lybia, or any part of Africa. See the introduction, sect. xii.

[Not to boast in another man's line] So very scrupulous was the apostle not to build on another man's foundation; that he would not even go to those places where other apostles were labouring. He appears to think that every apostle had a particular district or province of the heathen world allotted to him; and which God commissioned him to convert to the Christian faith. No doubt every apostle was influenced in the same way; and this was a wise order of God; for by these means the Gospel was more quickly spread through the heathen provinces, than it otherwise would have been. The apostles had deacons or ministers with them, whose business it was to water the seed sown: but the apostles alone, under Christ, sowed and planted.

17. He that glorieth let him glory in the Lord.] Instead of boasting or exulting, even in your own success in preaching the Gospel, as none can be successful without the especial blessing of God, let God who gave the blessing have the glory. Even the genuine apostle, who has his commission immediately from God himself, takes no praise to himself from the prosperity of his work: but gives it all to God. How little cause then have your uncommissioned men to boast, to whom God has assigned no province; and who only boast in another man's line of things made ready to their hands!

18. Not he that commendeth himself] Not the person who makes a parade of his own attainments; who preaches himself, and not Christ Jesus the Lord; and far from being your servant for Christ's sake, affects to be your ruler; not such a one shall be approved of God, by an especial blessing on his labours; but he whom the Lord commendeth, by giving him the extraordinary gifts of the Holy Spirit; and converting the heathen by his ministry. These were qualifications, to which the false apostle at Corinth could not pretend. He had language, and eloquence, and show, and parade; but he had neither the gifts of an apostle, nor an apostle's success.

1. Dr. Whitby observes, that the apostle, in the 13th, 14th, 15th, and 16th verses, endeavours to advance himself above the false apostles in the three following particulars. (1.) That whereas they could show no commission to preach to the Corinthians, no measure by which God had distributed the Corinthians to them as their province, he could do so. We have a measure to reach even to you, ver. 13. (2.) That whereas they went out of their line, leaping from one church to another, he went on orderly, in the conversion of the heathens, from Judea through all the interjacent provinces, till he came to Corinth. (3.) Whereas they only came in and perverted the churches, where the faith had already been preached; and so could only boast of things made ready to their hands, ver. 16, he had laboured to preach the Gospel where Christ had not been named, lest he should build on another man's foundation, Rom. xv. 20.

2. We find that from the beginning, God appointed to every man his province; and to every man his labour; and would not suffer even one apostle to interfere with another. This was a very wise appointment; for by this the Gospel was not only more speedily diffused over the heathen nations, as we have already remarked, but the churches were better attended to, the Christian doctrine preserved in its purity, and the Christian discipline properly enforced. What is any man's work is no man's in particular; and thus the work is neglected. In every church of God, there should be some one who has the care of it; who may be properly called its pastor; and who is accountable for its purity in the faith, and its godly discipline.

3. Every man who ministers in holy things, should be well assured of his call to the work; without this, he can labour neither with confidence nor comfort. And he should be careful to watch over the flock, that no destroying wolf be permitted to enter the sacred fold; and that the fences of a holy discipline be kept in proper repair.

4. It is base, abominable, and deeply sinful for a man to thrust himself into other men's labours, and by sowing doubtful disputations among a Christian people, distract and divide them, that he may get a party to himself. Such persons generally act as the false apostle at Corinth, preach a relaxed morality: place great stress upon certain doctrines which flatter and sooth self-love; calumniate the person, system of doctrines, and mode of discipline of the pastor who perhaps planted that church; or who, in the order of God's providence has the oversight of it. This is an evil that has prevailed much in all ages of the church; there is at present much of it in the Christian world; and Christianity is disgraced by it.

CHAPTER XI.

The apostle apologizes for expressing his jealousy relative to the true state of the Corinthians; still fearing lest their minds should have been drawn aside from the simplicity of the Gospel, 1-3. From this he takes occasion to extol his own ministry, which had been without charge to them, having been supported by the churches of Macedonia while he preached the Gospel at Corinth, 4-11. Gives the character of the false apostles, 12-15. Shows what reasons he has to boast of secular advantages of birth, education, divine call to the ministry, labours in that ministry, grievous persecutions, great sufferings, and extraordinary hazards, 16-33. [A. M. 4061. A. D. 57. A. U. C. 810. An. Imp. Neronis Cæs. 4.]

WOULD to God ye could bear with me a little in my folly: and indeed bear with me.

2 For I am jealous over you with godly jealousy: for I have espoused you to one husband that I may present you as a chaste virgin to Christ.

3 But I fear lest by any means, as the serpent beguiled Eve a Ver. 16. Ch. 5. 13. - b Or, ye do bear with me. - c Gal. 4. 17, 18. - d Hos. 2. 19, 20. - e Cor. 4. 15. - f Col. 1. 35. - f Lev. 21. 13.

NOTES.—Verse 1. Would to God you could bear with me Οφελον ηυχασθε μου μικρον, as the word God is not mentioned here, it would have been much better to have translated the passage literally thus; I wish you could bear a little with me. The too frequent use of this sacred name, produces a familiarity with it that is not at all conducive to reverence and godly fear.

In my folly] In my seeming folly, for being obliged to vindicate his ministry, it was necessary that he should speak much of himself, his sufferings, and his success. And as this would appear like boasting; and boasting is always the effect of an empty, foolish mind, those who were not acquainted with the necessity that lay upon him to make this defence, might be led to impute it to vanity. As if he had said—Suppose you allow this to be folly, have the goodness to bear with me: for though I glory, I should not be a fool, ch. xii. 6. And let no man think me a fool for my boasting, ch. xi. 16.

2. I am jealous over you, &c.] The apostle evidently alludes either to the שושיבין shoshabinim or paranymphi among the Hebrews, whose office is largely explained in the notes on John iii. 29, and the observations at the end of that chapter; or to the harmosyni, a sort of magistrates among the Lacedæmonians, who had the care of virgins, and whose business it was to see them well educated, kept pure, and properly prepared for married life.

That I may present you as a chaste virgin] The allusion is still kept up; and there seems to be a reference to Lev. xxi. 14, that the high-priest must not marry any one that was not a pure virgin. Here, then, Christ is the high-priest, the spouse or husband; the Corinthian church the pure virgin to be espoused: the apostle and his helpers the shoshabinim, or harmosyni, who had educated and prepared this virgin for her husband, and espoused her to him. See the observations already referred to, at the end of the third chapter of John.

3. As the serpent beguiled Eve through his subtlety] This is a strong reflection on the false apostle and his teaching: he was subtle, πανουργος, and by his subtlety, πανουργια, from through his subtlety, so your minds should be corrupted from the simplicity that is in Christ.

4 For if he that cometh preacheth another Jesus, whom we have not preached; or if ye receive another spirit which ye have not received; or another Gospel, which ye have not accepted; ye might well bear with him.

a Gen. 3. 1. John 8. 44. - b Eph. 6. 24. Col. 2. 4, 6, 18. 1 Tim. 1. 3. & 4. 1. Heb. 12. 9. 2 Pet. 3. 17. - Gal. 1. 7. 8. - c Or, with me.

True, all, and every word, his versatility of character and conduct, his capability of doing all work; and accommodating himself to the caprices, prejudices, and evil propensities of those to whom he ministered: he was enabled to corrupt the minds of the people from the simplicity of the Gospel of Christ; or, to follow the metaphor, he had seduced the pure, chaste, well educated virgin, from her duty, affection, and allegiance to her one and only true husband, the High-priest, Jesus Christ. And here he seems to intimate that the serpent had seduced the mind of Eve from her affections and allegiance to Adam, her true husband; and certainly from God, her creator and governor. See at the end of the chapter.

4. For, if he that cometh] The false apostle, who came after St. Paul had left Corinth.

Preacheth another Jesus] Who can save more fully, and more powerfully, than that Jesus whom I have preached.

Or ye receive another spirit] And if in consequence of believing in this new Saviour, ye receive another spirit, the gifts, graces, and consolations of which are greater than those which ye have received from the Holy Ghost, which has been given to you, on your believing on the Christ whom we preached.

Or another Gospel] Containing more privileges, spiritual advantages, and stronger excitements to holiness, than that which we have preached, and which ye have accepted, ye might well bear with him. This would be a sufficient reason why you should not only bear with him, but prefer him to me. Others think that the last clause should be rendered ye might well bear with me; notwithstanding he brought you another Jesus, Spirit, and Gospel, ye might bear with me, who have already ministered so long to, and done so much for you. But the former sense seems best.

5. I was not behind the very chiefest apostles] That is, the most eminent of the apostles have not preached Christ, ministered the Spirit, explained and enforced the doctrines of the Gospel in a more powerful and effectual manner than I have done.

5 For I suppose I was not a whit behind the very chiefest apostles.

6 But though ^m I be rude in speech, yet not ⁿ in knowledge; but ^o we have been thoroughly made manifest among you in all things.

7 Have I committed an offence ^p in abasing myself that ye might be exalted, because I have preached to you the Gospel of God freely?

8 I robbed other churches, taking wages of them, to do you service.

9 And when I was present with you, and wanted, ^q I was chargeable to no man: for that which was lacking to me ^r the brethren which came from Macedonia supplied: and in all things I have kept myself ^s from being burdensome unto you, and so will I keep myself.

10 ^t As the truth of Christ is in me, ^u no man shall stop me of this boasting ^v in the regions of Achaia.

11 Wherefore? ^w because I love you not? God knoweth.

12 But what I do, that I will do, ^x that I may cut off occasion

6. But though I be rude in speech; though I speak like a common, unlettered man; in plain unadorned phrase, studying none of the graces of eloquence; yet I am not unskilled in the most profound knowledge of God, of spiritual and eternal things, of the nature of the human soul; and the sound truths of the Gospel system; ye yourselves are witnesses of this, as in all these things, I have been thoroughly manifested among you.

Inspired men received all their doctrines immediately from God; and often the very words in which those doctrines should be delivered to the world; but, in general, the Holy Spirit appears to have left them to their own language, preventing them from using any expression that might be equivocal, or convey a contrary sense to that which God intended.

That St. Paul wrote a strong, nervous, and sufficiently pure language, his own writings sufficiently testify; but the graces of the Greek tongue he appears not to have studied; or at least he did not think it proper to use them; for, perhaps there is no tongue in the world that is so apt to seduce the understanding by its sounds and harmony, as the Greek. It is not an unusual thing for Greek scholars, to the present day, to be in raptures with the harmony of a Greek verse, the sense of which is but little regarded, and perhaps is little worth! I should suppose that God would prevent the inspired writers from either speaking or writing thus; that sound might not carry the hearer away from the sense; and that the persuasive force of truth might alone prevail; and the excellence of the power appear to be of God, and not of man. Taking up the subject in this point of view, I see no reason to have recourse to the supposition, or fable rather, that the apostle had an impediment in his speech; and that he alludes to this infirmity in the above passage.

7. Have I committed an offence in abasing myself? Have I transgressed in labouring with my hands, that I might not be chargeable to you? and getting my deficiencies supplied by contributions from other churches, while I was employed in labouring for your salvation? Does your false apostle insinuate that I have disgraced the apostolic office by thus descending to servile labour for my support? Well, I have done this, that you might be exalted; that you might receive the pure doctrines of the Gospel, and be exalted to the highest pitch of intellectual light and blessedness. And will you complain that I preached the Gospel gratis to you! Surely not. The whole passage is strongly ironical.

8. I robbed other churches. This part of the sentence is explained by the latter; taking wages to do you service. The word obscuro, signifies the pay of money and provisions, given daily to a Roman soldier. As if he had said, I received food and raiment, the bare necessities of life, from other churches, while labouring for your salvation. Will you esteem this a crime?

9. And when I was present with you. The particle καὶ, which we translate and, should be rendered for in this place; For, when I was with you, and was in want, I was chargeable to no man. I preferred to be, for a time, even without the necessities of life, rather than to be a burden to you. To whom was this a reproach? to me, or to you?

The brethren which came from Macedonia. He probably refers to the supplies which he received from the church at Philippi, which was in Macedonia; of which he says, that in the beginning of the Gospel, no church communicated with me, as concerning giving and receiving, but you only; for even at Thessalonica ye sent once and again to my necessity. Phil. iv. 15, 16. See the Introduction, sect. vi.

10. As the truth of Christ is in me. Εἰς τὴν ἀληθείαν τοῦ Χριστοῦ ἐν μοί. The truth of Christ is in me. That is, I speak as becomes a Christian man; and as influenced by the Gospel of Christ. It is a solemn form of assertion; if not to be considered in the sense of an oath.

In the regions of Achaia. The whole of the Peloponnesus or Morea, in which the city of Corinth stood. From this it appears, that he had received no help from any of the other churches in the whole of that district.

propose to continue to act as do these? is it because I love you not? and will not permit you to contribute to my support. God knoweth to the contrary: I do most affectionately love you.

12. But what I do, &c. I act thus, that I may cut off occasion of glorying, boasting, or calumniating, from them, the false apostle and his partisans; who seek occasion; who would be glad that I should become chargeable to you, that it might in some sort vindicate them, who exact much from you; for they bring you into bondage, and devour you, ver. 20. Nothing could mortify these persons more than to find that the apostle did take nothing, and was resolved to take nothing; while they were fleeing the people. It is certain that the passage is not to be understood, as though the false apostles took nothing from the people, to whatever disinterestedness they might pretend: for the apostle is positive on the contrary; and he was determined to act so that his example should not authorize these deceivers, who had nothing but their self-interest in view, from exacting contribution from the people; so that if they continued to boast, they must be hoaxed even as the apostle, taking nothing for their labours; which could never comport with their views of gain and secular profit.

13. For such are false apostles. Persons who pretend to be apostles, but have no mission from Christ.

Deceitful workers. They do preach and labour, but they have nothing but their own emolument in view.

Transforming themselves. Assuming as far as they possibly can, consistently with their sinister views, the habit, manner, and doctrine of the apostles of Christ.

14. And no marvel. Καὶ οὐ θαυμάσιον, and no wonder; it need not surprise you what the disciples do, when you consider the character of the master.

Satan himself is transformed into an angel of light. As in ver. 3. the apostle had the history of the temptation and fall of man, particularly in view, it is very likely that here he refers to the same thing. In whatever form Satan appeared to our first mother, his pretensions and professions gave him the appearance of a good angel; and by pretending that Eve should get a great increase of light, that is, wisdom and understanding, he deceived her, and led her to transgress. It is generally said that Satan has three forms under which he tempts men:—1. The subtle serpent. 2. The roaring lion. 3. The angel of light. He often, as the angel of light, persuades men to do things under the name of religion, which are subversive of it. Hence all the persecutions, faggots, and fires of a certain church, under pretence of keeping heresy out of the church; and hence, all the horrors and infernalities of the inquisition. 2. In the form of heathen persecution, like a lion he has ravaged the heritage of the Lord. And, 3. By means of our senses and passions, as the subtle serpent, he is frequently deceiving us, so that often the workings of corrupt nature are mistaken for the operations of the Spirit of God.

15. Whose end shall be according to their works. A bad way leads to a bad end. The way of sin is the way to hell.

16. Let no man think me a fool. See the note on ver. 1. As the apostle was now going to enter into a particular detail of his qualifications, natural, acquired, and spiritual; and particularly of his labours and sufferings, he thinks it necessary to introduce the discourse once more, as he did ver. 1.

17. I speak it not after the Lord. Were it not for the necessity under which I am laid to vindicate my apostleship, my present glorying would be inconsistent with my Christian profession of humility, and knowing no one after the flesh.

18. Seeing that many glory after the flesh. Boast of external and secular things.

19. Ye suffer fools gladly, seeing ye yourselves are wise. A very fine irony. Ye are so profoundly wise, as to be able to discern that I am a fool.—Well, it would be dishonourable to you as wise men, to fall out with a fool; you will therefore gladly bear with his impertinence and foolishness, because of your own profound wisdom.

20. For ye suffer. As you are so meek and gentle, as to submit to be brought into bondage, to have your property devoured, your goods taken away, yourselves laid in the dust, weak. Howbeit ^a whereinsoever any is bold, (I speak foolishly, I am bold also.

22 Are they Hebrews? ^b so am I. Are they Israelites? so am I. Are they the seed of Abraham? so am I.

23 Are they ministers of Christ? (I speak as a fool) I am more; ^c in labours more abundant, ^d in stripes above measure, in prisons more frequent, ^e in deaths oft.

24 Of the Jews, five times received I ^f forty stripes save one.

^a Phil. 3:4-n Acts 22:3, Rom. 11:1. ^b Phil. 3:5-a 1 Cor. 15:10-p Acts 9:16 & 20, 13 & 21. ^c Ch. 6:4-5-q 1 Cor. 15:31-22. ^d Ch. 1:9,10 & 4:11 & 6:9-r ^e Deu. 25:3.

so that others may exalt themselves over you; yea, and will bear from those the most degrading indignity; then, of course, you will bear with one, who has never insulted, defrauded, despised, taken of you, exalted himself against you, or offered you any kind of indignity; and who only wishes you to bear his confident boasting, concerning matters which he can substantiate. The expressions in this verse, are some evidence that the false apostle was a judicizing teacher. You suffer, says the apostle, if a man, καταδοῦναι, bring you into bondage, probably meaning to the Jewish rites and ceremonies, Gal. iv. 9. ver. 1. If he despise you—as the Pharisees did the patrimony of the widows; and for a pretence made long prayers; if a man take of you—exact different contributions; pretentiously for the temple at Jerusalem, &c. If he exalt himself—pretending to be of the seed of Abraham; infinitely higher in honour and dignity than all the families of the Gentiles: if he smite you on the face—treat you with indignity, as the Jews did the Gentiles: considering them only as dogs, and not fit to be ranked with any of the descendants of Jacob.

21. I speak as concerning reproach. Dr. Whitby thus paraphrases this verse:—"That which I said of smiting you upon the face, I speak as concerning the reproach they cast upon you as profane and uncircumcised, whereas they all profess to be a holy nation; as though ere had been weak, inferior to them in these things, not able to ascribe to ourselves those advantages as well as they." Howbeit, whereinsoever any is bold, and can justly value himself on these advantages, I am bold also, and can claim the same distinction, though I speak foolishly in setting any value on those things: but it is necessary that I should show that such men have not even one natural good that they can boast of beyond me.

22. Are they Hebrews? Speaking the sacred language, and reading in the congregation from the Hebrew Scriptures; the same is my own language.

Are they Israelites? Regularly descended from Jacob, and not from Esau; I am also one.

Are they the seed of Abraham? Circumcised, and in the bond of the covenant? So am I. I am no proselyte, but I am a Hebrew of the Hebrews, both by father and mother; and can trace my genealogy through the tribe of Benjamin, up to the father of the faithful.

23. Are they ministers of Christ? So, we find that these were professors of Christianity: and that they were genuine Jews, and such as endeavoured to incorporate both systems; and no doubt to oblige those who had believed, to be circumcised; and this appears to have been the bondage into which they had brought many of the believing Corinthians.

I am more! More of a minister of Christ than they are, and have given fuller proofs of it. I have suffered persecution for the cross of Christ, and of the Jews too; and had I preached up the necessity of circumcision, I should have been as free from opposition as these are.

In labours more abundant! Far from sitting down to take my ease in a church already gathered in to Christ: I travel incessantly, preach every where, and at all risks, in order to get the heathen brought from the empire of darkness, into the kingdom of God's beloved Son.

In stripes above measure! Being beaten by the heathen, who had no particular rule according to which they scourged criminals: and we find from Acts xvi. 22, 23 that they beat Paul unmercifully, with many stripes. See the note on the above passage.

In prisons more frequent! See Acts xxi. 11, and the whole of the apostle's history; and his long imprisonment, of at least two years, at Rome, Acts xxviii. It does not appear that there is any one instance of a false apostle having been imprisoned for the testimony of Christ; this was a badge of the true apostles.

In deaths oft! That is, in the most imminent dangers. See 1 Cor. xv. 31. chap. iv. 11. And see the apostle's history in the Acts.

24. Of the Jews, five times received I forty stripes save one. That is, he was five times scourged by the Jews, whose law, Deut. xxv. 3. allowed forty stripes; but they, pretending to be lenient, and to act within the letter of the law, inflicted but thirty-nine. To except one stripe from the forty, was a very ancient canon among the Jews, as we learn from Josephus, Antiq. lib. iv. ch. viii. sec. 21. who mentions the same thing πληγὴς μίας δέκατον μέρους τεσσαράκοντα, forty stripes, excepting one. The Mishna gives this as a rule, Misn. Maccoth. fol. 22. 10. "How often shall he, the culprit, be smitten? Ans. ארבע ארבעים forty stripes wanting one: i. e. with the number which is highest to forty." Frequently a man was scourged according to his ability to bear the punishment: and it is a canon in the Mishna, "that he who cannot bear forty stripes should receive only eighteen, and yet be considered as having suffered the whole punishment." They also thought

Ch. 6:5—y 1 Cor. 4:11. it right to stop under forty, lest the person who counted should make a mistake, and the criminal get more than forty stripes, which would be injustice; as the law required only forty. The manner in which this punishment was inflicted is described in the Mishna, fol. 22. 2. "The two hands of the criminal are bound to a post, and then the servant of the synagogue either pulls or tears off his clothes, till he leaves his breast and shoulders bare. A stone or block is placed behind him, on which the servant stands; he holds in his hands a scourge, made of leather, divided into four tails. He who scourges lays one third on the criminal's breast, another third on his right shoulder, and another on his left. The man who receives the punishment is neither sitting nor standing, but all the while stooping; and the man smites with all his strength, with one hand." The severity of this punishment depends on the nature of the scourge, and the strength of the executioner.

It is also observed, that the Jews did not repeat scourgings, except for enormous offences. But they had scourged the apostle five times; for with those murderers, no quarter would be given to the disciples, as none was given to the Master. See Schoettgen.

25. Thrice was I beaten with rods. This was under the Roman government, as their hictors beat criminals in this way. We hear of the apostle's being treated thus once, namely at Philippi, Acts xvi. 22. See sect 9. of the Introduction.

Once was I stoned. Namely, at Lystra, Acts xiv. 19, &c. A night and a day have I been in the deep. To what this refers, we cannot tell; it is generally supposed that in some shipwreck not on record, the apostle had saved himself on a plank, and was a whole day and night on the sea, tossed about at the mercy of the waves. Others think, that Babos, the deep, signifies a dungeon of a terrible nature at Cyzicum, in the Propontis, into which Paul was cast, as he passed from Troas. But this is not likely.

26. In journeyings often. He means the particular journeys which he took to different places, for the purpose of propagating the Gospel.

In perils of waters. Exposed to great dangers, in crossing rivers; for of rivers, the original παράγω, must be understood.

(Of robbers.) Judæa itself, and perhaps every other country, was grievously infested by banditti of this kind; and no doubt the apostle in his frequent peregrinations was often attacked; but being poor, and having nothing to lose, he passed unhurt, though not without great danger.

In perils by mine own countrymen. The Jews had the most rooted antipathy to him, because they considered him an apostate from the true faith; and also the means of perverting many others. There are several instances of this in the Acts; and a remarkable conspiracy against his life is related, Acts xxiii. 12, &c.

In perils by the heathen. In the heathen provinces whither he went to preach the Gospel. Several instances of these perils occur also in the Acts.

In perils in the city. The different sections raised against him, particularly in Jerusalem, to which Ephesus and Damascus may be added.

In perils in the wilderness. Uninhabited countries through which he was obliged to pass, in order to reach from city to city. In such places it is easy to imagine many dangers from banditti, wild beasts, cold, starvation, &c.

In perils in the sea. The different voyages he took in narrow seas, such as the Mediterranean, about dangerous coasts, and without compass.

False brethren. Persons who joined themselves to the church, pretending faith in Christ, but intending to act as spies; hoping to get some matter of accusation against him. He no doubt suffered much also from apostates.

27. In weariness and painfulness. Tribulations of this kind were his constant companions. Lord Lyttelton and others have made useful reflections on this verse: "How hard was it for a man of a gentle and liberal education, as St. Paul was, to bear such rigours, and to wander about like a vagabond, hungry and almost naked; yet coming into the presence of persons of high life, and speaking in large and various assemblies, on matters of the utmost importance!" Had not St. Paul been deeply convinced of the truth and absolute certainty of the Christian religion, he could not have continued to expose himself to such hardships.

28. Besides those things that are without. Independently of all these outward things, I have innumerable troubles, and mental oppressions.

Which cometh upon me. Η εἰς ἐμοί; this continual press of business; this insurrection of cases to be heard, solved, and determined, relative to the doctrine, discipline, state, persecution, and supply of all the churches. All his perils were little in comparison of what he felt relative to the peace.

hunger and thirst, in fastings often, in cold and nakedness. 18 Besides those things that are without, that which cometh upon me daily, * the care of all the churches.

29 * Who is weak, and I am not weak? who is offended, and I burn not?

30 If I must needs glory, b I will glory of the things which concern mine infirmities.

* See Acts 20. 18, &c. Rom. 1. 14. — a 1 Cor. 5. 13 & 9. 22. — b Ch. 12. 5, 9, 10. — c Rom. 1. 9, & 9. 1. Ch. 1. 23. Gal. 1. 2. 1 Thess. 2. 5.

government, and establishment of all the churches among the Gentiles, for as he was the apostle of the Gentiles, the government of all the churches among these fell in some sort on him; whether they were of his own planting, or of the planting of others. See Col. ii. 1. None but a conscientious minister, who has at heart the salvation of souls, can enter into the apostle's feelings in this place.

29. Who is weak? What church is there under persecution, with which I do not immediately sympathize? or who, from his weakness in the faith, and scrupulousness of conscience, is likely to be stumbled, or turned out of the way, to whom I do not condescend, and whose burden I do not bear?

Who is offended? Or likely to be turned out of the way, and I burn not with zeal to restore and confirm him? This seems to be the sense of these different questions.

30. I will glory—which concern mine infirmities? I will not boast of my natural or acquired powers, neither in what God has done by me; but rather in what I have suffered for him.

Many persons have understood by infirmities what they call the indwelling sin of the apostle; and say that "he gloried in this, because the grace of Christ was the more magnified in his being preserved from ruin, notwithstanding this indwelling adversary." And to support this most unholy interpretation, they quote those other words of the apostle, ch. xii. 9. Most gladly therefore will I rather glory in my infirmities.

My indwelling corruptions, that the power of Christ in chaining the fierce lion, may rest upon me. But it would be difficult to produce a single passage in the whole New Testament, where the word adversary, which we translate infirmity, has the sense of sin or moral corruption.

The verb adverbo, signifies to be weak, infirm, sick, poor, despicable through poverty, &c. And in a few places, it is applied to weakness in the faith, to young converts, who are poor in religious knowledge; not yet fully instructed in the nature of the Gospel, Rom. iv. 19. xiv. 1, 2. And it is applied to the works of the law, to point out their inability to justify a sinner, Rom. viii. 3. But to inward sin and inward corruption it is never applied. I am afraid what these persons call their infirmities, may rather be called their strengths; the prevailing and frequently ruling power of pride, anger, ill-will, &c. for how few think evil tempers to be sins! The gentle term infirmity softens down the iniquity; and as St. Paul, so great and so holy a man, say they, had his infirmities, how can they expect to be without theirs? These should know that they are in a dangerous error: that St. Paul means a thing of the kind; for he speaks of his sufferings, and of these alone. One word more: would not the grace and power of Christ appear more conspicuous in slaying the lion, than in keeping him chained? in destroying sin root and branch; and filling the soul with his own holiness; with love to God and man; with the mind, all the holy heavenly tempers that were in himself; than in leaving these impure and unholy tempers, ever to live, and often to reign in the heart? The doctrine is discreditable to the Gospel; and wholly anti-christian.

31. The God and Father of our Lord? Here is a very solemn asseveration; an appeal to the ever-blessed God, for the truth of what he asserts. It is something similar to his asseveration or oath in ver. 10. of this chapter: see also Rom. ix. 5. and Gal. i. 20. And from these and several other places we learn that the apostle thought it right thus to confirm his assertions on these particular occasions. But here is nothing to countenance profane swearing, or taking the name of God in vain, as many do in exclamations, when surprised, or on hearing something unexpected, &c. and as others do, who, conscious of their own falsity, endeavour to gain credit by appeals to God, for the truth of what they say. St. Paul's appeal to God is in the same spirit as his most earnest prayer.

This solemn appeal the apostle makes in reference to what he mentions in the following verses. This was a fact not yet generally known.

32. In Damascus the governor under Aretas? For a description of Damascus, see the note on Acts ix. 2. And for the transaction to which the apostle refers, see Acts ix. 23.

31 * The God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, d which is blessed for evermore, knoweth that I lie not.

32 * In Damascus the governor under Aretas, the king, kept the city of the Damascenes with a garrison, desirous to apprehend me:

33 And e through a window in a basket was I let down by the wall, and escaped his hands.

d Acts 16. 25 & 21. 7, 11. — e Acts 9. 24, 25. — f John 7. 30, 44. — Acts 9. 2. — g John 9. 25. — Psal. 4. 10.

As to king Aretas, there were three of this name. The first is mentioned 2 Mac. v. 8. The second by Josephus, Antiq. l. xiii. c. 15. sec. 2. and l. xvi. c. 1. sec. 4. The third, who is the person supposed to be referred to here, was the father-in-law of Herod Antipas, of whom see the notes Acts ix. 23, &c.

But it is a question of some importance, How could Damascus, a city of Syria, be under the government of an Arabian king? It may be accounted for thus; Herod Antipas, who married the daughter of Aretas, divorced her in order to marry Herodias, his brother Philip's wife. Aretas, on this indignity offered to his family, made war upon Herod. Herod applied to Tiberius for help, and the emperor sent Vitellius to reduce Aretas, and to bring him alive or dead to Rome. By some means or other Vitellius delayed his operations, and in the mean time Tiberius died; and thus Aretas was snatched from ruin, Joseph. Antiq. lib. xviii. c. 5.

What Aretas did in the interim is not known; but it is conjectured that he avoided himself of the then favourable state of things, made an irruption into Syria, and seized on Damascus. See Rosenmüller; and see the Introduction to this epistle, sec. ii.

The governor? Eusebius; who this ethnarch was, we cannot tell. The word ethnarch signifies the governor of a province under a king or emperor.

Desirous to apprehend me? The enemies of the apostle might have represented him to the governor, as a dangerous spy, employed by the Romans.

33. Through a window in a basket? Probably the house was situated on the wall of the city. See the note on this history, Acts ix. 23—25.

In ver. 2. of this chapter, the apostle most evidently alludes to the history of the temptation and fall of Adam and Eve, as related in Gen. iii. 1, &c. and which fall is there attributed to the agency of a being called serpent; nachash; here, and in other places translated ovis, serpent. In my notes on Genesis, I have given many, and, as I judge, solid reasons, why the word cannot be understood literally, of a serpent of any kind, and that, most probably, a creature of the simia or ape genus was employed by the devil on this occasion. The arguments on this subject appeared to me to be corroborated by innumerable probabilities; but I left the conjecture aloft, for I did not give it a more decisive name; and placed it in the hands of my readers to adopt, reject, or amend, as their judgments might direct them. To several this sentiment appeared a monstrous heresy; and speedily, the old serpent had a host of defenders. The very modest opinion, or conjecture, was controverted by some who were both gentlemen and scholars, and by several who were neither; by some who could not affect candour, because they had not even the appearance of it; but would affect learning, because they wish to be reputed wise. What reason and argument failed to produce, they would supply with ridicule; and, as monkey was a convenient term for this purpose, they attributed it to him, who had never used it. What is the result? They no doubt believe that they have established their system; and their arguments are to them conclusive. They have my full consent; but I think it right to state that I have neither seen nor heard of any thing that has the least tendency to weaken my conjecture, or produce the slightest wavering in my opinion. Indeed, their arguments and mode of managing them have produced a very different effect on my mind, to what they designed;—I am now more firmly persuaded of the probability of my hypothesis than ever. I shall, however, leave the subject as it is: I never proposed it as an article of faith; I press it on no man: I could fortify it with many additional arguments, if I judged it proper; for its probability appears to me as strong as the utter improbability of the common opinion, to defend which its abettors have descended to insupportable conjectures, of which infidels have availed themselves, to the discredit of the Sacred Writings. To those who choose to be wise and witty, and wish to provoke a controversy, this is my answer:—I am a doing a great work, so that I cannot come down; Why should the work cease, while I leave it and come down to you? Neh. vi. 3.

CHAPTER XII.

St. Paul mentions some wonderful revelations which he had received from the Lord, 1—5. He speaks of his sufferings in connexion with these extraordinary revelations, that his character might be duly estimated, 6. That he might not be too much exalted, a messenger of Satan is sent to buffet him; his prayer for deliverance, and the Divine answer, 7—9. He exults in sufferings, and reproaches, and vindicates his apostleship, 10—13. Promises to come and visit them, 14, 15. Answers some objections, 16—18. And expresses his apprehensions, that when he visits them, he shall find many evils and disorders among them, 19—21. [A M 4061. A D 57. A V C 810. An. Imp. Neronis Cas 4.]

NOTES.—Verse 1. It is not expedient for me? There are several various readings on this verse, which are too minute to be noticed here; they seem in effect to represent the verse thus: "If it be expedient to glory, (which does not become cannot tell; God knoweth:) such an one^c caught up to the third heaven.

3 And I knew such a man, (whether in the body, or out of the body, I cannot tell; God knoweth.)

5 Of such an one will I glory: yet of myself I will not glory, but in mine infirmities.

me,) I will proceed to visions," &c. The plain meaning of the apostle in this and the preceding chapter, in reference to glorifying, is, that though to boast in any attainments, or in what God did by him, was in all possible cases to be avoided, as being contrary to the humility and simplicity of the Gospel; yet the circumstances in which he was found, in reference to the Corinthian church, and his detractors there, rendered it absolutely necessary; not for his personal vindication, but for the honour of the Gospel, the credit of which was certainly at stake.

[I will come to visions] Orraçiaç, symbolical representations of spiritual and celestial things: in which matters of the deepest importance are exhibited to the eye of the mind, by a variety of emblems; the nature and properties of which serve to illustrate those spiritual things.

[Revelations] Αποκαλύψεις; a manifestation of things not before known, and such as God alone can make known; because they are a part of his own inscrutable counsels.

2. I knew a man in Christ] I knew a Christian, or a Christian man; for to such alone God now revealed himself; for vision and prophecy had been shut up from the Jews

[Fourteen years ago] On what occasion, or in what place, this transaction took place, we cannot tell: there are many conjectures among learned men concerning it, but of what utility can they be, when every thing is so palpably uncertain? Allowing this epistle to have been written some time in the year 57, fourteen years counted backward, will lead this transaction to the year 42 or 43, which was about the time that Barnabas brought Paul from Tarsus to Antioch, Acts xi. 25, 26, and when he and Paul were sent by the church of Antioch with alms to the poor Christians at Jerusalem. It is very possible that, on this journey, or while in Jerusalem, he had this vision; which was intended to be the means of establishing him in the faith, and supporting him in the many trials and difficulties through which he was to pass. This vision the apostle had kept secret for fourteen years.

[Whether in the body I cannot tell] That the apostle was in an ecstasy or trance, something like that of Peter, Acts x. 9, there is reason to believe; but we know that, being carried literally into heaven, was possible to the Almighty. But as he could not decide himself, it would be ridiculous in us to attempt it.

[Caught up to the third heaven] He appeared to have been carried up to this place, but whether bodily, he could not tell; or whether the spirit were not separated for the time, and taken up to the third heaven, he could not tell.

[The third heaven] The Jews talk of seven heavens: and Mohammed had received the same from them; but these are not only fabulous, but absurd. I shall enumerate those of the Jews. 1. The VELUM or curtain, יָלִין "Which in the morning is folded up; and in the evening stretched out." Isa. xl. 32. He stretcheth out the heavens as a curtain, and spreadeth them out as a tent to dwell in. 2. The firmament, or EXPANSE, רָקִיעַ "In which the sun, moon, stars, and constellations are fixed." Gen. i. 17. And God placed them in the firmament of heaven. 3. The CLOUDS, or ETHER, שָׁמַיִם "Where the millstones are which grind the manna for the righteous." Psal. lxxviii. 23, &c. Though he had commanded the clouds from above, and opened the doors of heaven; and had rained down manna, &c. 4. The HABITATION, בֵּית "where Jerusalem, and the temple, and the altar were constructed; and where Michael the great Prince stands, and offers sacrifice." 1 Kings viii. 13. I have surely built thee a house to dwell in, a settled place for thee to abide in for ever. "But where is heaven so called?" Ans. in Isa. lxiii. 15. Look down from HEAVEN, and behold from the HABITATION, מְכוֹן, of thy holiness. 5. The DWELLING-PLACE, מִקְנָה "where the troops of angels sing throughout the night, but are silent in the day-time, because of the glory of the Israelites." Psal. xlii. 8. The Lord will command his bringingkindness in the day-time, and in the night his song shall be with me. "But how is it proved that this means heaven?" Answer, from Deut. xxvi. 15. Look down from thy holy habitation, מִמְּקוֹן, the DWELLING-PLACE of thy holiness; and from heaven, הַשָּׁמַיִם, and bless thy people Israel. 6. The FIXED RESIDENCE, בֵּית "where are the treasures of snow and hail; the repository of noxious dews, of drops and whirlwinds; the groto of exhalations," &c. "But where are the heavens thus denominated?" Ans. in 1 Kings viii. 39, 40, &c. Then hear thou in HEAVEN thy DWELLING-PLACE, מִמְּקוֹן, thy FIXED RESIDENCE. 7. The ARABOTH, עֲרֵבוֹת "where are justice, judgment, mercy, the treasures of life; peace and blessedness; the souls of the righteous; the souls and spirits which are reserved for the bodies yet to be formed; and the dew by which God is to vivify the dead." Psal. lxxxix. 14. Isa. lix. 17. Psal. xxxvi. 9. Judges vi. 24. Psal. xxiv. 4. 1 Sam. xxv. 29. Isa. lxvi. 20. Psal. lxvii. 9. "All of which are termed Ar-

6 For though I would desire to glory, I shall not be a fool; for I will say the truth: but now I forbear, lest any man should think of me above that which he seeth me to be, or that he hearth of me.

7 And lest I should be exalted above measure through the abundance of the revelations, there was given to me a thorn in the flesh, the messenger of Satan to buffet me, lest I should be exalted above measure.

11. 30.—g Ch. 10. 5. & 11. 15.—h See Ezek. 28. 24. Gal. 4. 13, 14.—i Job 2. 7. Luke 13. 16.

both, Psal. lxxviii. 4. Extol him who dwelt on the heavens, בְּרָאֵהוּ בְּהַרְבֵּי שָׁמַיִם by his name Jah. All this is sufficiently unphilosophical, and in several cases ridiculous. In the Sacred Writings, three heavens only are mentioned. The first is the atmosphere, what appears to be intended by רָקִיעַ raquâ; the firmament or expansion, Gen. i. 6. The second, the starry heaven; where are the sun, moon, planets, and stars; but these two are often expressed under the one term שָׁמַיִם shamayim, the two heavens, or expansions; and in Gen. i. 17. they appear to be both expressed by רָקִיעַ שָׁמַיִם raquâ hashamayim; the firmament of heaven. And, thirdly, the place of the blessed, or the throne of the Divine Glory, probably expressed by the word שְׁמֵי שָׁמַיִם shamayim, hashamayim; the heavens of heavens. But on these subjects the Scripture affords us but little light: and on this distinction, the reader is not desired to rely.

Much more may be seen in Schoettgen, who has exhausted the subject; and who has shown, that ascending to heaven, or being caught up to heaven, is a form of speech among the Jewish writers, to express the highest degrees of inspiration. They often say of Moses, that he ascended on high, ascended on the firmament, ascended to heaven; where it is evident they mean only by it, that he was favoured with the nearest intimacy with God, and the highest revelations relative to his will, &c. If we may understand St. Paul thus, it will remove much of the difficulty from this place; and perhaps the unspeakable words, ver. 4. are thus to be understood. He had the most sublime communications from God; such as would be improper to mention: though it is very likely that we have the substance of these in his epistles. Indeed, the two epistles before us, seen, in many places, to be the effect of most extraordinary revelations.

4. Caught up into paradise] The Jewish writers have no less than four paradises; as they have seven heavens. But it is needless to wade through their fables. On the word paradise, see the note on Gen. ii. 8. The Mohammedans call it جَنَّاتُ عَدْنٍ jannat edden, the garden of paradise; and say that God created it out of light, and that it is the habitation of the prophets and wise men. Among Christian writers, it generally means the place of the blessed; or the state of separate spirits. Whether the third heaven and paradise be the same place, we cannot absolutely say; they probably are not: and it is likely, that St. Paul, at the time referred to, had at least two of these raptures.

[Which it is not lawful for a man to utter] The Jews thought, that the Divine name, the Tetragrammaton יְהוָה Yehorah, should not be uttered; and that it is absolutely unlawful to pronounce it; indeed they say that the true pronunciation is utterly lost, and cannot be recovered without an express revelation. Not one of them, to the present day, ever attempts to utter it; and, when they meet with it in their reading, always supply its place with אֲדֹמַי Adomai, Lord. It is probable that the apostle refers to some communication concerning the Divine nature, and the Divine economy, of which he was only to make a general use in his preaching and writing. No doubt, that what he learned at this time, formed the basis of all his doctrines. Cicero terms God, illud inexpressibile; that inexpressible Being. And Hermes calls him ἀνέκτατος, ἀνόμτος, ἀνύμωτος; the ineffable! the unspeakable! and that which is to be pronounced in silence! We cannot have views too exalted of the majesty of God: and the less frequently we pronounce his name, the more reverence shall we feel for his nature. It is said of Mr. Boyle, that he never pronounced the name of God, without either taking off his hat, or making a bow. Leaving out profane swearets, blasphemers, and such like open-faced servants of Satan, it is distressing to hear many well-intentioned people making unscripturally free with this sacred name.

5. Of such an one will I glory] Through modesty he does not mention himself: though the account can be understood of no other person: for, did he mean any other, the whole account would be completely irrelevant.

6. I shall not be a fool] Who that had got such honour from God, would have been fourteen years silent on the subject?

[I will say the truth] I speak nothing but truth; and the apostle seems to have intended to proceed with something else of the same kind; but finding some reason probably occurring suddenly, says, I forbear; I will say no more on this subject.

[Lest any man should think of me above] The apostle spoke of these revelations for two purposes: first, lest his enemies might suppose they had cause to think meanly of him. And, secondly, having said thus much, he forbears to speak any farther of them, lest his friends should think too highly of him. It is a rare gift to discern when to speak, and when to be silent; and to know when enough is said on a subject, neither too little nor too much.

5 * For this thing I besought the Lord thrice, that it might depart from me.

9 And he said unto me, My grace is sufficient for thee: for my strength is made perfect in weakness. Most gladly therefore I will rather glory in my infirmities, * that the power of Christ may rest upon me.

10 Therefore I take pleasure in infirmities, in reproaches, in necessities, in persecutions, in distresses for Christ's sake; * for when I am weak, then am I strong.

7. And test I should be exalted] There were three evils to be guarded against—1. The contempt of his gifts and call by his enemies. 2. The overweening fondness of his friends. And, 3. Self-exaltation.

A thorn in the flesh] The word ακροα, signifies a stake, and δυσκολία ζέναι, to be tied to a stake, by way of punishment; and it is used, says Schoetigen, to signify the most oppressive afflictions. Whatever it was, it was τῇ σαρκί, in the flesh; i.e. of an outward kind. It was neither sin nor sinfulness, for this could not be given him to prevent his being exalted above measure: for sin never had, and never can have, this tendency. What this thorn in the flesh might be, has given birth to a multitude of conjectures: Tertullian thought it dolor articuli, the ear-ache; Chrysostom, κεφαλαλγία, the head-ache; Cyprinus, carnis et corporis multa ac gravia tormenta, many and grievous bodily torments. I believe the apostle to refer simply to the distresses he had endured through the opposition he met with at Corinth; which were as painful and grievous to him as a thorn in his flesh, or his being bound to a stake; for, if he could have devoted himself to destruction, Rom. ix. 3, for his rebellious and unbelieving countrymen, what must he have suffered on account of an eminent church being perverted, and torn to pieces, by a false teacher? God permitted this to keep the apostle humble, and at last completely delivered the Church out of the hands and influence of this deceiver: none, not even the incursions person, having been turned finally out of the way, by the false doctrines there preached.

The messenger of Satan] Another mode of expressing what he calls the thorn in the flesh; and he seems most plainly to refer to the false apostle at Corinth. The apostle himself was, as he styles himself, to this Church, αγγελος Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, chap. i. 1, the apostle of Jesus Christ. The person in question is styled here αγγελος Σαταν, the apostle or angel of Satan. It is almost impossible to mistake the apostle's meaning and reference. Jesus Christ sent Paul to proclaim his truth, and found a Church at Corinth. SATAN, the adversary of God's truth, sent a man to preach lies at the same place; and turn the Church of God into his own synagogue; and, by his teaching lies and calumnies, the apostle was severely buffeted. We need seek no other sense for these expressions. Many, however, think that the apostle had really some bodily infirmity, that rendered him contemptible, and was the means of obstructing the success of his ministry; and that the false apostle availed himself of this, to set St. Paul at naught, and to hold him out to ridicule. I have shown this elsewhere, to be very unlikely. The best arguments in favour of this opinion, may be found in Whitby; but I forbear to transcribe them, because I think the meaning given above, is more correct. No infirmity of body, or corporal sufferings, can afflict and distress a minister of the Gospel, equally to the perversion or scattering of a flock, which were the fruit of innumerable labours, watchings, fastings, prayers, and tears.

8. I besought the Lord] That is, Christ, as the next verse absolutely proves: and the Socinians themselves confess. And if Christ be an object of prayer, in such a case as this, or indeed in any case, it is a sure proof of his Divinity; for, only an Omniscent Being can be made an object of prayer.

Thrice] Several suppose this to be a certain number, for an uncertain; as if he had said, I often besought Christ to deliver me from this tormentor: or, which is, perhaps, more likely, the apostle may refer to three solemn, fixed, and fervent applications, made to Christ at different times; at the last of which, he received the answer which he immediately subjoins. It is worthy of remark, that our Lord, in his agony, acted in the same way; at three different times, he applied to God; that the cup might depart from him; and, in each application, he spoke the same words, Matt. xxvi. 39-44. There is, therefore, a manifest allusion to our Lord's conduct in these words of the apostle.

9. My grace is sufficient for thee] Thou shalt not be permitted to sink under these afflictions. Thy enemies shall not be able to prevail against thee. My strength is made perfect in weakness] The more and the more violently thou art afflicted and tried, being upheld by my power, and prospered in all thy labours, the more eminently will my power be seen and acknowledged. For the weaker the instrument I use, the more the power of my grace shall be manifested. See at the end of this chapter.

Will I rather glory in my infirmities] Therefore, his infirmities do not mean his corruptions, or sins, or sinfulness of any kind; for it would be blasphemous for any man to say, I will rather glory that God leaves my corruptions in me, than that he should take them away.

That the power of Christ may rest upon me] Εἰς ἐκδήλωσιν τοῦ αἵματος, that he may overshadow me as a tent, or tabernacle.

11 I am become a fool in glorying; ye have contemned me; for I ought to have been commended of you: for I in nothing am behind the very chiefest apostles, though I be nothing.

12 * Truly the signs of an apostle were wrought among you in all patience, in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds.

13 * For what is it wherein ye were inferior to other churches, except it be that I myself was not burdensome to you? forgive me: this wrong.

14 * Behold, the third time I am ready to come to you: and affording me shelter, protection, safety, and rest. This expression is like that, John i. 14. And the Word was made flesh, καὶ ἐσκήνωσεν ἐν αὐτῷ, and made his tabernacle among us, full of grace and truth. The same eternal word promised to make his tabernacle with the apostle; and gives him a proof that he was still the same, full of grace and truth; by assuring him, that his grace should be sufficient for him. Paul knowing that the promise of grace could not fail, because of the Divine truth, says, Most gladly, therefore, will I rather glory in my afflictions, that such a power of Christ may overshadow and defend me. The words are, also, similar to those of the prophet Isaiah, iv. 5. On all thy glory shall be a defence; God gives the glory, and God gives the defence of that glory. The apostle had much glory or honour; both Satan and his apostles were very envious; in himself, the apostle, as well as all human beings, was weak, and therefore needed the power of God to defend such glory. Grace alone can preserve grace. When we get a particular blessing, we need another to preserve it; and, without this, we shall soon be short of our strength, and become as other men. Hence the necessity of continual watchfulness and prayer; and depending on the all-sufficient grace of Christ. See on chap. xi. 30.

10. Therefore I take pleasure] I not only endure them patiently, but am pleased when they occur: for I do it for Christ's sake; on his account: for, on his account I suffer. For when I am weak, most oppressed with trials and afflictions, then am I strong; God supporting my mind with his most powerful influences; causing me to rejoice with joy unspeakable, and full of glory.

11. I am become a fool in glorying] It is not the part of a wise, or gracious man, to boast; but ye have compelled me: I have been obliged to do it, in order to vindicate the cause of God.

I ought to have been commended of you] You should have vindicated both myself and my ministry against the detractors that are among you.

The very chiefest apostles] See chap. xi. 1.

Though I be nothing] Though I have been thus set at naught by his false apostle; and though, in consequence of what he has said, some of you have been ready to consider me as nothing. This must be the meaning of the apostle, as the following verses prove. A kind of technical meaning has been imposed on these words, of which many good people seem very fond. I am nothing; I am all sin, de-filement, and unworthiness in myself; but Jesus Christ is all in all. This latter clause is an eternal truth: the former may be very true also: the person who uses it may be all sin, de-filement, &c., but let him not say, that the apostle of the Gentiles was so too, because this is not true; it is false; and it is injurious to the character of the apostle, and to the grace of Christ: besides, it is not the meaning of the text; and the use commonly made of it is abominable, if not wicked.

12. The signs of an apostle were wrought among you] Though I have been reputed as nothing, I have given the fullest proof of my Divine mission, by various signs, wonders, and miracles; and by that patience which I have manifested towards you; though I had power from God to inflict punishment on the transgressors, I have, in every case, forbore to do it. Is the man nothing who wrought such miracles among you?

13. For what is it wherein ye were inferior] This is a fine, forcible, yet delicate stroke. It was your duty, and your interest, to have supported your apostle; other churches had done so: I did not require this from you: in this respect, all other Churches are superior to you. I am the cause of your inferiority, by not giving you an opportunity of ministering to my necessities: forgive me the wrong I have done you.—It is the privilege of the Churches of Christ to support the ministry of his Gospel among them. Those who do not contribute their part to the support of the Gospel ministry, either care nothing for it, or derive no good from it.

14. The third time I am ready] That is, this is the third time that I am ready, have formed the resolution to visit you. He had formed this resolution twice before, but was disappointed. See 1 Cor. xvi. 5. and 2 Cor. i. 15, 16. He now formed it a third time, having more probability of seeing them now than he had before.—See chap. xii. 2.

I seek not yours, but you] I seek your salvation; I desire not your property; others have sought your property, but not your salvation.—See chap. xi. 20.

For the children ought not to lay up for the parents] You may have many teachers, but you have but one FATHER; for in Christ Jesus I have begotten you through the Gospel: see 1 Cor. iv. 15. Ye are my children, and I am your father. You have not contributed to my support; but I have been labour

I will not be burdensome to you: for ^a I seek not yours, but you: ^b for the children ought not to lay up for the parents, but the parents for the children.

15 And ^a I will very gladly spend and be spent ^a for ^b you; though ^c the more abundantly I love you, the less I be loved.

16 But be it so, ^a I did not burden you: nevertheless, being crafty, I caught you with guile.

17 ^c Did I make a gain of you by any of them whom I sent unto you?

18 ^c I desired Titus, and with him I sent a ^a brother. Did Titus make a gain of you? walked we not in the same spirit? walked we not in the same steps?

^a Acts 20, 33. ^b 1 Cor 10, 32.—^c 1 Cor 4, 14, 15.—^d 1 Thess 2, 8. Phil 2, 17.—^e 1 John 10, 11. Ch. 1, 6. Col 1, 24. 2 Tim 2, 10.—^f 1 Cor 5, 12, 13.—^g Ch. 11, 9.

ing for your life. I will act towards you as the loving father who works hard, and lays up what is necessary to enable his children to get their bread.

15. And I will very gladly spend, and be spent for you!—I will continue to act as a loving father, who spends all he has upon his children; and expends his own strength and life in providing for them the things necessary for their preservation and comfort.

Though the more abundantly I love you! I will even act towards you with the most affectionate tenderness, though it happen to me as it often does to loving fathers, that their disobedient children love them less, in proportion as their love to them is increased. Does it not frequently happen, that the most disobedient child in the family is that one on which the parents' tenderness is more especially placed? See the parable of the prodigal son. It is in the order of God that it should be so, else the case of every prodigal would be utterly deplorable. The shepherd feels more for the lost sheep than for the ninety-nine that have not gone astray. If I be asked, "Should Christian parents lay up money for their children?" I answer—It is the duty of every parent, who can, to lay up what is necessary to put every child in a condition to earn its bread. If he neglect this, he undoubtedly sins against God and nature. "But should not a man lay up, besides this, a fortune for his children, if he can honestly?" I answer, Yes, if there be no poor within his reach: no good work which he can assist; no heathen region on the earth to which he can contribute to send the Gospel of Jesus; but not otherwise. God shows, in the course of his Providence, that this laying up of fortunes for children is not right; for there is scarcely ever a case where money has been saved up to make the children independent, and gentlemen, in which God has not cursed the blessing. It was saved from the poor; from the ignorant; from the cause of God; and the canker of his displeasure consumed this ill-saved property.

16. But be it so, I did not burden you! That is, you grant that I did not burden you; that I took nothing from you; but preached to you the Gospel freely; but you say, that BEING CRAFTY, I caught you with guile; i.e. getting from you, by means of others, what I pretended to be unwilling to receive immediately from yourselves. Many persons suppose that the words, being crafty I caught you with guile, are the words of the apostle, and not of his slanderers; and therefore have concluded that it is lawful to use guile, deceit, &c. in order to serve a good and religious purpose. This doctrine is abominable; and the words are most evidently those of the apostle's detractors, against which he defends his conduct in the two following verses.

17. Did I make a gain of you? Did any person I ever sent to preach the Gospel to you, or help you in your Christian course, ever get any thing from you for me? Produce the proof if you can!

18. [Desired Titus] I never sent any to you but Titus and another brother, chap. viii. 6, 18. And did Titus make a gain of you? Did he get any thing from you, either for himself or for me?—You know he did not. He was actuated by the same spirit, and he walked in the same steps?

19. Think ye that we excuse ourselves? Απολογουµεθα; that we make an apology for our conduct; or, that I have sent Titus and that brother to you, because I was ashamed or afraid to come myself?

We speak before God in Christ! I have not done so; I speak the truth before God; He is judge whether I was actuated in this by any sinister or unworthy motive.

For your edifying.] Whatever I have done in this or any other way, I have done for your edifying; not for any emolument to myself or friends.

20. I fear, lest when I come! I think the present time is used here for the past; the apostle seems most evidently to be giving them the reason why he had not come to them according to his former purposes; and why he sent Titus and his companion. He was afraid to come at that time lest he should have found them perverted from the right way, and be obliged to make use of his apostolical rod, and punish the offenders: but, feeling towards them the heart of a tender father, he was unwilling to use the rod; and sent the first epistle to them, and the messengers above-mentioned, being reluctant to go himself till he had satisfactory evidence that their divisions were ended: and that they had repented for,

19 ^b Again, think ye that we excuse ourselves unto you? ^a we speak before God in Christ: but ^a we do all things, dearly beloved, for your edifying.

20 For I fear, lest when I come, I shall not find you such as I would; and that ^a I shall be found unto you such as ye would not: lest there be debates, envyings, wraths, strifes, backbitings, whisperings, swellings, tumults:

21 And lest, when I come again, my God ^a will humble me among you, and that ^a I shall bewail many ^a which have sinned already, and have not repented of the uncleanness and ^a fornication and lasciviousness which they have committed.

^a Ch. 2, 2.—^b Ch. 8, 16, 17, 22.—^c Ch. 13, 13.—^d Ch. 5, 12.—^e 1 Cor. 11, 31.—^f 1 Cor. 10, 32.—^g 1 Cor. 4, 21.—^h Ch. 10, 2 & 13, 3, 10.—ⁱ Ch. 2, 1, 4.—^j Ch. 13, 2.—^k 1 Cor. 5, 1.

and put away, the evils that they had committed; and that he should not be obliged to bewail them who had sinned so abominably, and had not repented for their crimes. If this verse be understood in this way, all difficulty will vanish; otherwise, what is here said, does seem to contradict what is said, chap. vii. 6, 16, &c. as well as many things, both in the eighth and ninth chapters.

Debates, envyings.] From these different expressions, which are too plain to need interpretation, we see what a distracted and divided state the church at Corinth must have been in. Brotherly love and charity seem to have been driven out of this once heavenly assembly. These debates, &c. are precisely the opposites to that love which the apostle recommends and explains by its different properties, in the 13th chapter of his first epistle. Mr. Wakefield translates the original thus: strifes, rivalries, passions, provocations, slanders, whisperings, swellings, quarrels.

21. Lest, when I come again! And even after all that has been done to you, I fear that, when I do come, when I pay you my second visit, my God will humble me; will permit me to be affected with deep sorrow through what I may see among you; as I have been by the buffeting of the apostle of Satan, who has perverted you. Humiliation is repeatedly used for affliction; and here ταπεινωσις, has certainly that meaning.

Have sinned already! Πονησαντες, who have sinned before; who were some of the first offenders; and have now yet repented.

Of the uncleanness, &c.] There must have been a total relaxation of discipline, else such abominations could not have been tolerated in the Christian Church. And although what is here spoken could only be the case of a few; yet the many were ill-disciplined, else these must have been cast out. On the whole this church seems to have been a composition of excellencies and defects; of vices and virtues, and should not be quoted as a model for a Christian church.

1. From St. Paul, we receive two remarkable sayings of our Lord, which are of infinite value to the welfare and salvation of man; which are properly parts of the Gospel; but are not mentioned by any evangelist. The first is in Acts xv. 35. I have shewed you the words of the Lord Jesus, how he said.

IT IS MORE BLESSED TO GIVE THAN TO RECEIVE. Every liberal heart feels this in bestowing its bounty: and every poor man, who is obliged to receive help, and whose independency of spirit is still whole in him, feels this too. To the genuine poor, it is more burdensome to receive a kindness, than it is to the generous man who gives it. The second is recorded in the ninth verse of this chapter; He said unto me, MY GRACE IS SUFFICIENT FOR THEE; FOR MY STRENGTH IS MADE PERFECT IN WEAKNESS. Of these two most blessed sayings, St. Paul is the only evangelist. This last is of general application.

In all states and conditions of life, God's grace is sufficient for us. If, in any case, we miscarry, it is because we have not sought God earnestly. Let no man say that he is overcome by sin, through want of grace; God's grace was sufficient for him, but he did not apply for it as us did St. Paul; and therefore he did not receive it. Men often fail the issue of their own infidelity to the charge of God; they excuse their commission of sin through their scantiness of grace; whereas the whole is owing to their carelessness, and refusal to be saved in God's own way: and in this way alone will God save any man, because it is the only effectual way.

2. The apostle must have been brought into a blessed state of subjection to God, when he could say, I take pleasure in infirmities; that is, in afflictions and sufferings of different kinds. Though this language was spoken on earth, we may justly allow with one, that he learned it in HEAVEN.

3. St. Paul preached the Gospel without being burdensome. In every case the labourer is worthy of his hire. He who labours for the cause of God should be supported by the cause of God; but woe to that man who aggrandizes himself, and grows rich by the spoils of the faithful! And to him especially who has made a fortune out of the purse of the poor. In such a man's heart, the love of money must have its throne. As to his professed spirituality, it is nothing; he is a whited sepulchre, and an abomination in the sight of the Lord. If a man will love the world, (and he does love it, who makes a fortune by the offerings of the poor,) the love of the Father is not in him.

CHAPTER XIII.

The apostle again says that this is the third time he has purposed to come and see them; and threatens that he will by the power of Christ, punish every incorrigible sinner, 1-4. Exhorts them to examine themselves, whether they be in the faith, 5, 6. Prays that they may do no evil, 7. And shows how ardently he wished their complete restoration to unity and purity, 8, 9. Tells them for what reason he writes to them, 10. Bids them farewell, 11. Gives them some directions, and concludes with his apostolic benediction, 12-14. [A. M. 4061. A. D. 57. A. U. C. 810. An. Imp. Neronis Cæs. 4.]

THIS is ^a the third time I am coming to you. ^b In the mouth of two or three witnesses shall every word be established. ^c I told you before, and foretold you, as if I were present, the second time; and being absent now I write to them ^d which heretofore have sinned, and to all other, that, if I come again, ^e I will not spare;

^f Since ye seek a proof of Christ speaking in me, which to you-ward is not weak, but is mighty ^g in you.

^h For though he was crucified through weakness, yet ⁱ he liveth by the power of God. For ^k we also are weak ^l in him, but we shall live with him by the power of God toward you.

NOTES.—Verse 1. This is the third time I am coming to you [These words are nearly the same with those chap. xii. 14, and probably refer to the purpose which he had twice before formed of seeing them. But the latter clause seems to attach a different meaning to the passage; at least so it has been understood by some learned men. Schoettgen thus interprets the whole: the first coming of the apostle to Corinth, was when he personally visited them, and there founded the Christian church. By his second coming we are to understand his first epistle to them: and, by his being now ready to come to them the third time, we are to understand this second epistle, which he was then going to send them. These were the two witnesses, and the apostle the third, which he gave to the Corinthians concerning the truth of his own ministry, or the falsity of the ministry of the pretended apostle. Calmet contends that the apostle had been twice before at Corinth, and that he now purposed to go a third time; and that these visits were the two or three witnesses to which the apostle appeals. Dr. Lightfoot thinks that the two or three witnesses were Stephanus, Fortunatus, and Achaicus, sent to assure them of his coming. But this opinion cannot be supported. With respect to the two or three witnesses establishing the subject, Dr. Witherly says, "Though these words seem to be cited from Deut. xii. 15, rather than from Matt. xviii. 16, it being rare to find this apostle citing any thing from the New Testament, without calling it an ordinance of the Lord; yet it is probable that he here alludes to the practice there prescribed, for the reclaiming of offenders. And then his first epistle being written with this introduction, Paul an apostle, and Sosthenes; his second thus, Paul and Timothy, may pass for two or three witnesses; and his presence the third time in person, to exercise his censures on those offenders, before the body of the church, may bear a fair resemblance to our Lord's prescription in the above case, If thy brother offend, &c.—So far Witherly. See my notes on Matt. xviii. 16.

2. I told you before, &c. 1. As Calmet maintains that Paul had already been twice at Corinth, it is well to hear his reasons: "St. Paul came to Corinth the latter end of the year of our Lord 52, and remained there eighteen months. Acts xviii. 1, &c. He came there a second time in the year 53, but staid only a short time, as he had to return speedily to Ephesus, 1 Cor. xvi. 7, hence it is that St. Luke makes no mention of this second journey in the Acts. Finally, he determined to visit them a third time; as, in effect, he did, about the year 57. Of his second voyage to Corinth, which is not mentioned in the Acts, he speaks expressly in this verse." I do not see sufficient evidence to induce me to subscribe to this opinion of Calmet. Believe the apostle had been but once before at Corinth; and this matter is set in a clear point of view by Dr. Paley.—See the Introduction, sect. xi.

I will not spare [I will inflict the proper punishment on every incorrigible offender. It does appear from all the apostle's threatenings, that he was possessed of a miraculous power, by which he could inflict punishment on offenders; that he could deliver the body to Satan for the destruction of the flesh, that the spirit might be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus, 1 Cor. iv. 21, v. 5. What he says he told them before, probably relates to 1 Corinthians iv. 21. Shall I come with a rod, &c.]

3. Since ye seek a proof of Christ [The conversion of the Corinthians was to themselves a solid proof that Christ spoke by the apostle; and therefore he could, with great propriety, say that this power of Christ, far from being weak, was mighty among them.]

4. For though he was crucified through weakness [It is true Christ was crucified, and his crucifixion appeared to be the effect of his weakness; yet even this was not so; he gave up his life; none could take it away from him; and, in his last struggle, had he even been deficient in power, he could have had more than twelve legions of angels to support him against the high priest's mob, Matt. xxvi. 53, but how then could the Scripture be fulfilled! And had he not died, how could the human race have been saved!]

Yet he liveth by the power of God [Though he appeared to be crucified through his own weakness, yet he now liveth by the power of God; exerting an almighty energy by which all things are subject to him.]

We also are weak in him [Because we are on Christ's side, we appear to you as weak as he did to the Jews; but, it is not so, for we live with him; under the same influence, and partaking of the same life; manifesting, by our preaching and miracles, the power of God towards you. While I do not use the rod, I appear to you weak; I will use it, and then you shall find me to be strong.]

5. Examine yourselves, whether ye be in the faith [Εαυτοὺς ἐπαγγαγέτε, τρυφήσασθε, ἵνα γινώκατε ἂν ἐν τῇ πίστει ᾴτε.] Try yourselves, pierce your hearts; bore yourselves throughout; try yourselves by what I have written, and see whether ye retain the true faith of the Gospel.]

Prove your own selves [Εαυτοὺς δοκιμάζετε, πρὸς αὐτοὺς τῆς πίστεως;] as you would try gold or silver, suspected of adulteration. No more take that for Gospel which is not so, than you would take adulterated money for sterling coin. This is a metaphor taken from testing, or assaying adulterate metals.]

Know ye not your own selves [Are ye not full of wisdom and understanding? and is it not as easy to find out a spurious faith, as it is to detect a base coin? There is an assay and touch-stone for both. If base metal be mixed with the pure, you can readily detect it; and as easily may you know that you are in the faith, as you can know that base metal is mixed with the pure. Does Jesus Christ dwell in you? You have his Spirit: his power; his mind; if ye be Christians, and the Spirit of Christ bears witness with your spirit, that ye are the children of God. And this is the case except ye be reprobates; ἀποκρίσι, base counterfeit coin; mongrel Christians. This metaphor holds excellently here. They had a Judaizing Christian among them; such, presumptively, was the false apostle; they had received his judaico-christian doctrine, and were what the prophet said of some of the Israelites in his time, reprobate silver, adulterated coin, shall men call them, Jer. vi. 30. And thus, when they were brought to the test, they were found reprobate; that is, adulterated with this mixture of bad doctrine. There is no other kind of reprobation mentioned here than that which refers to the trial and rejection of adulterated coin; and, by way of metaphor, to the detection of false Christianity. Thus reprobation came of the people themselves; they, not God, adulterated the pure metal. Man pollutes himself; then God reprobates the polluted.]

6. Ye shall know that ye are not reprobates [Ye have had, and ye shall have, the fullest proof that I have preached the true faith among you; and that God has confirmed it by his testimony; and thus, that I am proved, and manifested to be what I ought to be; and shown to be approved of God.]

7. I pray to God that ye do no evil [That ye do not persist in that course which will oblige me to use the power of Christ, with which I am endowed, to punish you. Some apply this prayer to the apostle himself: Now I pray to God that I may do you no evil; that I may not be obliged to use my apostolic rod, and inflict evil upon you.]

Not that we should appear approved [We do not wish to give this proof that we are approved of God, by inflicting this punishment on the transgressors.]

But that ye should do that which is honest [That ye may do that which is right and seemly, ὡς καλόν; though we should be in consequence of that, as reprobates, as persons not approved of God; because your reformation will prevent the exercise of this power, which would otherwise have given an awful proof that we are approved of God.]

8. For we can do nothing against the truth, but for the truth [As we are the apostles of God, we cannot bring to you any false doctrine; and, as we profess to be under the influence of God's Spirit, we cannot do any thing that is opposed to that truth, or which might be prejudicial to it. On the contrary, what we say and do, is for that truth, to pre-empt and establish it. The Gospel of Jesus is truth; and my testimony concerning it is truth also. In my coming, and in my rod, you have nothing to fear, if ye retain, and abide in this truth.]

9. For we are glad, when we are weak [It will give me indescribable pleasure that I should still appear to be poor, despicable, and destitute of this extraordinary power, with which present ¹ I should use sharpness, ² according to the power which the Lord hath given me to edification, and not to destruction.

¹ Tit. 1.12.—² Ch. 10. 8.—³ Rom. 12. 16, 18 & 15.5. ⁴ 1 Cor. 1.10. Phil. 2.2 & 3.16. ⁵ 1 Pet. 3.8.

God has clothed me: so that you be strong in all the gifts and graces of the Holy Spirit.

And this also we wish, even your perfection] We cannot be satisfied that persons, with such eminent endowments, and who have once received the truth as it is in Jesus, should be deficient in any of the graces that constitute the mind of Christ; such as brotherly love, charity, harmony, unity, and order. I have given the above paraphrase to this verse, because of the last term καταρτισμῶν, which we render perfection. Καταρτίζω, from κατά, intensive, and αἰρίζω, to fit or adapt, signifies the reducing of a dislocated limb to its proper place; and hence, as Beza says on this passage, "The apostle's meaning is, that whereas the members of the church were all, as it were, dislocated, and out of joint, they should be joined together in love; and they should endeavour to make perfect what was amiss among them, either in faith or morals." It is a metaphor also taken from a building: the several stones and timbers being all put in their proper places and situations, so that the whole building might be complete, and be a proper habitation for the owner. The same figure, though not in the same terms, the apostle uses, Eph. ii. 20—22. The perfection or rejoining which the apostle wishes, is that which he refers to the state of the church in its fellowship, unity, order, &c. And perfection in the soul, is the same in reference to it; as perfection in the church is to its order and unity. The perfection or rejoining of the soul implies its purification, and placing every faculty, passion, and appetite, in its proper place; so that the original order, harmony, unity, and purity of the soul may be restored; and the whole built up to be a habitation of God through the Spirit, Eph. ii. 22.

¹⁰ Therefore I write these things] I only threaten you now by this epistle, to put you on your guard, and lead you to reformation before I visit you; that I may not then have to use sharpness, ἀστροπία, a cutting off, employing thus my apostolical authority to inflict punishment; a power which God has given me, rather to be employed in your edification, than in your destruction.

¹¹ Finally, Αἰνέω, all that remains for me now to write, is to wish you all manner of happiness, and so to take my leave.

Farewell! A good wish, from our old mother tongue, compounded of pax, to go, and pax, fairly, properly, or pax, with felicity; go on prosperously! This is the spirit of this good wish.

The Greek χαίρειτε signifies nearly the same thing. Χαίρειν means, to be very joyous; χαίρειν, be joyous and happy; be ever prosperous; this was among the last words which Cyrus, when dying, spoke to his friends.

Be perfect] Καταρτίζεσθε, be compact; get into joint again; let unity and harmony be restored! See the note on ver. 9.

Be of good comfort] Παρακαλεσθε, receive admonition; for, παράκλησις, signifies to admonish, beg, entreat; and also to comfort. Receive admonition, that ye may receive comfort. If ye take my advice, ye shall have consolation; if ye do not, ye will have nothing but misery and woe.

Be of one mind] Ἐν ἑνὶ φρονεῖτε, think the same; let there be no dissensions among you. Be of the same creed, and let disputes about that religion, which should be the bond of peace, for ever subside.

Live in peace] Εἰρηνεύετε; cultivate peace; or, as he says elsewhere, follow peace, and pursue it, Heb. xii. 14. Cultivate a peaceable disposition; and neither say nor do any thing which has a tendency to irritate each other.

And the God of love and peace shall be with you] While ye are full of contentions, dissensions, and discord, peace can have no place among you; and as to love, the fulfilling of the law, that worketh no ill to thy neighbour, it has necessarily taken its flight. Love cannot live, neither exist, where there are brawls, contentions, and divisions. And where neither peace nor love is to be found, there God cannot be. And if he be not there, yourselves and the devil make the whole assembly.

¹² Greet one another with a holy kiss.] Use every means by which a good understanding may be brought about. Let the spirit of friendship live among you; and encourage its continuance by every friendly act. See on Rom. xvi. 16.

¹⁴ The grace of the Lord Jesus Christ] All the favour and beneficence that come from and through the Redeemer of the world; as the Lord, the ruler and governor of all things; as Jesus, the Saviour of all men by his passion and death; as Christ the distributor of all that divine action which enlightens, comforts, harmonizes, and purifies the mind. May this most exalted, glorious, and all-sufficient Saviour, be ever with you.

¹² Greet one another with a holy kiss.

¹³ All the saints salute you.

¹⁴ The grace of the Lord Jesus Christ, and the love of God, and the communion of the Holy Ghost, be with you all. Amen.

¹⁵ The second epistle to the Corinthians was written from Philippi, a city of Macedonia, by Titus and Lucas.

w Rom. 15.33.—x Rom. 16.16. 1 Cor. 16.30. 1 Thess. 5.26. 1 Pet. 5.14.—y Rom. 16.24.—z Phil. 2.1.

And the love of God] God, your Maker, in that infinite love which induced him to create the world, and form man in his own image, and in his own likeness, that he might be capable of knowing, loving, and enjoying him for ever; and God in the fullest manifestation of that love which caused him to give his only-begotten Son, to the end, that they who believe on him should not perish, but have everlasting life. May this God of love, and this love of God, be ever with you.

And the communion of the Holy Ghost] May that Holy Spirit, that divine and eternal energy which proceeds from the Father and the Son; that heavenly fire that gives light and life; that purifies and refines; sublimates and exalts; comforts and invigorates; make you all partakers with himself!

Κοινωνία, which we translate fellowship and communion, signifies properly participation; having things in common; partaking with each other. This points out the astonishing privileges of true believers: they have communion with God's Spirit; share in all its gifts and graces; walk in its light; through him they have the fullest confidence that they are of God; that he is their Father and friend; and has blotting out all their iniquities: this they know by the Spirit which he has given them. And is it possible that a man shall be a partaker with the Holy Ghost, and not know it! that he shall be full of light and love, and not know it! that he shall have the spirit of adoption by which he can cry Abba! Father! and yet know nothing of his relationship to God, but by inference from indirect proofs! In a word, that he shall have the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, the love of God, and the communion of the Holy Ghost with him, and all the while know nothing certain of the grace, as to his portion in it; feel nothing warming from the love, as to its part in him; and nothing energetic from the communion, as to his participation in the gifts and graces of this Divine energy! This is all as absurd as it is impossible. Every genuine Christian who maintains a close walk with God, may have as full an evidence of his acceptance with God, as he has of his own existence. And the doctrine that explains away this privilege, or softens it down to nothing, making the most gracious and safe state consistent with innumerable doubts and fears and general uncertainty, is not of God. It is a spurious Gospel, which, under the show of a voluntary humility, not only lowers, but almost annihilates, the standard of Christianity.

This text, as well as that, Matt. iii. 16, 17, and that other, Matt. xxviii. 19, strongly mark the doctrine of the Holy Trinity. See the note on this latter text. And had not the apostle been convinced that there was a personality in this ever-blessed and undivided Trinity, he could not have expressed himself thus. And had not our Lord intended to be understood in this way, he would not have given such a commission to his apostles to baptize the nations in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. The doctrine is the teaching of God; let men make of it what they please. And the genuine church of God have ever received and understood it in this way.

Amen! This word is wanting, as usual, in almost every MS. of authority. Amen seems to have been anciently added at the conclusion of books, exactly as we add the word finis: both merely signifying the end.

As to the Inscription, it is wanting, either in whole or in part, in almost all the ancient MSS. The principal forms in which it exists are the following:

To the Corinthians, the second.—The second to the Corinthians is completed.—The second to the Corinthians is finished.—To the Corinthians, the second, written from Philippi.—Written from Philippi by Titus.—Written from Philippi by Titus and Luke.—By Titus, Barnabas, and Luke.—The second Epistle to the Corinthians was written from Philippi of Macedonia, and sent by Titus, Syllax.—The end of the Epistle. It was written from the city of Philippi by Titus and Luke. Praise be to God for ever, ARABIC.—In the Vulgate there is no subscription; nor in the ETHIOPIAN.—Written in Philippi of Macedonia, and sent by Titus and Luke, COPTIC.—The second Epistle to the Corinthians is ended; which was written from Philippi of Macedonia, by Titus and Luke, SYR. PHILOX.

It has been often remarked that no dependance can be placed on many of the subscriptions to the sacred books, which are found in MSS. and Versions, because those subscriptions were not written by the authors of those books; but were afterward added, by the transcribers or copiers, who followed either tradition or their own judgment. It is generally allowed that this second epistle was written from Macedonia; and probably from the city of Philippi, in that province. See the Introduction and Preface to this epistle, p. 153—163.

INTRODUCTION TO THE EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE TO THE GALATIANS.

THE authenticity of this epistle is ably vindicated by Dr. Paley: the principal part of his arguments I shall here introduce, and doubt not that they will be considered demonstrative evidence by every candid and unprejudiced reader.

SECTION I. The argument of this epistle in some measure proves its antiquity. It will hardly be doubted, that it was written whilst the dispute concerning the circumcision of Gentile converts was fresh in men's minds: for, even supposing it to have been a forgery, the only credible motive that can be assigned for the forgery, was to bring the name and authority of the apostle into this controversy. No design could be so insipid, or so unlikely to enter into the thoughts of any man, as to produce an epistle written earnestly and pointedly upon one side of a controversy, when the controversy itself was dead, and the question no longer interesting to any description of readers whatever. Now the controversy concerning the circumcision of the Gentile Christians was of such a nature, that, if it arose at all, it must have arisen in the beginning of Christianity. As Judea was the scene of the Christian history; as the Author and preachers of Christianity were Jews; as the religion itself acknowledged and was founded upon the Jewish religion, in contradistinction to every other religion, then professed amongst mankind; it was not to be wondered at, that some of its teachers should carry it out in the world rather as a sect and modification of Judaism, than as a separate original revelation; or that they should invite their proselytes to these observances in which they lived themselves. This was likely to happen: but if it did not happen at first; if whilst the religion was in the hands of Jewish teachers, no such claim was advanced, no such condition was attempted to be imposed, it is not probable that the doctrine would be started, much less that it should prevail, in any future period. I likewise think, that those pretensions of Judaism were much more likely to be insisted upon, whilst the Jews continued a nation, than after their fall and dispersion; whilst Jerusalem and the temple stood, than after the destruction brought upon them by the Roman arms, the fatal cessation of the sacrifice and the priesthood, the humiliating loss of their country, and, with it, of the great rites and symbols of their institution. It should seem, therefore, from the nature of the subject, and the situation of the parties, that this controversy was carried on in the interval between the preaching of Christianity to the Gentiles, and the invasion of Titus; and that our present epistle, which was undoubtedly intended to bear a part in this controversy, must be referred to the same period.

But, again; the epistle supposes that certain designing adherents of the Jewish law had crept into the churches of Galatia; and had been endeavouring, and but too successfully, to persuade the Galatic converts, that they had been taught the new religion imperfectly, and at second hand; that the founder of their church himself possessed only an inferior and deputed commission, the seat of truth and authority being in the apostles and elders of Jerusalem; moreover, that whatever he might profess amongst them, he had himself, at other times and in other places, given way to the doctrine of circumcision. The epistle is unintelligible without supposing all this. Referring therefore to this, as to what had actually passed, we find St. Paul treating so unjust an attempt to undermine his credit, and to introduce amongst his converts a doctrine which he had uniformly reprobated, in terms of great asperity and indignation. And in order to refute the suspicions which had been raised concerning the fidelity of his teaching, as well as to assert the independency and divine original of his mission, we find him appealing to the history of his conversion, to his conduct under it, to the manner in which he had conferred with the apostles when he met with them at Jerusalem; alleging, that so far was his doctrine from being derived from them, or from exercising any superiority over him, that they had simply assented to what he had already preached amongst the Gentiles, and which preaching was communicated not by them to him, but by himself to them; that he had maintained the liberty of the Gentile church, by opposing, upon one occasion, an apostle to the face, when the timidity of his behaviour seemed to endanger it; that from the first, that all along, to that hour, he had constantly resisted the claims of Judaism; and that the persecutions which he daily underwent, at the hands or by the instigation of the Jews, and of which he bore in his person the marks and scars, might have been avoided by him, if he had consented to employ his labours in bringing, through the medium of Christianity, converts over to the Jewish institution, for then "would the offence of the cross have ceased." Now an impostor who had forged the epistle for the purpose of producing St. Paul's authority in the dispute, which, as hath been observed, is the only credible motive that can be assigned for the forgery, might have made the apostle deliver his opinion upon the subject, in strong and decisive terms, or might have put his name to a train of reasoning and argumentation upon that side of the question which the imposture was intended to recommend. I can allow the possibility of such a scheme as that. But for a writer, with this purpose in view, to feign a series of transactions supposed to have passed amongst the Christians of Galatia, and then to counterfeit expressions of anger and resentment excited by these transactions; to make the apostle travel back into his own history, and into a recital of various passages of his life, some indeed directly, but others obliquely, and others even obscurely, bearing upon the point in question; in a word, to substitute narrative for argument, expostulation and complaint for dogmatic positions and controversial reasoning, in a writing properly controversial, and of which the aim and design was to support one side of a much agitated question—is a method so intricate, and so unlike the methods pursued by all other impostors, as to require the very flagrant proofs of imposition to induce us to believe it to be one.

SECTION II.—In this section I shall endeavour to prove,

1. That the Epistle to the Galatians, and the Acts of the Apostles, were written without any communication with each other. 2. That the epistle, though written without any communication with the history, by recital, implication, or reference, bears testimony to many of the facts contained in it.

1. The epistle, and the Acts of the Apostles, were written without any communication with each other. To judge of this point, we must examine these passages in each, which describe the same transaction; for, if the author of either writing derived his information from the account which he had seen in the other, when he came to speak of the same transaction, he would follow that account. The history of St. Paul, at Damascus, as read in the Acts, and as referred to by the epistle, forms an instance of this sort. According to the Acts, Paul (after his conversion) was certain days with the "disciples which were at Damascus." And straightway he preached Christ in the synagogues, that he is the Son of God. But all that heard him were amazed, and said, is not this he which destroyed them which called on this name in Jerusalem, and came hither for that intent, that he might bring them bound unto the chief priests? But Saul increased the more in strength, confounding the Jews which were at Damascus, proving that this is very Christ. And after that many days were fulfilled, the Jews took counsel to kill him. But their laying wait was known of Saul; and they watched the gates day and night to kill him. Then the disciples took him by night, and let him down by the wall in a basket. And when Saul was come to Jerusalem, he assayed to join himself to the disciples." Acts, chap. ix. 19—26.

According to the epistle, "When it pleased God, who separated me from my mother's womb, and called me by his grace, to reveal his son in me, that I might preach him among the heathen; immediately I conferred not with flesh and blood; neither went I up to Jerusalem to them which were apostles before me; but I went into Arabia, and returned again to Damascus; then, after three years, I went up to Jerusalem."

Beside the difference observable in the terms and general complexion of these two accounts, "the journey into Arabia," mentioned in the epistle, and omitted in the history, affords full proof that there existed no correspondence between these writers. If the narrative in the Acts had been made up from the epistle, it is impossible that this journey should have been passed over in silence; if the epistle had been composed out of what the author had read of St. Paul's history in the Acts, it is unaccountable that it should have been inserted.

The journey to Jerusalem related in the second chapter of the epistle, ("then, fourteen years after, I went up again to Jerusalem.") supplies another example of the same kind. Either this was the journey described in the fifteenth chapter of the Acts, when Paul and Barnabas were sent from Antioch to Jerusalem, to consult the apostles and elders upon the question of the Gentile converts; or it was some journey of which the history does not take notice. If the first opinion be followed, the discrepancy in the two accounts is so considerable, that it is not without difficulty, they can be adapted to the same transaction; so that upon this supposition, there is no place for suspecting that the writers were guided or assisted by each other. If the latter opinion be preferred, we have then a journey to Jerusalem, and a conference with the principal members of the church there, circumstantially related in the epistle, and entirely omitted in the Acts; and we are at liberty to repeat the observation, which we before made, that the omission of so material a fact in the history is inexplicable, if the historian had read the epistle; and that the insertion of it in the epistle, if the writer derived his information from the history, is not less so.

* N. B. The Acts of the Apostles simply inform us that St. Paul left Damascus in order to go to Jerusalem, "after many days were fulfilled." If any one doubt whether the words "many days" could be intended to express a period which included a term of three years, he will find a complete instance of the same phrase, used with the same latitude, in the first book of Kings, chap. xi. 38, 39. "And Shimei dwelt at Jerusalem in many days; and it came to pass at the end of three years, that two of the servants of Shimei ran away."

St. Peter's visit to Antioch, during which the dispute arose between him and St. Paul, is not mentioned in the Acts.

If we connect, with these instances, the general observation, that no scrutiny can discover the smallest trace of transcription or imitation either in things or words, we shall be fully satisfied in this part of our case: namely, that the two records, be the facts contained in them true or false, come to our hands from independent sources.

Secondly, I say, that the epistle, thus proved to have been written without any communication with the history, bears testimony to a great variety of particulars contained in the history.

1. St. Paul in the early part of his life had addicted himself to the study of the Jewish religion, and was distinguished by his zeal for the institution, and for the traditions which had been incorporated with it. Upon this part of his character the history makes St. Paul speak thus: "I am verily a man which am a Jew, born in Tarsus, a city of Cilicia, yet brought up in this city at the feet of Gamaliel, and taught according to the perfect manner of the law of the fathers; and was zealous towards God, as ye all are this day." Acts, chap. xxi. 3.

The epistle is as follows: "I profited in the Jews' religion above many my equals in mine own nation, being more exceedingly zealous of the traditions of my fathers." Chap. i. 14.

2. St. Paul, before his conversion, had been a fierce persecutor of the new sect. "As for Saul, he made havoc of the church; entering into every house and haling men and women, committed them to prison." Acts, chap. viii. 3.

This is the history of St. Paul, as delivered in the Acts; in the recital of his own history in the epistle, "Ye have heard," says he, "of my conversation in times past in the Jews' religion, how that beyond measure I persecuted the church of God." Chap. i. 13.

3. St. Paul was miraculously converted on his way to Damascus. "And as he journeyed he came near to Damascus: and suddenly there shined round about him a light from heaven; and he fell to the earth, and heard a voice saying unto him, Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me? And he said, Who art thou, Lord? And the Lord said, I am Jesus, whom thou persecutest: it is hard for thee to kick against the pricks. And he, trembling and astonished, said, Lord, what wilt thou have me to do? Acts, chap. ix. 3-6. With these compare the epistle, chap. i. 15-17. "When it pleased God, who separated me from my mother's womb, and called me by his grace, to reveal his Son in me, that I might preach him among the heathen; immediately I conferred not with flesh and blood, neither went I up to Jerusalem, to them that were apostles before me; but I went into Arabia, and returned again unto Damascus."

In this quotation from the epistle, I desire it to be remarked how incidentally it appears, that the affair passed at Damascus. In what may be called the direct part of the account, no mention is made of the place of his conversion at all; a casual expression at the end, and an expression brought in for a different purpose, alone fixes it to have been at Damascus; "I returned again to Damascus." Nothing can be more like simplicity and undesignedness than this is. It also draws the agreement between the two quotations somewhat closer, to observe, that they both state St. Paul to have preached the Gospel immediately upon his call: "And straightway he preached Christ in the synagogues, that he is the Son of God." Acts, chap. ix. 20. "When it pleased God to reveal his Son in me, that I might preach him among the heathen, immediately I conferred not with flesh and blood." Gal. chap. i. 15.

4. The course of the apostle's travels after his conversion was this: He went from Damascus to Jerusalem, and from Jerusalem into Syria and Cilicia. "At Damascus the disciples took him by night, and let him down by the wall in a basket; and when Saul was come to Jerusalem, he assayed to join himself to the disciples." Acts, chap. ix. 25. Afterward "when the brethren knew the conspiracy formed against him at Jerusalem, they brought him down to Caesarea, and sent him forth to Tarsus, a city in Cilicia." Chap. ix. 30. In the epistle, St. Paul gives the following brief account of his proceedings within the same period: "After three years I went up to Jerusalem to see Peter, and abode with him fifteen days; afterward I came into the regions of Syria and Cilicia." The history had told us that Paul passed from Caesarea to Tarsus: if he took this journey by land, it would carry him through Syria into Cilicia; and he would come, after his visit at Jerusalem, "into the regions of Syria and Cilicia," in the very order in which he mentions them in the epistle. This supposition of his going from Caesarea to Tarsus by land clears up also another point. It accounts for what St. Paul says in the same place concerning the churches of Judea: "Afterwards I came into the regions of Syria and Cilicia, and was unknown by face unto the churches of Judea, which were in Christ: but they had heard only that he which persecuted us in times past, now preacheth the faith, which once he destroyed; and they glorified God in me." Upon which passage I observe, first, that what is here said of the churches of Judea, is spoken in connexion with his journey into the regions of Syria and Cilicia. Secondly, that the passage itself has little significance, and that the connexion is inexplicable, unless St. Paul went through Judea (though probably by a hasty journey) at the time that he came into the regions of Syria and Cilicia. Suppose him to have passed by land from Caesarea to Tarsus, all this, as hath been observed, would be precisely true.

5. Barnabas was with St. Paul at Antioch. "Then departed Barnabas to Tarsus, for to seek Saul; and when he had found him, he brought him unto Antioch. And it came to pass that a whole year they assembled themselves with the church." Acts, chap. xi. 25, 26. Again, and upon another occasion, "they (Paul and Barnabas) sailed to Antioch; and there they continued a long time with the disciples." Chap. xiv. 26.

Now what says the epistle? "When Peter was come to Antioch, I withstood him to the face, because he was to be blamed; and the other Jews dissembled likewise with him; insomuch that Barnabas also was carried away with their dissimulation." Chap. ii. 11, 13.

6. The stated residence of the apostles was at Jerusalem. "At that time there was a great persecution against the church which was at Jerusalem; and they were all scattered abroad throughout the regions of Judaea and Samaria, except the apostles." Acts, chap. viii. 1. "They (the Christians at Antioch) determined that Paul and Barnabas should go up to Jerusalem, unto the apostles and elders, about this question." Acts, chap. xv. 2.—"With these accounts agrees the declaration in the epistle: "Neither went I up to Jerusalem to them which were apostles before me," chap. i. 17. for this declaration implies, or rather assumes it to be known, that Jerusalem was the place where the apostles were to be met with.

7. There were at Jerusalem two apostles, or at the least two eminent members of the church, of the name of James. This is directly inferred from the Acts of the Apostles, which in the second verse of the twelfth chapter relates the death of James, the brother of John; and yet in the fifteenth chapter, and in a subsequent part of the history, records a speech delivered by James in the assembly of the apostles and elders. It is also strongly implied by the form of expression used in the epistle: "Other apostles saw I none, save James, the Lord's brother;" i. e. to distinguish him from James, the brother of John.

To us who have been long conversant in the Christian history, as contained in the Acts of the Apostles, these points are obvious and familiar; nor do we readily apprehend any greater difficulty in making them appear in a letter purporting to have been written by St. Paul, than there is in introducing them into a modern sermon. But to judge correctly of the argument before us, we must discharge this knowledge from our thoughts. We must propose to ourselves the situation of an author who sat down to the writing of the epistle without having seen the history; and then the concurrences we have deduced will be deemed of importance. They will, at least, be taken for separate confirmations of the several facts; and not only of these particular facts, but of the general truth of the history.

For, what is the rule with respect to corroborative testimony, which prevails in courts of justice, and which prevails only because experience has proved that it is an useful guide to truth? A principal witness in a cause delivers his account: his narrative in certain parts of it, is confirmed by witnesses who are called afterward. The credit derived from their testimony belongs not only to the particular circumstances in which the auxiliary witnesses agree with the principal witness, but in some measure to the whole of his evidence; because it is improbable that accident or fiction should draw a line which touched upon truth in so many points.

In like manner, if two records be produced, manifestly independent, that is, manifestly written without any participation of intelligence, an agreement between them, even in few and slight circumstances, (especially if from the different nature and design of the writings, few points only of agreement, and those incidental, could be expected to occur,) would add a sensible weight to the authority of both, in every part of their contents.

The same rule is applicable to history, with at least as much reason as any other species of evidence.

SECTION III.—But although the references to various particulars in the epistle, compared with the direct account of the same particulars in the history, afford a considerable proof of the truth, not only of these particulars, but of the narrative which contains them; yet they do not show, it will be said, that the epistle was written by St. Paul; for admitting (what seems to have been proved) that the writer, whoever he was, had no recourse to the Acts of the Apostles; yet many of the facts referred to, such as St. Paul's miraculous conversion, his change from a virulent persecutor to an indefatigable preacher, his labours among the Gentiles, and his zeal for the liberties of the Gentile church, were so notorious as to occur readily to the mind of any Christian, who should choose to personate his character, and counterfeit his name; it was only to write what every body knew. Now I think that this supposition—viz. that the epistle was composed upon general information, and the general publicity of the facts alluded to, and that the author did no more than weave into his work what the common fame of the Christian church had reported to his ears—is repelled by the particularity of the recitals and references. This particularity is observable in the following instances; in perusing which, I desire the reader to reflect, whether they exhibit the language of a man who had nothing but general reputation to proceed upon, or of a man actually speaking of himself and of his own history, and consequently of things concerning which he possessed a clear, intimate, and circumstantial knowledge.

* Dr. Doddridge thought that the Caesarea here mentioned was not the celebrated city of that name upon the Mediterranean Sea, but Caesarea Philippi, near the borders of Syria, which lies in a much more direct line from Jerusalem to Tarsus than the other. The objection to this, Dr. Beysen remarks is, that Caesarea, without any addition, usually denotes Caesarea Palestine.

1. The history, in giving an account of St. Paul after his conversion, relates, "that, after many days," effecting, by the assistance of the disciples, his escape from Damascus; "he proceeded to Jerusalem." Acts, chap. ix. 25. The epistle, speaking of the same period, makes St. Paul say, that "he went into Arabia," that he returned again to Damascus, that after three years he went up to Jerusalem. Chap. i. 17, 18.

2. The history relates, that when Saul was come from Damascus, "he was with the disciples coming in and going out." Acts, chap. ix. 25. The epistle, describing the same journey, tells us, "that he went up to Jerusalem to see Peter, and abode with him fifteen days." Chap. i. 18.

3. The history relates, that when Paul was come to Jerusalem, "Barnabas took him and brought him to the Apostles." Acts, chap. ix. 27. The epistle, "that he saw Peter; but other of the apostles saw he none, save James, the Lord's brother." Chap. i. 19.

Now this is as it should be. The historian delivers his account in general terms, as of facts to which he was not present. The person who is the subject of that account, when he comes to speak of these facts himself, particularizes time, names, and circumstances.

4. The like notation of places, persons, and dates, is met with in the account of St. Paul's journey to Jerusalem, given in the second chapter of the epistle. It was fourteen years after his conversion; it was in company with Barnabas and Titus; it was then that he met with James, Cephas, and John; it was then also that it was agreed amongst them, that they should go to the circumcision, and he unto the Gentiles.

5. The dispute with Peter, which occupies the sequel of the second chapter, is marked with the same particularity. It was at Antioch: it was after certain came from James; it was whilst Barnabas was there, who was carried away by their dissimulation. These examples negative the insinuation, that the epistle presents nothing but indefinite allusions to public facts.

SECTION IV.—Chap. iv. 11—16. "I am afraid of you, lest I have bestowed upon you labour in vain. Brethren, I beseech you, be as I am, for I am as ye are. We have not injured me at all. Ye know how, through infirmity of the flesh, I preached the Gospel unto you at the first; and my temptation, which was in the flesh, ye despised not, nor rejected; but received me as an angel of God, even as Christ Jesus. Where is then the blessedness you spake of? for I bear you record, that if it had been possible, ye would have plucked out your own eyes, and have given them unto me. Am I therefore become your enemy, because I tell you the truth?"

With this passage compare 2 Cor. chap. xii. 1—9. "It is not expedient for me, doubtless, to glory; I will come to visions and revelations of the Lord. I knew a man in Christ above fourteen years ago (whether in the body I cannot tell, or whether out of the body I cannot tell; God knoweth); such a one was caught up to the third heaven; and I knew such a man (whether in the body or out of the body I cannot tell, God knoweth); how that he was caught up into paradise, and heard unspeakable words, which it is not lawful for a man to utter. Of such a one will I glory, yet of myself will I not glory, but in mine infirmities: for though I would desire to glory, I shall not be a fool; for I will say the truth. But now I forbear, lest any man should think of me above that which he seeth me to be, or that he heareth of me. And lest I should be exalted above measure, through the abundance of the revelations, there was given to me a thorn in the flesh, the messenger of Satan to buffet me, lest I should be exalted above measure. For this thing I besought the Lord thrice, that it might depart from me. And he said unto me, My grace is sufficient for thee; for my strength is made perfect in weakness. Most gladly therefore will I rather glory in my infirmities, that the power of Christ may rest upon me."

There can be no doubt that "the temptation which was in the flesh," mentioned in the Epistle to the Galatians, and "the thorn in the flesh, the messenger of Satan to buffet him," mentioned in the Epistle to the Corinthians, were intended to denote the same thing. Either therefore it was, what we pretend it to have been, the same person in both: that is, we are reading the real letters of a real apostle; or, it was that a sophist, who had seen the circumstance in one epistle, contrived, for the sake of correspondence, to bring it into another; or, lastly, it was a circumstance in St. Paul's personal condition, supposed to be well known to those into whose hands the epistle was likely to fall; and, for that reason, introduced into a writing designed to bear his name. I have extracted the quotations at length, in order to enable the reader to judge accurately of the manner in which the mention of this particular comes in, in each; because that judgment, I think, will acquit the author of the epistle, of the charge of having studiously inserted it, either with a view of producing an apparent agreement between them, or for any other purpose whatever.

The context, by which the circumstance before us is introduced, is in the two places totally different, and without any mark of imitation: yet in both places does the circumstance rise aptly and naturally out of the context, and that context from the train of thought carried on in the epistle.

The Epistle to the Galatians, from the beginning to the end, runs in a strain of angry complaint of their defection from the apostle, and from the principles which he had taught them. It was very natural to contrast with this conduct, the zeal with which they had once received him; and it was not less so to mention, as a proof of their former disposition towards him, the indulgence which, whilst he was amongst them, they had shown to his infirmity: "My temptation which was in the flesh ye despised not, nor rejected; but received me as an angel of God, even as Christ Jesus." Where is then the blessedness you spake of, &c. the benedictions which you bestowed upon me? for I bear you record, that, if it had been possible, ye would have plucked out your own eyes, and have given them to me."

In the two Epistles to the Corinthians, especially in the second, we have the apostle contending with certain teachers in Corinth, who had formed a party in that church against him. To vindicate his personal authority, as well as the dignity and credit of his ministry amongst them, he takes occasion (but not without apologizing, repeatedly, for the folly, that is, for the indecorum of pronouncing his own panegyric, to meet his adversaries in their boastings; "Whereinsoever any is bold (I speak foolishly) I am bold also. Are they Hebrews? so am I. Are they Israelites? so am I. Are they the seed of Abraham? so am I. Are they the ministers of Christ? (I speak as a fool) I am more; in labours more abundant, in stripes above measure, in prisons more frequent, in deaths oft." Being led to the subject, he goes on, as was natural, to recount his trials and dangers, his incessant cares and labours in the Christian mission. From the proofs which he had given of his zeal and activity in the service of Christ, he passes (and that with the same view of establishing his claim to be considered as "not a whit behind the very chiefest of the apostles") to the visions and revelations which from time to time had been vouchsafed to him. And then by a close and easy connexion, comes in the mention of his infirmity: "Lest I should be exalted," says he, "above measure, through the abundance of revelations, there was given to me a thorn in the flesh, the messenger of Satan to buffet me."

Thus then, in both epistles, the notice of his infirmity is suited to the place in which it is found. In the Epistle to the Corinthians, the train of thought draws up the circumstance by a regular approximation. In this epistle, it is suggested by the subject and occasion of the epistle itself. Which observation we offer as an argument to prove that it is not, in either epistle, a circumstance industriously brought forward for the sake of procuring credit to an imposture.

A reader will be taught to perceive the force of this argument, who shall attempt to introduce a given circumstance into the body of a writing. To do this without abruptness, or without betraying marks of design in the transition, requires, he will find, more art than he expected to be necessary, certainly more than any one can believe to have been exercised in the composition of these epistles.

SECTION V.—Chap. iv. 29. "But as then he that was born after the flesh persecuted him that was born after the Spirit, even so it is now." Chap. v. 11. "And I, brethren, if I yet preach circumcision, why do I yet suffer persecution? Then is the offence of the cross ceased." Chap. vi. 17. "From henceforth, let no man trouble me, for I bear in my body the marks of the Lord Jesus."

From these several texts, it is apparent that the persecutions which our apostle had undergone, were from the hands, or by the instigation of the Jews; that it was not for preaching Christianity in opposition to heathenism, but it was for preaching it as distinct from Judaism, that he had brought upon himself the sufferings which had attended his ministry. And this representation perfectly coincides with that which results from the detail of St. Paul's history, as delivered in the Acts. At Antioch, in Pisidia, the "word of the Jews stirred up the devout and honourable women and the chief men of the city, and raised persecution against Paul and Barnabas, and expelled them out of their coasts." (Acts, chap. xiii. 50.) Not long after, at Iconium, "a great multitude of the Jews and also of the Greeks believed; but the unbelieving Jews stirred up the Gentiles, and made their minds evil affected against the brethren." (Chap. xiv. 1, 2.) "At Lystra there came certain Jews from Antioch and Iconium, who persuaded the people; and, having stoned Paul, drew him out of the city, supposing he had been dead." (Chap. xiv. 19.) The same enmity, and from the same quarter, our apostle experienced in Greece: "At Thessalonica, some of them (the Jews) believed, and consorted with Paul and Silas; and of the devout Greeks a great multitude, and of the chief women not a few:

unt the Jews which believed not, moved with envy, took unto them certain lewd fellows of the baser sort, and gathered a company, and set all the city in an uproar, and assaulted the house of Jason, and sought to bring them out to the people." (Acts, chap. xvii. 4, 5.) Their persecutors followed them to Berea: "When the Jews of Thessalonica had knowledge that the word of God was preached of Paul at Berea, they came hither also, and stirred up the people." (Chap. xvii. 13.) And lastly at Corinth, when Gallio was deputy of Achaia, "the Jews made insurrection with one accord against Paul, and brought him to the judgment seat." I think it does not appear that our apostle was ever set upon by the Gentiles, unless they were first stirred up by the Jews, except in two instances; in both which the persons who began the assault were immediately interested in his expulsion from the place. Once this happened at Philippi, after the cure of the Pythi-ness: "When the masters saw the hope of their gains was gone, they caught Paul and Silas, and drew them into the market-place unto the rulers." (Chap. xvi. 19.) And a second time at Ephesus, at the instance of Demetrius, a silversmith which made silver shrines for Diana, "who called together workmen of like occupation, and said, Sirs, ye know that by this craft we have our wealth; moreover ye see and hear that not only at Ephesus, but almost throughout all Asia, this Paul hath persuaded away much people, saying, that they be no gods which are made with hands; so that not only this our craft is in danger to be set at nought, but also that the temple of the great goddess Diana should be despised, and her magnificence should be destroyed, whom all Asia and the world worshippeth."

SECTION VI.—I observe an agreement in a somewhat peculiar rule of Christian conduct as laid down in this epistle, and as exemplified in the Second Epistle to the Corinthians. It is not the repetition of the same general precept, which would have been a coincidence of little value; but it is the general precept in one place, and the application of that precept to an actual occurrence in the other. In the sixth chapter and first verse of this epistle, our apostle gives the following direction: "Brethren, if a man be overtaken in a fault, ye, which are spiritual, restore such a one in the spirit of meekness." In 2 Cor. chap. ii. 6-8, he writes thus: "Sufficient to such a man" (the incestuous person mentioned in the first epistle) "is this punishment, which was inflicted of many: so that, contrariwise, ye ought rather to forgive him and comfort him, lest perhaps such a one should be swallowed up with overmuch sorrow."

SECTION VII.—This epistle goes farther than any of St. Paul's epistles; for it avows in direct terms the supersession of the Jewish law, as an instrument of salvation, even to the Jews themselves. Not only were the Gentiles exempt from its authority, but even the Jews were no longer either to place any dependency upon it, or consider themselves as subject to it on a religious account. "Before faith came, we were kept under the law, shut up unto the faith which should afterwards be revealed; wherefore the law was our schoolmaster to bring us unto Christ, that we might be justified by faith; but, after that faith is come, we are no longer under a schoolmaster." (Chap. iii. 23-25.) This was undoubtedly spoken of Jews, and to Jews. In like manner, chap. iv. 1-5: "Now I say that the heir, as long as he is a child, differeth nothing from a servant, though he be lord of all; but is under tutors and governors, until the time appointed of the father: even so we, when we were children, were in bondage under the elements of the world; but when the fulness of time was come, God sent forth his Son, made of a woman, made under the law, to redeem them that were under the law, that we might receive the adoption of sons." These passages are nothing short of a declaration, that the obligation of the Jewish law, considered as a religious dispensation, the effects of which were to take place in another life, had ceased, with respect even to the Jews themselves. What then should be the conduct of a Jew (for such St. Paul was) who preached this doctrine? To be consistent with himself, either he would no longer comply, in his own person, with the directions of the law; or, if he did comply, it would be for some other reason than any confidence which he placed in its efficacy, as a religious institution. Now so it happens, that whenever St. Paul's compliance with the Jewish law is mentioned in the history, it is mentioned in connexion with circumstances which point out the motive from which it proceeded: and this motive appears to have been always exotic; namely, a love of order and tranquillity, or an unwillingness to use unnecessary offence. Thus, Acts, chap. xvi. 3. "Him (Timothy) would Paul have to go forth with him, and took and circumcised him. In course of the Jews, which were in those quarters." Again, Acts, chap. xxi. 26, when Paul consented to exhibit an example of public compliance with a Jewish rite by purifying himself in the temple, it is plainly intimated that he did this to satisfy "many thousands of Jews, who believed, and who were all zealous of the law." So far the instances related in one book, correspond with the doctrine delivered in another.

SECTION VIII.—Chap. i. 18. "Then, after three years, I went up to Jerusalem to see Peter, and abode with him fifteen days." The shortness of St. Paul's stay at Jerusalem is what I desire the reader to remark. The direct account of the same journey, in the Acts, chap. ix. 28, determines nothing concerning the time of his continuance there: "And he was with them (the apostles) coming in, and going out, at Jerusalem; and he spake boldly in the name of the Lord Jesus, and disputed against the Grecians; but they went about to slay him; which when the brethren knew, they brought him down to Casarea." Or rather this account, taken by itself, would lead a reader to suppose that St. Paul's abode at Jerusalem had been longer than fifteen days. But turn to the twenty-second chapter of the Acts, and you will find a reference to this visit to Jerusalem, which plainly indicates that Paul's continuance in that city had been of short duration: "And it came to pass, that when I was come again to Jerusalem, even while I prayed in the temple, I was in a trance, and saw him saying unto me, Make haste, get thee quickly out of Jerusalem, for they will not receive thy testimony concerning me." Here we have the general terms of one text so explained by a distant text in the same book, as to bring an indeterminate expression into a close conformity with a specification delivered in another book: a species of consistency not, I think, usually found in fabulous relations.

SECTION IX.—Chap. vi. 11. "Ye see how large a letter I have written unto you with mine own hand." These words imply that he did not always write with his own hand; which is consonant to what we find intimated in some other of the epistles. The Epistle to the Romans was written by Tertius; "I, Tertius, who wrote this epistle, salute you in the Lord." (Chap. xvi. 22.) The First Epistle to the Corinthians, the Epistle to the Colossians, and the Second to the Thessalonians, have all near the conclusion, this clause: "the salutation of me, Paul, with my own hand;" which must be understood, and is universally understood to import, that the rest of the epistle was written by another hand. I do not think it improbable that an impostor, who had remarked this subscription in some other epistle, should invent the same in a forgery; but that is not done here. The author of this epistle does not imitate the manner of giving St. Paul's signature; he only bids the Galatians observe how large a letter he had written to them with his own hand. He does not say this was different from his ordinary usage; that is left to implication. Now to suppose that this was an artifice to procure credit to an imposture, is to suppose that the author of the forgery, because he knew that others of St. Paul's were not written by himself, therefore made the apostle say that this was; which seems an odd turn to give to the circumstance, and to be given for a purpose which would more naturally and more directly have been answered, by saying "joining the salutation or signature in the form in which he found in other epistles."

SECTION X.—An exact conformity appears in the manner in which a certain apostle or eminent Christian, whose name was James, is spoken of in the epistle and in the history. Both writings refer to a situation "his at Jerusalem, somewhat different from that of the other apostles; a kind of exile or presidency in the church there, or at least a more fixed and stationary residence." Chap. ii. 12. "When Peter was at Antioch, before that certain came from James, he did eat with the Gentiles." This text plainly attributes a kind of pre-eminency to James; and, as we hear of him twice in the same epistle dwelling at Jerusalem, chap. i. 19, and ii. 9, we must apply it to the situation which he held in that church. In the Acts of the Apostles divers intimations occur, conveying the same idea of James's situation. When Peter was miraculously delivered from prison, and had surprised his friends by his appearance among them, after declaring unto them how the Lord had brought him out of Prison, "Go, show," says he, "these things unto James, and to the brethren." (Acts, chap. xii. 17.) Here James is manifestly spoken of in terms of distinction. He appears again with like distinction in the twenty-first chapter and the seventeenth and eighteenth verses: "And when we (Paul and his company) were come to Jerusalem, the day following Paul went in with us unto James, and all the elders were present." In the debate which took place upon the business of the Gentile converts, in the council at Jerusalem, this same person seems to have taken the lead. It was he who closed the debate, and proposed the resolution in which the council ultimately concurred: "Wherefore my sentence is," &c.

Upon the whole, that there exists a conformity in the expressions used concerning James, throughout the history, and in the epistle, is unquestionable. This proves that the circumstance itself is founded in truth; viz. that James was a real person, who held a situation of eminence in a real society of Christians at Jerusalem. It confirms also those parts of the narrative which are connected with this circumstance. Suppose, for instance, the truth of the account of Peter's escape from prison, was to be tried upon the testimony of a witness who, among other things, made Peter, after his deliverance, say, "Go show these things to James and to the brethren;" would it not be material, in such a trial, to make out by other independent proofs, or by a comparison of proofs drawn from independent sources, that there was actually at that time, living at Jerusalem, such a person as James; that this person held such a situation in the society amongst whom these things were transacted, as to render the words which Peter is said to have used concerning him, proper and natural? If this would be pertinent in the discussion of oral testimony, it is still more so in appreciating the credit of remote history.

PREFACE TO THE EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE TO THE GALATIANS

Galatia was anciently a part of Phrygia and the neighbouring countries. It had its name from the Gauls, who having, in several bodies, invaded Asia Minor, as Pausanias, (Attic. cap. iv.) relates, conquered this country, and settled in it. As these were mixed with various Grecian families, the country was also called Gallogrecia, see Justin, lib. xxiv. 4. xxv. 2. xxvii. 3. xxviii. 3. and Strabo, xiv. Under the reign of Augustus Cesar, about the year of Rome 727, and 26 years before our Lord, it was reduced into the form of a Roman colony, and was governed by a proprator, appointed by the emperor.

This country is bounded on the east by Cappadocia; on the west by Bithynia; on the south by Pamphylia; and on the north by the Euxine Sea. These are its limits according to Strabo, which some think too extensive; but the different provinces of Asia Minor being the subjects of continual contentions and inroad, very frequently changed their boundaries as well as their masters; and were seldom at one stay.

The Galata were divided into three tribes, the Tectosagi, the Trocmi, and the Tolistobii. According to Pliny, their country was divided into 195 tetrarchies, and according to Strabo, each of the three divisions above-mentioned was subdivided into four cantons, each of which had a tetrarch; and besides these 12 tetrarchs, there was a general council of the nation, consisting of 300 senators. These tetrarchs were at last reduced in number to three, then to two, and lastly to one; the last tetrarch and king of Galatia was Amyntas, who, from being secretary to Deiotarus, the first person that possessed the whole tetrarchy, was made king of Pisidia in the year of Rome 714. And in the year 718, Mark Antony made him tetrarch of Galatia. After the death of Amyntas, Galatia was ranked by Augustus among the Roman provinces, and governed as aforesaid. The administration of the proprators, continued till the reign of Theodosius the Great, or Valens; and under the Christian emperors, it was divided into two provinces, Galatia prima, being subject to a consul; Galatia secunda, or sulularis, which was governed by a president.

The religion of the ancient Galata was extremely corrupt and superstitious; and they are said to have worshipped the mother of the gods, under the name of Aegdistis; and to have offered human sacrifices of the prisoners they took in war.

They are mentioned by historians as a tall and valiant people, who went nearly naked; and used for arms only a sword and buckler. The impetuosity of their attack is stated to have been irresistible; and this generally made them victorians.

It appears from the Acts of the Apostles, that St. Paul visited this country more than once. Two visits to this region are particularly marked in the Acts, viz. first about A. D. 53. Acts xvi. 6. Now when they had gone through Phrygia and the region of Galatia, &c. the second about A. D. 56. Acts xviii. 23. he went over all the country of Galatia and Phrygia in order, strengthening all the disciples.

St. Paul was probably the first who had preached the Gospel in this region, as appears pretty evident from Galat. i. ver. 6. I marvel that ye are so soon removed from him that called you into the grace of Christ; and from chap. iv. 13. Ye know how through infirmity of the flesh, I preached the Gospel unto you at the first. Others suppose that it is not unlikely that St. Peter had preached the Gospel there to the Jews or Hellenists only, as his first epistle is directed to the strangers who were scattered abroad, throughout Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Asia, and Bithynia; and it is supposed also, that the persons converted by St. Peter probably occasioned those differences among the Galatian converts, which induced St. Paul to write this epistle, in which he takes pains to establish his own character as an apostle, which had been disputed by some, with a view of placing him below Peter; who preached generally to the Jews only, and observed the law. See Cabnet, and the New Encyclopædia, article GALATIA. That St. Peter thought at first, that the Gospel should be confined to the Jews, is sufficiently evident from the Acts of the Apostles; but after his divine vision, which happened about A. D. 41, related Acts x. he saw that God had also called the Gentiles into the church; and his first epistle which was written in A. D. 64, was probably twelve years posterior to that written by St. Paul to the Galatians.

As to the precise time in which this epistle was written, there have been various opinions among learned men. Some of the ancients believed it to be the very first written of all St. Paul's epistles. See Euphronius, tom. i. Hæres. 42. Others have supposed that it was written after his second journey to Galatia, Acts xviii. 23. which in the chronology I have placed in A. D. 51; and others with more probability, after his first journey, see Acts xvi. 6. which in the chronology I have placed in A. D. 53. That it was written soon after one of the apostle's visits to that region seems evident from the following complaint, I marvel that ye are so soon removed from him that hath called you, chap. i. 6. it has been therefore conjectured that only one or two years had elapsed from that time; and that the epistle must have been written about A. D.

52 or 53. Beausobre and L'Enfant speak very judiciously on this subject: "We do not find in the Epistle to the Galatians, any mark that can enable us to determine with certainty, at what time, or in what place, it was written. It is dated at Rome in some printed copies and MSS., but there is nothing in the epistle itself to confirm this date. Paul does not here make any mention of his bonds as he does in all his epistles written from Rome. He says, in ed. chap. vi. 17. I bear about my body the marks of the Lord Jesus; but he had often suffered before he came to Rome. Some learned chronologers think that it was written between the third and fourth journey of St. Paul to Jerusalem; and between his first and second into Galatia; which opinion appears very probable; for since the apostle says, he wonders that they were so soon turned to another Gospel, this epistle must have been written a short time after he had preached in Galatia.

"Nor can we discern in the epistle any notice of the second journey, which St. Paul made into this country. For this reason, it is thought that the Epistle to the Galatians was written at Corinth, where the apostle made a long stay; or else in some city of Asia, particularly Ephesus, where he staid some days, on his way to Jerusalem, Acts xviii. 19—21; therefore, in all probability, the epistle was written from Corinth, or from Ephesus, in the year 52 or 53."

Dr. Lardner confirms this opinion by the following considerations:

1. St. Paul says to the Corinthians, 1 Cor. xvi. 1. Now, concerning the collection for the saints, as I have given orders to the churches of Galatia, so do ye; which shows that at the writing of this epistle to the Corinthians, in 56, he had a good opinion of his converts in Galatia; and that he had no doubt of their respect to his directions; which probably had been sent to them from Ephesus during his long abode there.

2. And now we shall be better able to account for what appears very remarkable: when Paul left Corinth, after his long stay lay there, he went to Jerusalem, having a vow; in his way, he came to Ephesus, Acts xviii. 19—21. And when they desired him to tarry longer with them, he consented not, but bade them farewell; saying, I must, by all means, keep this feast that cometh, at Jerusalem; but I will return unto you again, if God will. When we read this, we might be apt to think that Paul should hasten back to Ephesus, and return thither presently, after he had been at Jerusalem; but instead of doing so after he had been at Jerusalem, he went down to Antioch; And after he had spent some time there, he departed, and went over all the country of Galatia and Phrygia in order, strengthening the disciples, ver. 22, 23. We now seem to see the reason of this course. At Corinth he heard of the defection of many in Galatia; whereupon he sent a sharp letter to them; but, considering the nature of the case, he judged it best to take the first opportunity to go to Galatia, and support the instructions of his letter; and, both together, had a good effect. Galat. iv. 19, 20. My little children, of whom I travail in birth again—I desire to be present with you, and to change my voice; for I stand in doubt of you; or I am perplexed for you. Now, then, we see the reason of the apostle's not coming directly from Jerusalem to Ephesus. However, he was not unmindful of his promise, and came thither after he had been in Galatia.

3. Upon the whole, the Epistle to the Galatians is an early epistle; and as seems to me most probable, was written at Corinth near the end of A. D. 52, or the very beginning of 53, before St. Paul set out to go to Jerusalem, by the way of Ephesus.

But, if any should rather think that it was written at Ephesus, during the apostle's short stay there, on his way from Corinth to Jerusalem, that will make but very little difference; for still, according to our computation, the epistle was written at the beginning of the year 53. See Lardner's Works, vol. vi. pag. 369.

Every thing considered, I feel no hesitation to place this epistle in the 52d or 53d year of our Lord; either the end of the former, or the beginning of the latter.

From the complexion of this epistle, it appears to have been written to the Jews who were dispersed in Galatia; see Acts ii. 9. And although in chap. iv. 8, it is said, that the persons to whom the apostle writes did not know God, and did service to them which by nature were not gods; this must be understood of those who had been proselytes to the Jewish religion, as the 9th verse sufficiently shows; for, after they had been converted to Christianity, they turned again to the weak and beggarly elements.

These Galatians were doubtless converted by St. Paul, see Acts xvi. 6. xviii. 23. but after his departure from them, some teachers had got in among them, who endeavoured to persuade them, and successfully too, that they should be circumcised, and keep the Mosaic law. See chap. i. 6. iv. 9, 10, 21. v. 1, 2. vi. 12. And the apostle laboured to bring them back from the errors of these false teachers.

The arguments which the apostle uses to prove the truth of the Christian religion, as well as the nullity of the Mosaic institutions, are the following :

1. That himself, immediately after his conversion, without having any conference with any of the apostles, preached the pure doctrines of Christianity, doctrines strictly conformable to those preached by the genuine disciples of the Lord; and this was a proof that he had received them by immediate inspiration; as he could have known them no other way.

2. That he was led to oppose Peter, because he had withdrawn himself from communion with the converted Gentiles; and thereby gave occasion to some to suppose that he considered the law as still binding on those who believed; and that the Gentiles were not to be admitted to an equality of religious privileges with the Jews.

3. That no rites or ceremonies of the Jewish law could avail any thing in the justification of a sinner; and that faith in Christ was the only means of justification.

4. That their own works could avail nothing towards their justification. (1.) For the Spirit of God was given them in consequence of receiving the Christian doctrine, chap. iii. ver. 2-5. (2.) That the works of the law cannot justify, because Abraham was justified by faith, long before the law of Moses was given, chap. iii. 6, 7. (3.) That the curse of the law, under which every sinner lives, is not removed but by the sacrifice of Christ, chap. iii. 8, 9.

5. That it is absurd for the sons of God to become slaves to Mosaic rites and ceremonies.

The rest of the epistle is of a practical nature.—Although subjects of this kind may be gathered out of the epistle, yet it is very evident that the apostle himself has observed no technical division or arrangement of his matter; his chief design being—1. To vindicate his own apostleship, and to show that he was not inferior to Peter himself, whom their false teachers appear to have set up in opposition to St. Paul. 2. To assert and maintain justification by faith in opposition to all Judaizing teachers. 3. To call them back to the liberty of the Gospel, from which, and its privileges, they had shamelessly apostatized; and, 4. To admonish and exhort them to walk worthy of their vocation, by devoting themselves to the glory of God, and the benefit of their brethren. Lastly, he asserts his own determination to be faithful, and concludes with his apostolical benediction.

THE EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE TO THE GALATIANS.

For Chronological Eras, see at the end of the Acts.

CHAPTER I.

St. Paul shows that he was especially called of God to be an apostle, 1. Directs his epistle to the churches, through the regions of Galatia, 2. Commends them to the grace of Christ, who gave himself for their sins, 3-5. Marvels that they had so soon turned away from the grace of the Gospel of Christ, to what falsely pretended to be another Gospel, 6, 7. Pronounces him accursed who shall preach any other doctrine than that which he had delivered to them, 8, 9. Shows his own uprightness, and that he received his doctrine from God, 10-12. Gives an account of his conversion and call to the apostleship, 13-17. How three years after his conversion, he went up to Jerusalem, and afterward went through the regions of Syria and Cilicia, preaching the faith of Christ, to the great joy of the Christian churches in Judea, 18-24. PAUL, an apostle, ^a not of men, neither by man, but ^b by Jesus Christ, and God the Father, ^c who raised him from the dead;

2 And all the brethren ^d which are with me, ^e unto the churches of Galatia :

3 ^f Grace be to you and peace from God the Father, and from our Lord Jesus Christ,

4 ^g Who gave himself for our sins, that he might deliver us

NOTES.—1. Paul, an apostle, not of men] Not commissioned by any assembly or council of the apostles.

Neither by man] Nor by any one of the apostles; neither by James, who seems to have been president of the apostolic council at Jerusalem; nor by Peter, to whom, in a particular manner, the keys of the kingdom were entrusted.

But by Jesus Christ] Having his mission immediately from Christ himself, and God the Father, who raised him from the dead, see Acts xxii. 14, 15, and commanded him to go both to the Jews and to the Gentiles, to open their eyes; to turn them from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God, that they might obtain remission of sins, and an inheritance among them that are sanctified. See Acts ix. 1, &c. and the notes there.

2. And all the brethren which are with me] It is very likely that this refers to those who were his assistants in preaching the Gospel; and not to any private members of the church.

Churches of Galatia] Galatia was a region or province of Asia Minor; there was neither city nor town of this name.—See the Preface. But as, in this province, St. Paul had planted several churches, he directs the epistle to the whole of them; for it seems they were all pretty nearly in the same state, and needed the same instructions.

3. Grace be to you, &c.] See on Rom. i. 7.

4. Who gave himself for our sins] Who became a sin-offering to God, in behalf of mankind, that they might be saved from their sins.

Deliver us from this present evil world] These words cannot mean created nature, or the earth and its productions; nor even wicked men. The former we shall need while we live, the latter we cannot avoid; indeed, they are those, who, when converted, form the church of God; and, by the successive conversion of sinners, is the church of Christ maintained; and the followers of God must live and labour among them, in order to their conversion. The apostle, therefore, must mean the Jews, and their system of carnal ordinances; statutes which were not good, and judgments by which they could not live, Ezek. xx. 25. And the whole of their ecclesiastical economy, which was a burthen neither they nor their fathers were able to bear, Acts xv. 10. Schoettgen contends that the word σῶντος, which we translate evil, should be translated laborious, or oppressive, as it comes from σῶς, labour, trouble, &c. The apostle takes occasion, in the very commencement of the epistle, to inform the Galatians, that it is from this present evil world, according to the will of God and our Father:

5 To whom be glory for ever and ever. Amen.

6 I marvel that ye are so soon removed from him that called you into the grace of Christ unto another Gospel:

7 ^k Which is not another; but there be some ^l that trouble you, and would pervert the Gospel of Christ.

8 But though ^m we, or an angel from heaven, preach any ⁿ other Gospel than that which we have preached, let us be accursed. ^o As we have said, let us be accursed, if we preach any other Gospel than that which we have preached, let us be accursed. ^p As we have said, let us be accursed, if we preach any other Gospel than that which we have preached, let us be accursed.

was according to the will and counsel of God that circumcision should cease; and all the other ritual parts of the Mosaic economy; and that it was for this express purpose, that Jesus Christ gave himself a sacrifice for our sins, because the law could not make the comers thereunto perfect. It had pointed out the sinfulness of sin, in its various ordinances, washings, &c. And it had showed forth the guilt of sin, in its numerous sacrifices; but the common sense, even of its own votaries, told them that it was impossible that the blood of bulls and goats should take away sin. A higher atonement was necessary; and when God provided that, all its shadows and representations necessarily ceased. See the note on chap. iv. ver. 3.

5. To whom be glory for ever] Let him have the glory to whom alone it is due, for having delivered us from the present evil world, and from all bondage to Mosaic rites and ceremonies.

6. I marvel that ye are so soon removed] It was a matter of wonder to the apostles, that a people so soundly converted to God, should have so soon made shipwreck of their faith. But mutability itself has not a more apt subject to work upon, than the human heart; the alternate workings of different passions, are continually either changing the character, or giving it a different colouring. Reason, not passion; the word of God, not the sayings of men, should alone be consulted in the concerns of our salvation.

From him that called you] The apostle seems here to mean himself. He called them into the grace of Christ; and they not only abandoned that grace, but their hearts became greatly estranged from him; so that, though at first they would have plucked out their eyes for him, they at last counted him their enemy, chap. iv. 14-16.

Another Gospel] It is certain that, in the very earliest ages of the Christian church, there were several spurious Gospels in circulation; and it was the multitude of these false or inaccurate relations, that induced St. Luke to write his own.—See Luke i. 1. We have the names of more than seventy of these spurious narratives, still on record; and in ancient writers many fragments of them remain: these have been collected and published by Fabricius, in his account of the apocryphal books of the New Testament, 3 vols. 8vo. In some of these Gospels, the necessity of circumcision, and subjection to the Mosaic law, in unity with the Gospel, were strongly inculcated. And to one of these the apostle seems to refer other Gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.

9 As we said before, so say I now again, If any man preach any other Gospel unto you ^a than that ye have received, let him be accursed.

10 For, ^a do I now ^p persuade men, or God? or ^a do I seek to please men? for if I yet pleased men, I should not be the servant of Christ.

11 ^a But I certify you, brethren, that the Gospel which was preached of me is not after man.

12 For ^a I neither received it of man, neither was I taught it, but ^a by the revelation of Jesus Christ.

13 For ye have heard of my conversation in time past in the Jews' religion, how that ^a beyond measure I persecuted the church of God, and ^a wasted it:

14 And profited in the Jews' religion above many my ^w equals in mine own nation, ^a being more exceedingly zealous of the traditions of my fathers.

15 ^a But when it pleased God, ^a who separated me from my mother's womb, and called me by his grace,

^a Deu. 4.2, & 12.3. Prov. 30.6. Rev. 22.13.—1 Thess. 2.4.—1 Sam. 24.7. Matt. 23.14. 1 John 3.9.—1 Thess. 2.4. James 1.4.—1 Cor. 15.1.—1 Cor. 15.1. Ver. 1.—1 Eph. 3.3.—1 Acts 9.1. & 22.4 & 26.11. 1 Tim. 1.13.—v Acts 9.3.—w Gr. equal in years.—a Acts 22.3 & 26.3. Phil. 3.6.—y Jer. 9.1. Matt. 13.2. Mark 7.5.

7. Which is not another.] It is called a Gospel, but it differs most essentially from the authentic narratives published by the evangelists. It is not Gospel, i. e. good tidings; for it loads you again with the burdens from which the genuine Gospel has disencumbered you. Instead of giving you peace, it troubles you; instead of being a useful supplement to the Gospel of Christ, it perverts that Gospel. You have gained nothing but loss and damage by the change.

8. But though we, or an angel.] That Gospel which I have already preached to you, is the only true Gospel; were I to preach any other, I should incur the curse of God. If your false teachers pretend, as many in early times did, that they received their accounts by the ministry of an angel, let them be accursed; separate them from your company, and have no religious communion with them. Leave them to that God who will show his displeasure against all who corrupt, all who add to, and all who take from the word of his revelation.

Let all those, who, from the fickleness of their own minds, are ready to favour the receries of every pretended prophet and prophesies who starts up, consider the awful words of the apostle. As in the law, the receiver of stolen goods is as bad as the thief; so the encouragers of such pretended revelations, are as bad, in the sight of God, as those impostors themselves. What says the word of God to them? Let them be accursed. Reader, lay these things to heart.

9. Let him be accursed.] Perhaps this is not designed as an imprecation, but a simple direction; for the word here may be understood as implying that such a person should have no countenance in his bad work, but let him, as Theodoret expresses it, ἀλλοτρίως ἑσθαι τὸν κοινὸν ἁμαρτίας τῆς ἐκκλησίας, be separated from the communion of the church. This, however, would also imply that, unless the person repented, the divine judgments would soon follow.

10. Do I now persuade men, or God?] The words πείθω τὸν Θεόν, may be rendered to court or solicit the favour of God; as the after clause sufficiently proves. This acceptance of πείθω, is very common in Greek authors. While the apostle was a persecutor of the Christians, he was the servant of men; and pleased men. When he embraced the Christian doctrine, he became the servant of God, and pleased him. He therefore intimates, that he was a widely different person now, from what he had been while a Jew.

11. But I certify you, brethren, &c.] I wish you fully to comprehend, that the Gospel which I preached to you is not after man; there is not a spark of human invention in it: nor the slightest touch of human cunning.

12. Neither received it of man.] By means of any apostle; as was remarked on ver. 1. No man taught me what I have preached to you.

But by the revelation of Jesus Christ.] Being commissioned by himself alone; receiving the knowledge of it from Christ crucified.

13. Ye have heard of my conversation.] Τὴν ἐμὴν ἀναστροφὴν, my manner of life; the mode in which I conducted myself.

Beyond measure I persecuted the church.] For proofs of this, the reader is referred to Acts ix. 1, 2. xxii. 4. and the notes there. The apostle tells them that they had heard this; because, being Jews, they were acquainted with what had taken place in Judea, relative to these important transactions.

14. And profited in the Jews' religion.] The apostle does not mean that he became more exemplary in the lore and practice of the pure law of God, than any of his countrymen; but that he was more profoundly skilled in the traditions of the Fathers, than most of his fellow-students were; or as the word συνήλικωτας, may mean, his contemporaries.

15. Who separated me from my mother's womb.] Him whom I acknowledge as the God of Nature, and the God of grace; who preserved me by his providence, when I was a helpless infant; and saved by his grace when I was an adult persecutor. For some useful remarks on these passages, see the Introduction, sect. ii.

16. To reveal his Son in me.] To make me know Jesus Christ, and the power of his resurrection.

16 ^a To reveal his Son in me, that ^a I might preach him among the heathen; immediately I conferred not with ^c flesh and blood:

17 Neither went I up to Jerusalem to them which were apostles before me; but I went into Arabia, and returned again unto Damascus.

18 ^a Then after three years ^a I went up to Jerusalem to see Peter, and abode with him fifteen days.

19 But ^a other of the apostles saw I none, save ^e James the Lord's brother.

20 Now the things which I write unto you, ^b behold, before God, I lie not.

21 ^a Afterwards I came into the regions of Syria and Cilicia;

22 And was unknown by face ^k unto the churches of Judea which ^l were in Christ:

23 But they had heard only, That he which persecuted us in times past now preacheth the faith which once he destroyed.

24 And they glorified God in me.

That I might preach him among the heathen.] For it was to the Gentiles and the dispersed Jews among the Gentiles, that St. Paul was especially sent. Peter was sent more particularly to the Jews, in the land of Judea; Paul to those in the different Greek provinces.

I conferred not with flesh and blood.] I did not take counsel with men; ἀπὸ κατὰ ἀνὰ, which is a literal translation of the Hebrew כשר בשר basar redam, flesh and blood; is a periphrasis for any man, any man; a human being, or beings of any kind. Many suppose that the apostle means he did not dally, or take counsel with the erroneous suggestions, and unrevenced propensities of his own heart, or those of others; but no such thing is intended by the text. St. Paul was satisfied that his call was of God; he had therefore no occasion to consult man.

17. Neither went I up to Jerusalem.] The aim of the apostle, is to show, that he had his call so immediately and pointedly from God himself, that he had no need of the concurrence even of the apostles: being appointed by the same authority, and fitted to the work by the same grace and spirit as they were.

But I went into Arabia.] That part of Arabia which was contiguous to Damascus; over which Aretas was then king. Of this journey into Arabia, we have no other account. As St. Luke was not then with him, it is not inserted in the Acts of the Apostles. See the Introduction, page iii. 16. Jerusalem was the stated residence of the apostles; and when all the other believers were scattered throughout the regions of Judea and Samaria, we find the apostles still remaining unmolested at Jerusalem! Acts vii. 1.

18. After three years I went up to Jerusalem to see Peter.] These three years may be reckoned either from the departure of Paul from Jerusalem; or from his return from Arabia to Damascus.

To see Peter.—Ἰσπραναί Περρον, to become personally acquainted with Peter: for this is the proper import of the verb ἱσπραίνω, from which we have the word ἱστορία, history, which signifies a relation of things from personal knowledge, and actual acquaintance. How far this is note, from the sense in which we must take the word, ninety-nine of every hundred of our histories sufficiently show. They are any thing but true relations of facts and persons.

And abode with him fifteen days.] It was not therefore to get religious knowledge from him, that he paid him this visit. He knew as much, if not more, of the Jewish religion, as Peter did; and as to the Gospel, he had received that from the same source: and had preached it three years before this.

19. James the Lord's brother.] Dr. Paley observes, There were at Jerusalem two apostles, or at least, two eminent members of the church, of the name of James. This is distinctly inferred from the Acts of the Apostles, chap. xii. ver. 2. where the historian relates the death of James the brother of John: and yet, in the xvth chapter and in chap. xxi. 18. he records a speech delivered by James in the assembly of the apostles and elders. In this place, JAMES, the Lord's brother, is mentioned thus, to distinguish him from JAMES, the brother of John. Some think there were three of this name:—1. JAMES, our Lord's brother; or cousin, as some will have it: 2. JAMES, the son of Alphaeus; and 3. JAMES, the son of Zebedee. But the two former names belong to the same person.

20. Before God, I lie not.] This he speaks in reference to having seen only Peter and James at Jerusalem, and consequently to prove, that he had not learned the Gospel from the assembly of the apostles at Jerusalem; nor consequently received his commission from them.

21. Afterwards I came into the regions of Syria, &c.] The course of the apostle's travels, after his conversion, was this: He went from Damascus to Jerusalem; and from Jerusalem into Syria and Cilicia. "At Damascus the disciples took him by night, and let him down by the wall in a basket; and when Paul was come to Jerusalem, he essayed to join himself to the disciples." Acts ix. 25. Afterwards, when the brethren knew the conspiracy formed against him at Jerusalem, they brought him down to Cæsarea, and sent him forth to Tarsus, a city of Cilicia, chap. ix. 30. This account in the Acts, agrees with that in this epistle.

22. And was unknown by face] I was not personally acquainted with any of the churches of Judea; I was converted in another place, and had not preached the Gospel in any Christian congregation in that country. I knew only those at Jerusalem.

23. They had heard only] As a persecutor of the church of Christ, I was well known; and as a convert to Christ, I was not less so. The fame of both was great; even where I was personally unknown.

24. They glorified God in me] Hearing now that I preached that faith which before I had persecuted, and endeavoured to destroy; they glorified God for the grace which had wrought my conversion. I owe nothing to them; I owe all to God; and they themselves acknowledge this. I received all from God, and God has all the glory.

1. It appeared of great importance to St. Paul to defend and vindicate his Divine mission. As he had none from man, it was the more necessary that he should be able to show plainly, that he had one from God. Paul was not brought into the Christian ministry by any rite ever used in the Christian church. Neither bishop nor presbyter ever laid hands on him: and he is more anxious to prove this, because his chief honour arose from being sent immediately by God himself; his conversion and the purity of his doctrine showed whence he came. Many since his time, and in the present day, are far more anxious, to show that they are legitimately appointed by man than by God; and are fond of displaying their human credentials. These are easily shown: those that come from God are out of their reach. How idle and vain is a boasted succession from the apostles, while ignorance, intolerance, pride, and vain-glory prove that those very persons have no commission from heaven! Endless cases may occur, where man sends, and yet God will not sanction. And that man has no right to preach nor administer the sacraments of the church of Christ, whom God has not sent; though the whole assembly of apostles had laid their hands on him. God never sent, and never will send, to convert others, a man who is not converted himself. He will never send him to teach meekness, gentleness, and long-suffering; who is proud, overbearing, intolerant, and impatient. He, in whom the Spirit of Christ does not dwell, never had a commission to preach the Gospel. He may boast of his human authority, but God will laugh him to scorn. On the other hand, let none run before he is sent; and when he has got the authority of God, let him be careful to take that of the church with him also.

2. The apostle was particularly anxious that the Gospel should not be corrupted; that the church might not be perverted. Whatever corrupts the Gospel, subverts the church.

The church is a spiritual building, and stands on a spiritual foundation. Its members are compared to stones in a building; but they are living stones, each instinct with the spirit of a Divine life: Jesus is not only the foundation and the headstone; but the Spirit that quickens and animates all. A church, where the members are not alive to God, and where the minister is not filled with the meekness and gentleness of Jesus, differs as much from a genuine church, as a corpse does from an active human being. False teachers at Galatia corrupted the church by introducing those Jewish ceremonies which God had abolished; and the doctrine of justification by the use of those ceremonies, which God had shown, by the death of his Son, to be of none effect. "If those," says Quesnel, "are justly said to pervert the Gospel of Christ, who were for joining with it human ceremonies, which God himself instituted; what do those do, who would fondly reconcile and blend it with the pomps of the devil? The purity of the Gospel cannot admit of any mixture. Those who do not love it, are so far from building up, that they trouble and overturn all. There is no ground of trust and confidence for such workmen."

3. If he be a dangerous man in the church, who introduces Jewish or human ceremonies, which God has not appointed, how much more is he to be dreaded, who introduces any false doctrine, or who labours to undermine or lessen the influence of that which is true? And even he who does not faithfully and earnestly preach and inculcate the true doctrine, is not a true pastor. It is not sufficient that a man preach no error, he must preach the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth.

4. How is it that we have so many churches like that at Galatia? Is it not because, on one hand, we disturb the simplicity of the Christian worship by Jewish, heathenish, or improper rites and ceremonies; and on the other, corrupt the purity of its doctrines, by the inventions of men. How does the apostle speak of such corrupters? Let them be accursed. How awful is this! Let every man who officiates as a Christian minister, look well to this. His own soul is at stake; and if any of the flock perish through his ignorance or neglect, their blood will God require at the watchman's hand.

5. St. Paul well knew that if he endeavoured to please man, he could not be the servant of Christ. Can any minor minister hope to succeed, where even an apostle, had he followed that line, could not? The interests of Christ and those of the world are so opposite, that it is impossible to reconcile them: and he who attempts it shows thereby, that he knows neither Christ nor the world, though so deeply immersed in the spirit of the latter.

6. God generally confounds the expectations of men-pleasing ministers; they never ultimately succeed even with men. God abhors them; and those whom they have flattered, find them to be dishonest, and cease to trust them. He who is unfaithful to his God, should not be trusted by man.

CHAPTER II.

The apostle mentions his journey to Jerusalem with Barnabas and Titus, 1. Shows that he went thither by revelation, and what he did while there, and the persons with whom he had intercourse, 2-8. How the apostles gave him the right hand of fellowship, 9, 10. How he opposed Peter at Antioch, and the reason why, 11-14. Shows that the Jews as well as the Gentiles must be justified by faith, 15, 16. They who seek this justification should act with consistency, 17, 18. Gives his own religious experience, and shows, that though the law, he was dead to the law, and crucified with Christ, 19, 20. Justification is not of the law, but by the faith of Christ, 21. [A. M. cir. 4056. A. D. cir. 52. A. U. C. 805. An. Imp. Claudii Cæsaris, 12.]

THEN fourteen years after ^a I went up again to Jerusalem with Barnabas, and took Titus with me also.

2 And I went up by revelation, ^b and communicated unto them that Gospel which I preach among the Gentiles, but ^c privately, a Acts 15.12.—b Acts 15.12.

NOTES.—Verse 1. Then fourteen years after] There is a considerable difference among critics concerning the time specified in this verse: the apostle is however generally supposed to refer to the journey he took to Jerusalem, about the question of circumcision, mentioned in Acts xv. 4, &c. These years, says Dr. Whitby, must be reckoned from the time of his conversion mentioned here, chap. i. 18, which took place A. D. 35, [33,] his journey to Peter was A. D. 38, [36,] and then between that, and the council of Jerusalem, assembled, A. D. 49, [52,] will be fourteen intervening years. The dates in brackets are according to the chronology which I follow in the Acts of the Apostles. Dr. Whitby has some objections against this chronology, which may be seen in his notes. Others contend that the journey, of which the apostle speaks, is that mentioned Acts xi. 27, &c. when Barnabas and Saul were sent by the church of Antioch with relief to the poor Christians in Judea; there being at that time a great dearth in that land. St. Luke's not mentioning Titus in that journey, is no valid objection against it; for he does not mention him in any part of his history; this being the first place in which his name occurs. And it does seem as if St. Paul did intend purposely, to supply that defect, by his saying, I went up with Barnabas, and took Titus with me also. The former, St. Luke relates, Acts xi. 30. the latter St. Paul supplies.

2. I went up by revelation] This either means that he went up at that time by an express revelation from God that it was his duty to do so, made either to the church of Antioch to send those persons to Jerusalem; or to these persons to go, according to the directions of that church; or, the apostle to them which were of reputation, lest by any means ^d I should run, or had run, in vain.

3 But neither Titus, who was with me, being a Greek, was compelled to be circumcised:

c Or, severally.—d Phil. 2.16. 1 Thess 3.5.

here wishes to say, that having received the Gospel by revelation from God to preach Christ among the Gentiles, he went up according to that revelation, and told what God had done by him among the Gentiles: or it may refer to the revelation made to certain prophets who came to Antioch, and particularly Agabus, who signified by the Spirit that there would be a dearth: in consequence of which the disciples purposed to send relief to their poor brethren at Jerusalem. Acts xi. 27—30.

But privately to them which were of reputation] Τοῖς δοκούν, to the chief men; those who were highest in reputation among the apostles. Δοκούντες, according to Hesychius, is ἐν ἐροδοῖς, the honourable. With these the apostle intimates, that he had some private conferences.

Lest by any means] And he held these private conferences with those more eminent men, to give them information how, in consequence of his divine call, he had preached the Gospel to the Gentiles; and the great good which God had wrought by his ministry: but they, not knowing the nature and end of his call, might be led to suppose he had acted wrong, and thus laboured in vain; and that if he still continued to act thus, he should labour in vain. It was necessary, therefore, that he should give the apostolic council the fullest information that he had acted according to the Divine mind in every respect; and had been blessed in his deed.

3. But neither Titus who was with me] The apostle proceeds to state, that his account was so satisfactory to the apostles, that they not only did not require him to insist on the necessity of circumcision among the Gentiles; but did not even require him to have Titus, who was a Greek, circumcised

4 And that because of false * brethren unawares brought in, who came in privily to spy out our ¹ liberty which we have in Christ Jesus, * that they might bring us into bondage :

5 To whom we gave place by subjection, no, not for an hour; that ² the truth of the Gospel might continue with you.

6 But of those ³ who seemed to be somewhat, whatsoever they were, it maketh no matter to me : * God accepteth no man's person : for they who seemed to be somewhat, ⁴ in conference added nothing to me :

7 But contrariwise, ⁵ when they saw that the gospel of the uncircumcision ⁶ was committed unto me, as the gospel of the circumcision ⁷ was unto Peter ;

8 (For he that wrought effectually in Peter to the apostleship of the circumcision, ⁸ the same was ⁹ mighty in me toward the Gentiles :)

9 And when James, Cephas, and John, who seemed to be ¹⁰ pillars, perceived ¹¹ the grace that was given unto me, they though that might have appeared expedient, especially at Jerusalem, to have prevented false brethren from making a handle of his uncircumcision, and turning it to the prejudice of the Gospel in Judea.

4. To spy out our liberty.] The Judaizing brethren got introduced into the assembly of the apostles, in order to find out what was implied in the liberty of the Gospel, that they might know the better how to oppose St. Paul and his fellows in their preaching Christ to the Gentiles; and admitting them into the Church, without obliging them to observe circumcision, and keep the law. The apostle saw, that while such men were in the assembly, it was better not to mention his mission among the Gentiles; lest by means of those false brethren, occasion should be given to altercations and disputes; therefore, he took the opportunity by private conferences; to set the whole matter, relative to his work among the Gentiles, before the chief of the apostles.

5. To whom we gave place by subjection.] So fully satisfied was he with his Divine call, and that he had, in preaching among the Gentiles, acted in strict conformity to it, that he did not submit in the least to the opinion of those Judaizing teachers; and, therefore, he continued to insist on the exemption of the Gentiles from the necessity of submitting to Jewish rites; that the truth of the Gospel, this grand doctrine that the Gentiles are admitted by the Gospel of Christ, to be fellow-heirs with the Jews, might continue; and thus the same doctrine is continued with you Gentiles.

6. Those who seemed to be somewhat.] Τοὺς δοκούντων τιναί τι, those who were of acknowledged reputation;—so the words should be understood: see ver 2. The verb δοκᾶν, which we translate seem, is repeatedly used by the best Greek writers, not to call the sense in question, or to lessen it, but to deepen and extend it. See the note on Luke viii. 15. Perhaps this verse had best be translated thus, connecting δοκᾶντι with αὐτοὺς δοκούντων; but there is no difference between those who were of acknowledged reputation and myself. God accepts no man's person: but in the conferences which I held with them, they added nothing to me; gave me no new light—did not attempt to impose on me any obligation, because they saw that God had appointed me my work, and that his counsel was with me.

7. But contrariwise.] They were so far from wishing me to alter my plan, or to introduce any thing new in my doctrine to the Gentiles, that they saw plainly that my doctrine was the same as their own; coming immediately from the same source; and, therefore, gave to me, and to Barnabas, the right hand of fellowship.

The Gospel of the uncircumcision.] They saw, to their utmost satisfaction, that I was as expressly sent by God to preach the Gospel to the Gentiles, as Peter was to preach it to the Jews.

8. For he that wrought effectually.] Οὐρανὸς καὶ γῆ. He who wrought powerfully with Peter, wrought powerfully also, with me. He gave us both those talents which were suited to our work; and equal success in our different departments.

9. James, Cephas, and John, who seemed to be pillars.] Οἱ δοκούντες στῆλαι τιναί; who were known to be very eminent, and acknowledged as chief men among the apostles. See the note on Luke viii. 15. for the meaning of the verb δοκᾶν, and see before on ver. 6. Among the Jews, persons of great eminence and importance are represented as pillars and foundations of the world. So Abraham is said to be יְסֵד עוֹלָם amud ha'alem, 'the pillar of the universe; for by him to this day are the earth and heavens supported.' Yalcut Rubeni, folio 29. "Rabbi Simeon said, behold, we are the pillars of the world." Idra Rabba, s. 23. "When Rabbi Johanan ben Zachai was near death, he wept with a loud voice. His disciples said unto him, O Rabbi, thou high pillar, thou light of the world, thou strong hammer, why dost thou weep?" Aboth R. Nathan, chap. 24. So, in Sohar Genes, fol. 5, it is said, "And he saw that Rab. Eleazar went up, and stood there, and with him said, שׂאן אַמּוּדֵי, shaan amudim, the rest of the pillars, (eminent men) who sat there." Ibid. folio 13. "These are the seven righteous men, who cleave to the holy, blessed God, with a pure heart, and they are the seven pillars of the world." Ibid. folio 21. on the words bearing fruit, Gen. i. 11. it is said, "By this we are to understand the just one, gave to me and Barnabas the right hands of fellowship; that we should go unto the heathen, and they unto the circumcision.

10 Only they would that we should remember the poor; * the same which I also was forward to do.

11 * But when Peter was come to Antioch, I withstood him to the face, because he was to be blamed.

12 For, before that certain came from James, ¹² he did eat with the Gentiles: but when they were come, he withdrew and separated himself, fearing them which were of the circumcision.

13 And the other Jews disssembled likewise with him; inasmuch that Barnabas also was carried away with their dissimulation.

14 But, when I saw that they walked not uprightly, according to the truth of the Gospel, I said unto Peter * before them all, * If thou being a Jew, livest after the manner of Gentiles, and not as do the Jews, why compellest thou the Gentiles to live as do the Jews ?

who is the pillar of the world." See Schoettgen, who adds: "These pillars must be distinguished from the foundation. The foundation of the Church, is Jesus Christ alone: the pillars, are the more eminent teachers, which, without the foundation, are of no value."

The right hands of fellowship.] Giving the right hand to another, was the mark of confidence, friendship, and fellowship. See Lev. vi. 2. If a soul—lie unto his neighbour in that which was delivered him to keep, or in fellowship, בְּרִיתִי betumuth yad, "in giving the hand."

10. Only they would that we should remember the poor.] They saw plainly that God had as expressly called Barnabas and me to go to the Gentiles, as he had called them to preach to the Jews; and they did not attempt to give us any new injunctions: only wished us to remember the poor in Judea; but this was a thing to which we were previously disposed.

11. When Peter was come to Antioch.] There has been controversy whether Herpos, Peter, here, should not be read Kephas, Cephas; and whether this Kephas was not a different person from Peter the apostle. This controversy has lasted more than 1,500 years, and is not yet settled. Instead of Herpos, Peter, ABHIL, several others of good note, with Ereps, Syriac, the Coptic, Sahidic, Ethiopic, Armenian, latter Syriac, in the margin, Vulgate, and several of the Greek fathers, read Kephas. But, whichever of these readings we adopt, the controversy is the same; for the great question is, whether this Peter or Cephas, no matter which name we adopt, be the same with Peter the apostle? I shall not introduce the arguments, pro and con, which may be all seen in Calmet's dissertation on the subject, but just mention the side where the strength of the evidence appears to lie. That Peter, the apostle, is meant, the most sober and correct writers of antiquity maintain; and, though some of the Catholic writers have fixed the whole that is here reprehensible, on one Cephas, one of the seventy disciples, yet the most learned of their writers, and of their popes, believe that St. Peter is meant. Some apparently plausible arguments support the contrary opinion, but they are of no weight when compared with those on the opposite side.

12. Before that certain came from James, he did eat with the Gentiles.] Here was Peter's fault. He was convinced that God had pulled down the middle wall of partition that had so long separated the Jews and Gentiles; and he acted on this conviction: associating with the latter, and eating with them; but when certain Jews came from James, who, it appears, considered the law still to be in force, lest he should place a stumbling-block before them, he withdrew from all commerce with the converted Gentiles, and acted as if he himself believed the law to be still in force; and that the distinction between the Jews and the Gentiles should still be kept up.

13. And the other Jews disssembled likewise.] That is, those who were converted to Christianity from among the Jews; and who had, also, been convinced that the obligation of the Jewish ritual had ceased, seeing Peter act this part; and, also, fearing them that were of the circumcision, they separated themselves from the converted Gentiles; and acted so as to convince the Jews, that they still believed the law to be of moral obligation; and so powerful was the torrent of such an example, that the gentle, loving-hearted Barnabas was carried away by their dissimulation; ἀναχωρήσας, with their hypocrisy—feigning to be what they really were not.

14. That they walked not uprightly.] Οὐκ ὀρθοποῶντες; they did not walk with a straight step—they did not maintain a firm footing.

According to the truth of the Gospel.] According to that true doctrine, which states, that Christ is the end of the law for justification, to every one that believes; and that such are under no obligation to observe circumcision, and the other peculiar rites and ceremonies of the law.

If thou, being a Jew, livest.] This was a cutting reproof. He was a Jew; and had been circumstantially scrupulous in every thing relative to the law; and it required a miracle to convince him that the Gentiles were admitted, on their believing in Christ, to become members of the same Church, and fellow heirs of the hope of eternal life; and, in consequence of this, he went in with the Gentiles, and ate with them: i. e. associated with them as he would with Jews.

15 ^a We who are Jews by nature, and not ^b sinners of the Gentiles, 16 ^a Knowing that a man is not justified by the works of the law, but ^b by the faith of Jesus Christ; even we have believed in Jesus Christ, that we might be justified by the faith of Christ, and not by the works of the law: for ^c by the works of the law shall no flesh be justified.

17 But if, while we seek to be justified by Christ, we ourselves also are found ^d sinners, is therefore Christ the minister of sin? God forbid.

But now, fearing them of the circumcision, he withdrew from this fellowship.

Why compellest thou the Gentiles? Thou didst once consider that they were not under such an obligation; and now thou actest as if thou didst consider the law in full force! but thou art convinced that the contrary is the case, yet actest differently! This is hypocrisy.

15. We, who are Jews by nature] We, who belong to the Jewish nation—who have been born, bred, and educated Jews.

And not sinners of the Gentiles]—Ἀμαρτολοί, not without the knowledge of God, as they have been. Ἀμαρτολός, often signifies a heathen, merely one who had no knowledge of the true God. But among the nations or Gentiles, many Jews sojournd; who, in Scripture, are known by the name of Hellenists, and these were distinguished from those who were termed ἐξ ἑβραίων ἠμαρτολούς, sinners of the Gentiles—heathens, in our common sense of the word; while the others, though living among them, were worshippers of the true God; and addicted to no species of idolatry. Some have translated this passage thus, we Jews and not Gentiles, by nature sinners; for it is supposed that ᾠσαί here refers to that natural corruption which every man brings into the world. Now, though the doctrine be true; and the state of man, and universal experience, confirm it; yet it can neither be supported from this place; nor even from Eph. ii. 3. See the note on Rom. ii. 16. It appears from the use of this word by some of the best Greek authors, that ᾠσαί did not signify by nature, as we use the word, but expressed the natural birth, family, or nation of a man; to distinguish him from any other family or nation. I can give a few instances of this which are brought to my hand in a small elegant pamphlet, written by Dr. Minter, the present bishop of Zealand, entitled Observationum ex marmoreis græcis Sacrarum Specimen; and which has been lent to me by the Right Honourable Lord Teignmouth, to whose condescension, kindness, and learning, many of my studies have been laid under particular obligation.

The word in question, is the xxviii. Example in the above pamphlet, the substance of which is as follows: in an inscription on a Greek marble given by Dr. Chandler, page 27, we find these words: ὁ γὰρ ᾠσαί μὲν Ἀσὼν Ἀσσυρίων, ὁ ἐπικαλομένης Ἰασών, ἀνοικεῖ μὲν Μιλιαντός, ᾠσαί δὲ Ἰασών. "My son-in-law, Leo, the son of Artemisius, who is called a Jasian, is of the house of Milesius, though by nature he is from Jaso." That is, Jaso being a native of Caria, this Leo is said to be ᾠσαί Ἰασών, by nature a Jasian, although he sprang from the Milesian family. The following examples will place this in a clearer light. Josephus, Ant. Jud. lib. xi. cap. vi. sec. 5. speaking of Amantes, the Amalekite, says, καὶ γὰρ ᾠσαί τοῖς Ἰουδαίοις ἀπεχθάνοντο, οἱ καὶ τὸ γένος τῶν Ἀμαλεκίων, ἐξ ὧν ἄνθρωποι, ἦν αὐτῶν ἐπιθάρρα. "For he was, by nature, incensed against the Jews; because the nation of the Amalekites, from whom he sprang, had been destroyed by them;" that is, he had a national prejudice or hatred to the Jewish people, on the above account. The following example from Dio Chrysostom, Orat. xxxi. is also to the point—Ὅτε (Ἀθηναῖοι) τὸν δέοντα μὲν Ὀλυμπιον ἐκκλησάει οὐδὲ ᾠσαί ἰποδῆναι λαύρων. "For they, (the Athenians,) called this person an Olympian, though by nature he was not their citizen;" that is, he was called an Olympian, though he was not naturally of that city: or, in other words, he was not born there. From these examples, and the scope of the place, we may argue that the words, we who are Jews by nature, mean we who were born in the land of Judea, and of Jewish parents. And hence the passage in Eph. ii. 3. which speaks most evidently of the heathens, (and were by nature the children of wrath even as others,) may be thus understood; being Gentiles, and brought up in gross darkness, without any knowledge of God, abandoned to all sensual living, we were, from our very condition, and practical state, exposed to punishment. This sense is at least equally good with that given of the words in Rom. ii. 16. where it is proved that ᾠσαί, in several connexions, means truly, certainly, uncontestedly; "we were, beyond all controversy, exposed to punishment, because we had been born among idolaters, and have lived as they did." Here both senses of the word apply.

16. Knowing that a man is not justified] See the notes on Rom. i. 17 iii. 24, 27, and vii. 3. And see on Acts. xiii. 38, 39, in which places the subject of this verse is largely discussed.—Neither the works of the Jewish law, nor of any other law, could justify any man: and if justification or pardon could not have been attained in some other way, the world must have perished. Justification by faith in the boundless mercy of God, is as reasonable as it is scriptural and necessary.

17. But if, while we seek to be justified] If, while we acknowledge that we must be justified by faith in Christ, we our-

18 For, if I build again the things which I destroyed, I make myself a transgressor.

19 For, ^a I through the law, ^b am dead to the law, that I might ^c live unto God.

20 I am crucified with Christ: nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me: and the life which I now live in the flesh, I live by the faith of the Son of God, ^d who loved me, and gave himself for me.

21 I do not frustrate the grace of God: for ^e if righteousness come by the law, then Christ is dead in vain.

selves are found sinners, enjoining the necessity of observing the rites and ceremonies of the law, which never could and never can justify; and yet, by submitting to circumcision, we lay ourselves under the necessity of fulfilling the law, which is impossible; we thus constitute ourselves sinners: is, therefore Christ the minister of sin? Christ, who has taught us to renounce the law, and expect justification through his death? God forbid! that we should either act so, or think so.

18. For, if I build again the things which I destroyed] If I act like a Jew, and enjoin the observance of the law on the Gentiles, which I have repeatedly asserted and proved to be abolished by the death of Christ, then I build up what I destroyed; and thus make myself a transgressor, by not observing the law in that way, in which I appear to enjoin the observance of it upon others.

19. For, I through the law, am dead to the law] In consequence of properly considering the nature and requisitions of the law, I am dead to all hope and expectation of help or salvation from the law; and have been obliged to take refuge in the Gospel of Christ. Or, probably the word νόμος, LAW, is here put for a system of doctrine; as if he had said, I through the Gospel, am dead to the law. The law itself is consigned to death; and another, the Gospel of Christ, is substituted in its stead. The law condemns to death; and I have embraced the Gospel, that I might be saved from death, and live unto God.

20. I am crucified with Christ] The death of Christ on the cross, has showed me that there is no hope of salvation by the law; I am therefore as truly dead to all expectation of justification by the law, as Christ was dead when he gave up the ghost upon the cross. Through him alone I live, enjoy a present life, and have a prospect of future glory.

Yet not I] It is not of my natural life I speak, nor of any spiritual things which I myself have procured; but Christ liveth in me. God made man to be a habitation of his own Spirit; the law cannot live in me, so as to give me a Divine life; it does not animate, but kill; but Christ lives in me; he is the seal of my soul; so that I now live to God: but this life I have by the faith of the Son of God: by believing on Christ, as a sacrifice for sin; for he loved me, and because he did so, he gave himself for me: made himself a sacrifice unto death, that I might be saved from the bitter pains of death eternal.

21. I do not frustrate] Ἀδερῶ, I do not contemn, despise, or render useless, the grace of God, the doctrine of Christ crucified; which I must do, if I preach the necessity of observing the law.

For if righteousness] If justification and salvation came by an observance of the law, then Christ is dead in vain; his death is useless, if an observance of the law can save us: but no observance of the law can save us; and therefore there was an absolute necessity for the death of Christ.

1. The account of the prevarication of Peter in the preceding chapter, teaches us a most useful lesson. Let him who assuredly standeth, take heed lest he fall. No place in a state of probation, is secure; a man may fall into sin every moment; and he will, if he do not walk with God. Worldly prudence, and fleshly wisdom, would have concealed this account of the prevarication of Peter; but God tells truth. He is the fountain of it; and from him we are to expect not only nothing but the truth, but also the whole truth. If the Gospel were not of God, we had never heard of the denial and prevarication of Peter; nor of the contention between Paul and Barnabas. And these accounts are recorded, not that men may justify or excuse their own delinquencies by them, but that they may avoid them; for he must be inexcusable who, with these histories before his eyes, ever denies his Master, or acts the part of a hypocrite. Had the apostles acted in concert to impose a forgery on the world, as a Divine revelation; the imposture would have now come out. The falling out of the parties would have led to a discovery of the cheat. This relation, therefore, is an additional evidence of the truth of the Gospel.

2. On, I through the law am dead to the law, &c. pious Quærel makes the following useful reflections: "The ceremonial law, which is no more than a type and a shadow of Him, destroys itself, by showing us Jesus Christ, who is the truth and the substance. The moral law, by leaving us under our own inability, under sin and the curse, makes us perceive the necessity of the law of the heart; and of a Saviour to give it. The law is for the old man, as to its terrible and servile part; and it was crucified and died with Christ upon the cross, as well as the old man. The new man, and the new law, require a new carriage. What need has he of other sacrifices, who has Jesus Christ? They in whom this sacrifice lives, do themselves live to God alone; but none can live to Him except by faith: and this life of faith consists in dying with Christ to the things of the present world; and in expecting, as co-heirs with him, the blessings of the eternal world. And who can work all this in us, but only He who lives in us? That man has arrived to a high degree of mortification, who can say Christ liveth in me, and I am crucified to the world. Such a one must have renounced not only earthly things, but his own self also."

3. Is there, or can there be, one well grounded hope of eternal life, but what comes through the Gospel? In vain has the ingenuity of man tortured itself for more than 5000 years, to find out some method of mending the human heart: none has been discovered that even promised any thing likely to be effectual. The Gospel of Christ not only mends, but completely cures, and new makes infected nature. Who is duly apprised of the infinite excellency and importance of the Gospel? What was the world before its appearance; what would it be were this light extinguished! Blessed Lord! let neither infidelity, nor false doctrine, rise up to obscure this heavenly splendour!

CHAPTER III.

The apostle inquires how they could be so foolish as to renounce the Gospel of Christ, and turn back to the law, after having heard, received, and suffered so much for the Gospel? 1—5. Asserts the doctrine of justification by faith, on the example of Abraham, 6—9. Shows that all who are under the law are under the curse, from which Christ alone redeems us; and the promise made to Abraham comes to the Gentiles, who believe, 10—14. For the covenant is not by the works of the law, but by promise, 15—18. The law was given to show the sinfulness of sin, and to act as a schoolmaster till Christ should come, 19—25. It is by faith only that any become children of God, 26. And under the Gospel, all those distinctions of the law are gone away; and growing believers, whether Jews or Gentiles, bond or free, are all one in Christ Jesus; and accounted the genuine children of Abraham, 27—29. NOTES.—Verse 1. O foolish Galatians] O infatuated people: you make as little use of reason as those who have none; you have acted in this business as those do who are fascinated; they are led blindly and unresistingly on, to their own destruction.

That ye should not obey the truth] This clause is wanting in ABD¹ &c. some others: the Syriac, Erpenian, Coptic, Sahidic, Italic, Vulgate MSs. and in the most important of the Greek and Latin Fathers. Of the clause Professor White says, certissime delenda. "It should certainly be expunged." There are several various readings on this verse; from which it appears, that the verse, in the best ancient MSS. and Versions, was read thus: O foolish Galatians, who hath bewitched you? Before whose eyes Jesus Christ crucified, hath been plainly set forth.

Among you ?] Εὐ γὰρ, are wanting in ABC, several others : the Syriac, Erpenian, Coptic, Suidic, Æthiopic, Armenian, Vulgate MS. one copy of the Itala, and in several of the Fathers. The words appear to disturb the sense, and have obliged commentators to have recourse to a sort of technical meaning; viz. "The doctrine of the Gospel had been so fully preached among these people, that it might be said Jesus Christ has been crucified among you; so fully have his sufferings been detailed, and the design of them pointed out."

2. Received ye the Spirit by the works of the law? This may refer to the miraculous gifts of the Spirit, which were very common in the apostolic church. Did ye receive these extraordinary gifts in consequence of your circumcision, and observing the Mosaic precepts? or was it by the hearing of the Gospel, prescribing faith in Christ crucified? It may also refer to the spirit of adoption, and consequently to your sonship.

3. Having begun in the Spirit] Having received a spiritual religion, which refined and purified your hearts : and having received the Holy Spirit of God, by which ye were endued with various miraculous influences ; and the spirit of adoption, by which ye were assured of the remission of sins, and incorporation with the family of God :

Are ye now made perfect by the flesh?] Are ye seeking to complete that spiritual religion, and to perfect these spiritual gifts by the carnal rite of circumcision? It appears that by the Spirit here, not only the Holy Spirit, but his gifts, are to be understood: and by the flesh, illud membrum in quo circumcisio peragitur; and by a metonymy, circumcisio itself.

4. Have ye suffered so many things in vain? Have ye received and lost so much good? The verb παύειν, as compounded with en, well, or kakos, ill, and often without either, signifies to super pain, or loss: or to possess and enjoy. In such a case, the man is considered as the patient; and the good or ill acts upon him. Though it is possible that the Galatians had some persecution for the truth of Christ; yet it is as likely that they had lost out of their hands what they had received. Ye have received faith, the pardon of your sins, the gift of the Holy Spirit, and with it many extraordinary gifts and graces; and have ye suffered the loss of all these things?

Have ye received all these in vain! If yet in vain; if it be credible that ye have sacrificed so many excellent benefits, for an imaginary good!

5. life therefore that ministereth to you the Spirit! The apostle means himself; he had been the means of conveying the Holy Spirit to them; and, by that Spirit, he wrought miracles among them; and he did all this, not as a Jerc, for as such he had no power; but he did all as a believer in Christ. The word, εὐαγγελίζω, which we translate ministereth, is very emphatic, and signifies leading up the chorus; bringing up one after another, and giving benefit to each. The benefits such that it appears they had not only some, but many benefits: God, by means of his apostle, having greatly enriched them with various spiritual blessings.

6. Abraham believed God This is quoted from Gen. xv. 6, where see the note; and St. Paul produces it Rom. iv. 3-5, where also see the notes. Abraham, while even unreconciled, believed in God, and his faith was reckoned to him for justification: and Abraham is called the father of the faithful; or of believers. If then, he was justified without the deeds of the law, he was justified by faith; and, if he was justified by faith, long before the law was given, then the law is not necessary for justification. This is the position which the Jews themselves maintained that Abraham was saved by faith. Mehillim, vol. Yalcut Simoni, page 1, fol. 69, makes this assertion: "It is evident that Abraham could not obtain an inheritance either in this world or the world to come, but by faith."

18. The Scripture, foreseeing] See the notes on Rom. iv. 13—16. As God intended to justify the heathen through faith, he preached the Gospel that contains the grand display of the doctrine of salvation by faith; before, to Abraham, while he was in his heathen state; and thus he is called the father of believers; therefore it must refer to them who shall believe the same Gospel among the Gentiles: and as the door of faith was opened to all the Gentiles; consequently the promise was fulfilled. In thee shall all the nations of the earth be blessed.

9. They which be of faith] All who believes as Abraham has believed, are made partakers of Abraham's blessings.

10. As many as are of the works of the law. All that seek salvation by the performance of the works of the law, are under the curse; because it is impossible for them to come up to the spiritual meaning and intent of the law; and the law pronounces them curst that continue not in all things which are written in the book of the law, to do them. Hence every Jew is necessarily under the curse of God's broken law: and every sinner is under the same curse, though he be not a Jew, who does not take refuge in the salvation provided for him by the Gospel. It is worthy of remark, that no printed copy of the Hebrew Bible preserves the word col, ALL, in Deut. xxxv. 26, which answers to the apostle's word πᾶν, all, here. St. Jerom says that the Jews suppressed it, lest it should appear that they were bound to perform all things that are written in the book of the law. Of the genuineness of the reading, there is no cause to doubt; it exists in six MSS. of Ken. and De Rossi; in the Samaritan text; in several copies of the Targum; in the Septuagint; and in the quota

14 *That the blessing of Abraham might come on the Gentiles through Jesus Christ; that we might receive ^a the promise of the Spirit through faith.

15 Brethren, I speak after the manner of men; ⁷ Though it be but a man's ⁸ covenant, yet if it be confirmed, no man disannulleth, or addeth thereto.

16 Now, ^a to Abraham and his seed were the promises made. He saith not, And to seeds, as of many; but as of one, And to thy seed, which is ^b Christ.

17 And this I say, that the covenant, that was confirmed by ^c Rom. 4.9, 14.—^d Isa. 52.15 & 41.3. Jer. 31.33 & 32.40. Ezek. 11.19 & 36.27. Joel 2.28, 29. Zech. 12.10. John 7.39. tion made here by the apostle, in which there is no variation either in the MSS. or in the Versions.

11. But, that no man is justified by the law]. By the observance of the law, suppose he had even continued in all the things that are written in it, to do them, is evident; for the prophet Habakkuk, chap. ii. 4. has declared, under the direct influence of the Spirit of God, The just shall live by faith; or he who is just by faith, shall live: therefore this justification comes not by works, or the observance of the law, but by faith.

12. And the law is not of faith]. It promises no forgiveness to believing; but requires obedience. It is not what do you believe? but what have you done? The man that doeth them perfectly at all times, and in all places, he shall live in them; but if, in any case he fails, he forfeits his life.—See the notes on Rom. i. 17, &c.

13. Christ hath redeemed us]. Εἰς ἡμᾶς, hath bought us with a price, viz. his blood, or life.

Being made a curse for us]. Being made an atonement for our sins: for whatever was offered as an atonement for sin, was considered as bearing the punishment due to sin; and the person who suffered for transgression was considered as bearing the curse in his body; therefore, in the same day in which a criminal was executed, it was ordered that his body should be buried, that the land might not be polluted, because he that was hanged, which was the case with every heinous culprit, was considered accursed of God, Deut. xxi. 22, 23. hence the necessity of removing the accursed thing out of sight.

14. That blessing of Abraham]. That is, justification or the pardon of sin, with all other blessings consequent on it; such as peace with God, spiritual life, and eternal glory.

Might come to the Gentiles through Jesus Christ]. So we find that he was made a curse for us, that the blessings promised to Abraham, might be given to them who believe on him, as having been made a curse; i. e. an expiatory victim for them.

The promise of the Spirit]. The spirit of adoption; sonship with God; and the Spirit of God to attest that sonship. And all this was through faith. Hence, from the beginning, God had purposed that salvation should be through faith; and never expected that any soul of man should be justified by the works of the law; and only gave that law that the exceeding sinfulness of sin might appear, and that man might be prepared to welcome the Gospel which proclaimed salvation to a lost world, through the atoning passion and death of Christ.

15. I speak after the manner of men]. I am about to produce an example taken from civil transactions. If it be confirmed; if an agreement or bond be signed, sealed, and witnessed; and in this country, being first duly stamped:—

No man disannulleth]. It stands under the protection of the civil law, and nothing can be legally erased or added.

16. Now to Abraham and his seed]. The promise of salvation by faith, was made to Abraham and his posterity.

He saith not, And to seeds]. It was one particular kind of posterity which was intended—but as of one—which is Christ, i. e. to the spiritual head, and all believers in him, who are children of Abraham, because they are believers, ver. 7. But why does the apostle say, not of seeds as of many? To this it is answered, that Abraham possessed in his family two seeds, one natural, viz. the members of his own household; and the other spiritual, those who were like himself because of their faith. The promises were not of a temporal nature; had they been so, they would have belonged to his natural seed; but they did not; therefore they must have belonged to the spiritual posterity. And as we know that promises of justification, &c. could not properly be made to Christ in himself, hence we must conclude his members to be here intended, and the word Christ is put here for Christians. It is from Christ that the grace flows which constitutes Christians. Christians are those who believe after the example of Abraham; they, therefore, are the spiritual seed. Christ working in and by these, makes them the light and salt of the world; and through them, under and by Christ, are all the nations of the earth blessed. This appears to be the most consistent interpretation; though every thing must be understood of Christ in the first instance: and then of Christians only through him.

17. Confirmed before of God in Christ]. i. e. The promise of justification, &c. made to believers in Christ Jesus, who are the spiritual seed of Christ, as they are children of Abraham, from the similitude of their faith. Abraham believed in God, and it was reckoned to him for justification: the Gentiles believed in Christ, and received justification. Probably the word Christ is to be taken both here and in the preceding fore of God in Christ, the law, ^c which was four hundred and thirty years after, cannot disannul, ^d that it should make the promise of none effect.

18. For, if ^e the inheritance be of the law, ^f it is no more of promise; but God gave it to Abraham by promise.

19. Wherefore then serveth the law? ^g It was added because of transgressions, till ^h the seed should come to whom the promise was made; and it was ⁱ ordained by angels in the hand ^k of a mediator.

20. Now a mediator is not a mediator of one, ^l but God is one.

^e Rom. 8.17.—^f Rom. 4.14.—^g John 15.22. Rom. 4.15 & 5.20 & 7.8, 13. 1 Tim. 1.9.—^h Ver. 16.—ⁱ Acts 7.55. Heb. 2.2.—^k Exod. 20.19, 21, 22. Deu. 5.5, 22, 23, 27, 31. John 1.17. Acts 7.38. 1 Tim. 2.5.—^l Rom. 3.29, 30.

verse for Christians, as has already been hinted. However it be taken, the sense is plainly the same; the promise of salvation must necessarily be to them who believe in Christ; for he is the promised seed, Gen. iii. 15. through whom every blessing is derived on mankind: and through his spiritual seed, the true Christians, the conquests of the cross are daily spreading over the face of the earth. The present unparalleled dispersion of the Sacred Writings in all the regular languages of the universe, is a full proof that all the nations of the earth are likely to be blessed through them; but they have nothing but what they have received from and through Christ.

Four hundred and thirty years after]. God made a covenant with Abraham that the Messiah should spring from his posterity. This covenant stated, that justification should be obtained by faith in the Messiah. The Messiah did not come till 1911 years after the making of this covenant; and the law was given 430 years after the covenant with Abraham; therefore the law (which was given 1481 years before the promise to Abram could be fulfilled, for so much time elapsed between the giving of the law, and the advent of Christ,) could not possibly annul the Abrahamic covenant. This argument is absolute and conclusive. Let us review it. The promise to Abraham respects the Messiah; and cannot be fulfilled but in him. Christians say the Messiah is come; but the advent of him whom they acknowledge as the Messiah, did not take place till 1911 years after the covenant was made; therefore no intermediate transaction can affect that covenant. But the law was an intermediate transaction, taking place 430 years after the covenant with Abraham, and could neither annul, nor affect, that which was not to have its fulfillment till 1481 years after. Justification by faith is promised in the Abrahamic covenant, and attributed to that alone; therefore it is not to be expected from the law, nor can its works justify any; for the law in this respect cannot annul or affect the Abrahamic covenant. But suppose ye say that the law which was given 430 years after the covenant with Abraham, has superseded this covenant, limited and confined its blessings to the Jews: I answer, this is impossible; for the covenant most specifically refers to the Messiah, and takes in not the Jewish people only, but all nations; for it is written, In thy seed, the Messiah and his spiritual progeny, shall all the nations of the earth be blessed. This universal blessedness can never be confined by any figure of speech, or by any legal act, to the Jewish people exclusively; and as the covenant was legally made and confirmed, it cannot be annulled; it must therefore remain in reference to its object.

In opposition to us, the Jews assert, that the Messiah is not yet come: then we assert on that ground, that the promise is not yet fulfilled, for the giving of the law to one people, cannot imply the fulfilment of the Abrahamic covenant; because that extends to all nations. However, therefore, the case be argued, the Jewish case derives no benefit from it: and the conclusion still recurs, salvation cannot be attained by the works of the law, forasmuch as the covenant is of faith, and he only, as your prophets declare, who is justified by faith, shall live, or be saved. Therefore we still conclude, that those who are only under the law, are under the curse; and as it says, he that doeth these things shall live in them, and he that sinneth shall die, there is no hope of salvation for any man from the law of Moses. And the Gospel of Jesus Christ, proclaiming salvation, by faith, to a sinful and ruined world, is absolutely necessary; nor can it be superseded by any other institution, whether human or divine.

How we arrive at the sum of 430 years may be seen in the note on Exod. xii. 40.—Dr. Whitby also gives a satisfactory view of the matter. “The apostle refers to the promise made, Gen. xii. 3. since from that only, are the 430 years to be computed; for then, Abraham was 75 years old, Gen. xii. 4. from thence to the birth of Isaac, which happened when Abraham was 100 years old, Gen. xxi. 5. is 25 years: from his birth to the birth of Jacob was 60 years, for Isaac was 60 years old when Rebecca bare him, Gen. xxv. 26. From Jacob's birth to the descent into Egypt, were 130 years, as he said to Pharaoh, Gen. xlvii. 9. The abode of him and his posterity in Egypt was 215 years; so that, with their sojourning in Canaan, was 430 years,” the sum given here, and in Exod. xii. 40. where see the notes.

18. For, if the inheritance be of the law]. See the preceding arguments, in which this is proved.

19. Wherefore then serveth the law?]. If the law does not annul the Abrahamic covenant, and cannot confer salvation on its votaries, why did God give it? This was a very natural objection, and must arise in the mind of any Jew who had paid attention to the apostle's reasoning.

²¹ Is the law then against the promises of God? God forbid: for if there had been a law given which could have given life, verily righteousness should have been by the law.

²² But, "the scripture hath concluded" all under sin, P that the promise by faith of Jesus Christ might be given to them that believe.

²³ But, before faith came, we were kept under the law, shut up unto the faith which should afterward be revealed.

²⁴ Wherefore, "the law was our schoolmaster to bring us unto Christ," that we might be justified by faith.

m Ch. 3:21.—v. 9.—Rom. 3:9-19; & 11:32.—p. Rom. 4:11, 12, 16.—q. Matt. 5:17, Rom. 10:4. Col. 2:17. Heb. 7:12. Acts 13:39. Ch. 2:16.—s. John 1:12. Rom. 8:14, 15, 16. Ch. 4:3. 1 John 3:1, 4.—t. Rom. 6:3.

It was added because of transgressions [It was given that we might know our sinfulness, and the need we stood in of the mercy of God. The law is the right line, the straight edge that determines the obligation of our conduct. See the notes on Rom. iv. 15, and especially on Rom. v. 20, where this subject is largely discussed, and the figure explained.]

Until the seed should come [The law was to be in force till the advent of the Messiah.—After that, it was to cease.]

It was ordained by angels [The ministry of angels was certainly used in giving the law. See Psal. lxxvii. 17. Acts vii. 53, and Heb. ii. 2, but they were only instruments for transmitting; Moses was the mediator between God and the people, Deut. v. 5.]

²⁵ A mediator is not a mediator of one [As a Mediator, Mediator, signifies a middle person, there must necessarily be two parties, between whom he stands; and acts in reference to both; as he is supposed to have the interests of both equally at heart. This verse is allowed to be both obscure and difficult; and it is certain, that there is little consent among learned men and critics in their opinions concerning it. Rosenmüller thinks that the opinion of Nosselt is to be preferred to all others. He first translates the words ὁ δὲ πατρις, ὅς οὐκ ἔστιν thus, But he (viz. Moses) is not the mediator of that one race of Abraham, viz. the Christians; for ὅς, relates to the σπέρμα ὁ ἐπηγερθέν, the seed that should come, ver. 19, of which he said ὅς ἐστὶν ὅς οὐκ ἔστιν, as of one, ver. 16. If Paul had written ὁ δὲ πατρις τῶν ἑσθίων, οὐκ ἔστιν, he is not the mediator of one, no person would have had any doubt that σπέρματος, seed, ought to be supplied after ὅς, one, ver. 20. The same mode of speaking Paul uses, Rom. i. 17, 18, ὁ δὲ, but he, ὁ, for avros, Matt. xii. 3, 11, 39, ὁ δὲ ἔπειτα, but he said. Though Moses was the mediator between God and the Israelites; yet he was not the mediator between God and that one seed which was to come, viz. the Gentiles who should believe in Christ.

But God is one [He is the one God, who is the Father of the spirits of all flesh; the God of the Gentiles as well as the God of the Jews. That this is St. Paul's meaning is evident from his use of the same words in other places. 1 Tim. ii. 5, ἓς ὁ θεός, &c. for there is one God, and one mediator between God and man: that is, there is only one God and one mediator, for the whole human race, Eph. iv. 5, 6. One Lord, one faith, one baptism, ἓς ὁ θεός καὶ τὰς πάντας τὰς ἐκκλ., one God, and Father of all. The sense of the whole is, Moses was the mediator of one part of Abraham's seed, viz. the Israelites; but of the other seed, the Gentiles, he was certainly not the mediator; for the mediator of that seed, according to the promise of God, and covenant made with Abraham, is Christ. Though Nosselt has got great credit for this interpretation, it was given, in substance, long before him, by Dr. Whitby, as may be seen in the following words: "but this mediator (Moses) was only the mediator of the Jews, and so, was only mediator of one party, to whom belonged the blessings of Abraham, ver. 8, 14. But God, who made the promise that in one should all the families of the earth be blessed, is one, the God of the other party, the Gentiles as well as of the Jews, ἕσπερ ἓς ὁ θεός, seeing he is one God, who will justify the circumcision by faith, and the uncircumcision through faith. Rom. iii. 30." This exposition is so plain, and so well supported by the different scriptures already quoted, that there can be but small, if any, doubt of its propriety.

²¹ Is the law then against the promises of God? [Is it possible that the intervention of the law in reference to one part of the Abrahamic seed, should annul the promise made to the other? It is impossible.]

For if there had been a law, &c. [If any law or rule of life could have been found out that would have given life, saved sinners from death, and made them truly happy; then righteousness, justification, should have been by that law.]

²² But the scripture hath concluded [All the writings of the prophets have uniformly declared, that men are all sinners; and the law declares the same by the continual sacrifices which it prescribes. All, therefore, have sinned, and come short of the glory of God; and being tried and found guilty, συνεκλινεν ἡ γὰρὰ, the Scripture hath shut them up; put them in prison, and locked them up, till the time should come in which the sentence of the law should be executed upon them. See Rom. iii. 9-20, and the notes there. And particularly Rom. xi. 32, where the apostle uses the same metaphor, and which, in the note, is particularly explained.]

That the promise of justification, by faith of Jesus Christ, might be given to them that believe.

²³ But before faith came [Before the Gospel was published.

²⁵ But, after that faith is come, we are no longer under a schoolmaster.

²⁶ For, "ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus.

²⁷ For, "as many of you as have been baptized into Christ," have put on Christ.

²⁸ "There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond nor free, there is neither male nor female: for ye are all one in Christ Jesus.

²⁹ And "if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise."

u Rom. 1:14.—v. Rom. 10:12. 1 Cor. 12:12. Ch. 5:6. Col. 3:11.—w. John 10:16 & 17. 20:21. Eph. 2:14, 15, 16 & 4:1, 5.—x. Gen. 31:10, 12. Rom. 9:7. Heb. 11:13.—y. Rom. 8:17. Ch. 4:7, 28. Eph. 3:6.

We were kept under the law, shut up [Εφθονομεθα, we were kept as in a strong hold; συγκλεισμενοι, locked up—unto the faith, the religion of the Lord Jesus, which should afterward be revealed. Here the same metaphor is used as above; and for its explanation I must refer the reader to the same place, Rom. xi. 32.]

²¹ The law was our schoolmaster [Ο νόμος τῶν παιδῶν ἡμῶν πατρις ἐστὶν ἡμῶν, The law was our pedagogue unto Christ. The παίδωνος, pedagogue, is not the schoolmaster, but the servant, who had the care of the children, to lead them to, and bring them back from school; and had the care of them out of school-hours. Thus, the law did not teach us the living, saving knowledge; but by its rites and ceremonies, and especially by its sacrifices, it directed us to Christ, that we might be justified by faith. This is a beautiful metaphor, and highly illustrative of the apostle's doctrine. See the note on Rom. x. 4, where this figure is farther explained.]

²⁵ But after that faith is come [When Christ was manifested in the flesh, and the Gospel was preached, we were no longer under the pedagogy; we came to Christ, learned of him, became wise unto salvation, had our fruit unto holiness, and the earth eternal life.]

It is worthy of remark, that as ὁ νόμος, the LAW, is used by St. Paul, to signify not only the law, properly so called, but the whole of the Mosaic economy; so ἡ πίστις, the FAITH, is used by him to express not merely the act of believing in Christ; but the whole of the Gospel.

²⁶ For ye who have believed the Gospel, are all children of God by faith in Christ Jesus [But no man is a child of God by circumcision; nor by any observance of the Mosaic law.]

²⁷ As many of you as have been baptized into Christ [All of you who have believed in Christ as the promised Messiah, and received baptism as a public proof, that ye had received Christ as your Lord and Saviour; have put on Christ; have received his Spirit, and entered into his interests, and copied his manners. To put on, or to be clothed with one, is to assume the person and character of that one; and they who do so, are bound to act his part, and to sustain the character, which they have assumed. The profession of Christianity, is an assumption of the character of Christ; he has left us an example that we should follow his steps; and we should, as Christians, have that mind in us which was in him. See the notes on Rom. vi. 3, and 4, and especially those on Rom. xiii. 14, where this phrase is farther explained.]

²⁸ There is neither Jew nor Greek [Εἰς ἓν, Greek, is put here for ἔθνος, heathen. Under the Gospel all distinctions are done away, all either helping or hindering; all are equally welcome to Christ; and all have an equal need of him; all persons, of all sects, and conditions, and sexes, who believe in him, become one family through him; they are one body, of which he is the head.]

Neither male nor female [With great reason the apostle introduces this: between the privileges of men and women, there was a great disparity among the Jews. A man might shave his head and rend his clothes, in the time of mourning; a woman was not permitted to do so. A man might impose the vow of Nazirite upon his son; a woman could not do this on her daughter. A man might be shorn on account of the Nazirite of his father; a woman could not. A man might betroth his daughter; a woman had no such power. A man might sell his daughter; a woman could not. In many cases they were treated more like children than adults; and to this day, are not permitted to assemble with the men in the synagogues, but are put up in galleries, where they can scarcely see, nor can they be seen. Under the blessed spirit of Christianity, they have equal rights, equal privileges, and equal blessings; and let me add, they are equally useful.]

²⁹ And if ye be Christ's [Or as several good MSS. read, if ye be one in Christ. If ye have all received justification through his blood, and the mind that was in him, then are ye Abraham's seed; ye are that real spiritual posterity of Abraham, that other seed to whom the promises were made; and then heirs, according to that promise, being fitted for the rest that remains for the people of God; that heavenly inheritance which was typified by the earthly Canaan, even to the Jews.]

² The temptation that leads us astray, may be as sudden as it is successful. We may lose in one moment, the fruit of a whole life! How frequently is this the case: and how few lay it to heart! a man may fall by the means of his understanding, as well as by the means of his passions.

3. How strange is it that there should be found any backslider! that one who once felt the power of Christ should ever turn aside! but it is still stranger, that any one who has felt it, and given in his life and conversation, full proof that he has felt it, should not only let it slip, but at last deny that he ever had it, and even ridicule a work of grace in the heart! such instances have appeared among men.

4. The Jewish covenant, the sign of which was circumcision, is annulled, though the people with whom it was made are still preserved, and they preserve the rite or sign. Why then should the covenant be annulled? This question admits a two-fold answer. 1. This covenant was designed to last only for a time; and when that time came, it having waxed old, vanished away. 2. It was long before that void, through want of the performance of the conditions. The covenant did not state merely, ye shall be circumcised, and observe all the rites and ceremonies of the law; but ye shall love the Lord your God with all your heart, soul, mind, and strength, and your neighbour as yourself. This condition, which was the very soul of the covenant, was universally broken by that people. Need they wonder, therefore, that God has cast them off! Jesus alone can restore them, and him they continue to reject. To us, the new covenant says the same things—ye shall love the Lord, &c. if we do not so, we also shall be cut off. Take heed, lest he who did not spare the natural branches, spare not thee; therefore, make a profitable use of the goodness and severity of God.

CHAPTER IV.

The apostle shows, that as an heir in nonage is under tutors and guardians; so were the Galatians while under the law: and as the heir, when he comes of age, is no longer under guardians: so they, when the Gospel came, arrived at full maturity, and were redeemed from the law, 1-3. He shows further, that when the fulness of the time came, God sent forth his Son, that he might obtain the adoption of sons; and have the strongest evidence of that adoption, that those who are children of God are heirs of heaven, 7. He compares their former and latter state, and shows the reason why he had to fear that his labour on their behalf was in vain, 8-11. He mentions his trials among them, and their kindness to him, 12-16. Shows his tender affection for them, and exhorts them to return to the Gospel, 17-23. Shows the excellence of the Gospel beyond that of the law, by the allegory of Mount Sinai and Jerusalem, 21-27. Shows also, that the believing Gentiles are children of the promise, as Isaac was; and have been elected in the place of the Jews, who have been cast out, according to the Scriptures, 28-31. [A. M. cir. 4056. A. D. cir. 52. A. U. C. 805. An. Inn. Claudii Cæs. 12.]

NOTES.—Verse 1. The heir as long as he is a child] Though he be appointed by his father's will heir of all his possessions; yet, till he arrive at the legal age, he is master of nothing; and does not differ from one of the common domestics.

2. But is under tutors] Επιτροπῶν, guardians and governors:—οἰκονομῶν, those who have the charge of the family. These words are nearly similar; but we may consider the first as executor, the last as the person who superintends the concerns of the family and estate till the heir become of age.

Until the time appointed of the father.] The time mentioned in the father's will or testament.

3. Even so we] The whole Jewish people, were in a state of nonage while under the law.

The elements of the world! A mere Jewish phrase, יסודי העולם gasudey olam hazzele, "the principles of this world;" that is, the rudiments or principles of the Jewish religion. The apostle intimates that the law was not the science of salvation: it was only the elements or alphabet of it; and in the Gospel, this alphabet is composed into a most perfect system of divine knowledge: but as the alphabet, nothing of itself, unless by the aid of syllables, words, sentences, and discourses; so the law, taken by itself, gives no salvation: it contains, indeed, the outlines of the Gospel; but it is the Gospel alone, that fills up these outlines.

4. When the fulness of the time was come The time which God in his infinite wisdom counted best; in which all his counsels were filled up; and the time which his Spirit, by the prophets, had specified; and the time to which he intended the Mosaic institutions should extend, and beyond which they should be of no avail.

God sent forth his Son] Him who came immediately from God himself; made of a woman; according to the promise, Gen. iii. 15, produced by the power of God, in the womb of the Virgin Mary, without any intervention of man; hence he was called the Son of God. See Luke chap. i. 35. and the note there.

Made under the law] In subjection to it, that in him, all its designs might be fulfilled, and by his death, the whole might be abolished; the law dying when the Son of God expired upon the cross.

5. To redeem them] Εξαγοράν; to pay down a price for them, and thus buy them off from the necessity of observing circumcision, offering brute sacrifices, performing different ablutions, &c.

That we might receive the adoption of sons.] Which adoption we could not obtain by the law; for it is the Gospel only that puts us among the children, and gives us a place in the heavenly family. On the nature of adoption, see the notes on Rom. viii. 15.

6. And because ye are sons] By faith in Christ Jesus, being redeemed both from the bondage and curse of the law : God, the Father, called generally the first person of the glorious TRINITY : hath sent forth the Spirit, the Holy Ghost, the second person of that Trinity; of his Son Jesus Christ, the third person of the Trinity—crying Abba, Father! from the fullest and most satisfactory evidence that God, the Father, Son, and Spirit, had become their portion. For the explanation of this phrase, and why the Greek and Syriac terms are joined together here, see the notes on Mark xiv. 36. and on Rom. viii. 15.

7. Thou art no more a servant] Thou who hast believed in Christ, art no longer a slave, either under the dominion of sin, or under obligation to the Mosaic ritual: but a son of God, adopted into the heavenly family.

And if a son, then an heir Having a right to the inheritance, because one of the family, for none can inherit but the children; but this heirship is the most extraordinary of all: it is not an heirship of any tangible possession, either in heaven or earth; it is not to possess a part, or even the whole, of either: it is to possess Him who made all things—not God's works, but God himself: heirs of GOD through Christ.

8. Wen ye knev nut Gad! Though it is evident, from the complex of the whole of this epistle, that the great body of the Christians, in the churches of Galatia, were converts from among the Jews, or proselytes to Judaism: yet, from this verse, it appears that there were some who had been converted from heathenism: unless we suppose that the apostle here particularly addresses those who had been proselytes to Judaism; and thence converted to Christianity; which appears to be most likely from the following verses.

9. Now after that ye have known God] After having been brought to the knowledge of God, as your Saviour.

(Or rather are known of God) Are approved of him, having received the adoption of sons.

To the weak and beggarly elements.] After receiving all this, will ye turn again to the ineffectual rites and ceremonies of the Mosaic law? Rites too weak to counteract your sinful habits; and too poor to purchase pardon and eternal life for you. If the Galatians were turning again to them, it is evident that they had been once addicted to them. And thus they might have been, allowing that they had become converts from heathenism to Judaism; and from Judaism to Christianity. This makes the sense consistent between the 8th and 9th verses.

10. Ye observe days] Ye superstitiously regard the sabbath, and particular days of your own appointment.

And months] New moons; times; festivals, such as those of tabernacles, dedication, pass-over, &c.

11. I am afraid of you] I begin now to be seriously alarmed for you, and think you are so thoroughly perverted from the Gospel of Christ, that all my pains and labour in your conversion have been thrown away.

12. Be as I am] Thoroughly addicted to the Christian faith and worship; from the deepest conviction of its truth.

For I am as ye are I was formerly a Jew, and as zealously

13 Ye know how ^v through infirmity of the flesh I preached the Gospel unto you ^w at the first.

14 And my temptation which was in my flesh ye despised not, nor rejected; but received me ^x as an angel of God, ^y even as Christ Jesus.

15 *Where is then the blessedness ye spake of? for I bear you record, that if it had been possible, ye would have plucked out your own eyes, and have given them to me.

16 Am I therefore become your enemy, ^a because I tell you the truth?

17 They ^bzealously affect you, but not well ; yea, they would exclude ^c you, that ye might affect them.

See Zech. 12.8 -y Matthew 10.40. Luke 10.16. John 13.29. 1 Thess.2.13.-z Or, What was then?

addicted to the rites and ceremonies of Judaism as ye are; but I am saved from that mean and unprofitable dependance: "be therefore as I am now: who was once as you now are." Others think the sense to be this: "Be as affectionate to me as I am to you; for ye were once as loving to me as I am now to you."

Ye have not injured me at all! I do not thus earnestly entreat you to return to your Christian profession, because your perversion has been any loss to me; nor because your conversion can be to me any gain: ye have not injured me at all; ye only injure yourselves; and I entreat you, through the intense love I bear to you, as my once beloved brethren in Christ Jesus, to return to Him from whom ye have revolted.

13. Ye know how through infirmity] The apostle seems to say, that he was much afflicted in body when he first preached the Gospel to them. And is this any strange thing, that a minister so laborious as St. Paul was, should be sometimes overdone, and overcome by the severity of his labours!—Surely not. This might have been only an occasional affliction, while labouring in that part of Asia Minor: and not a continual and incurable infirmity, as some have too hastily conjectured.

14. And my temptation which was in my flesh] On this verse there are a great many various readings: as there are various opinions.

Instead of μου, MY temptation, ABC'D'EFG. some others, with the Coptic, Vulgate, Itala, and several of the primitive Fathers, have ἐμῶν, YOUR temptation.

The word peparayor, which we translate temptation, signifies trial of any kind. The verse, therefore, may be read: "Ye despised not the trial which was in my flesh;" or, "Ye despised not your trial which was in my flesh." i. e. what my flesh suffered on your account: the afflictions I passed through in consequence of my severe labours on your account. You did not consider me less an apostle of God, on account of my sinking for a time, under the weight of my work. Had they been disaffected towards him at that time, they would have used this to the prejudice of his apostolic mission. "What! do you pretend to be an extraordinary messenger from God, and yet are suffered to fall into sickness under the severity of your labour!" If God sent you, would he not sustain you?" This would have been quite natural, had they not been well affected towards him. But, on the contrary, notwithstanding these afflictions, they received him as an angel of God, as a messenger from heaven, and as Jesus Christ himself. This appears to me to be the plain meaning of the apostle; and that he neither received him as a creature, or infinite, which generally is theologically afflicted him, and which have no need to be applied at all to speak of the same one as the one mentioned 2 Cor. xii. 7, where I wish the reader to consult the notes. That St. Paul had frequent and severe afflictions, in consequence of his constant and severe exertions in the Gospel ministry, we may readily believe; and of this his own words bear sufficient testimony.—See his affecting account, 2 Cor. xi. 23—29, and the notes there.

15. Where is then the blessedness ye spoke of? Ye spoke of, should be in italics, there being not a corresponding word in the Greek text. Perhaps there is not a sentence in the New Testament more variously translated than this. I shall give the original, τίς οὐ γάρ μακάριος υἱός; ἃν ἦεν τότε ὑμῶν ἡ blessedness! Or, How great was your happiness at that time! Or, What blessings did ye then pour on me! It is worthy of remark that, instead of τίς, ἃν, ΑΒΕΓΚ, several others; the older Syriac, the latter Syriac in the margin, the Armenian, Vulgate, one copy of the Itala, and some of the Fathers, have πῶρ, where; and, ye, was, is omitted by ACD., several others, also the Vulgate, Itala, and the Latin Fathers. According to these authorities, the text should be read thus? Where then is your blessedness? Having renounced the Gospel, you have lost your happiness. What have your false teachers given you to compensate the loss of communion with God, or that spirit of adoption, that Spirit of Christ, by which you cried Abba, Father!

If, however, we understand the words as implying the benefactions they then heaped on the apostle, the sense will be sufficiently natural, and agree well with the concluding part of the verse; for I bear you record, that if possible, ye would have plucked out your own eyes, and given them to me. You had then the strongest affection for me: you loved God, and you loved me for God's sake; and were ready to give me the most unequivocal proof of your love.

Dearer than one's eyes, or to profess to give one's eyes (or 18 But it is good to be zealously affected always in a good thing, and not only when I am present with you.

19 ^d My little children, of whom I travail in birth again until Christ be formed in you, 20 I desire to be present with you now, and to change my voice ; for ^e I stand in doubt of you.

21 Tell me, ye that desire to be under the law, do ye not hear the law?

22 For it is written, that Abraham had two sons, ^fthe one by a bond-maid, ^gthe other by a free-woman.

23 But he who was of the bond-woman ^h was born after the flesh; ⁱ but he of the free-woman was by promise.

the sake of a person, appears to have been a proverbial expression, intimating the highest tokens of the strongest affection. We find a similar form of speech in Terence, Adelphi, Act. iv. scene 6. ver. 67.

————— Di me pater

Omnes oderint, ni magis te, quam oculos nunc ego amo meos.
 "O Father, may all the gods hate me, if I do not love you now, more than my own eyes."

16. Am I therefore, become your enemy? How is it that you are so much altered towards me, that you now treat me as an enemy, who formerly loved me with the most fervent affection? Is it because I tell you the truth; that very truth for which you at first so ardently loved me?

17. They zealously affect you but not really It is difficult for common readers to understand the meaning of these words: perhaps it would be better to translate Ζηλοῦσιν ὑμᾶς, οὐ καλῶς—these false teachers endeavour to conciliate your esteem, but not on honest or true principles: they work themselves into your good graces: they wish you to place all your affection upon themselves.

They would exclude you They wish to shut you out from the affection of your apostle, that you might affect them, vous affectez ἐκλειψέτε, that you might love them alone; hear them alone; abide by their directions only; and totally abandon him who called you into the grace of the Gospel of Christ. Some MSS. read npas, us, instead of npas, you, they wish to shut us entirely out from among you, that you may receive and believe them alone. The sense is nearly the same; but the former appears to be the more authentic reading.

18. It is good to be zealously affected] It is well to have a determined mind, and an ardent heart, in reference to things which are laudable and good.

[Not only when I am present] You were thus attached to me when I was among you; but now ye have lost both your reverence and affection for me. Your false teachers pretended great concern for you, that you might put all your confidence in them: they have gained their end; they have estranged you from me, and got you to renounce the Gospel, and have brought you again into your former bondage.

My little children! Teknia poe, my beloved children. As their conversion to God had been the fruit of much labour, prayers, and tears, so he felt them as his children; and peculiarly dear to him, because he had been the means of bringing them to the knowledge of the truth; therefore he represents himself as suffering the same anxiety and distress which he endured at first when he preached the Gospel to them; when their conversion to Christianity was a matter of great doubt and uncertainty. The metaphor which he uses needs no explanation.

Until Christ be formed in you) Till you once more receive the Spirit and unction of Christ in your hearts, from which you are fallen, by your rejection of the Spirit of the Gospel.

20. I desire to be present with you—I wish to accommodate my doctrine to your state; I know not whether you need stronger reprobation, or to be dealt with more leniently.

[I stand in doubt of you.] I have doubts concerning your state; the progress of error and conviction among you which I cannot fully know without being among you. This appears to be the apostle's meaning, and tends much to soften and render palatable the severity of his reproofs.

21. Ye that desire to be under the law] Ye who desire to incorporate the Mosaic institutions with Christianity, and thus bring yourselves into bondage to circumcision, and a great variety of oppressive rites.

Do you not wear the law?] Do ye not understand what is written in the Pentateuch, relative to Abraham and his children. It is evident that the word law is used in two senses in this verse. It first means the Mosaic institutions; secondly, the Pentateuch, where the history is recorded, to which the apostle refers.

22. For it is written] Viz. in Gen. xvi. 15. and xxii. 1, &c. that Abraham had two sons, Ishmael and Isaac; the one, Ishmael, by a bond-maid, Hagar; the other, Isaac, by a free-woman, Sarah.

23. It was born after the flesh. Ishmael was born according to the course of nature; his parents being both of a proper age; so that there was nothing uncommon or supernatural in his birth; this is the proper meaning of the apostle's karanaka, after or according to the flesh; and answers to the Hebrew phrase, וְיָצָא בְּאִדָּתָם al idre basar, according to the manner of the flesh; i. e. naturally, according to the common process of nature.

21 Which things are an allegory; for these are the two covenants; the one from the mount ¹ Sinai, ^m which gendereth to bondage, which is Agar.

25 For this Agar is mount Sinai in Arabia, and ⁿ answereth to Jerusalem which now is, and is in bondage with her children.

26 But ^o Jerusalem which is above is free, which is the mother of us all.

27 For it is written, ^p Rejoice, thou barren that bearest not; break forth and cry, thou that travailest not: for the desolate

¹ Or, resents—¹ the Sinai—^m in Den. 3:2—ⁿ Or, is in the same rank with—^o Isa 2:2—^p Ier 31:12—^q Rev 12:1—^r Isa 54:1.

^{By promise.} Both Abraham and Sarah had passed that age in which the procreation of children was possible, on natural principles. The birth, therefore, of Isaac was supernatural; it was the effect of an especial promise of God; and it was only on the ground of that promise that it was either credible or possible.

21. Which things are an allegory? They are to be understood spiritually; more being intended in the account than meets the eye.

Allegory, from αλλος, another; and αγορευω or αγορευω, to speak; signifies a thing that is a representative of another; where the literal sense is the representative of a spiritual meaning: or, as the glossary expresses it, ἐξῆναι κατὰ μεταφραστικὴν νοήσιν, καὶ οὐ κατὰ τὴν ἀναγογὴν "where the thing is to be understood differently in the interpretation, than it appears in the reading." Allegories are frequent in all comies, and are used by all writers. In the life of Homer, the author, speaking of the marriage of Jupiter and Juno, related by that poet, says, δοκεῖ πάντα ἀλλογοῦσθαι, ὥς Ἥρακα νοστήει ὁ αἶψα—Zeus δε, δ' αὐτοῦ— "It appears that these things are to be understood allegorically; for Juno means the air, Jupiter the æther." Plutarch, in his treatise De Iside et Osir, says, ὡςπερ Ἑλλήνων Κρόνον ἀλλογοῦσθαι τὸν χρόνον. "As the Greeks allegorize Cronos (Saturn) into Chronos (Time)." It is well known how fond the Jews were of allegorizing; every thing in the law was with them an allegory: their Talmud is full of these; and one of their most sober and best educated writers Philo, abounds with them.—Speaking (De Migratione Abrah. pag. 420.) of the five daughters of Zelophehad, he says, αὐτὰς ἀλλογοῦντες, ἀσθητικὴς ἐναι φύσιν; "which, allegorically, we assert to be the five senses!" It is very likely, therefore, that the allegory produced here, St. Paul had borrowed from the Jewish writings; and he brings it in to convict the Judaizing Galatians on their own principles: and neither he, nor we, have any thing farther to do with this allegory, than as it applies to the subject for which it is quoted: nor does it give any license to those men of vain and superficial minds, who endeavour to find out allegories in every portion of the Sacred Writings; and by what they term spiritualizing, which is more properly caricaturing, have brought the testimonies of God into disgrace. May the spirit of silence be poured out upon all such corrupters of the word of God!

For these are the two covenants! These signify two different systems of religion; the one by Moses, the other by the Messiah.

The one from the mount Sinai! On which the law was published; which was typified by Hagar, Abraham's bondmaid.

Which gendereth to bondage! For, as the bondmaid, or slave, could only gender, being forth her children in a state of slavery; and subject also to become slaves; so all that are born and live under those Mosaic institutions, are born and live in a state of bondage: a bondage to various rites and ceremonies; under the obligation to keep the whole law; yet, from its severity, and their frailness, obliged to live in the habitual breach of it; and, in consequence, exposed to the curse which it pronounces.

25. For this Agar is mount Sinai in Arabia! Τὸ γὰρ Ἀγὰρ, Σινὰ ὅπου ἐστὶν ἐν τῇ Ἀραβίᾳ—This is the common reading; but it is read differently in some of the most respectable MSS. Versions and Fathers; in those, τὸ γὰρ Σινὰ ὅπου ἐστὶν ἐν τῇ Ἀραβίᾳ, for this Sinai is a mountain of Arabia; the word Ἀγὰρ, Agar, being omitted. This reading is supported by CFG. some others, the Æthiopic, Armenian, Vulgate, and one copy of the Itala; by Euphrasius, Dionysius, Ambrosiaster, Jerom, Augustin, Hilary, Sedulius, and Bele; and the word is sometimes, though not always, omitted by Cyril and Origen, which proves that in their time there were doubts concerning the common reading. Of the word Agar, in this verse, which renders the passage very obscure, and difficult, professor White says, "Jordan ἀ-ἰν-ἰ-μ-ἰ-ν." "probably it should be expunged." Grusback has left it in the text with a note of doubtfulness.

Answereth to Jerusalem! Hagar the bondmaid, bringing forth children in a state of slavery; answereth to Jerusalem that now is, everlasting, points out, or bears a similitude to Jerusalem in her present state of subjection; which, with her children, her citizens are not only in bondage to the Romans, but in a worse bondage to the law, to its oppressive ordinances, and to the heavy curse which it has pronounced against all those who do not keep them.

26. But Jerusalem which is above! The apostle still follows the Jewish allegory, showing not only how the story of Hagar and Sarah, Ishmael and Isaac, was allegorized; but pointing out also, that even Jerusalem was the subject of allegory: for hath many more children than she which hath a husband. 25) Now we, brethren, as Isaac was, are the children of promise.

26) But as then ^r he that was born after the flesh persecuted him that was born after the Spirit, ^s even so it is now.

26) Nevertheless, what saith ^t the Scripture? ^u Cast out the bondwoman and her son: for ^v the son of the bondwoman shall not be heir with the son of the free woman.

27) So then, brethren, we are not children of the bondwoman, ^w but of the free.

^r Aet 3:5—^s Rom 9:4—^t Ch 7:23—^u Gen 21:9—^v Ch 8:11, & 6:12—^w Ch 3:5, 22—^x Gen 21:10, 13—^y John 5:37—^z John 2:36, Ch 5:1, 13.

It was a maxim among the rabbins, that, "Whatsoever was in the earth, the same was also found in heaven; for there is no matter, however small, in this world, that has not something similar to it in the spiritual world." On this maxim, the Jews imagine that every earthly thing has its representative in heaven; and especially whatever concerns Jerusalem, the law, and its ordinances. Rab. Kimchi, speaking of Melchisedec, king of Salem, says, יְרֵשָׁאִים יְרֵשָׁאִים זֶה יְרֵשָׁאִים—Zeh Yerushalem shel melchisedec. "This is the Jerusalem that is from above." This phrase frequently occurs among these writers, as may be seen in Schoedgen, who has written an express dissertation upon this subject.—Hor. Lehr, vol. 1, page 1205.

Is free, which is the mother of us all! There is a spiritual Jerusalem, of which this is the type; and this Jerusalem, in which the souls of all the righteous are, is free from all bondage and sin; or by this, probably the kingdom of the Messiah was intended; and this certainly answers best to the apostle's meaning, as the subsequent verse shows. There is an earthly Jerusalem, but this earthly Jerusalem typifies a heavenly Jerusalem; the former, with all her citizens, is in bondage; the latter is a free city, and all her inhabitants are free also; and this Jerusalem is our mother; it signifies the church of Christ, the metropolis of Christianity, or rather the state of liberty into which all true believers are brought. The word παις, of all, is omitted by almost every MSS. and Version of antiquity and importance; and by the most eminent of the Fathers, who quote this place: it is undoubtedly spurious, and the text should be read thus—But Jerusalem which is above, is free; which is our mother.

27. Rejoice, thou barren that bearest not! This quotation is taken from Isa. chap. li. and is certainly a promise which relates to the conversion of the Gentiles, as the following clause proves; for the desolate, the Gentile world, hath many more children, is much larger, and more numerous, church than she, Jerusalem, the Jewish state, which, hath a husband: has been so long in covenant with God, living under his continued protection, and in possession of a great variety of spiritual advantages; and especially those offered to her by the Gospel, which she has rejected; and which the Gentiles have accepted.

28. Now we! We believe in the Lord Jesus, are the children of promise, are the spiritual offspring of the Messiah, the seed of Abraham, in whom the promise stated that all the nations of the earth should be blessed.

29. And as then he! Ishmael, who was born after the flesh; whose birth had nothing supernatural in it; but was according to the ordinary course of nature:

Persecuted him! Isaac, who was born after the Spirit; who had a supernatural birth, according to the promise, and through the efficacy of the Holy Spirit, giving effect to that promise—Sarah shall have a son, see Gen. xvii. 16—21. xxi. l. &c.

Persecuted him: the persecution here referred to, is that mentioned Gen. xxi. 9.

Even so it is now! So the Jews, in every place, persecute the Christians; and show thereby that they are rather of the posterity of Hagar than of Sarah.

30. What saith the Scripture? (in Gen. xxi. 10.) Cast out the bondwoman and her son: and what does this imply in the present case? Why, that the present Jerusalem and her children shall be cast out of the favour of God; and shall not be heir with the son of the free woman; shall not inherit the blessings promised to Abraham, because they believe not in the promised seed.

31. So then! We Jews and Gentiles, who believe on the Lord Jesus, are not children of the bondwoman; are not in subjection to the Jewish law; but of the free; and, consequently, are delivered from all its bondage, obligation, and curse.

Thus the apostle, from their own Scripture, explained by their own allegory, proves that it is only by Jesus Christ that they can have redemption; and because they have not believed in him, therefore they continue to be in bondage; and that shortly God will deliver them up into a long and grievous captivity; for we may naturally suppose that the apostle has reference to what had been so often foretold by the prophets, and confirmed by Jesus Christ himself; and this was the strongest argument he could use, to show the Galatians their folly and their danger in submitting again to the bondage from which they had escaped; and exposing themselves to the most dreadful calamities of an earthly kind, as well as to the final ruin of their souls. They desired to be under the law; then they must take all the consequences; and these the apostle sets fairly before them.

Isaiah believed in Him, who, with no word, created the universe; and because the Israelites believed in God, the Holy Spirit dwelt in them; so that being filled with God, they sung praises to him.²² Cicero, De Nat. Deor. lib. ii. has said, Nemo vir magnus sine aliqua afflata deo unquam fuit. "There never was a great man who had not some measure of the Divine influence."²³ However true this may be, with respect to the great men of the Roman orator; we may safely assert, there never was a true Christian, who had not the inspiration of God's Holy Spirit.

6. For, in Jesus Christ] By the dispensation of the Gospel, all legal observances, as essential to salvation, are done away; and uncircumcision, or the Gentile state, contributes as much to salvation as circumcision, or the Jewish state; they are both equally ineffectual; and nothing now avails, in the sight of God, but that faith, ἡ ἐν ἀγαπῇ ἐκτελέσκειν, which is made active, or energetic by love. God acknowledges no faith as of the operation of His Spirit, that is not active or obedient; but the principle of all obedience to God, and beneficence to man, is love; therefore faith cannot work, unless it be associated with love. Love to God, produces obedience to his will: love to man worketh no ill; but, on the contrary, every act of kindness. Faith which does not work by love, is either circumcision or uncircumcision, or whatever its possessor may please to call it; it is, however, nothing that will stand him in stead, when God comes to take away his soul—It availeth nothing. This humble, holy, operative, obedient love, is the grand cornerstone of all human creeds, and confessions of faith. Faith, without this, has neither soul nor operation: in the language of the apostle James, it is dead, and can perform no function of the spiritual life, no more than a dead man can perform the duties of animal or civil life.

7. Ye did run well] Ye once had the faith that worked by love; ye were genuine, active, useful Christians.

Who did hinder? Who prevented you from continuing to obey the truth? Ye could only be turned aside by your own consent. St. Paul, here, as in 1 Cor. ix. 24, compares Christianity to a race.—See the notes on the above text.

8. This persuasion] Of the necessity of your being circumcised, and obeying the law of Moses, is not of him that calleth you; I never preached such a doctrine to you: I called you out of bondage to liberty; from a galling yoke to a cheerful service. Some translate παρρησίαν, obedience or subjection. This subjection of yours to the Mosaic law, is opposed to the will of God; and never was preached by me.

9. A little barren heathen the whole lump.] A proverbial expression; see 1 Cor. v. 6. very aptly applied to those who receive the smallest tincture of false doctrine relative to things essential to salvation: which soon influences the whole conduct, so that the man becomes totally perverted. They might have argued, "It is a small thing, and should not be made a subject of serious controversy, whether we be circumcised or not." Granted, that in itself, it is a small matter; but, as every man, who is circumcised, is a debtor to do the whole law, ver. 3, then your circumcision leads necessarily to your total perversion; as the little portion of heathen, mixed with the batch, soon leavens the whole lump.

10. I have confidence in you] I now feel a persuasion from the Lord, that I shall not be permitted to expostulate with you in vain; that ye will be none otherwise minded: that ye will be aware of the danger to which ye are exposed, that ye will retreat in time, and recover the grace which ye have lost.

But he that troubleth you] The false teacher, who sowed doubtful disputations among you, and thus has troubled the repose of the whole church. Shall bear his judgment; shall meet with the punishment he deserves, for having sown his tares among God's wheat.

11. If I yet preach circumcision] It is very likely that some of the false apostles, hearing of Paul's having circumcised Timothy, Acts xvi. 3, which must have been done about this time, reported him as being an advocate for circumcision; and, by this means, endeavoured to sanction their own doctrine: to this the apostle replies, Were it so that I am a friend to this measure, it is likely that I should suffer persecution from the Jews? but I am every where persecuted by them; and I am persecuted because I am known to be an enemy to circumcision: were I a friend to this doctrine, the offence of the cross, preaching salvation only through the sacrifice of Christ, would soon cease; because, to be consistent with myself, if I preached the necessity of circumcision, I must soon cease to preach Christ crucified; and then the Jews would be no longer mine enemies.

16 This I say then, b Walk in the Spirit, and c ye shall not fulfil the lust of the flesh.

17 For ^d the flesh lusteth against the Spirit, and the Spirit against the flesh; and these are contrary the one to the other: ^e so that ye cannot do the things that ye would.

18 But, if ye be led of the Spirit, ye are not under the law.

19 Now, ^f the works of the flesh are manifest, which are these: Adultery, fornication, uncleanness, lasciviousness,

20 idolatry, witchcraft, hatred, variance, emulations, wrath, strife, seditions, heresies,

21 Envyings, murders, drunkenness, revellings, and such like: of the which I tell you before, as I have also told you in

12. I would they were even cut off which trouble you.] This saying has puzzled many; and different interpretations of the place have been proposed by learned men. At first sight, it seems as if the apostle was praying for the destruction of the false teachers, who had perverted the churches of Galatia. Mr. Wakefield thought ὅσοις ἀνὸς ὡραῖα, might be translated, I wish that they were made to weep; and in his translation of the New Testament, the passage stands thus—^a I wish that they who are unsettling you may lament it.²⁴ I believe the apostle never meant any such thing. As the persons who were breeding all this confusion in the churches of Galatia were members of that church, the apostle appears to me to be simply expressing his desire that they might be cut off, or excommunicated from the church. Kypke has given an abundance of examples where the word is used to signify, amputating, cutting off from society, office, &c. excluding. In opposition to the notion of excommunications, it might be asked, ^b Why should the apostle wish these to be excommunicated, when it was his own office to do it?²⁵ To this it may be answered; the apostle's authority was greatly weakened among that people, by the influence of the false teachers; so that in all probability he could exercise no ecclesiastical function; he could, therefore, only express his wish. And the whole passage is so parallel to that 1 Cor. v. 6, 7, that I think there can be no reasonable doubt of the apostle's meaning.—^c Let those who are unsettling the church of Christ in your district, be excommunicated: this is my wish, that they should no longer have any place among you.²⁶

13. Ye have been called unto liberty] A total freedom from all the burdensome rites and ceremonies of the Mosaic law. Only use not that liberty for an occasion to the flesh. By flesh, here, we may understand all the unregulated desires and propensities of the mind; and whatsoever is not under the influence and guidance of the Holy Spirit of God. Your liberty is from that which would oppress the spirit; not from that which would lay restraints on the flesh. The Gospel proclaims liberty from the ceremonial law; but binds you still faster under the moral law. To be freed from the ceremonial law, is the Gospel liberty: to pretend freedom from the moral law, is anti-moralism.

By love serve one another.] Having that faith which worketh by love, serve each other to the utmost of your power; δοῦναι, serve each other, when necessary, as slaves serve their masters. Several excellent MSS. and Versions, instead of δοῦναι ἀλλήλοις, by love, have ἐν ἀγαπῇ τοῦ πληρώματος, in the love of the Spirit, serve one another.

14. For all the law] Which respects our duty to our fellows: is fulfilled, is comprehended in one word—thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself. See the note on Matt. xix. 19. and Rom. xiii. 9.

15. If ye bite and devour one another] These churches seem to have been in a state of great distraction; there were continual altercations among them, they had fallen from the grace of the Gospel; and as Christ no longer dwelt in their hearts by faith; pride, anger, ill-will, and all unkind and uncharitable tempers, took possession of their souls; and they were, in consequence, alternately destroying each other. Nothing is so destructive to the peace of man, and to the peace of the soul, as religious disputes: when they prevail, religion in general has little place.

16. Walk in the Spirit] Get back that Spirit of God which you have grieved and lost; take up that spiritual religion which you have abandoned.

Ye shall not fulfil the lust of the flesh.] If the Spirit of God dwell in, and rule your heart, the whole carnal mind will be destroyed; and then, not only carnal ordinances will be abandoned, but also the works and propensities of the flesh.

17. For the flesh lusteth against the Spirit] God still continues to strive with you, notwithstanding your apostasy; showing you whence you have fallen, and exciting you to return to him; but your own obstinacy renders all ineffectual: and through the influence of these different principles, you are kept in a state of self-opposition, and self-distraction; so that you cannot do the things that ye would; ye are convinced of what is right, and ye wish to do it; but, having abandoned the Gospel, and the grace of Christ, the law and its ordinances which ye have chosen in their place, afford you no power to conquer your evil propensities. It was on this ground that the apostle exhorted them, ver. 16, to walk in the Spirit, that they might not fulfil the lust of the flesh; as, without the grace of God, they could do nothing.—Who can suppose that he speaks this of adult Christians?

time past, that they which do such things shall not inherit the kingdom of God.

18. But, if ye be led of the Spirit! If ye receive again the Gospel and the grace of Christ, and permit yourselves to be influenced by the Holy Spirit, whom you are now grieving, ye are not under the law; ye will not feel those evil propensities which now disgrace and torment you. But they must prevail while you are not under the influence of the grace and Spirit of Christ.

19. Now the works of the flesh are manifest! By flesh, we are to understand the evil and fallen state of the soul, no longer under the guidance of God's Spirit, and right reason, but under the animal passions; and they are even rendered more irregular and turbulent by the influence of sin; so that man is in a worse state than the brute: and, so all commanding is this evil nature, that it leads men into all kinds of crimes; and among them the following, which are manifest, known to all, and most prevalent; and though these are most solemnly forbidden by your law; the observance of its ordinances gives no power to overcome them; and provides no pardon for the guilt and condemnation produced by them.

Adultery! Morçeta, illicit connexion with a married person. This word is wanting in this place, in the best MSS., Versions, and Fathers; the next term often comprehending both.

Fornication! Hoppeta, illicit connexion between single or unmarried persons: yet often signifying adultery also.

Uncleanness! Acalapata, whatever is opposite to purity; probably meaning here, as in Rom. i. 24. 2 Cor. xii. 21. unlawful practices; sodomy, bestiality.

Lasciviousness! ædnyca, whatever is contrary to chastity; all hardness.

20. Idolatry! Worshiping of idols; frequenting idol festivals; all the rites of Bacchus, Venus, Priapus, &c. which were common among the Gentiles.

Witchcraft! ðappaxa, from ðappaxo, a drug, or poison; because in all spells and enchantments, whether true or false, drugs were employed. As a drug, ðappaxo, might either be the means of removing an evil, or inflicting one; etymologists have derived it from ðepov acos, bringing ease; or ðepov ayos, bringing pain. No spells and incantations were used sometimes for the restoration of the health; at others, for the destruction of an enemy. Sometimes these ðappaxa were used to procure love; at other times to produce hatred.

Hatred! Ëxþata, aversions and antipathies, when opposed to brotherly love and kindness.

Variance! Epcis, contentions, where the principle of hatred proceeds to open acts; hence contests, altercations, law-suits, and disputes in general.

Emulations! Zñxoi, envies or emulations, that is, strife to excel at the expense of another; lowering others to set up oneself: unholily zeal, fervently adopting a bad cause; or supporting a good one by cruel means. Inquisitions, pretending to support true religion, by torturing and burning alive those who both profess and practise it.

Wrath! Oncu, turbulent passions, disturbing the harmony of the mind, and producing domestic and civil broils and disputes.

Strife! Epdæta, disputations, janglings, logomachies, or strife about words.

Seditious! Δισκοφαντα, divisions into separate factions; parties, whether in the church or state.

Heresies! Àpeteis, factions, parties in the church separating from communion with each other, and setting up altar against altar. The word, which is harmless in itself, is here used in a bad sense. Instead of apostates, the Slavonic has σκαδακα, scandals, offences or stumbling-blocks.

21. Envyings! Ùdnoi, "pain felt, and malignity conceived, at the sight of excellence or happiness." A passion the most base and the least curable of all that disgraces or degrades the fallen soul. See on Rom. xiii. 13.

Murders! Φονο similarity of sound to the preceding seems to have suggested the word in this association; it is wanting in several MSS. Murder signifies the destruction of human life; and as he who hates his brother in his heart, is ready to take away his life, so he is called a murderer. After all the easiness of man, it does not appear that the right of taking away a human life on any pretence, except for the crime of murder, belongs to any but the Maker and Judge of all men.

Drunkenness! Méba, taking more wine or any kind of inebriating liquor than is necessary for health; whatever unfit for public, domestic, or spiritual duties; even the cares of the world, when they intoxicate the mind. See Rom. xiii. 13. Revellings! Kopoi, lascivious feasting, with obscene songs, music, &c. See on Rom. xiii. 13.

And such like! Kai ra opota roisouti, all that proceeds from the evil passions of a fallen spirit, besides those above specified; and all that the law of God specifies and condemns.

(Of the which I tell you before) When I first preached the Gospel to you.

As I have also told you in time past! When I paid my second visit to you; for the apostle did visit them twice. See Acts xvi. 6. and xviii. 23. and see Preface, pag. 1.

21 And they that are Christ's have crucified the flesh with the passions and lusts.

25 ¶ If we live in the Spirit, let us also walk in the Spirit.

26 ¶ Let us not be desirous of vain-glory, provoking one another, envying one another.

1 Cor. 13.7.—1 Tim. 1.9.—Rom. 6.6. & 13.14. Ch. 2.39. 1 Pet. 2.11.—p Or, passion.—q Rom. 8.4.5. Ver. 16.—r Phil. 2.3.

Shall not inherit! They are not children of God, and therefore cannot inherit the kingdom which belongs only to the children of the Divine family.

22. But the fruit of the Spirit! Both flesh, the sinful dispositions of the human heart, and spirit, the changed or purified state of the soul, by the grace and Spirit of God, are represented by the apostle as trees; one yielding good, the other bad fruit; the productions of each being according to the nature of the tree, as the tree is according to the nature of the seed from which it sprung. The bad seed produced a bad tree, yielding all manner of bad fruit; the good seed produced a good tree, bringing forth fruits of the most excellent kind. The tree of the flesh, with all its bad fruits, we have already seen; the tree of the Spirit, with its good fruits, we shall now see.

Love! Àgæ, an intense desire to please God, and to do good to mankind; the very soul and spirit of all true religion, the fulfilling of the law, and what gives energy to faith itself. See ver. 6.

Joy! Xaða, the exultation that arises from a sense of God's mercy communicated to the soul in the pardon of its iniquities, and the prospect of that eternal glory of which it has the foretaste in the pardon of sin. See Rom. v. 2.

Peace! Eþonç, the calm, quiet, and order which take place in the justified soul; instead of the doubts, fears, alarms, and dreadful forebodings, which every true penitent feels or more feels; and must feel, till the assurance of pardon brings peace and satisfaction to the mind. Peace is the first sensible fruit of the pardon of sin. See Rom. v. 1. and the notes there.

Long-suffering! Μακροθυα, long-mindedness, bearing with the frailties and provocations of others, from the consideration that God has borne long with ours; and that if he had not, we should have been speedily consumed; bearing up also through all the troubles and difficulties of life without murmuring or repining; submitting cheerfully to every dispensation of God's providence, and thus deriving benefit from every occurrence.

Gentleness! Χρηστες; benignity, affability; a very rare grace, often wanting in many who have a considerable share of Christian excellence. A good education and polished manners, when brought under the influence of the grace of God, will bring out this grace with great effect.

Goodness! Àgáþewç; the perpetual desire, and sincere study not only to abstain from every appearance of evil, but to do good to the bodies and souls of men to the utmost of our ability; but all this must spring from a good heart; a heart purified by the Spirit of God; and then, the tree being made good, the fruit must be good also.

Faith! Þeç, here used for fidelity; punctuality in performing promises; conscientious carefulness in preserving what is committed to our trust; in restoring it to its proper owner; in transacting the business confided to us; neither betraying the secret of our friend, nor disappointing the confidence of our employer.

23. Archness! Ùmçwç; mildness; indulgence towards the weak and erring; patient suffering of injuries, without feeling a spirit of revenge; an even balance of all tempers and passions; the entire opposite to anger.

Temperance! Ëxκράτεια; continence, self-government or moderation, principally with regard to sensual or animal appetites. Moderation in eating, drinking, sleeping, &c.

Several very respectable MSS. as D¹ EFG, with the Vulgate, most copies of the Itala, and several of the Fathers, add Àçteta, chastity. This, we are sure, cannot be separated from the genuine Christian character, though it may be included in the word ἐκράτεια, continence or moderation, immediately preceding.

Against such there is no law! Those, whose lives are adorned by the above virtues, cannot be condemned by any law; for the whole purpose and design of the moral law of God is fulfilled in those who have the Spirit of God, producing in their hearts and lives the preceding fruits.

24. And they that are Christ's! All genuine Christians—have crucified the flesh—are so far from obeying its dictates, and acting under its influence, that they have crucified their sensual appetites, they have nailed them to the cross of Christ, where they have expired with him; hence, says St. Paul, Rom. vi. 6. our old man (the flesh with its affections and lusts) is crucified with him, that the body of sin might be destroyed, that henceforth we should not serve sin. By which we see that God has fully designed to save all who believe in Christ, from all sin, whether outward or inward; with all the effusions, raptures, irregular passions, and lusts, encephalitis, disorderly wishes and desires. All that a man may feel contrary to love and purity; and all that he may desire contrary to moderation, and that self-denial peculiar to the Christian character.

25. If we live in the Spirit! If we profess to believe a spiritual religion; let us walk in the Spirit; let us show in our lives and conversation that the Spirit of God dwells in us.

26. Let us not be desirous of vain glory] Κενοδοξία; let us not be vain-glorious, boasting of our attainments; vaunting ourselves to be superior to others; or seeking honour from those things which do not possess moral good—in birth, riches, eloquence, &c. &c.

Provoking one another] What this may refer to we cannot tell; whether to the Judaizing teachers, endeavouring to set themselves up beyond the apostle; and their attempts to lessen him in the people's eyes, that they might secure to themselves the public confidence; and thus destroy St. Paul's influence in the Galatian churches; or whether to some other matter in the internal economy of the church, we know not. But the exhortation is necessary for every Christian, and for every Christian church. He who professes to seek the honour that comes from God, should not be desirous of vain-glory. He who desires to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace, should not provoke another. He who knows that he never deserved any gift or blessing from God, should not envy another those blessings which the Divine goodness may have thought proper to bestow upon him. May not God do what he will with his own? If Christians in general would be content with the honour that comes from God; if they would take heed to give no provocations to their fellow-Christians; if they would cease from envying those on whom either God or man bestows honours or advantages; we should soon have a happier and more perfect state of the Christian church than we now see. Christianity requires us to esteem each other better than ourselves; or, in honour, to prefer one another. Had not such a disposition been necessary to the Christian character, and to the peace and perfection of the church of Christ, it would not have been so strongly recommended. But who lays this to heart; or even thinks that this is indispensably necessary to his salvation! Where this disposition lives not, there are both the seed and fruit of the flesh.

CHAPTER VI.

The apostle teaches them to be tender and affectionate towards any who through surprise, and the violence of temptation, had fallen into sin; and to bear each other's burdens, 1, 2. To think humbly of themselves, and to conclude concerning their own character rather from the evidence of their works, than from any thing else, 3-5. To minister to the support of those who instruct them in righteousness, 6. He warns them against self-deception, because whatever a man soweth, that he shall reap, 7, 8. Exhorts them not to be weary in well-doing, and to embrace every opportunity to do good, 9, 10. Intimates that his love to them led him to write this whole epistle with his own hand, 11. Points out the object that those had in view who wished them to be circumcised, 12, 13. He exalts in the cross of Christ, and asserts that a new creation of the soul is essential to its salvation; and wishes peace to them who act on this plan, 14-16. States that he bears in his body the marks of the Lord Jesus, 17. And concludes with his apostolical benediction, 18. [A. M. cir. 4056. A. D. cir. 52. A. H. C. 805. An. Imp. Claudii Cæsaris 12.]

NOTE—Verse 1. Brethren, if a man be overtaken] Εαν παροησθη; If he be surprised, seized on without warning; suddenly invaded; taken before he is aware; all these meanings the word has in connexions similar to this. Strabo, lib. xvi. page 1129, applies it to the rhinoceros, in its contests with the elephant: he suddenly rips up the belly of the elephant, αν ην παροησθη ην παροησθη, that he may not be surprised with his trunk. For should the elephant seize him with his trunk first, all resistance would be afterward in vain; therefore he endeavours to rip up the elephant's belly with the horn which is on his nose, in order to prevent this. It is used also by Arrian in Peripl. Mar. Eryth. page 164, and page 168, to signify a vessel being suddenly agitated and whirled by the waves, and then dashed on the rocks. See Kypke.

Ye which are spiritual] Ye who still retain the grace of the Gospel, and have wisdom and experience in Divine things;

Restore such an one] Καταρτιζε τον ταυτον: bring the man back into his place; it is a metaphor taken from a dislocated limb, brought back by the hand of a skillful and tender surgeon, into its place.

In the spirit of meekness] Use no severity nor haughty carriage towards him: as the man was suddenly overtaken, he is already deeply humbled and distressed; and needs much encouragement and lenient usage. There is a great difference between a man, who being suddenly assailed, falls into sin; and the man who transgressed in consequence of having walked in the council of the ungodly, or stood in the way of sinners.

Considering thyself] Σκοπον εαυτον; looking to thyself; as he fell through a moment of unwatchfulness, look about, that thou be not surprised; as he fell, so may thou; thou art now warned at his expense; therefore keep a good look out.

Lest thou also be tempted] And having had this warning, thou wilt have less to plead in extenuation of thy offence. It is no wonder if a harsh and cruel censurer of a weak backsliding brother, should be taught moderation and mercy by an awful proof of his own frailty. Such a one may justly dread the most violent attacks from the arch enemy; he will disgrace him if he can; and if he can overtake him, he will have no small triumph. Consider the possibility of such a case, and show the mercy and feeling which thou wouldst then wish to receive from another. From the consideration of what we are, what we have been, or what we may be, we should learn to be compassionate. The poet Mantuanus has set this in a fine light in his Elogium De honesto Amore:

Al commune malum; semel insanivimus omnes: Aut sumus, aut fuimus, aut possumus omne quod hic est.
“This is a common evil; at one time or other we have all done wrong. Either we are, or have been, or may be, as bad as he whom we condemn.”

2. Bear ye one another's burdens] Have sympathy; feel for each other; and consider the case of a distressed brother as your own.

And so fulfil the law of Christ] That law or commandment, Ye shall love one another; or that, Do unto all men

4. But let every man prove his own work, and then shall he have rejoicing in himself alone, and not in another.

5. For every man shall bear his own burden.

6. Let him that is taught in the word communicate unto him that teacheth in all good things.

7. Be not deceived; God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap.

as ye would they should do unto you. We should be as indulgent to the infirmities of others, as we can be consistently with truth and righteousness: our brother's infirmity may be his burden; and if we do not choose to help him to bear it, let us not reproach him because he is obliged to carry the load.

3. If a man think himself to be something] i. e. to be a proper Christian man; when he is nothing; being destitute of that charity which beareth, hopeth, and endureth all things. See 1 Cor. xiii. 1, &c. Those who suppose themselves to excel all others in piety, understanding, &c. while they are harsh, censorious, and overbearing, prove that they have not the charity that thinketh no evil; and, in the sight of God, are only as sounding brass and a tinkling cymbal. There are no people more censorious or uncharitable than those among some religious people, who pretend to more light and a deeper communion with God. They are generally carried away with a sort of sublime high-sounding phraseology, which seems to argue a wonderful deep acquaintance with Divine things; stripped of this, many of them are like Samson without his hair.

4. Prove his own work] Let him examine himself and his conduct by the words and example of Christ; and if he find that they bear this touchstone, then he shall have rejoicing in himself alone, feeling that he resembles his Lord and Master; and not in another; not derive his consolation from comparing himself with another, who may be weaker, or less instructed than himself. The only rule for a Christian is the words of Christ; the only pattern for his imitation, is the example of Christ. He should not compare himself with others: they are not his standard. Christ hath left us an example, that we should follow his steps.

5. Every man shall bear his own burden] All must answer for themselves, not for their neighbours. And every man must expect to be dealt with by the Divine Judge, as his character and conduct have been. The greater offences of another will not excuse thy smaller crimes. Every man must give account of himself to God.

6. Let him that is taught in the word] He who receives instructions in Christianity, by the public preaching of the word:

Communicate unto him that teacheth] Contribute to the support of the man who has dedicated himself to the work of the ministry, and who gives up his time and his life to preach the Gospel. It appears that some of the believers in Galatia could receive the Christian ministry, without contributing to its support. This is both ungrateful and base. We do not expect that a common school-master will give up his time to teach our children the alphabet, without being paid for it; and can we suppose that it is just for any person to sit under the preaching of the Gospel, in order to grow wise unto salvation by it, and not contribute to the support of the spiritual teacher? It is unjust.

7. Be not deceived] Neither deceive yourselves, nor permit yourselves to be deceived by others. He seems to refer to the Judaizing teachers.

God is not mocked] Ye cannot deceive him, and he will

8 * For he that soweth to his flesh, shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he that soweth to the Spirit, shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting.

9 And * let us not be weary in well doing; for in due season we shall reap, * if we faint not.

10 * As we have therefore opportunity, * let us do good unto all men, especially unto them who are of * the household of faith.

11 * Ye see how large a letter I have written unto you with mine own hand.

12 As many as desire to make a fair show in the flesh, * they constrain you to be circumcised * only lest they should * suffer persecution for the cross of Christ.

13 For, neither they themselves who are circumcised keep not permit you to mock him with pretended, instead of real services.

Whatsoever a man soweth] Whatsoever kind of grain a man sows in his field, of that shall he reap: for, no other species of grain can proceed from that which is sown. Darnel will not produce wheat, nor wheat darnel.

8. [He that soweth to his flesh.] In like manner, he that sows to the flesh, who indulges his sensual and animal appetites, shall have corruption as the crop; you cannot expect to lead a bad life and go to heaven at last. According as your present life is, so will be your eternal life: whether your sowing be to the flesh or to the Spirit, so will your eternal reaping be. To sow here, means transacting the concerns of a man's natural life. To reap, signifies his enjoyment or punishment in another world. Probably by flesh and spirit the apostle means Judaism and Christianity. Circumcision of the flesh was the principal rite of the former; circumcision in the heart, by the Spirit, the chief rite of the latter; hence the one may have been called flesh, the other spirit. He who rejects the Gospel, and trusts only in the rites and ceremonies of the law for salvation, will reap endless disappointment and misery. He who trusts in Christ, and receives the gifts and graces of the Holy Spirit, shall reap life everlasting.

9. Let us not be weary.] Well-doing is easier in itself than ill-doing; and the danger of growing weary in the former, arises only from the opposition to good, in our own nature; or the outward hindrances we may meet with, from a gain-saying and persecuting world.

In due season we shall reap.] As the husbandman, in ploughing, sowing, and variously labouring in his fields, is supported by the hope of a plentiful harvest, which he cannot expect before the right and appointed time; so every follower of God may be persuaded that he shall not be permitted to pray, weep, deny himself, and live in a conformity to his Master's will, without reaping the fruit of it in eternal glory. And although no man gets glory because he has prayed, yet yet none can expect glory who do not seek it in this way; this is sowing to the Spirit; and the Spirit and the grace are furnished by Christ Jesus, and by him the kingdom of heaven is opened to all believers; but only those who believe, love, and obey, shall enter into it.

10. As we have opportunity.] While it is the time of sowing, let us sow the good seed; and let our love be, as the love of Christ is, free, manifested to all. Let us help all who need help, according to the utmost of our power; but let the first objects of our regards be, those who are of the household of faith—the members of the church of Christ, who form one family, of which Jesus Christ is the head. Those have the first claims on our attention; but all others have their claims also; and therefore we should do good unto all.

11. Ye see how large a letter.] There is a strange diversity of opinions concerning the apostle's meaning in this place. Some think he refers to the length of the epistle, others to the largeness of the letters in which this epistle is written; others, to the inadequacy of the apostle's writing. It appears plain that most of his epistles were written by an amanuensis, and simply subscribed by himself; but the whole of the epistle to the Galatians was written by his own hand. To say that the apostle was unskilled in Greek, and especially in the Greek characters, is, in my opinion, absurd. He was born in Tarsus, a city which, according to Strabo, rivalled both Athens and Alexandria in philosophy, and in arts and sciences; and therefore he could not be ignorant of a tongue which must have been the very means of conveying all his instruction. As to writing it, there was in his time nothing difficult, because the uncia character was at that time alone in use in those days; and this character is as easily made as the capitals of the Roman alphabet, which have been taken from it. I conclude, therefore, that what the apostle says, must be understood of the length of the epistle; in all probability the largest he had ever written with his own hand; though several, much larger, have been dictated by him, but they were written by his scribe or amanuensis.

12. A fair show in the flesh.] The Jewish religion was general in the region of Galatia; and it was respectable, as it appears that the principal inhabitants were either Jews or proselytes. As it was then professed and practised among the Jews, this religion had nothing very grievous to the old man; an unenlightened nature might go through all its observances with little pain or cross-bearing. On the other hand, Chris-the law; but desire to have you circumcised, that they may glory in your flesh.

11 * But God forbid that I should glory, save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom the world is * crucified unto me, and I unto the world.

15 For, in Christ Jesus neither circumcision availeth anything, nor uncircumcision, but * a new creature.

16 * And as many as walk * according to this rule, peace be on them and mercy, and upon * the Israel of God.

17 From henceforth let no man trouble me: for I bear in my body the marks of the Lord Jesus.

18 Brethren, * the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with your spirit. Amen.

5 Unto the Galatians, written from Rome.

2 Ch. 5:11 & Phil. 3:18 & 1 Cor. 10:10, where, also see Rom. 6:6 & 1 Th. 2:20 & 11 Cor. 7:19, Ch. 5:6 & 6:11 & 2 Cor. 5:17 & 1 Pet. 1:12 & 5 & Phil. 1:16 & h. Rom. 2:20, 24, 12, 26, 6, 7 & h. 3:7, 9, 22. Phil. 3:5 & 1 Cor. 1:5 & 2:10 & 1 Th. 1:23 & Ch. 3:14 & Col. 1:4 & 2 Tim. 4:22. Titus 2:25.

tianity could not be very popular—it was too strict. A Jew made a fair show there, according to his carnal system; and it was a temptation to a weak Christian to swerve into Judaism, that he might be exempted from persecution, and be creditable among his countrymen. This is what the apostle intimates—"they constrain you to be circumcised, lest they should suffer persecution for the cross of Christ."

13. Neither they themselves who are circumcised.] They receive circumcision, and profess Judaism, not from a desire to be conformed to the will of God; but Judaism was popular, and the more converts the false teachers could make, the more occasion of glorying they had; and they wished to get those Christian converts who had been before proselytes of the gate, to receive circumcision, that they might glory in their flesh. Behold my converts! Thus they gloried, or boasted, not that the people were converted to God; but that they were circumcised.

14. But God forbid that I should glory.] Whatever others may do, or whatever they may exult or glory in, God forbid that I should exult, except in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ; in the grand doctrine, that justification and salvation are only through Christ crucified; he having made an atonement for the sin of the world by his passion and death. And I glory also in the disgrace and persecution which I experience through my attachment to this crucified Christ.

By whom the world is crucified unto me.] Jewish rites and Gentile vanities are equally insipid to me; I know them to be empty and worthless. If Jews and Gentiles despise me, I despise that in which they trust; through Jesus all are crucified to me; their objects of dependence are as vile and execrable to me, as I am to them, in whose sight these things are of great account.

15. In Christ Jesus.] Under the dispensation of the Gospel, of which he is head and supreme, neither circumcision; nothing that the Jew can boast of, nothing that the Gentile can call excellent, availeth any thing: can in the least contribute to the salvation of the soul.

But a new creature.] ΑΝΑ ΚΑΤΑΓΓΕΛΙΟΝ; but a new creation, not a new creature merely, (for this might be restrained by any new power or faculty), but a total renewal of the whole man; of all the powers and passions of the soul; and as creation could not be effected, but by the power of the Almighty; so this change cannot be effected but by the same energy; no circumcision can do this; only the power that made the man at first, can new make him. See the note on 1 Cor. vii. 19, and on 2 Cor. v. 17.

16. As many as walk according to this rule.] Το κατὰ τοὺς νόμους, this canon, viz. what is laid down in the preceding verses, that redemption is through the sacrifice of Christ; and that circumcision and uncircumcision are equally unavailable; and that none can be saved without being created anew. This is the grand canon or rule in Christianity.

Peace be on them.] Those who act from this conviction, will have the peace and mercy of God; for it is in this way that mercy is communicated, and peace obtained.

The Israel of God.] The true Christians; called here the Israel of God; to distinguish them from Israel according to the flesh. See the notes on Rom. ix. 22, and iv. 12.

17. From henceforth let no man trouble me.] Put an end to your contentions among yourselves; return to the pure doctrine of the Gospel; abandon those who are leading you astray; separate from the church those who corrupt and disturb it; and let me be grieved no longer with your defections from the truth.

I bear in my body the marks of the Lord Jesus.] The στίγματα, stigmata, of which the apostle speaks here, may be understood as implying either the scars of the wounds which he had received in the work of the ministry; and that he had such scars, we may well conceive, when we know that he had been scourged, stoned, and maltreated in a variety of ways. Or, the apostle may allude to the stigmata or marks which servants and slaves were often impressed, in order to ascertain whose property they were. Do not trouble me; I bear the marks of my Lord and Master, Jesus; I am his, and will remain so. You glory in your mark of circumcision, I glory in the marks which I bear in my body for the testimony of the Lord; I am an open, professed Christian, and have given full proof of my attachment to the cause of Christianity. The first sense appears to me the best: "I have suffered already sufficiently; I am suffering still; do not add any more to my afflictions."

18. The grace] Favour, benevolence, and continual influence of the Lord Jesus—be with your spirit; may it live in your heart, enlighten and change your souls, and be conspicuous in your life!

Amen! So let it be, and the prayer which I offer up for you on earth, may it be registered in heaven!

Unto the Galatians, written from Rome.] This, or the major part of it, is wanting in the best and most ancient MSS. Written from Rome, is wanting in ACOEFG, others. Claudius Antiochensis, has επαφης at Ephesus: Written from Ephesus. Some add, by the hands of Paul; others by Titus. The SYRIAC has, The end of the Epistle to the Galatians, which was written from the city of Rome. The ETHIOPIE, To the Galatians.—The Coptic, Written from Rome. The VULGATE, nothing. The ARABIC, Written from the city of Rome by Titus and Luke.

Little respect is to be paid to these subscriptions. The epistle was written by Paul himself, not Titus, Luke, nor Tychicus; and there is no evidence that it was written from Rome, but rather from Corinth or Ephesus. See the Preface.

The great similarity between the epistle to the Romans and that to the Galatians, has been remarked by many; and indeed it is so obvious, that the same mode of interpretation may be safely pursued in the elucidation of both; as not only the great subject, but the phraseology, in many respects, is the same. The design of the apostle is to show, that God has called the Gentiles to equal privileges with the Jews, pulling down the partition wall that had separated them and the Gentiles, calling all to believe in Christ Jesus, and forming out of the believers of both people, one holy and pure church, of which equally, himself was the head; none of either people having any preference to another, except what he might derive from his personal sanctity and superior usefulness. The calling of the Gentiles to this state of salvation, was the mystery which had been hidden from all ages, and concerning which the apostle has entered into such a laborious discussion in the Epistle to the Romans; justifying the reprobation as well as the election of the Jews; and vindicating both the justice and mercy of God in the election of the Gentiles. The same subjects are referred to in this epistle, but not in that detail of argumentation as in the former. In both, the national privileges of the Jews are a frequent object of consideration; and as these national privileges were intended to point out spiritual advantages, hence the terms which express them are used frequently in both these senses with no change; and it requires an attentive mind, and a proper knowledge of the analogy of faith, to discern when and where they are to be restricted exclusively to one or the other meaning; as well as where the one is intended to shadow forth the other; and where it is used as expressing what they ought to be, according to the spirit and tenor of their original calling.

Multitudes of interpreters of different sects and parties, have strangely mistaken both epistles, by not attending to these most necessary, and, to the unprejudiced, most obvious distinctions and principles. Expressions which point national privileges, have been used by them to point out those which were spiritual; and merely temporal advantages, or disadvantages, have been used in the sense of eternal blessings or miseries. Hence what has been spoken of the Jews in their national capacity, has been applied to the church of God in respect to its future destiny; and thus, out of the temporal election and reprobation of the Jews, the doctrine of the irrevocable and eternal election of a small part of mankind, and the unconditional and eternal reprobation of the far greater part of the human race, have been formed. The contentions produced by these misapprehensions among Christians have been uncharitable and destructive. In snatching at the shadow of religion in a great variety of metaphors and figures, the substance of Christianity has been lost; and the man who endeavours to draw the contending parties to a consistent and rational interpretation of those expressions, by showing the grand nature and design of these epistles, becomes a prey to the zealots of both parties! Where is truth in the mean time? It is fallen in the streets, and equity is gone backwards; for, the most sinister designs, and the most heterodox opinions have been attributed to those who, regarding the words of God only, have refused to swim with either torrent; and, without even consulting their own peculiar creed, have sought to find out the meaning of the inspired writers, and with simplicity of heart, and purity of conscience, to lay that meaning before mankind.

The Israelites were denominated a peculiar treasure unto God, above all people; a kingdom of priests, and a holy nation, Exod. xix. 5, 6. A holy people whom he had chosen to be a special people unto himself, above all the people who were upon the face of the earth, Deut. vii. 6. This was their calling, this was their profession; and this was their denomination; but how far they fell practically short of this character, their history most painfully proves. Yet still they were called a holy people, because called to holiness; Levit. xi. 44. 2. xx. 7; and separated from the impure and degrading idolatries of the neighbouring nations. Under the New Testament, all those who believe in Christ Jesus, are called to holiness; to have their fruit unto holiness, that their end may be eternal life; and hence they are called saints or holy persons. And the same epithets are applied to them as to the Israelites of old; they are lively stones, built up a spiritual house, a holy priesthood to offer up spiritual sacrifices acceptable to God through Christ; they are also called a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, a holy nation, a peculiar people, that should show forth the praises of him who had called them from darkness into his marvellous light, 1 Pet. ii. 5, 9. All this they were called to; all this was their profession; and to have all these excellencies was their indispensable privilege.

As they professed to be what God had called them to be, hence they are often denominated by their profession; and this denomination is given frequently to those who, in experience and practice, fall far short of the blessings and privileges of the Gospel. The church of Corinth, which was in many respects the most imperfect, as well as the most impure of all the apostolic churches, is nevertheless denominated the church of God, sanctified in Christ Jesus, and called to be saints, 1 Cor. i. 2. That there were many saints in the Corinthian church, and many sanctified in Christ Jesus both in it, and in the churches of Galatia, the slightest perusal of the epistles to those churches, will prove: but that there were many, and in the Galatian churches, the majority of a different character, none can doubt; yet they are all indiscriminately called the churches of God, saints, &c. And, even in those early times, saint appears to have been as general an appellation for a person professing faith in Christ Jesus, as the term Christian is at the present day, which is given to all who profess the Christian religion; and yet these terms, taken in their strict and proper sense, signify a holy person; and one who has the Spirit and mind of Christ.

In my notes on the Epistle to the Romans, I have entered at large into a discussion of the subjects to which I have referred in these observations; and, to set the subject in a clear point of view, I have made a copious extract from Dr. Taylor's Key to that epistle; and I have stated, that a consistent exposition of that epistle cannot be given but upon that plan: I am still of the same opinion; it is by attending to the above distinctions, which are most obvious to all unprejudiced persons, that we plainly see that the doctrines of eternal, unconditional reprobation, and election, and the impossibility of falling finally from the grace of God, have no foundation in the epistle to the Romans. Dr. Taylor has shown that the phrases and expressions, on which these doctrines are founded, refer to national privileges, and those exclusive advantages which the Jews, as God's peculiar people, enjoyed, during the time in which that peculiarity was designed to last; and that it is doing violence to the sense in which those expressions are generally used, to apply them to the support of such doctrines. In reference to this, I have quoted Dr. Taylor; and those illustrations of his which I have adopted, I have adopted on this ground; taking care never to pledge myself to any of his peculiar or heterodox opinions; and where I thought an expression might be misunderstood, I took care to guard it by a note or observation.

Now, I say that it is in this sense I understand the quotations I have made; and in this sense alone these quotations ought to be understood; and my whole work sufficiently shows that Dr. Taylor's peculiar theological system makes no part of mine; that, on the doctrine of the fall of man, or original sin; the doctrine of the eternal deity of Jesus Christ, the doctrine of justification by faith in the atoning blood, and the doctrine of the inspiration and regenerating influence of the Holy Ghost, we stand on two points of a vast circle, in diametrical opposition to each other. Yet this most distinguishing difference cannot blind me against the excellencies I find in the above work; nor can I meanly borrow from this or any other author, without acknowledging my obligation; nor could I suppress a name, however obnoxious that might be, as associated with any heterodox system, when I could mention it with deference and respect. Let this be my apology for quoting Dr. Taylor; and for the frequent use I have made of his industry and learning in my exposition of the Epistle to the Romans. If I have quoted to illustrate the Sacred Writings, passages almost innumerable from Greek and Roman heathens; from Jewish talmudists and Rabbinical expositors; from the Korân; from Mohammedan writers, both Arabic and Persian; and from Brahminical Polytheists; and these illustrations have been well received by the Christian public; surely I may have liberty to use, in the same way, the works of a very learned man, and a most conscientious believer in the books of Divine revelation, however erroneous he may appear to be in certain doctrines which I myself deem of vital importance to the creed of an experimental Christian. Let it not be said that, by thus largely quoting his work, I tacitly recommend an Arian creed; or any part of that system of theology peculiar to him and his party; I no more do so, than the Indian matron, who, while she gives the nourishing farina of the Cassava to her household, recommends them to drink the poisonous juice which she has previously expressed from it.

After this declaration, it will be as disingenuous as un-Christian for either friends or foes to attribute to me opinions which I never held; or an indifference to those doctrines, which, (I speak as a fool,) stand in no work of the kind, in any language, so fully explained, fortified, and demonstrated, as they do in that before the reader. On such a mode of judgment and condemnation as that to which some resort in matters of this kind, I might have long ago been reputed a Page or a Mohammedan, because I have quoted heathen writers, and the Korân. And, by the same mode of argumentation, St. Paul might be convicted of having abandoned his Jewish creed and Christian faith, because he had quoted the heathen poets Aratus and Cleantes. The man is entitled to my pity who refuses to take advantage of useful discoveries in the philosophical researches of Dr. Priestley, because Dr. Priestley, as a theologian, was not sound in the faith.

I have made that use of Dr. Taylor which I have done of others: and have reason to thank God that his Key, passing through several wards of a lock, which appeared to me inextricable, has enabled me to bring forth and exhibit, in a fair and luminous point of view, objects and meanings in the Epistle to the Romans, which, without this assistance, I had perhaps been unable to discover.

I may add further, that I have made that use of Dr. Taylor, which himself has recommended to his readers: some of his censurers will, perhaps, scarcely believe that the four following articles constitute the charge with which this learned man commences his theological lectures:—

I.—“I do solemnly charge you, in the name of the God of truth, and of our Lord Jesus Christ, who is the way, the truth, and the life; and before whose judgment seat you must, in no long time, appear; that in all your studies and inquiries of a religious nature, present or future, you do constantly, carefully, impartially, and conscientiously attend to evidence as it lies in the Holy Scriptures, or in the nature of things, and the dictates of reason: cautiously guarding against the sallies of imagination, and the fallacy of ill-grounded conjecture.

II.—“That you admit, embrace, or assent to no principle or sentiment by me taught or advanced, but only so far as it shall appear to you to be justified by proper evidence from revelation, or the reason of things.

III.—“That if, at any time hereafter, any principle or sentiment by me taught or advanced, or by you admitted and embraced, shall, upon impartial and faithful examination, appear to you to be dubious or false, you either suspect, or totally reject, such principle or sentiment.

IV.—“That you keep your mind always open to evidence; that you labour to bring your breast all prejudice, prepossession, and party zeal; that you study to live in peace and love with all your fellow Christians; and that you steadily assert for yourself, and freely allow to others, the unalienable rights of judgement and conscience.”—Taylor’s Scheme of Scripture Divinity, Preface, page vi.

Thus I have done with Dr. Taylor’s works; and thus I desire every intelligent reader to do with my own. When I was a child, I had for a lesson, the following words: Despise not advice even of the meanest; the cackling of geese once preserved the Roman state; and, since I became a man, I have learned wisdom from that saying, Blessed are ye who sow beside ALL WATERS; that send forth thither the feet of the ox and the ass. May he who is the Way, the Truth, and the Life, lead the reader into all truth, and bring him to life everlasting. Amen.

INTRODUCTION TO THE EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE TO THE EPHESIANS.

IN many points of view the Epistle to the Ephesians presents a variety of difficulties. A learned man calls it “the most inartificial piece of composition in the universe:” this is not correct, if it be intended to convey a censure on the composition itself; for the subject, (which is a vindication of the Providence and mercy of God, in admitting the Gentiles into his church, and forming one flock of them and the converted Jews, giving them the same privileges which his peculiar people had enjoyed almost exclusively for 2000 years,) has led the apostle to make such a variety of references to the Mosaic economy and its peculiarities, as, without this consideration, will make many parts of the epistle seem obscure to most readers, and this obscurity may be very improperly laid to the charge of inartificial composition: good judges, however, have allowed it to be one of the most sublime compositions of the kind, that ever came from the pen of man: this was the opinion of Grotius.

The subject in this, and the Epistle to the Colossians, is certainly the same; and, as it is supposed that they were written about the same time, it is natural to expect a similarity of expression. This subject, and others connected with these epistles, Dr. Paley has discussed with his usual sagacity; the substance of whose reasonings I beg leave to present to the reader.

SECT. I.—This epistle, and the Epistle to the Colossians, appear to have been transmitted to their respective churches by the same messenger: “But that ye also may know my affairs, and how I do, Tychicus, a beloved brother and faithful minister in the Lord, shall make known to you all things; whom I have sent unto you for the same purpose, that ye might know our affairs, and that he might comfort your hearts.”—Ephes. chap. vi. 21, 22. This text, if it do not expressly declare, clearly (I think) intimates, that the letter was sent by Tychicus. The words made use of in the Epistle to the Colossians are very similar to these, and afford the same implication that Tychicus, in conjunction with Onesimus, was the bearer of the letter to that church: “All my state shall Tychicus declare unto you, who is a beloved brother, and a faithful minister, and fellow-servant in the Lord; whom I have sent unto you for the same purpose, that he might know your estate, and comfort your hearts; with Onesimus, a faithful and beloved brother, who is one of you. They shall make known unto you all things which are done here.”—Colos. chap. iv. 7–9. Both epistles represent the writer as under imprisonment for the Gospel; and both treat of the same general subject. The Epistle, therefore, to the Ephesians, and by the same person, at, or nearly at, the same time, and upon the same subject, and to have been sent by the same messenger. Now, every thing in the sentiments, order, and diction of the two writings, corresponds with what might be expected from this circumstance of identity or cognation in their original. The leading doctrine of both epistles is the union of Jews and Gentiles under the Christian dispensation; and that doctrine in both is established by the same arguments, or, more properly speaking, illustrated by the same similitudes: “one head,” “one body,” “one new man,” “one temple” are, in both epistles, the figures under which the society of believers in Christ, and their common relation to him as such, is represented. The ancient, and, as had been thought, the indelible distinction between Jew and Gentile, in both epistles, is declared to be “now abolished by his cross.” Beside this consent in the general tenor of the two epistles, and in the run also and warmth of thought with which they are composed, we may naturally expect in letters produced under the circumstances in which these appear to have been written, a closer resemblance of style and diction, than between other letters of the same person, but of distant dates, or between letters adapted to different occasions. In particular, we may look for many of the same expressions, and sometimes for whole sentences being alike; since such expressions and sentences would be repeated in the second letter (whichever that was) as yet fresh in the author’s mind from the writing of the first. This repetition occurs in the following examples:

Ephes. ch. i. 7.—“In whom we have redemption through his blood, the forgiveness of sins.” Colos. ch. i. 14.—“In whom we have redemption through his blood, the forgiveness of sins.” Besides the sameness of the words, it is farther remarkable that the sentence is, in both places, preceded by the same introductory idea. In the Epistle to the Ephesians, it is the “beloved” (ἡ ἀγαπητός); in that to the Colossians it is “his dear Son,” (Ἰου τὸν ἀγαπῶντα), the Son of his love, “in whom we have redemption.” The sentence appears to have been suggested to the mind of the writer, by the idea which had accompanied it before.

Ephes. ch. i. 10.—“All things, both which are in heaven and which are in earth, even in him.” Colos. chap. i. 20.—“All things by him, whether they be things in earth, or things in heaven.” This quotation is the more observable, because the connecting of things in earth with things in heaven, is a very singular sentiment, and found no where else but in these two epistles. The words are also introduced and followed by a train of thought nearly alike. They are introduced by describing the union which Christ had effected; and they are followed by telling the Gentile churches that they were incorporated into it.

Ephes. ch. iii. 2.—“The dispensation of the grace of God, which is given me to you-ward.” Colos. ch. i. 25.—“The dispensation of God, which is given to me for you.” Of these sentences it may likewise be observed, that the accompanying ideas are similar. In both places they are immediately preceded by the mention of his present sufferings; in both places they are immediately followed by the mention of the mystery which was the great subject of his preaching.

Ephes. ch. v. 19.—“In psalms, and hymns, and spiritual songs, singing and making melody in your heart to the Lord.” Colos. ch. iii. 16.—“In psalms, and hymns, and spiritual songs, singing with grace in your hearts to the Lord.” Ephes. ch. vi. 22.—“Whom I have sent unto you for the same purpose, that ye might know our affairs, and that he might comfort your hearts.” Colos. ch. iv. 8.—“Whom I have sent unto you for the same purpose, that he might know your estate, and comfort your hearts.” In these examples, we do not perceive a cento of phrases gathered from one composition, and strung together in the other; but the occasional occurrence of the same expression to a mind a second time revolving the same ideas.

2. Whoever writes two letters, or two discourses, nearly upon the same subject, and at no great distance of time, but without any express recollection of what he had written before, will find himself repeating some sentences, in the very order of the words in which he had already used them: but he will more frequently find himself employing some principal terms, with the order inadvertently changed, or with the order disturbed by the intermixture of other words and phrases expressive of ideas rising up at the time; or in many instances, repeating not single words, nor yet whole sentences, but parts and fragments of sentences. Of all these varieties, the examination of these two epistles will furnish plain examples: and I should rely upon this class of instances more than upon the last: because, although an impostor might transcribe into a forgery entire sentences and phrases; yet the dislocation of words, the partial recollection of phrases and sentences, the intermixture of new terms and new ideas with terms and ideas before used, which will appear in the examples that follow, and which are the natural properties of writings produced under the circumstances in which these epistles are represented to have been composed, would not, I think, have occurred to the invention of a forger; nor, if they had occurred, would they have been so easily executed. This studied variation was a refinement in forgery which I believe did not exist; or, if we can suppose it to have been practised in the instances adduced below, why, it may be asked, was not the same art exercised upon those which we have collected in the preceding class?

Ephes. ch. i. 19, ch. ii. 5.—“Towards us who believe according to the working of his mighty power, which he wrought in Christ, when he raised him from the dead (and set him at his own right hand in the heavenly places, far above all principality, and power, and might, and dominion, and every name that is named, not only in this world, but in that which is to come. And hath put all things under his feet; and gave him to be the head over all things, to the church, which is his body, the fulness of all things, that filleth all in all); and you hath he quickened, who were dead in trespasses and sins (wherein in time past ye walked according to the course of this world, according to the prince of the power of the air, the spirit that now worketh in the children of disobedience; among whom also we had all our conversation, in times past, in the lusts of our flesh, fulfilling the desires of the flesh and of the mind, and were by nature the children of wrath, even as others. But God, who is rich in mercy, for his great love wherewithal he loved us,) even when we were dead in sins, hath quickened us together with Christ.”

Colos. ch. ii. 12, 13.—“Through the faith of the operation of God, who hath raised him from the dead, and you being dead in your sins and the uncircumcision of the flesh, hath he quickened together with him.”

Out of the long quotation from the Ephesians, take away the parentheses, and you have left a sentence almost in terms the same as the short quotation from the Colossians. The resemblance is more visible in the original than in our translation; for what is rendered in one place “the working,” and in another the “operation,” is the same Greek term, energeia; in one place it is, τὸς πιστεύοντος κατὰ τὴν ἐνέργειαν; in the other, διὰ τῆς πίστεως τῆς ἐνέργειας. Here, therefore, we have the same sentiment, and nearly in the same words; but, in the Ephesians, twice broken or interrupted by incidental thoughts, which St. Paul, as his manner was, enlarges upon by the way, and then returns to the thread of his discourse. It is interrupted the first time by a view which breaks in upon his mind of the exaltation of Christ; and the second time by a description of heathen depravity. I have only to remark, that Griesbach, in his very accurate edition, gives the parentheses very nearly in the same manner in which they are here placed; and that without any respect to the comparison which we are proposing.

Ephes. ch. iv. 2-4.—“With all lowliness and meekness, with long-suffering, forbearing one another in love; endeavouring to keep the unity of the Spirit, in the bond of peace. There is one body and one Spirit, even as ye are called in one hope of your calling.”

Colos. ch. iii. 12-15.—“Put on therefore, as the elect of God, holy and beloved, bonds of mercies, kindness, humbleness of mind, meekness, long-suffering, forbearing one another and forgiving one another; if any man have a quarrel against any, even as Christ forgave you, so also do ye; and above all these things, put on charity, which is the bond of perfectness; and let the peace of God rule in your hearts, to the which also ye are called in one body.”

In these two quotations, the words ὑποταγήσονται, πραῖτες, μακροθυμία, ἀνεχόμενοι ἀλλήλους, ὑποταγήσονται, πραῖτες, μακροθυμία, ἀνεχόμενοι ἀλλήλους, lowliness, meekness, long-suffering, forbearing one another, occur in exactly the same order: ἀγαπᾶτε, love, is also found in both, but in a different connexion; συνδεσμός τῆς εἰρήνης, the bond of peace, answers to συνδεσμός τῆς ἐλπίδος, the bond of hope; ἐκλήθητε ἐν ἑνὶ σώματι, called into one spirit, to ἐν σώμα κληθεὶς καὶ ἐκκληθήσεσθε ἐν ἑνὶ ἐκκλῆσι, one body, even as ye are called into one hope; yet is this similitude found in the midst of sentences otherwise very different.

Ephes. ch. iv. 16.—“From whom the whole body fitly joined together, and compacted by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part, maketh increase of the body.”

Colos. ch. ii. 19.—“From which all the body, by joints and bands, having nourishment ministered and knit together, increaseth with the increase of God.”

In these quotations are read ἐξ ὧν πᾶν τὸ σῶμα συνβιβάζεται, from whom the whole body fitly joined together, in both places: ἐπικρηρῶσιν answering to ἐπικρηρῶσι; διὰ τῶν ὀφθαλμῶν to διὰ πάσης ὁράσεως; αὐξήσιν τὴν αὐξήσιν to πλεῖται τὴν αὐξήσιν; and yet the sentences are considerably diversified in other parts.

Ephes. ch. iv. 32.—“And be kind one to another, tender-hearted, forgiving one another, even as God, for Christ's sake, hath forgiven you.”

Colos. ch. iii. 13.—“Forbearing one another, and forgiving one another; if any man have a quarrel against any, even as Christ forgave you, so also do ye.”

Here we have “forgiving one another, even as God, for Christ's sake, (ἐν Χριστῷ) hath forgiven you,” in the first quotation, substantially repeated in the second. But in the second the sentence is broken by the interposition of a new clause, “if any man have a quarrel against any;” and the latter part is a little varied; instead of “God in Christ,” it is “Christ hath forgiven you.”

Ephes. ch. iv. 22-24.—“That ye put off concerning the former conversation the old man, which is corrupt according to the deceitful lusts, and be renewed in the spirit of your mind; and that ye put on the new man, which, after God, is created in righteousness and true holiness.”

Colos. ch. iii. 9, 10.—“Seeing that ye have put off the old man with his deeds, and have put on the new man, which is renewed in knowledge, after the image of him that created him.”

In these quotations, “putting off the old man, and putting on the new,” appears in both. The idea is farther explained by calling it a renewal; in the one, “renewed in the spirit of your mind,” in the other, “renewed in knowledge.” In both, the new man is said to be formed according to the same model; in the one, he is “after God created in righteousness and true holiness,” in the other, “he is renewed after the image of him who created him.” In a word, it is the same person writing upon a kindred subject, with the terms and ideas which he had before employed, still floating in his memory.

In these comparisons, we often perceive the reasons, why the writer, though expressing the same idea, uses a different term; namely, because the term before used is employed in the sentence under a different form; thus, in the quotations under our eye, the new man is καὶνὸς ἀνθρώπος in the Ephesians, and τὸν νέον in the Colossians; but then it is because τὸν καινόν is used in the next word, ἀνακαταστήσειν, being renewed.

Ephes. chap. v. 6-8.—“Because of these things cometh the wrath of God upon the children of disobedience: be not ye therefore partakers with them; for ye were sometimes darkness, but now are ye light in the Lord: walk as children of light.”

Colos. ch. iii. 6-8.—“For which things' sake the wrath of God cometh on the children of disobedience; in the which ye also walked some time, when ye lived in them. But now ye also put off all these.”

These verses afford a specimen of that partial resemblance which is only to be met with when no imitation is designed, when no studied recollection is employed; but when the mind, exercised upon the same subject, is left to the spontaneous return of such terms and phrases, as, having been used before, may happen to present themselves again. The sentiment of both passages is throughout alike; half of that sentiment, the denunciation of God's wrath, is expressed in identical words; the other half, viz. the admonition to quit their former conversation, in words entirely different.

Ephes. ch. v. 15, 16.—“See then that ye walk circumspectly; not as fools, but as wise, redeeming the time.”

Colos. ch. iv. 5.—“Walk in wisdom towards them that are without, redeeming the time.”

This is another example of that mixture which we remarked of sameness and variety in the language of one writer. “Redeeming the time” (ἐξυστεράζοντες τὸν καιρὸν), is a literal repetition.

“Walk not as fools, but as wise” (περιπατεῖτε μὴ ὡς σοφοὶ ἀλλ' ὡς σοφίαι), answers exactly in sense, and nearly in terms, to “walk in wisdom,” (ἐν σοφίᾳ περιπατεῖτε). Περιπατεῖτε ἀκούθως, is the same idea as περιπατεῖτε πῶς τὸν ἔξω. Ακούθως, is not well rendered “circumspectly.” It means what in modern speech we should call “correctly,” and when we advise a person to behave “correctly,” our advice is always given with a reference “to the opinion of others,” πῶς τὸν ἔξω. “Walk correctly, redeeming the time,” i. e. suiting yourselves to the difficulty and ticklishness of the times in which we live, “because the days are evil.”

Ephes. ch. vi. 19, 20.—“And (praying for us, that utterance may be given unto me, that I may open my mouth boldly to make known the mystery of the Gospel, for which I am an ambassador in bonds, that therein I may speak boldly, as I ought to speak.”

Colos. ch. iv. 3, 4.—“Withal praying also for us that God would open unto us a door of utterance to speak the mystery of Christ, for which I am also in bonds, that I may make it manifest as I ought to speak.”

In these quotations, the phrase, “as I ought to speak” (ὡς δεῖ με λαλῆσαι), the words “utterance” (λογίαι), “a mystery” (μυστήριον), “open” (ἀνοίξῃ and ἐν ἀνοίξει), are the same. “To make known the mystery of the Gospel” (γνοσθεῖται τὸ μυστήριον) answers to “make it manifest” (ὡς φανερώσω αὐτό); “for which I am an ambassador in bonds” (ἕπερ ὅν πρεσβεῖω ἐν δέσμοις), for “to which I am also in bonds” (ὅτι ὁ καὶ ἐδεσμαι).

Ephes. ch. v. 22.—“Wives submit yourselves to your own husbands, as unto the Lord, for the husband is the head of the wife, even as Christ is the head of the church, and he is the saviour of the body.” Therefore, as the church is subject unto Christ, so let the wives be to their own husbands in every thing. Husbands, love your wives, even as Christ also loved the church, and gave himself for it, that he might sanctify and cleanse it with the washing of water by the word; that he might present it to himself a glorious church, not having spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing; but that it should be holy and without blemish. So ought men to love their wives as their own bodies. He that loveth his wife, loveth himself; for no man ever yet hated his own flesh, but nourisheth and cherisheth it, even as the Lord the church; for we are members of his body, of his flesh, and of his bones. For this cause shall a man leave his father and his mother, and be joined unto his wife, and they two shall be one flesh. This is a great mystery; but I speak concerning Christ and the church. Nevertheless, let every one of you in particular so love his wife even as himself: and the wife see that she reverence her husband. Children, obey your parents in the Lord, for this is right. Honour thy father and thy mother (which is the first commandment with promise), that it may be well with thee, and that thou mayest live long on the earth. And ye, fathers, provoke not your children to wrath, but bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. Servants, be obedient to them that are your masters according to the flesh, with fear and trembling, in singleness of your heart, as unto Christ; not with eye-service, as men-pleasers, but as the servants of Christ, doing the will of God from the heart; with good-will doing service, as to the Lord, and not to men; knowing that whosoever doeth what any man doeth, the same shall be receive of the Lord, whether he be bond or free. And ye, masters, do the same things unto them, forbearing threatening; knowing that your Master also is in heaven, neither is there respect of persons with him.”

Colos. ch. iii. 18.—“Wives, submit yourselves unto your own husbands, as it is in the Lord. Husbands, love your wives, and be not bitter against them. Children, obey your parents in all things, for this is well pleasing unto the Lord. Fathers, provoke not your children to anger, lest they be discouraged. Servants, obey in all things your masters according to the flesh; not with eye-service, as men-pleasers, but in singleness of heart, fearing God; and whatever ye do, do it heartily, as to the Lord, and not unto men, knowing that of the Lord ye shall receive the reward of the inheritance; for ye serve the Lord Christ. But he that doeth wrong shall receive for the wrong which he hath done; and there is no respect of persons. Masters, give unto your servants that which is just and equal, knowing that ye also have a Master in heaven.”

The passages marked by Italics in the quotation from the Ephesians, bear a strict resemblance, not only in signification but in terms, to the quotation from the Colossians. Both the words, and the order of the words, are in many clauses a duplicate of one another. In the Epistle to the Colossians, these passages are put together; in that to the Ephesians, they are divided by intermediate matter, especially by a long digressive allusion to the mysterious union between Christ and his church; which, possessing, as Mr. Locke hath well observed, the mind of the apostle, from being an incidental thought, grows up into the principal subject. The affinity between these two passages in signification, in terms, and in the order of the words, is closer than can be pointed out between any parts of any two epistles in the volume.

If the reader would see how the same subject is treated by a different hand, and how distinguishable it is from the production of the same pen, let him turn to the second and third chapters of the First Epistle of St. Peter. The duties of servants, of wives, and of husbands, are enlarged upon in that epistle, as they are in the Epistle to the Ephesians; but the subjects both occur in a different order, and the train of sentiment subjoined to each is totally unlike.

3. In two letters issuing from the same person, nearly at the same time, and upon the same general occasion, we may expect to trace the influence of association in the order in which the topics follow one another. Certain ideas universally or usually suggest others. Here the order is what we call natural, and from such an order nothing can be concluded. But when the order is arbitrary, yet alike, the concurrence indicates the effect of that principle, by which ideas, which have been once joined, commonly revisit the thoughts together. The epistles under consideration furnish the two following remarkable instances of this species of agreement.

Ephes. ch. iv. 21.—“And that ye put on the new man, which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness; wherefore putting away lying, speak every man truth with his neighbour, for we are members one of another.”

Colos. ch. iii. 9.—“Lie not one to another; seeing that ye have put off the old man with his deeds; and have put on the new man, which is renewed in knowledge.”

The vice of “lying,” or a correction of that vice, does not seem to bear any nearer relation to the “putting on the new man,” than a reformation in any other article of morals. Yet these two ideas we see stand in both epistles in immediate connexion.

Ephes. ch. v. 20, 21, 22.—“Giving thanks always for all things unto God and the Father, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ; submitting yourselves one to another, in the fear of God. Wives, submit yourselves unto your own husbands, as unto the Lord.”

Colos. ch. iii. 17.—“Whatsoever ye do, in word or deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus, giving thanks to God and the Father by him. Wives, submit yourselves unto your own husbands, as it is fit in the Lord.”

In both these passages, submission follows giving of thanks, without any similitude in the ideas which should account for the transition.

It is not necessary to pursue the comparison between the two epistles farther. The argument which results from it stands thus: No two other epistles contain a circumstance which indicates that they were written at the same, or nearly at the same time. No two other epistles exhibit so many marks of correspondency and resemblance. If the original which we ascribe to these two epistles be the true one, that is, if they were both really written by St. Paul, and both sent to their respective destination by the same messenger, the similitude is, in all points, what should be expected to take place. If they were forgeries, then the mention of Tychicus in both epistles, and in a manner which shows that he either carried or accompanied both epistles, was inserted for the purpose of accounting for their similitude; or else the structure of the epistles was designedly adapted to the circumstance; or, lastly, the conformity between the contents of the forgeries, and what is thus directly intimated concerning their date, was only a happy accident. Not one of these three suppositions will gain credit with a reader who peruses the epistles with attention, and who reviews the several examples we have pointed out, and the observations with which they are accompanied.

SECTION II.—There is such a thing as a peculiar word or phrase cleaving, as it were, to the memory of a writer or speaker, and presenting itself to his utterance at every turn. When we observe this, we call it a cant word, or a cant phrase. It is a natural effect of habit; and would appear more frequently than it does, had not the rules of good writing taught the ear to be offended with the iteration of the same sound, and oftentimes caused us to reject, on that account, the word which offered itself first to our recollection. With a writer who, like St. Paul, either knew not these rules, or disregarded them, such words will not be avoided. The truth is, an example of this kind runs through several of his epistles, and in the epistle before us abounds; and that is in the word riches, (πλοῦτος) used metaphorically as an augmentative of the idea to which it happens to be subjoined. Thus, “the riches of his glory,” “his riches in glory,” “riches of the glory of his inheritance,” “riches of the glory of this mystery,” Rom. ch. ix. 23. Ephes. ch. iii. 16. Ephes. ch. i. 18. Colos. ch. i. 27; “riches of his grace,” twice in the Ephesians, ch. i. 7, and ch. ii. 7; “riches of the full assurance of understanding,” Colos. ch. ii. 2; “riches of his goodness,” Rom. ch. ii. 4; “riches of the wisdom of God,” Rom. ch. xi. 33; “riches of Christ,” Ephes. ch. iii. 8. In a like sense the adjective, Rom. ch. x. 12, “rich unto all that call upon him,” Ephes. ch. iii. 4, “rich in mercy,” 1 Tim. ch. vi. 18, “rich in good works,” &c. Also the adverb Colos. ch. iii. 16, “let the word of Christ dwell in you richly.” This figurative use of the word, though so familiar to St. Paul, does not occur in any part of the New Testament, except once in the Epistle of St. James, ch. ii. 5, “Hath not God chosen the poor of this world, rich in faith?” where it is manifestly suggested by the antithesis. I propose the frequent, yet so eminently unadvised use of this phrase, in the epistle before us, as an internal mark of its genuineness.

SECTION III.—There is another singularity in St. Paul’s style, which, wherever it is found, may be deemed a badge of authenticity; because, if it were noticed, it would not, I think, be imitated, inasmuch as it almost always produces embarrassment and interruption in the reasoning. This singularity is a species of digression which may probably, I think, be denominated going off at a word. It is turning aside from the subject upon the occurrence of some particular word, forsaking the train of thought then in hand, and entering upon a parenthetical sentence in which that word is the prevailing term. I shall lay before the reader some examples of this, collected from the other epistles, and then propose two examples of it which are found in the Epistle to the Ephesians. 2 Cor. ch. ii. 11. at the word salvance: “*Now thanks be unto God, which always causeth us to triumph in Christ, and maketh manifest the salvance of his knowledge by us in every place (for we are unto God a sweet salvance of Christ, in them that are saved, and in them that perish; to the one we are the salvance of death unto death, and to the other the salvance of life unto life; and who is sufficient for these things?) For we are not as many which corrupt the word of God, but as of sincerity, but as of God; in the sight of God we speak with sincerity.*” Again, 2 Cor. ch. iii. 1. at the word epistle: “*Need we, as some others, epistles of commendation to you, or of commendation from you? (ye are our epistle written in our hearts, known and read of all men; forasmuch as ye are manifestly declared to be the epistle of Christ, ministered by us, written not with ink, but with the Spirit of the living God; not in tables of stone, but in the fleshy tables of the heart.) The position of the words in the original, shows more strongly than in the translation, that it was the occurrence of the word επιστολή which gave birth to the sentence that follows: 2 Cor.*

ch. iii. 1. Εἰ μὴ χρηζόμεν, ὡς τινες, συστατικοὶ ἐπιστολῶν πρὸς ἡμᾶς, ἢ ἐκ τῶν συστατικῶν; ἢ ἐπιστολὴ ἥρῳν ἦναι ἐστὶ ἐν τῇ γραμμῇ ἐν ταῖς κυσθαῖς ἡμῶν, γινώσκουσα καὶ ἀναγινώσκουσα ὑπο πάντων ἀνθρώπων, περιγερμένη ὅτι ἐστὶ ἐπιστολὴ Χριστοῦ διακορυφείσα ὑμῶν ἡμῶν, ἐν τῇ περιγερμένῃ ἢ μὴ λανθῇ, ἀλλὰ πνευματικῇ Θεοῦ (ὡς οὐκ ἐν πλατῇ λανθάνεις, ἀλλ' ἐν πλατῇ καρδίας σαρκινῆς).

Again, 2 Cor. ch. iii. 12, &c., at the word veil: "Seeing then that we have such hope, we use great plainness of speech: and not as Moses, which put a veil over his face, that the children of Israel could not steadfastly look to the end of that which is abolished. But their minds were blinded; for until this day remaineth the same veil untaken away in the reading of the Old Testament, which veil is done away in Christ; but even unto this day, when Moses is read, the veil is upon their heart: nevertheless, when it shall turn to the Lord, the veil shall be taken away (now the Lord is that Spirit; and where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty.) But we all with open face, beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord. Therefore, seeing we have this ministry, as we have received mercy, we faint not."

Who sees not that this whole allegory of the veil arises entirely out of the occurrence of the word, in telling us that "Moses put a veil over his face," and that it drew the apostle away from the proper subject of his discourse, the dignity of the office in which he was engaged? which subject he fetches up again almost in the words with which he had left it: "Therefore, seeing we have this ministry, as we have received mercy, we faint not." The sentence which he had before been going on with, and in which he had been interrupted by the veil, was, "Seeing then that we have such hope, we use great plainness of speech."

In the Epistle to the Ephesians, the reader will remark two instances in which the same habit of composition obtains; he will recognise the same pen. One he will find, chap. iv. 8—11, at the word ascended: "Wherefore he saith, When he ascended up on high, he led captivity captive, and gave gifts unto men. (Now that he ascended, what is it but that he also descended first unto the lower parts of the earth? He that descended is the same also that ascended up far above all heavens, that he might fill all things.) And he gave some apostles," &c.

The other appears, chap. v. 12—15, at the word light: "For it is a shame even to speak of those things which are done of them in secret: but all things that are reprov'd are made manifest by the light; (for whatsoever doth make manifest, is light); wherefore he saith, Awake, thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light); see then that ye walk circumspectly."

SECTION. IV.—As our epistle purports to have been written during St. Paul's imprisonment at Rome, which lies beyond the period to which the Acts of the Apostles brings up his history; and as we have seen and acknowledge that the epistle contains no reference to any transaction at Ephesus during the apostle's residence in that city, we cannot expect that it should supply many marks of agreement with the narrative. One coincidence, however, occurs, and a coincidence of that minute and less obvious kind, which, as hath been repeatedly observed, is of all others the most to be relied upon.

Chap. vi. 19, 20, we read, "praying for me, that I may open my mouth boldly, to make known the mystery of the Gospel, for which I am an ambassador in bonds;" "In bonds," ἐν ἀλυσσιν, in a chain. In the twenty-eighth chapter of the Acts we are informed, that Paul, after his arrival at Rome, was suffered to dwell by himself with a soldier that kept him. Dr. Lardner has shown that this mode of custody was in use amongst the Romans, and that whenever it was adopted, the prisoner was bound to the soldier by a single chain: in reference to which St. Paul, in the twentieth verse of this chapter, tells the Jews, whom he had assembled, "For this cause, therefore, have I called for you to see you, and to speak with you, because that for the hope of Israel, I am bound with this chain;" τὴν ἀλυσιν ταύτην περιεμῖται. It is in exact conformity therewith with the truth of St. Paul's situation at the time, that he declares of himself in the epistle, πρῆσβυτος ἐν ἀλυσσι. And the exactness is the more remarkable, as ἀλυσσις (a chain) is no where used in the singular number to express any other kind of custody. When the prisoner's hands or feet were bound together, the word was δεσμεῖν (bonds) Acts xxvi. 29. When the prisoner was confined between two soldiers, as in the case of Peter, Acts, chap. xii. 6, two chains were employed; and it is said, upon his miraculous deliverance, that the "chains" (ἀλυσσίδες, in the plural), "fell from his hands."

If it can be suspected that the writer of the present epistle, who in no other particular appears to have availed himself of the information concerning St. Paul delivered in the Acts, had, in this verse, borrowed the word which he read in that book, and had adapted his expression to what he found there recorded of St. Paul's treatment at Rome: in short, that the coincidence here noted was effected by craft and design; I think it a strong reply to remark, that in the parallel passage of the Epistle to the Colossians, the same allusion is not preserved; the words there are, "praying also for us, that God would open unto us a door of utterance to speak the mystery of Christ, of which I am also in bonds;" ὅτι ὁ καὶ δεσμεῖται. After what has been shown in a preceding section, there can be little doubt that these two epistles were written by the same person.

PREFACE TO

THE EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE TO THE EPHESIANS.

EPHESUS was a city of Ionía, in Asia Minor, and once the metropolis of that part of the world. The ancient city was situated at the mouth of the river Cayster, on the shore of the Ægean Sea, about 50 miles south of Smyrna. The Ephesus in which St. Paul founded a church, and which for a time flourished gloriously, was not the ancient Ephesus, for that was destroyed, and a new city of the same name was built by Lysinachus.

This most famous of all the Asiatic cities, is now a miserable village, composed of mean huts, formed out of the ruins of its once magnificent structures, and these huts are now the residence of about 40 or 50 Turkish families, without a single Christian among them! For other particulars, see the note on Acts xviii. 19.

It is, however, a doubt with many learned men, whether this epistle was sent to the church at Ephesus. They think that the proper direction is, the epistle of St. Paul to the Laodiceans; and suppose it to be the same which the apostle mentions, Col. i. 16. When this epistle is read among you, cause that it be read also in the church of the Laodiceans; and that ye likewise read the epistle from Laodicea. Dr. Paley's arguments in the affirmative are entitled to much regard.

"Although it does not appear to have ever been disputed that the epistle before us was written by St. Paul; yet it is well known that a doubt has long been entertained concerning the persons to whom it was addressed. The question is founded partly in some ambiguity in the external evidence. Marcion, a heretic of the second century, as quoted by Tertullian, a father in the beginning of the third, calls it the epistle to the Laodiceans. From what we know of Marcion, his judgment is little to be relied upon; nor is it perfectly clear that Marcion was rightly understood by Tertullian. If, however, Marcion be brought to prove that some copies in his time gave εἰς Λαοδικεῖαν in the superscription, his testimony, if it be truly interpreted, is not diminished by his heresy; for, as Grotius observes, cur in eâ re mentiretur nihil erat causæ? The name εἰς Εφεσόν, in Ephesus, in the first verse, upon which word singly depends the proof that the epistle was written to the Ephesians, is not read in all the manuscripts now extant. Indeed, however, that the external evidence preponderates with a manifest excess on the side of the received reading. The objection therefore principally arises from the contents of the epistle itself, which, in many respects, militate with the supposition that it was written to the church of Ephesus. According to the history, St. Paul had passed two whole years at Ephesus. Acts, ch. xix. 10. And in this point, viz. of St. Paul having preached for a considerable length of time at Ephesus, the history is confirmed by the two Epistles to the Corinthians, and by the two Epistles to Timothy. 'I will tarry at Ephesus until Pentecost,' 1 Cor. ch. xvi. ver. 8. 'We would not have you ignorant of our trouble which came to us in Asia,' 2 Cor. ch. i. 8. 'As I besought thee to abide still at Ephesus, when I went into Macedonia,' 1 Tim. ch. i. 3. 'And in how many things he ministered to me at Ephesus thou knowest well,' 2 Tim. ch. i. 18. I adduce these testimonies, because, had it been a competition of credit between the history and the epistle, I should have thought myself bound to have preferred the epistle. Now, every epistle which St. Paul wrote to churches which he himself had founded, or which he had visited, abounds with references and appeals to what had passed during the time that he was present amongst them; whereas there is not a text in the Epistle to the Ephesians, from which we can collect that he had ever been at Ephesus at all. The two Epistles to the Corinthians, the Epistle to the Galatians, the Epistle to the Philippians, and the two Epistles to the Thessalonians, are of this class; and they are full of allusions to the apostle's history; his reception and his conduct whilst amongst them; the total want of which, in the epistle before us, is very difficult to account for, if it was in truth written to the church of Ephesus, in which city he had resided for so long a time. This is the first and strongest objection. But further, the Epistle to the Colossians was addressed to a church in which St. Paul had never been; 'For I would that ye knew what great conflict I have for you and for them at Laodicea, and for as many as have not seen my face in the flesh.' There could be no propriety in thus joining the Colossians and Laodiceans with those 'who had not seen his face in the flesh,' if they did not also belong to the same description. Now his address to the Colossians, whom he had not visited, is precisely the same as his address to the Christians to whom he wrote the epistle which we are now considering: 'We give thanks to God and the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, praying always for you, since we heard of our faith in Christ Jesus, and of the love which we have to all the saints,' Col. ch. i. 3. Thus he speaks to the Colossians, in the epistle before us, as follows: 'Wherefore I also, after I heard of your faith in the Lord Jesus, and love unto all the saints, cease not to give thanks for you in my prayers,' chap. i. 15. The terms of this address are observable. The words 'having heard of your faith and love,' are the very words, we see, which he uses towards strangers; and it is not probable that he should employ the same in addressing a church, in which he had long exercised his ministry, and whose 'faith and love' he must have personally known. The Epistle to the Romans was written before St. Paul had been at Rome; and his address to them runs in the same strain with that just now quoted: 'I thank my God through Jesus Christ, for you, all, that your faith is spoken of throughout the whole world.' Rom. ch. i. 8. Let us now see what was the form in which our apostle was accustomed to introduce his epistles, when he wrote to those with whom he was already acquainted. To the Corinthians it was this; 'I thank my God always on your behalf, for the grace of God which is given you by Christ Jesus,' 1 Cor. ch. i. 4. To the Philippians: 'I thank my God upon every remembrance of you,' Phil. ch. i. 3. To the Thessalonians: 'We give thanks to God always for you all, making mention of you in our prayers, remembering without ceasing your work of faith and labour of love,' 1 Thess. ch. i. 3. To Timothy: 'I thank God, whom I serve from my forefathers with a pure conscience, that without ceasing I have remembrance of thee in my prayers night and day,' 2 Tim. ch. i. 3. In these quotations, it is usually his remembrance, and never his hearing of them which he makes the subject of his thankfulness to God.

As great difficulties stand in the way, supposing the epistle before us to have been written to the church of Ephesus; so I think it probable that it is actually the epistle to the Laodiceans, referred to in the fourth chapter of the epistle to the Colossians. The text which contains that reference is this: 'When this epistle is read among you, cause that it be read also in the church of the Laodiceans, and that ye likewise read the epistle from Laodicea,' ch. iv. 16. The 'epistle from Laodicea' was an epistle sent by St. Paul to that church, and by them transmitted to Colosse. The two churches were mutually to communicate the epistles they had received. This is the way in which the direction is explained by the greater part of commentators, and is the most probable sense that can be given to it. It is also probable that the epistle alluded to was an epistle which had been received by the church of Laodicea lately. It appears then, with a considerable degree of evidence, that there existed an epistle of St. Paul nearly of the same date with the Epistle to the Colossians, and an epistle directed to a church (for such the church of Laodicea was) in which St. Paul had never been. What has been observed concerning the epistle before us, shows that it answers perfectly to that character.

Nor does the mistake seem very difficult to account for. Whoever inspects the map of Asia Minor will see, that a person proceeding from Rome to Laodicea, would probably land at Ephesus, as the nearest frequented sea port in that direction. Might not Tycheus then, in passing through Ephesus, communicate to the Christians of that place the letter with which he was charged? And might not copies of that letter be multiplied and preserved at Ephesus? Might not some of the copies drop the words of designation ev tñ Laodicea, which it was of no consequence to an Ephesian to retain? Might not copies of the letter come out into the Christian church at large from Ephesus; and might not this give occasion to a belief that the letter was written to that church? And, lastly, might not this belief produce the error which we suppose to have crept into the inscription?

And it is remarkable that there seem to have been some ancient copies without the words of designation, either the words in Ephesus, or the words in Laodicea. St. Basil, a writer of the fourth century, speaking of the present epistle, has this very singular passage: 'And writing to the Ephesians, as truly united to him who is through knowledge, he (Paul) calleth them in a peculiar sense such who are; saying to the saints who are and (or even) the faithful in Christ Jesus; for so those before us have transmitted it, and we have found it in ancient copies.' Dr. Mill interprets (and, notwithstanding some objections that have been made to him, in my opinion, rightly interprets) these words of Basil, as declaring that this father had seen certain copies of the epistle in which the words 'in Ephesus' were wanting. And the passage, I think must be considered as Basil's fanciful way of explaining what was really a corrupt and defective reading; for I do not believe it possible that the author of the epistle could have originally written ἀγαπῶν τοὺς ἁγίους, without any name of place to follow it.*

It must be allowed that the arguments of Dr. Paley, the sum of which may be found in Weiststein, that this is the epistle to the Laodiceans, are both plausible and strong; and yet almost the whole of antiquity, with the exceptions which those learned men mention, is in favour of the epistle being sent originally to the church at Ephesus. Puzzled with these two considerations, some critics have pointed out a middle way. They suppose that several copies of this epistle were directed to no particular church, but were intended for all the churches in Asia Minor; and that different copies might have different directions, from this circumstance, that St. Paul in writing the first verse ἰανδὸς ἀποστόλος Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ—τοῖς ἁγίοις τοῖς οὖν— Paul, an apostle of Jesus Christ to the saints which are—left a blank after οὖν, are, which was in some cases filled up with ev Epheso, in Ephesus; in others with ev Laodicea, in Laodicea; though there might be one copy expressly sent by him to the church of the Laodiceans, while he wished that others should be directed to the different churches through Asia Minor. That there were copies which had no place specified, we learn from St. Basil; and the arguments in favour of Laodicea are certainly the strongest: the circumstance that the apostle salutes no person, agrees well with Laodicea, where he had never been, Coloss. ii. 1. but cannot agree with Ephesus, where he was well known, and where, in preaching the Gospel, he had spent three years. See Acts xx. 31.

As this point is very dubious, and men of great abilities and learning have espoused different sides of the question, I judge myself incompetent to determine any thing; but I felt it my duty to bring the arguments for Laodicea, fairly before the reader; those in favour of Ephesus may be met with every where. The passages in the body of the epistle, alleged by critics who espouse opposite sides of this subject, I have seldom noticed in a controversial way; and the notes on those passages are constructed as though no controversy existed.

Many expositors, and particularly Drs. Chandler and Macknight, have thought that they have perceived a great number of references to the Temple of Diana at Ephesus; to the sacred mysteries among the Greeks; to the Hierophants, Mystagogues, Neocorai, &c. in the temple of this celebrated goddess. It may appear strange, that, with these opinions before me, I have not referred to the same things; nor adduced them by way of illustration: the truth is, I have not been able to discover them; nor do I believe that any such allusions exist. I see many allusions to the Temple of God at Jerusalem, but none to the Temple of Diana at Ephesus. I find also many references to the sacred service, and sacerdotal officers in the Jewish temple; but none to Mystagogues, &c. among the heathens. I find much said about what is to be understood most literally, the mystery which had been hidden from all ages, viz. of uniting Jews and Gentiles in one church, but no reference to the Eleusinium, Bacchic, or other mysteries in the abominable worship of the Greeks, as suggesting to the mind of the apostle any parallel between their mysteries and those of the Almighty. My reasons for my dissent from these respectable authorities, I have given in the notes.

THE EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE TO THE EPHESIANS

For Chronological Eras, see at the end of the Acts.

CHAPTER I.

The apostle's salutation to the church, 1, 2. He blesses God for calling the Gentiles to the adoption of children by Jesus Christ, by whose sacrificial death both they and the Jews find redemption, 3-7. He shows that it was through the great abundance of God's wisdom and goodness that the Gentiles were called into a state of salvation; and that they should receive the Holy Spirit as the earnest of their inheritance, 8-15. He praises God for their conversion, and prays that they may be farther enlightened, that they may see the glory of Christ, and partake of the blessings procured by his passion and exaltation, 16-23. PAUL, an apostle of Jesus Christ by the will of God, to the saints which are at Ephesus, and to the faithful in Christ Jesus:

a 2 Cor. i. 1. b Rom. i. 7. 2 Cor. i. 1. c 1 Cor. i. 17. Gal. i. 1. Col. i. 2.

NOTES.—Verse 1. To the saints which are at Ephesus] As some learned men think that this epistle was written to the church of the Laodiceans; and that the words ev Epheso, in Ephesus, were not originally in this epistle; the consideration of the subject has appeared to be more proper for the Preface; and to that the reader is referred for a particular discussion of this opinion. By the term saints, we are to understand those who in that place professed Christianity, and were who hath blessed us with all spiritual blessings in heavenly ¹ places in Christ :

4 According as ² he hath chosen us in him ³ before the foundation of the world, that we should ⁴ be holy and without blame before him in love :

5 ⁵ Having predestinated us unto ⁶ the adoption of children by Jesus Christ to himself, according to the good pleasure of his will,
 [For, things, Ch. 6. 10.—Rom. 8. 29, 30. 2 Thess. 2. 13. 2 Tim. 1. 9. James 2. 5. 1 Pet. 1. 2 & 2. 10. 1 Pet. 1. 21.—1 John 1. 25. Chapter 2. 10 & 3. 7. Col. 1. 23. 1 Thess. 4. 7. Tit. 2. 12.—Romans 8. 29, 30. Verse 11.—1 John 1. 12. Romans 8. 15. 2 Cor. 6. 15. Gal. 4. 5. 1 John 3. 1.]

members of the Christian church. Saint properly signifies a holy person, and such the Gospel of Christ requires every man to be; and such every true believer is, both in heart and life: but saint appears to have been as ordinary a denomination of a believer in Christ, in those primitive times, as the term Christian is now. Yet many had the name who had not the thing.

The faithful in Christ Jesus.] ΠΙΣΤΟΙ, the believers; the persons who received Christ as the promised Messiah, and the Saviour of the world, and continued in the grace which they had received.

2. Grace be to you! See the note on Rom. 1. 7.

3. Blessed be the God! See the note on 2 Cor. i. 3. where the same form is used.

With all spiritual blessings] With the pure doctrine of the Gospel, and the abundant gifts and graces of the Holy Ghost, justifying, sanctifying, and building us up, in our most holy faith.

In heavenly places] ΕΝ ΤΑΙΣ ΕΡΕΜΟΝΑΙΟΙΣ, in heavenly things, such as those mentioned above; they were not yet in heavenly places, but they had abundance of heavenly things, to prepare them for heavenly places. Some think the word should be understood as signifying blessings of the most exalted or excellent kind; such as are spiritual in opposition to those that are earthly: such as are eternal in opposition to those that are temporal; and all these in, through, and by Christ. We have already seen, on Gal. iv. 26, that the heavenly Jerusalem, or Jerusalem which is from above, is used by the Jews to signify the days of the Messiah, and that state of grace and glory which should follow the Levitical worship and ceremonies: and it is possible that St. Paul may use the word ερεμοναίαι, heavenly things, in this sense. God hath blessed us with all spiritual blessings in heavenly things, or in this heavenly state; in which life and immortality are brought to light by the Gospel. This is apparently the preferable sense.

4. According as he hath chosen us in him] As he has decreed from the beginning of the world, and has kept in view from the commencement of the religious system of the Jews, (which the phrase sometimes means,) to bring us Gentiles to the knowledge of this glorious state of salvation by Christ Jesus. The Jews considered themselves an elect or chosen people; and wished to monopolize the whole of the Divine love and beneficence. The apostle here shows that God had the Gentiles as much in the contemplation of his mercy and goodness, as he had the Jews: and the blessings of the Gospel, now so freely dispensed to them, were the proof that God had thus chosen them; and that his end in giving them the Gospel, was the same which he had in view by giving the law to the Jews, viz. that they might be holy and without blame before him. And as his object was the same in respect to them both, they should consider that, as he loved them, so they should love one another: God having provided for each the same blessings, they should therefore be αγιος, holy, fully separated from earth and sin, and consecrated to God: and αμωβος, without blame, having no spot nor imperfection; their inward holiness agreeing with their outward consecration. The words are a metaphor taken from the perfect and immaculate sacrifices which the law required the people to bring to the altar of God. But as love is the fulfilling of the law, and love the fountain whence their salvation flowed, therefore love must fill their hearts toward God and each other; and love must be the motive and end of all their words and works.

5. Having predestinated us] Προοριτας, as the doctrine of eternal predestination has produced much controversy in the Christian world, it may be necessary to examine the meaning of the term, that those who do use it, may employ it according to the sense it has in the oracles of God. The verb προορίζω, from προ, before, and ορίζω, I define, finish, bound, or terminate, whence ορος, a boundary or limit, signifies to define beforehand, and circumscribe by certain bounds or limits, and is originally a geographical term, but applied also to any thing concluded, or determined, or demonstrated. Hence the word is used to point out God's fixed purpose or predetermination to bestow on the Gentiles the blessing of the adoption of sons, by Jesus Christ; which adoption had been before granted to the Jewish people; and without circumscription, or any other Mosaic rite, to admit the Gentiles to all the privileges of his church and people. And the apostle marks, that all this was fore-determined by God, as He had fore-determined the bounds and precincts of the land which he gave them according to the promise made to their fathers. That the Jews had no reason to complain, for God had formed this purpose before he had given the law, or called them out of Egypt; for it was before the foundation of the world, ver. 2. and that, therefore, the conduct of God, in calling the Gentiles πρε, bringing them into his church, and conferring on them

6 To the praise of the glory of his grace, ⁷ wherein he hath made us accepted in ⁸ the Beloved.

7 ⁹ In whom we have redemption through his blood, the forgiveness of sins, according to ¹⁰ the riches of his grace;

8 Wherein he hath abounded toward us in all wisdom and prudence;

9 ¹¹ Having made known unto us the mystery of his will according to ¹² the eternal counsel, which he hath purposed in himself, that we should have redemption through his blood, the forgiveness of sins, according to ¹³ the riches of his grace;

the gifts and graces of the Holy Spirit, was in pursuance of his original design; and if he did not do so, his eternal purposes could not be fulfilled. And that, as the Jews were taken to be his peculiar people, not because they had any goodness or merit in themselves; so the Gentiles were called, not for any merit they had, but according to the good pleasure of his will; that is, according to his eternal benevolence; showing mercy, and conferring privileges in this new creation, as he had done in the original creation; for, as in creating man, he drew every consideration from his own innate eternal benevolence; so now, in redeeming man, and sending the glad tidings of salvation both to the Jews and the Gentiles, he acted on the same principle, deriving all the reasons of his conduct from his own infinite goodness.

This argument was exceedingly conclusive, and must silence the Jews on the ground of their original, primitive, and exclusive rights, which they were ever ready to plead against all pretensions of the Gentiles. If, therefore, God, before the foundation of the Jewish economy, had determined that the Gentiles, in the fulness of time, should be called to, and admitted into, all the privileges of the Messiah's kingdom, then the exclusive salvation of the Jews was chimerical; and what God was doing now by the preaching of the apostles in the Gentile world, was in pursuance of his original design. This same argument St. Paul repeatedly produces in his Epistle to the Romans; and a proper consideration of it unlocks many difficulties in that epistle. See the notes on Rom. viii. 29, 30, and elsewhere, in the course of that epistle, where this subject is handled. But why is the word προοριτας, fore-determined, limited, or circumscribed, used here merely in reference to the settlement of the Israelites in the Promised Land. God assigned to them the portions which they were to inherit, and these portions were described, and their bearings, boundaries, vicinities, to other portions, extent, and length, as exactly ascertained as they could be by the most correct geographical map. As God therefore had dealt with the Jews in making them his peculiar people; and when he divided the earth among the sons of Noah, reserved to himself the twelve portions which he afterward gave to the twelve tribes, (see on Deut. xxxii. 8.) and as his dealings with them were typical of what he intended to do in the calling and salvation of the Gentiles; so he uses the terms by which their allotment and settlement were pointed out, to show that what he had thus designed and typified, he had now fulfilled according to the original predetermination: the Gentiles having now the spiritual inheritance which God had pointed out by the grant made of the Promised Land to the children of Israel. This is the grand key by which this predestination business is unlocked. See on ver. 11.

6. To the praise of the glory of his grace] ΔΟΞΗΣ ΤΗΣ ΧΑΡΙΤΟΣ ΑΥΤΟΥ, the glory of his grace, for χαρις εὐδοκία, his glorious, or illustrious grace, according to the Hebrew idiom. But the grace or mercy of God is peculiarly illustrated and glorified in the plan of redemption by Christ Jesus. By the giving of the Law, God's justice and holiness were rendered most glorious; by the giving of the Gospel, his grace and mercy are made equally conspicuous.

Wherein he hath made us accepted in the beloved] This translation of ἐν τῷ αγαπητῷ πρὸς τὸ ἡμεῖς, is not clear; with which he has graciously favoured us through the Beloved, is at once more literal, and more intelligible. Whitby, Macknight, and Wickefield, translate the passage in nearly the same way.

In the Beloved, must certainly mean Christ, who is termed God's beloved Son, Matt. iii. 17, but several excellent MSS. such as D'E'G, the latter Syriac, Ethiopic, Vulgate, Italian, with several of the Fathers, add ὁ υἱὸς αὐτοῦ, his beloved Son. This is the meaning, whether the receiving be received or rejected.

7. In whom we have redemption] God has glorified his grace by giving us redemption by the blood of his Son; and this redemption consists in forgiving and delivering us from our sins; so that Christ's blood was the redemption price, paid down for our salvation; and this was according to the riches of his grace; as his grace is rich or abundant in benevolence, so it was manifested in beneficence to mankind, in their redemption by the sacrifice of Christ; the measure of redeeming grace being the measure of God's own eternal goodness.

It may not be useless to remark, that instead of τῆς χάριτος αὐτοῦ, his grace; the Codex Alexandrinus, and the Coptic version, have τῆς χάριτος αὐτοῦ, his goodness.

8. Wherein he hath abounded] That is, in the dispensation of mercy and goodness by Christ Jesus.

In all wisdom and prudence] Giving us apostles the most complete instructions in heavenly things, by the inspiration of his Spirit; and at the same time prudence, that we might know when and where to preach the Gospel, so that it might according to his good pleasure * which he hath purposed in himself:

10 That in the dispensation of the fulness of times ^a he might gather together in one ^b all things in Christ, both which are in ^c heaven, and which are on earth; ^d even in him:

11 ^e In whom also we have obtained an inheritance, ^f being predestinated according to ^g the purpose of him who worketh all things after the counsel of his own will:

^a Eph. 1. 10. 2 Tim. 1. 2.—^b Gal. 4. 1. Heb. 1. 2 & 9. 10. 1 Pet. 1. 20.—^c 1 Cor. 3. 22, 23. & 11. 3. Ch. 2. 13. & 3. 15.—^d Phil. 2. 9. 10. C. 4. 1. 20.—^e See Gen. 1. 1.—^f Acts 20. 32. & 26. 18. Rom. 8. 17. Col. 1. 12. & 3. 4. 1 Th. 3. 7. James 2. 5. 1 Pet. 1. 4.

be effectual to the salvation of those who heard it. Nothing less than the Spirit of God could teach the apostles that wisdom by which they were to instruct a dark and sinful world; and nothing less than the same Spirit could inspire them with that prudence which was necessary to be exercised in every step of their life and ministry. Every wise man is not a prudent man; and every prudent man is not a wise man. Wisdom and prudence may be expected in an apostle who is constantly living under the inspiration of the Holy Ghost. "Wisdom," according to Sir William Temple, "is that which makes men judge what are the best ends, and what the best means to attain them; and gives a man advantage of counsel and direction." "Prudence is wisdom applied to practice; or that discreet apt suiting as well of actions as words, in their due place, time, and manner." Every minister of Christ needs these still; and if he abide not under the influence of both, not only his prayers, but his ministerial labours, will be all hindered.

9. Having made known unto us the mystery] That the Gentiles should ever be received into the church of God, and have all the privileges of the Jews, without being obliged to submit to circumcision, and perform the rites and ceremonies of the Jewish law, was a mystery, a hidden thing, which had never been published before; and now revealed only to the apostles. It was God's will that it should be so, but that will he kept hidden to the present time. A mystery signifies something hidden; but it ceases to be a mystery as soon as it is revealed. See the notes on Matt. xiii. 11. and particularly that on Rom. xi. 25.

Good pleasure] Τὴν ἐκτίαν, that benevolent design which he had purposed in himself, not being induced by any consideration from without.

10. In the dispensation of the fulness of times] Εἰς ἀνοικτην τὴν πληρωσιν τοῦ καιροῦ. The word oikneta, which is the same as our word economy, signifies, as Dr. Macknight has well observed, "the plan which the master of a family, or his steward, has established for the management of the family;" it signifies also, a plan for the management of any sort of business; and here it means the dispensation of the Gospel, that plan by which God has provided salvation for a lost world; and, according to which, he intends to gather all believers, both Jews and Gentiles, into one church, under Jesus Christ, their head and governor. See the note on Matt. xxiv. 45. where the word and the office are particularly explained.

The fulness of times—By this phrase we are to understand either the Gospel dispensation, which is the consummation of all preceding dispensations, and the last that shall be afforded to man; or, that advanced state of the world, which God saw to be the most proper for the full manifestation of those benevolent purposes which he had formed in himself, relative to the salvation of the world by Jesus Christ.

That he might gather together in one] ἀνακεφαλαιωσάμενος, from ἀνα, again, and κεφαλαιω, to reduce to one sum; to add up; to bring different sums together, and fractions of sums, so as to reduce them under one denomination; to recapitulate the principal matters contained in a discourse. Here it means the gathering together both Jews and Gentiles, who have believed in Christ, into one church and flock. See the preceding note.

All things—which are in heaven, and which are on earth] This clause is variously understood; some think, by things in heaven, the Jewish state is meant; and by things on earth, the Christian. The Jews had been long considered a divine or heavenly people; their doctrine, their government, their constitution, both civil and ecclesiastical, were all divine or heavenly; as the powers of the heavens. Matt. xxiv. 20. Luke xxi. 26. mean the Jewish rulers in church and state, it is very possible that the things which are in heaven, mean the same state; and as the Gentiles were considered to have nothing divine or heavenly among them, they may be here intended by the earth, out of the corruption of which they are to be gathered by the preaching of the Gospel. But there are others who imagine, that the things in heaven mean the angelical hosts; and the things on earth, believers of all nations, who shall all be joined together at last in one assembly, to worship God throughout eternity. And some think that the things in heaven, mean the saints who died before Christ's advent, and who are not to be made perfect till the resurrection, when the full power and efficacy of Christ shall be seen in raising the bodies of believers, and uniting them with their holy souls, to reign in his presence for ever. And some think that, as the Hebrew phrase שְׁמַיִם וָאָרֶץ shamayim ve ha'aretz, the heavens and the earth, signifies all creatures; the words in the text are to be understood as signifying all mankind, without discrimination of peoples, kindreds, or tongues;

12 * That we should be to the praise of his glory ^b who first ^c trusted in Christ.

13 In whom ye also trusted, after that ye heard ^d the word of truth, the Gospel of your salvation; in whom also after that ye believed, ^e ye were sealed with that Holy Spirit of promise, 14 Which is the earnest of our inheritance ^f until the redemption of ^g the purchased possession, ^h unto the praise of his glory.

Jews, Greeks, or barbarians. All that are saved of all nations, being saved in the same way, viz. by faith in Christ Jesus, without any distinction of nation or previous condition, and all gathered into one church or assembly. I believe that the forming one church out of both Jews and Gentiles, is that to which the apostle refers. This agrees with what is said, chap. ii. 14—17.

11. In whom] Christ Jesus; ye also, we believing Jews, have obtained an inheritance; what was promised to Abraham and his spiritual seed, viz. the adoption of sons, and the kingdom of heaven, signified by the privileges under the Mosaic dispensation, and the possession of the Promised Land; but all these privileges being forfeited by the rebellion and unbelief of the Jews, they are now about to be finally cut off; and the believing part to be re-elected, and put in possession of the blessing promised to Abraham and his spiritual seed, by faith; for, without a re-election, they cannot get possession of these spiritual privileges.

Being predestinated] God having determined to bring both Jews and Gentiles to salvation, not by works, nor by any human means or schemes, but by Jesus Christ; that salvation, being defined, and determined before, in the Divine mind; and the means by which it should be brought about; all being according to His purpose, who consults not his creatures, but operates according to the counsel of his own will; that being ever wise, gracious, and good.

The original reference is still kept up here, in the word προορισθέντες, being predestinated; as in the word προνοίας, ver. 5. And as the apostle speaks of obtaining the inheritance, he most evidently refers to that of which the Promised Land was the type and pledge. And as that land was assigned to the Israelites by limit and lot, both of which were appointed by God; so the salvation now sent to the Gentiles was as expressly their lot or portion, as the Promised Land was that of the people of Israel. All this shews that the Israelites were a typical people; their land, the manner of possessing it, their civil and religious code, &c. &c. all typical; and that in, by, and through them, God had fore-determined, fore-described, and fore-ascertained, a greater and more glorious people, among whom the deepest counsels of his wisdom should be manifested; and the most powerful works of his eternal mercy, grace, holiness, goodness, and truth, be fully exhibited. Thus there was nothing fortuitous in the Christian scheme; all was the result of infinite counsel and design. See on ver. 5.

12. That we] Jews, now apostles and messengers of God, to whom the first offers of salvation were made, and who were the first that believed in Christ.

Should be to the praise of his glory.] By being the means of preaching Christ crucified to the Gentiles, and spreading the Gospel throughout the world.

13. In whom ye also trusted] Ye Gentiles having heard from us the word, τοῦ λόγου, the doctrine of the truth, which is the Gospel, or glad tidings of your salvation, have believed as we Jews have done; and received similar blessings to those with which God has favoured us.

In whom also; ἐν ᾧ, through whom, Christ Jesus; after that ye had believed, viz. that he was the only Saviour; and that through his blood redemption might be obtained: Ye were sealed with that Holy Spirit of promise; that is, the Holy Spirit, which is promised to them who believe on Christ Jesus, was given to you, and thus you were ascertained to be the children of God; for God has no child who is not a partaker of the Holy Ghost; and he who has this Spirit, has God's seal that he belongs to the heavenly family. It was customary among all nations, when a person purchased goods of any kind, to mark with his seal that which he had bought; in order that he might know it, and be able to claim it if mixed with the goods of others. To this custom the apostle may here allude; but it was also customary to set a seal upon what was dedicated to God; or what was to be offered to him in sacrifice.—See this proved in the note on John vi. 27. The Jews themselves speak of the seal of God, which they term סֵמֶן semen, truth; and which they consider as a representation of the unoriginated and endless perfections of God. As the apostle is here speaking of the doctrine of truth, which came by the Holy Spirit, and is sealed on the souls of believers by this Spirit, he may have in view the Jewish notion, which is at once both correct and elevated. This Spirit of truth, John xiv. 17. who leads into all truth, chap. xvi. 13. and teaches all things, chap. xiv. 26. makes the impression of his own eternal purity and truth in the souls of them who believe; and thus they bear the seal of God Almighty. And they who in the day of judgment are found to bear this seal, truth; truth, in the inward parts, having truly repented, truly believed; and having been in consequence, truly justified.

15 Wherefore I also, * after I heard of your faith in the Lord Jesus, and love unto all the saints,

16 † Cease not to give thanks for you, making mention of you in my prayers;

17 That [†] the God of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of glory, [‡] may give unto you the spirit of wisdom and revelation [§] in the knowledge of him;

18 [¶] The eyes of your understanding being enlightened: that ye may know what is [¶] the hope of his calling, and what the riches of the glory of his [¶] inheritance in the saints, and truly sanctified; and having walked in truth and sincerity towards God and man: these are sealed to the day of redemption: for, having this seal, they are seen to have a right to eternal life.

11. Which is the earnest of our inheritance] This Holy Spirit, sealing the soul with truth and righteousness, is the earnest, foretaste, and pledge, of the heavenly inheritance. And he who can produce this earnest, this witness of the Spirit, in the day of judgment, shall have an abundant entrance into the holiest. On the agapion, or earnest, see the notes on Gen. xxviii. 13, &c., and on 2 Cor. i. 22.

The redemption of the purchased possession] That is, till the time when body and soul are redeemed from all their miseries, and glorified in the kingdom of heaven.

The redemption of the purchased possession] Ἀπολυσίς τῆς πεποιτισμένης, is variously understood: and, indeed, the original is variously translated. Dr. Whitty has observed, that the verb πεποιτισμένος, signifies to save alive; and he refers the πεποιτισμένη here, to the redemption of the body from corruption, and to its final glorification with the soul. All those who believe in Christ Jesus, are considered as his peculiar people and property; and to them eternal glory is promised. The Spirit of promise, which is given them, is a pledge that they shall have a resurrection from the dead, and eternal blessedness: the redemption, or bringing to life of the body, cannot take place till the day of judgment; but the Holy Spirit promises this redemption, and is now, in their hearts, an earnest, or pledge, of this complete restoration at the great day; which will then be, in an especial manner, to the praise of his glory, viz. of Christ, who has bought them by his blood.

15. Faith in the Lord Jesus] Cordial reception of the Christian religion; amply proved by their love to all the saints: to all the Christians. Perhaps love, here implies not only the kind affection so called, but, also, all the fruits of love, benevolence, and kind offices of every description.

16. Cease not to give thanks] The apostle intimates, that so fully satisfied was he of the genuineness of their conversion, and of their steadiness since their conversion, that it was to him a continual cause of thanksgiving to God, who had brought them into that state of salvation; and of prayer, that they might be preserved blameless to the end.

Making mention of you] While praying for the prosperity of the Christian cause generally, he was led from his particular affection for them, to mention them by name before God.

17. That the God of our Lord Jesus] Jesus Christ, as man and mediator, has the Father for his God and Father: and it is in reference to this, that himself says, "I ascend unto my Father, and your Father, and to my God, and your God," John xx. 17.

The Father of glory] The author and giver of that glory which you expect at the end of your Christian race. This may be a Hebrewism for glorious Father, but the former appears to be the best sense.

The spirit of wisdom and revelation] I pray that God may give you his Holy Spirit, by whom his will is revealed to men, that he may teach and make you wise unto salvation, that you may continue to acknowledge him, Christ Jesus, as your only Lord and Saviour.

18. The eyes of your understanding being enlightened] The understanding is that power or faculty in the soul by which knowledge or information is received; and the recipient power is here termed the eyes of the understanding; and we learn from this, that ὁπὲρ ὁ οὐρανὸς οὐ δύναται, τὸ πνεῦμα οὐ δύναται ἐν τῇ ψυχῇ, as Philo expresses it, What the eye is to the body, the understanding is to the soul. And that as the eye is not light in itself, and can discern nothing but by the means of light shining not only on the objects to be viewed, but into the eye itself: so the understanding of man can discern no sacred thing of or by itself; but sees by the influence of the Spirit of wisdom and revelation; for, without the influence of God's Holy Spirit, no man ever became wise unto salvation, no more than a man ever discerned an object (no matter how perfect soever his eye might have been,) without the instrumentality of light. Instead of τῆς ἐνώπιον, of your understanding: τῆς καθ' ὅσον, of your heart, is the reading of ABDEFG. and several others: also, both the Syriac, all the Arabic, the Coptic, the Ethiopic, Armenian, Sahidic, Slavonian, Vulgate, and Itala, besides several of the Fathers. The eyes of your heart, is undoubtedly the true reading.

The hope of his calling] That ye may clearly discern the glorious and important objects of your hope, to the enjoyment of which God has called or invited you.

20 Which he wrought in Christ, when [‡] he raised him from the dead, and [§] set him at his own right hand in the heavenly places.

22 And [‡] hath put all things under his feet, and gave him [§] to be the head over all things to the church,

23 * Which is his body, the fulness of him that filleth all in all.

The riches of the glory of his inheritance] That you may understand what is the glorious abundance of the spiritual things to which you are entitled, in consequence of being made children of God: for, if children, then heirs; heirs of that glorious inheritance which God has provided for the saints; for all genuine Christians, whether formerly Jews or Gentiles. On the chief subject of this verse, see the notes on Galat. iv. 6, 7.

19. The exceeding greatness of his power] As the apostle is here speaking of the glorious state of believers after death, the exceeding greatness of his power, or that power which surpasses all difficulties, being itself omnipotent, is to be understood of that might which is to be exerted in raising the body at the last day; as it will require the same power or energy which he wrought in Christ, when he raised his body from the grave, to raise up the bodies of all mankind; the resurrection of the human nature of Christ being a proof of the resurrection of mankind in general.

According to the working of his mighty power] Κατὰ τὴν ἐνέργειαν τὴν ὑποκράτουσάν τῆς ἐκκλησίας αὐτοῦ, according to the energy of the power of his might. We may understand these words thus: might, ἐκτος, is the state or simple efficiency of this attribute in God: power, ἐκτος, is this might or efficiency in action; energy, ἐνέργεια, is the quantum of force, momentum, or velocity, with which the power is applied. Though they appear to be synonymous terms, they may be thus understood: passive power is widely different from power in action; and power in action will be, in its results, according to the energy or momentum with which it is applied. The resurrection of the dead, is a stupendous work of God; it requires his might in sovereign action: and, when we consider that all mankind are to be raised and changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, then the momentum, or velocity, with which the power is to be applied, must be inconceivably great. All motion is in proportion to the quantity of matter in the mover, and the velocity with which it is applied.—The effect here is in proportion to the cause and the energy he puts forth, in order to produce it. But such is the nature of God's power in action, that it is perfectly inconceivable to us: and even these astonishingly strong words of the apostle, are to be understood as used in a descension to human weakness.

20. Set him at his own right hand in the heavenly places] Gave him as Mediator between God and man, the highest honours and dignities. Phil. ii. 9. in which state of exaltation he transacts all the affairs of his church, and rules the universe. The right hand is the place of friendship, honour, confidence, and authority.

21. Far above all principality] The difficulty in this verse does not arise from the words themselves, the meaning of each being easily understood, but from the sense in which the apostle uses them. Some think he has reference here to the different orders among good and evil angels; he is superior to all the former, and rules all the latter. Others think he refers to earthly governments; and as ἀρχή, principality, the first word, signifies the most sovereign and extensive kind of dominion; and ἐκτος, lordship, the last word, signifies the lowest degree of authority; hence we are to understand, that to our Lord, in his human nature, are subjected the highest, the intermediate, and the lowest orders of beings in the universe.—Chandler. Others imagine that the apostle has in view, by whatsoever is named in this world, all the dignities of the Jewish church; and by what is named in the world to come, all the dignities that should be found in the Christian church.

Schoettgen supposes that "the apostle's ἀρχή, (for ἀρχόντες the abstract for the concrete,) means the same as the נְסִימָה Nesim among the Jews, whose chief business it was to clear and decide all contentions, which arose concerning traditions and legal controversies. That ἐκτος, power, is the same as טְוֵלָה tsulá, he who possesses authority to propound, expound, persuade, convince, and refute. That ἐκτος, might, answers to רַבְּנֵי rabbinnóth, signifying all the class of rabbins whose office it was to expound the law, and teach the people generally. And, that ἐκτος, dominion, answers to מַלְכֵי malé, which signifies a person above the lower orders of men. And he observes, that Jesus Christ, after his resurrection, called fishermen, publicans, and men from the lowest orders of the people, to the work of the ministry; and made them instruments of confounding and overturning all the Jewish rulers, rabbins, and doctors. And that, in the world which is to come, the successive ages of Christianity, he should ever be exalted above all those powers and authorities which Antichrist might bring into the Christian church, such as popes, cardinals, wicked archbishops, bishops, deans, and canons; and all those who, among the schoolmen, were termed seraphic doctors, angelic doctors, most illuminated, most perfect and irrefragable doctors. And although Wiclif, Huss, Luther, Melancthon, and the rest of the reformers, were men of little or no note, when compared with the rulers of the popish church, so eminently did the power of Christ work in and by them, that the pope and all his adjuncts were every where confounded; and their power and authority annihilated in several entire regions.⁵ It is certain that the apostle means that all created power, glory, and influence, are under Christ; and hence it is added:—

22. He hath put all things under his feet] All beings and things are subject to Him, whether they be thrones, dominions, principalities, or powers, Col. i. 16—18. and ii. 10. for he, God the Father, has given him to be head, chief and supreme, over all, to the church; the church having no ruler but Jesus Christ: others may be officers in his church, but he alone is head and supreme.

23. Which is his body] As he is head over all things, he is head to the church; and this church is considered as the body of which he is especially the head; and from him, as the head, the church receives light, life, and intelligence.

And is the fulness of him] That in which he especially manifests his power, goodness, and truth: for, though he fills all the world with his presence, yet he fills all the members of his mystical body, with wisdom, goodness, truth, and holiness, in an especial manner. Some understand the fulness, or πληρομα, here as signifying the thing to be filled; so the Christian church is to be filled by Him whose fulness fills all his members with all spiritual gifts and graces. And this corresponds with what St. John says, chap. i. 16. Out of his fulness have we all received, and grace upon grace. And what is said, Col. ii. 9, 10. You are complete in him; καὶ ἐστὶν ἐν αὐτῷ πληροῖσθε. And ye are in him, filled full: i. e. with gifts and grace.

Now, in any other sense, the church can be said to be the fulness of Him who fills all in all, is difficult to say. However, as Jesus Christ is represented to be the head, and the church the body under that head, the individuals being so many members in that body; and as it requires a body and members to make a head complete, so it requires a church, or general assembly of believers, to make up the body of Christ. When, therefore, the Jews and Gentiles are brought into this church, the body may be said to be complete; and thus Christ has his visible fulness upon earth; and the church may be said to be the fulness of him, &c. See ver. 10.

NOTES.—Verse 1. And you hath he quickened] This chapter should not have been separated from the preceding, with which it is most intimately connected. As Christ fills the whole body of Christian believers with his fulness, (chap. i. 23.) so had he dealt with the converted Ephesians; who, before, were dead in trespasses, and dead in sins. DEATH is often used by all writers, and in all nations, to express a state of extreme misery. The Ephesians, by trespassing and sinning, had brought themselves into a state of deplorable wretchedness, as had all the heathen nations: and, having thus sinned against God, they were condemned by him; and might be considered as dead in law: incapable of performing any legal act, and always liable to the punishment of death, which they had deserved, and which was ready to be inflicted upon them.

Trespasses, παραπτώματα, may signify the slightest deviation from the line and rule of moral equity, as well as any flagrant offence; for these are equally transgressions, as long as the severed line that separates between vice and virtue is passed over.

Sin, ἀμαρτία, may probably mean here habitual transgression; sinning knowingly and daringly.

2. Wherein in time past ye walked] There is much force in these expressions; the Ephesians had not sinned casually, or now and then, but continually; it was their continual employment: they walked in trespasses and sins; and this was not a solitary case, all the nations of the earth acted in the same way; it was the course of this world: κατὰ τὸν αἰῶνα τοῦ κοίτου τούτου, according to the life, mode of living, or successive ages of this world. The word αἰών, the literal meaning of which is constant duration, is often applied to things which have a complete course, as the Jewish dispensation, a particular government, and the term of human life; so here, the whole of life is a tissue of sin, from the cradle to the grave; every human soul unsaved by Jesus Christ, continues to transgress. And the unnaturally Christian world is in the same state to the present day. Age after age passes on in this way; and the living lay it not to heart!

The prince of the power of the air] As the former clause may have particular respect to the Jewish people, who are frequently denominated הוי"ה אלמ hazeh: this world; this latter clause may especially refer to the Gentiles, who were most manifestly under the power of the devil; as almost every object of their worship was a demon, to whom the worst of passions and practices were attributed; and whose conduct his votaries took care to copy.

Satan is termed prince of the power of the air, because the air is supposed to be a region in which malicious spirits dwell, all of whom are under the direction and influence of Satan their chief.

The spirit that now worketh] Τοῦ νῦν ἐνεργῶντος; the operations of the prince of the aerial powers are not confined to that region, he has another sphere of action, viz. the wicked heart of man; and in this he works with energy. He seldom inspires indifference to religion; the subjects in whom he works are either determinate opposers of true religion, or they are systematic and energetic transgressors of God's laws.

Children of disobedience] Perhaps a Hebraism for disob-

3 ^f Among whom also we all had our conversation in times past, in ^g the lusts of our flesh, fulfilling ^h the desires of the flesh and of the mind; and ⁱ were by nature the children of wrath, even as others.

4 But God, ^k who is rich in mercy, for his great love where- with he loved us, ^f Tit 3:3. 1 Pet 4:3—see Gal 5:16—h cir. the wills—i Psalm 51:5. Rom 5:12, 11—k Rom. 10:12. Ch. 1:7. Ver 10.

Children; but taken as it stands here, it is a strong expression in which disobedience, ἀπειθεία, appears to be personified; and wicked men exhibited as her children, the prince of the power of the air being their father, while disobedience is their mother. Thus they are emphatically what our Lord calls them, Matt. xiii. 38, children of the wicked one; for they show themselves to be of their father the devil, because they will do his works, John viii. 44. Some think that by children of disobedience, the apostle means particularly the disobedient, unbelieving, refractory, and persecuting Jews; but I rather think he speaks this generally, and refers to the Jews in the following verse.

3. Among whom also we all had our conversation] We Jews, as well as you Gentiles, have lived in transgressions and sins: ἀνεπαγγελία, this was the course of our life; we lived in sin, walked in sin; it was woven through our whole constitution; it tinged every temper, polluted every faculty, and perverted every transaction of life. The lusts, the evil, irregular, and corrupt affections of the heart, showed themselves in the perversion of the mind, as well as in our general conduct. The mind, was darkened by the lusts of this flesh, and both conjoined to produce acts of unrighteousness. It was not the will of God that was done by us, but the will of the flesh and of the mind.

And were by nature the children of wrath] For the import of the phrase by nature, φύσει, see the note on Galat. ii. 15. and Rom. ii. 11. To what is said on those passages, I may add from Dr. Macknight. ^a Nature often signifies one's birth and education, Gal. ii. 15. We who are Jews by nature. Also men's natural reason and conscience. Rom. ii. 14. The Gentiles who have not the law, do by NATURE the things contained in the law, &c. Also, the general sense and practice of mankind, 1 Cor. xii. 14. Doth not even NATURE itself teach you that if a man have long hair, &c. Also, the original constitution of any thing, Gal. iv. 8. We are not sons by NATURE. Also, a disposition formed by custom and habit; thus Demetrius Phalerens said of the Lacedæmonians, φύσει εὐνοῦντο καὶ ἄκατοι. "The Lacedæmonians have naturally a concise mode of speaking." If we use our word innate; a short speech; or much sense conveyed in a few words. The words in the text have often been quoted to prove the doctrine of original sin; but though that doctrine be an awful truth, it is not, in my opinion, intended here; it is rather found in the preceding words, the lusts of the flesh, and the desires of the flesh and of the mind. The apostle appears to speak of sinful habits; and, as we say, HABIT is a second nature; and as these persons acted from their originally corrupt nature; from the lusts of the flesh and of the mind, they thus became by their vicious habits, or second nature, children of wrath; persons exposed to perdition, because of the impurity of their hearts, and the wickedness of their lives. Here we see that the fallen, apostate nature, produces the fruits of unrighteousness. The bad tree produces bad fruit.

Children of wrath is the same as son of perdition, son of death, &c. i. e. Persons exposed to God's displeasure, because of their sins.

4 But God, who is rich in mercy] As they were corrupt!

5 ¹ Even when we were dead in sins, hath quickened us together with Christ, ⁽²⁾ by grace ye are saved;

6 And hath raised us up together, and made us sit together ³ in heavenly places in Christ Jesus;

7 That in the ages to come he might show the exceeding riches of his grace in ⁴ his kindness towards us through Christ Jesus.

8 ⁵ For by grace are ye saved; ⁶ through faith; and that not of yourselves: ⁷ it is the gift of God:

9 ⁸ Not of works, lest any man should boast.

10 For we are his ⁹ workmanship, created in Christ Jesus

¹ Rom. 5:6, 8, 10. Verse 1.—in Rom. 4:5. Col. 2:12, 13. & 2:1, 3.—a Or, by whose grace: See Acts 1:11. Verses 3, 4.—a Chap. 1:21.—p Tit. 3:4.—q Verse 5. Rom. 3:24. 2 Tim. 1:9.—r Rom. 4:16.—s Matt. 16:17. John 6:41, 45. Rom. 10:11, 15, 17. Chap. 1:18. Phil. 1:29.—t Rom. 3:29, 27, 25, & 4:2, & 2:11, & 11:6. 1 Cor. 1:21, 29, 31. 2 Tim. 1:9. Tit. 3:5.

in their nature, and sinful in their practice, they could possess no merit; nor have any claim upon God; and it required much mercy to remove so much misery, and to pardon such transgressions.

His great love God's infinite love is the ground-work of our salvation; in reference to us, that love assumes the form of mercy; and that mercy provides the Saviour, the Lord Jesus Christ. And therefore the apostle adds, ver. 5. By grace ye are saved; it is by God's free mercy in Christ that ye are brought into this state of salvation. See on ver. 8.

Even when we were dead in sins Dead in our souls; dead towards God; and dead in law; and exposed to death eternal.

Hath quickened us together with Christ God has given us as complete a resurrection from the death of sin, to a life of righteousness as the body of Christ has had from the grave. And as this quickening, or making alive, was most gratuitous on God's part, the apostle with great propriety says, By grace are ye saved.

6. And hath raised us up together—in Christ Or rather, by Christ: His resurrection being the proof that he had made the full atonement; and that we might be justified by his blood. Believing, therefore, the record which God gave of his Son, we receive this atonement, and were raised from a death of sin, to a life of righteousness; and now we sit in heavenly places: we have a right to the kingdom of God, anticipate this glory, and are indescribably happy in the possession of this salvation, and in our fellowship with Christ Jesus.

7. That in the ages to come God has produced us as an example, and one which shall be on record through all generations, that he quickens dead souls: that he forgives the sins of the most sinful when they repent, and believe in Christ Jesus. So that what God has done for the sinners at Ephesus, will serve as an encouragement to all ages of the world; and on this evidence every preacher of the Gospel may boldly proclaim that Christ saves unto the uttermost all that come unto God through him. And thus the exceeding riches of his grace will appear in the provision he has made for the salvation of both Jews and Gentiles. This observation of the apostle is of great use and importance; because we are authorized to state, in all the successive ages of the world, that he who saved the sinners at Ephesus, is ever ready to save all who, like them, repent of their sins, and believe in Christ Jesus.

8. For by grace are ye saved; through faith As ye are now brought into a state of salvation, your sins being all blotted out, and you made partakers of the Holy Spirit; and having a hope full of immortality, you must not attribute this to any works or merits of yours; for when this gospel reached you, you were all found dead in trespasses, and dead in sins; therefore it was God's free mercy to you, manifested through Christ, in whom ye were commanded to believe; and having believed by the power of the Holy Spirit, ye received, and were sealed by the Holy Spirit of promise: so that this salvation is in no sense of yourselves, but is the free gift of God, and not of any kind of works; so that no man can boast as having wrought out his own salvation, or even contributed any thing towards it. By grace ye are saved through faith in Christ. This is a true doctrine, and continues to be essential to the salvation of man to the end of the world.

But whether are we to understand faith or salvation as being the gift of God? This question is answered by the Greek text, τη γὰρ χάριτι ἐστὶν δωρεάν διὰ τῆς πίστεως καὶ τὸ αὐτὸ οὐκ ἐξ ἡμῶν. Ὅθεν τὸ δώρον, οὐκ ἐξ ἡμῶν τὰ καὶ πρὸς τὴν χάριν αὐτήν. "By this grace ye are saved through faith; and this [salvation] not of you; it is the gift of God, not of works: so that no one can boast." "The relative τὸ αὐτὸ, this, which is in the neuter gender, cannot stand for πίστις, faith, which is the feminine; but it has the whole sentence that goes before for its antecedent." But it may be asked, is not faith the gift of God? Yes, as to the grace by which it is produced: but the grace or power to believe, and the act of believing, are two different things. Without the grace or power to believe, no man ever did or can believe; but with that power, the act of faith is a man's own. God never believes for any man, no more than he repents for him: the penitent, through this grace enabling him, believes for himself; nor does he believe necessarily or impulsively, when he has that power: the power to believe may be present long before it is exercised, else why the solemn warnings with which we meet every where in the word of God; and threatenings against those who do not believe? Is not this a proof that such persons have the power, but do not use it: they believe not, and therefore are not established. This, therefore, is the true unto good works, which God hath before ordained that we should walk in them.

11 Wherefore remember, that ye being in time past Gentiles in the flesh, who are called Uncircumcision by that which is called the Circumcision in the flesh made by hands;

12 That at that time ye were without Christ, being aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers from the covenants of promise, having no hope, and without God in the world:

13 But now in Christ Jesus, ye who sometimes were far off, are made nigh by the blood of Christ.

state of the case; God gives the power, man uses the power thus given, and brings glory to God; without the power, no man can believe: with it, any man may.

10. For we are his workmanship So far is the salvation from being our own work, or granted for our own work's sake, we are ourselves not only the creatures of God, but our new creation was produced by his power; for we are created in Christ Jesus unto good works. He has saved us so that we may show forth the virtues of Him who called us from darkness into his marvellous light. For, though we are not saved for our good works, yet we are saved that we may perform good works to the glory of God, and the benefit of man.

Which God hath before ordained Ὅς προηορώσμεν; for which God before prepared us, that we might walk in them. For, being saved from sin, we are made partakers of the Spirit of holiness; and it is natural to that Spirit to lead to the practice of holiness; and he who is not holy in his life is not saved by the grace of Christ. The before ordaining, or rather preparing, must refer to the time when God began the new creation in their hearts; for, from the first inspiration of God upon the soul, it begins to love holiness: and obedience to the will of God is the very element in which a holy or regenerated soul lives.

11. Wherefore remember That ye may ever see and feel your obligations, to live a pure and holy life, and be unfeignedly thankful to God for your salvation; remember that ye were once heathens, in the flesh, without the pure doctrine, and under the influence of your corrupt nature; such as by the Jews, (who gloried, in consequence of their circumcision, to be in covenant with God,) were called uncircumcision, i.e. persons out of the Divine covenant, and having no right or title to any blessing of God.

12. That at that time ye were without Christ Not only were not Christians, but had no knowledge of the Christ or Messiah, and no title to the blessings which were to proceed from him.

Aliens from the commonwealth of Israel Ye were by your birth, idolatry, &c. alienated from the commonwealth of Israel; from the civil and religious privileges of the Jewish people.

Strangers from the covenants of promise Having no part in the promise of the covenant made with Abraham, whether considered as relating to his natural or spiritual seed; and no part in that of the covenant made at Horeb with the Israelites, when a holy law was given them, and God condescended to dwell among them, and to lead them to the Promised Land.

Having no hope Either of the pardon of sin, or of the resurrection of the body: nor indeed of the immortality of the soul. Of all these things, the Gentiles had no rational or well-grounded hope.

Without God in the world They had gods many, and lords many; but in no Gentile nation was the true God known; nor indeed had they any correct notion of the Divine nature. Their idols were, by nature, no gods; they could neither do evil nor good; and, therefore, they were properly without God, having no true object of worship, and no source of comfort. He who has neither God nor Christ, is in a most deplorable state; he has neither a God to worship, nor a Christ to justify him. And this is the state of every man who is living without the grace and spirit of Christ. All such, whatever they may profess, are no better than practical atheists.

13. Ye who sometimes were far off To be far off, and to be near, are sayings much in use among the Jews; and among them, to be near, signifies, 1. To be in the approbation or favour of God; and, 2. To be far off, signifies to be under his displeasure. So a wicked Jew might be said to be far off from God, when he was exposed to his displeasure; and a holy man, or a genuine penitent, might be said to be nigh to God, because such persons are in his favour. 2. Every person who offered a sacrifice to God was considered as having access to Him, by the blood of that sacrifice; hence the priests, whose office it was to offer sacrifices, were considered as being nigh to God. And all who brought gifts to the altar, were considered as approaching the Almighty. 3. Being far off, signified the state of the Gentiles as contradistinguished from the Jews, who were nigh. And these expressions were used in reference to the tabernacle, God's dwelling-place among the Israelites; and the sacrifices there offered. All those who had access to this tabernacle, or were nigh to it, or encamped about it, were said to be nigh to God; those who had no access to it, were said to be far off. Hence the latter phrase is used to distinguish the Gentiles from the Jewish people; and this appears to be the meaning of the prophet, Isa. Iviii. 19. I create the fruit of the lips, peace, peace to him that is far off, and to him that is near, saith the Lord: i. e. I give cause of praise and rejoicing to the Gentile as well as to the Jew. And to this Scripture, and to this thing, the apostle seems here to allude. You, Gentiles, who were unacquainted with God, and were even without God in the world, are brought to an acquaintance with Him: and are now, through Christ Jesus, brought into the favour and fellowship of God. And as the Jews of old approached God by the blood of their sacrifices, so you approach Him by the blood of Christ.

14. For he is our peace] Jesus Christ has died for both Jews and Gentiles, and has become a peace-offering, שֵׁלֵם shalom, to reconcile both to God, and to each other.

Who hath made both one] Formed one church out of the believers of both people.

The middle wall of partition] By abolishing the law of Jewish ordinances, he has removed that which kept the two parties not only in a state of separation, but also of variance. This expression, the middle wall, can refer only to that most marked distinction which the Jewish laws and customs made between them and all other nations whomsoever. Some think it refers to their ancient manner of living among the Gentiles; as they always end-avoured to live in some place by them-selves, and to have a river, or a wall, between them and their heathen neighbours. Indeed, wherever they went, their own rites, ordinances, and customs, were a sufficient separation between them and others; and as Jesus Christ abolished those customs, admitting all into his church, both Jews and Gen-tiles, by repentance and faith; he may be said to have broke down the middle wall of partition. When, at the death of Christ, the veil of the temple was rent from the top to the bottom, was an emblem that the way to the holiest was laid open, and that the people at large, both Jews and Gentiles, were to have access by the holiest by the blood of Jesus. Some think there is an allusion here to the wall called chell, which separated the court of Israel from the court of the Gentiles; but this was not broken down till the temple itself was destroyed; and to this transaction the apostle cannot be supposed to allude, as it did not take place till long after the writing of this epistle.

15. Having abolished in his flesh] By his incarnation and death, he not only made an atonement for sin, but he appointed the doctrine of reconciliation to God, and of love to each other, to be preached in all nations; and thus glory was brought to God in the highest; and on earth peace and good will were diffused among men.

The enmity of which the apostle speaks, was reciprocal among the Jews and Gentiles. The former detested the Gentiles, and could hardly allow them the denomination of men; the latter had the Jews in the most sovereign contempt, because of the peculiarity of their religious rites and ceremonies, which were different from all the other nations of the earth.

The law of commandments] Contained in, or rather concerning ordinances; which law was made merely for the purpose of keeping the Jews a distinct people, and pointing out the Son of God till he should come. When, therefore, the end of its institution was answered, it was no longer necessary; and Christ by his death abolished it.

To make in himself.) To make one church out of both people, which should be considered the body of which Jesus Christ is the head. Thus he makes one new man, one new church ; and thus he makes and establishes peace. I think the apostle still alludes to the peace-offering, שְׁלֵמֶה שְׁלֵמָה, among the Jews. They have a saying, Sephra, fol. 121. Who-soever offers a peace-offering sacrifice, brings peace to the world. Such a peace-offering was the death of Christ ; and, by it, peace is restored to the earth.

16. That he might reconcile both—in one body] That the Jews and Gentiles, believing on the Lord Jesus, might lay aside all their causes of contention, and become one spiritual body, or society of men, influenced by the Spirit, and acting according to the precepts of the Gospel.

Having slain the enmity thereby; Having by his death upon the cross, made reconciliation between God and man; and by his Spirit in their hearts, removed the enmity of their fallen sinful nature. Dr. Macknight thinks that abolishing the enmity, is spoken of the removal of the hatred which the Jews and Gentiles mutually bore to each other, because of the difference of their respective religious worship. And that slaying the enmity, refers to the removal of evil lusts and affections from the heart of man, by the power of Divine grace. This is nearly the sense given above.

17. And came and preached peace] Proclaimed the readiness of God to forgive and save both Jews and Gentiles. See the note on ver. 13.

18. For through him Christ Jesus; we both, Jews and Gentiles, have access by one Spirit, through the influence of the Holy Ghost, unto the Father, God Almighty. This text is a plain proof of the Holy Trinity. Jews and Gentiles are to be presented unto God the Father, the Fear of God works in their hearts, and prepares them for this presentation; and Jesus Christ himself introduces them. No soul can have access to God but by Jesus Christ; and he introduces none but such as receive his Holy Spirit. All who receive that Spirit, are equally dear to him; and whatever their names be among men, they are known in heaven as children of God, and heirs of eternal glory.

19. You are no more strangers] In this chapter, the church of God is compared to a city, which has a variety of privileges, rights, &c. founded on regular charters and grants. The Gentiles, having believed in Christ, are all incorporated with the believing Jews, in this holy city. Formerly, when any of them came to Jerusalem, being evot. strangers, they had no kind of rights whatever; nor could they, as mere heathens, settle among them. Again, if any of them, convinced of the errors of the Gentiles, acknowledged the God of Israel, but did not receive circumcision, he might dwell in the land, but he had no right to the blessings of the covenant; such might be called zupukoi, sojourners; persons who have no property in the land; and may only rent a house for the time being.

Yellow-citizens with the saints) Called to the enjoyment of equal privileges with the Jews themselves, who, by profession, were a holy people; who were bound to be holy, and therefore are often called saints or holy persons, when both their parts and conduct were far from being right in the sight of God. But the saints spoken of here are the converted or Christianized Jews.

(Of the household of God) The house of God is the temple; example was a type of the Christian church: this is now come God's house; all genuine believers are considered as ingrati, domestics of this house; the children and servants of God Almighty, having all equal rights, privileges, advantages; as all, through one Spirit, by the sacred Head the family, had equal access to God: and each might receive as much grace, and as much glory, as his soul could possibly contain.

20. And are built upon the foundation) Following the line metaphor, comparing the church of Christ to a city, and the temple; the believing Ephesians are represented as parts of that building; the living stones, out of which it is principally formed, 1 Pet. ii. 4, 5. having for foundation, a ground-plan, specification, and principle on which it was builded,) the doctrine taught by the prophets in the Old Testament, and the apostles in the New. Jesus Christ being that corner-stone, or apex, crucis, the chief angle, or foundation corner-stone; and the connecting medium by which both Jews and Gentiles were united in the same building. Elsewhere, as Christ is termed the foundation-stone. Behold I lay Zion a foundation-stone, a tried stone, a precious corner-stone. xxviii. 16. but the meaning is the same in all the places where these terms foundation or corner-stone occur; in laying the foundation of a building, a large stone is usually placed at one of the angles or corners, which serves upon a part of the two walls, and which meets in that angle. Hence, therefore, the apostle says that Jesus Christ is the chief corner-stone, it means such a foundation-stone as that above mentioned.

in whom) By which foundation corner-stone, Christ is, all the building composed of converted Jews and Gentiles; fitly framed together; συνωπυκνωσεν, properly joined and connected together; growth unto a holy temple; is continually increasing, as new converts from Judaism or heathenism flock into it. It is not a finished building; but will time to increase, and be more and more perfect, till the of judgment.

In whom ye also are builded The apostle now applies the metaphor to the purpose for which he produced it, retaining however some of the figurative expressions. As the stones of the temple are all properly placed, so as to form a complete edifice, and be a habitation for the Deity that is worshipped there : so ye are all, both believing Jews and Gentiles, prepared by the doctrine of the prophets and apostles, under the influence of the Spirit of Christ, to become a habitation of God ; a church in which God shall be worthily worshipped, and in which he can continually dwell.

1. Many suppose that the apostle, in the preceding chapter, alludes to the splendour of the Temple of Diana at Ephesus ; which was reputed one of the wonders of the world. But, to me, this opinion does not seem sufficiently founded. I believe he has the Jewish temple continually in view ; for that temple, above all in the universe, could alone be said to be a habitation of God. Both in the tabernacle and temple, God dwelt between the cherubim ; there was the symbol of his presence, and there was the worship performed which himself had prescribed. After the model of this was the spiritual temple, the Christian church, constructed ; and God was to dwell in the one, as he had dwelt in the other. This simile, drawn from the temple at Jerusalem, was alone worthy of the apostle's design : to have alluded to the temple of Diana, would have disgraced his subject. And as many at Ephesus were Jews, and well acquainted with the temple at Jerusalem, they would both feel and venerate the apostle's simile, and be led to look for the in-dwelling of God, that which distinguished the Jewish temple from all others on the face of the earth.

2. The church of God is very properly said to be a most noble and wonderful work ; and truly worthy of God himself.

There is nothing, says one, so august as this church, seeing it is the temple of God. Nothing so worthy of reverence, seeing God dwells in it. Nothing so ancient, since the patriarchs and prophets laboured in building it. Nothing so solid, since Jesus Christ is the foundation of it. Nothing more closely united and indissoluble, since he is the corner-stone. Nothing so lofty, since it reaches as high as heaven, and to the bosom of God himself. Nothing so regular and well proportioned, since the Holy Spirit is the architect. Nothing more beautiful, or adorned with greater variety, since it consists of Jews and Gentiles of every age, country, sex, and condition : the mightiest potentates, the most renowned warriors, the most profound philosophers, the most eminent scholars, besides all those of whom the world was not worthy, have formed a part of this building. Nothing more spacious, since it is spread over the whole earth, and takes in all who have washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb. Nothing so inviolable, since it is consecrated to Jehovah. Nothing so divine, since it is a living building, animated and inhabited by the Holy Ghost. Nothing so beneficent, seeing it gives shelter to the poor, the wretched, and distressed of every nation, and kindred, and tongue. It is the place in which God does his marvellous works : the theatre of his justice, mercy, goodness, and truth—where he is to be sought, where he is to be found ; and in which alone he is to be retained.

As we have one only God, and one only Saviour and Mediator between God and man, and one only inspiring Spirit ; so there is but one church, in which this ineffable Jehovah performs his work of salvation. That church, however scattered and divided throughout the world, is but one building, founded on the Old and New Testaments ; having but one sacrifice, the Lord Jesus, the Lamb of God, that takes away the sin of the world.

3. Of this glorious church every Christian soul is an epitome ; for, as God dwells in the church at large, so he dwells in every believer in particular : each is a habitation of God through the Spirit. In vain are all pretensions among sects and parties to the privileges of the church of Christ, if they have not the doctrine and life of Christ. Traditions and legends are not apostolic doctrines ; and showy ceremonies, are not the life of God in the soul of man.

4. Religion has no need of human ornaments or trappings ; it shines by its own light, and is refulgent with its own glory. Where it is not in life and power, men have endeavoured to produce a specious image, dressed and ornamented with their own hands. Into this, God never breathed, therefore it can do no good to man, and only impresses on the ignorant and credulous, by a vain show of lifeless pomp and splendour. This phanton called true religion, and the church, by its votaries, is in heaven denominated vain superstition ; the speechless symbol of departed piety.

CHAPTER III.

Paul, a prisoner for the testimony of Jesus, declares his knowledge of what had been a mystery from all ages, that the Gentiles should be fellow-heirs, and of the same body with the Jews, 1—5. Of which doctrine he was made a minister, that he might declare the unspeakable riches of Christ ; and make known to principalities and powers this eternal purpose of God, 7—12. He desires them not to be discouraged on account of his tribulations, 13. His prayer, that they might be filled with all the fulness of God, 14—19. His doxology, 20, 21. [A. M. cir. 4065. A. NOTES.—Verse 1. For this cause] Because he maintained that the Gentiles were admitted to all the privileges of the Jews, and all the blessings of the New Covenant, without being obliged to submit to circumcision, the Jews persecuted him, and caused him to be imprisoned, first at Cæsarea, where he was obliged to appeal to the Roman emperor, in consequence of which he was sent prisoner to Rome. See Acts xxi. 21—28, &c.

The prisoner of Jesus Christ for you Gentiles] For preaching the Gospel to the Gentiles, and showing that they were not bound by the law of Moses, and yet were called to be fellow-citizens with the saints ; for this very cause the Jews persecuted him unto bonds, and conspired his death.

2. If ye have heard of the dispensation] The compound particle ei, which is commonly translated if indeed, in several places means since indeed, seeing that, and should be translated so in this verse, and in several other places of the New Testament. Seeing ye have heard of the dispensation of God, which is given me to you-ward : this they had amply learnt from the apostle, during his stay at Ephesus, for he had not shunned to declare unto them the whole counsel of God, Acts xx. 27, and kept nothing back that was profitable to them, ibid. v. 20. And this was certainly among those things that were most profitable, and most necessary to be known.

By the dispensation of the grace of God we may understand either the apostolic office and gifts granted to St. Paul, for the purpose of preaching the Gospel among the Gentiles ; see Rom. 1. 5. or the knowledge which God gave him of that gracious and divine plan which he had formed for the conversion of the Gentiles. For the meaning of the word economy, see the note, chap. i. 10.

3. By revelation he made known unto me] Instead of εὐνοίας, he made known, εὐνοίας, was made known, is the reading of ABCD FG. several others ; both the Syriac, Coptic, Slavonic, Vulgate, and Latin ; with Clemens, Cyril, Chrysostom, Theodoret, Damascenus, and others : it is doubtless the true reading.

The apostle wishes the Ephesians to understand that it was not an opinion of his own, or a doctrine which he was taught by others, or which he had gathered from the ancient prophets ; but one that came to him by immediate revelation from God : as he had informed them before, in a few words, referring to what he had said, chap. i. 9—12.

4. Whereby, when ye read] When ye refer back to them.

Ye may understand my knowledge] Ye may see what God has given me to know concerning what has been hitherto a mystery, the calling of the Gentiles, and the breaking down the middle wall between them and the Jews, so as to make both one spiritual body ; and on the same conditions.

5. Which in other ages was not made known] That the calling of the Gentiles was made known by the prophets, in different ages of the Jewish church, is exceedingly clear ; but it certainly was not made known in that clear and precise manner in which it was now revealed by the Spirit, unto the ministers of the New Testament : nor was it made known unto them at all, that the Gentiles should find salvation without coming under the yoke of the Mosaic law ; and that the Jews themselves should be freed from that yoke of bondage. These were discoveries totally new, and now revealed for the first time by the Spirit of God.

6. That the Gentiles should be fellow-heirs] This is the substance of that mystery which had been hidden from all ages, and which was now made known to the New Testament apostles and prophets ; and more particularly to St. Paul.

His promise in Christ] That the promise made to Abraham, extended to the Gentiles, the apostle has largely proved in his Epistle to the Romans ; and that it was to be fulfilled to them, by and through Christ, he proves there also ; and particularly in his Epistle to the Galatians.—See Galat. iii. 14. And that these blessings were to be announced in the preaching of the Gospel, and received on believing it, he every where declares, but more especially in this epistle.

7. Whereof I was made a minister] Διακονε, a deacon, a servant, acting under and by the direction of the great master, Jesus Christ; from whom, by an especial call and revelation, I received the apostolic gifts and office; and, by την ενεργειαν της δυναμειος αυτου, the energy, the inworking of his power, this Gospel which I preached was made effectual to the salvation of vast multitudes of Jews and Gentiles.

S. Less than the least of all saints Ελαχιστοτερος παντων αγων. As the design of the apostle was to magnify the grace of Christ in the salvation of the world, he uses every precaution to prevent the eyes of the people from being turned to any thing but Christ crucified; and, although he was obliged to speak of himself as the particular instrument which God had chosen to bring the Gentile world to the knowledge of the truth: yet he does it in such a manner, as to show that the excellency of the power was of God, and not of him; and that, highly as he and his fellow-apostles were honoured, they had the heavenly treasure in earthen vessels. To lay himself as low as possible, consistently with his being in the number of divinely commissioned men, he calls himself less than the least; and is obliged to make a new word, by strangely forming a comparative degree, not from the positive, which would have been a regular grammatical procedure, but from the superlative. The adjective ελαχιστος, signifies little, chacon, or chacon, less, and ελαχιστος, least. In this latter, which is the superlative of ελαχιστος, little, St. Paul forms his comparative ελαχιστοτερος, less than the least; a word, of which it would be vain to attempt a better translation than that given in our own version. It most strongly marks the unparalleled humility of the apostle; and the amazing condescension of God, in favouring him who had been before a persecutor and blasphemer, with the knowledge of this glorious scheme of human redemption; and the power to preach it so successfully among the Gentiles.

The unsearchable riches of Christ [The word ανεξεταστος, from a privative, and εξεταστω, to trace out, from εξω, a step, is exceedingly well chosen here: it refers to the footsteps of God, the plans he had formed, the dispensations which he had published, and the innumerable providences which he had combined to prepare, mature, and bring to full effect and view, his gracious designs in the salvation of a ruined world, by the incarnation, passion, death, and resurrection of his Son. There were in these schemes and providences such riches, such an abundance, such a variety, as could not be comprehended even by the naturally vast and, through the Divine inspiration, unparalleled capacious mind of the apostle.

Yet, he was to proclaim among the Gentiles these astonishing wonders and mysteries of grace: and as he proceeds in this great and glorious work, the Holy Spirit that dwelt in him, opens to his mind more and more of those riches; leads him into those footsteps of the Almighty which could not be investigated by man nor angel; so that his preaching and apostles, taken all in their chronological order, will prove that his views brighter, and his discoveries become more numerous, and more distinct, in proportion as he advances. And had he lived, preached, and written to the present day, he had not exhausted the subject, nor fully declared to the Gentiles, the unsearchable riches of Christ; the endless depths of wisdom and knowledge treasured up in him; and the infinity of saving acts, and saving power, displayed by him.

9. And to make all men see] Καὶ φορησαι παντας, and to illuminate all; to give information both to Jews and Gentiles; to afford them a sufficiency of light, so that they might be able distinctly to discern the great objects exhibited in this Gospel.

What is the fellowship of the mystery] The word κοινωνια, which we properly translate fellowship, was used among the Greeks, to signify their religious communities; here it may intimate the association of Jews and Gentiles in one church or body; and their agreement in that glorious mystery which was now so fully opened relative to the salvation of both. But instead of κοινωνια, fellowship, οικονομια, dispensation, or economy, is the reading of ABCDEFG. and more than fifty others; both the Syriac, Coptic, Ethiopic, Armenian, Slavonian, Vulgate, and Itala, with the chief of the Greek Fathers. Some of the best printed editions of the Greek text have the same reading; and that in our common text has very little authority to support it. Dispensation or economy, is far more congenial to the scope of the apostle's declaration in this place; he wished to show them the economy of that mystery of bringing Jews and Gentiles to salvation by faith in Christ Jesus, which God, from the beginning of the world, had kept hidden in his own infinite mind; and did not think proper to reveal it, even when he projected the creation of the world, which had respect to the economy of human redemption. And although the world was made by Jesus Christ, the great Redeemer; yet at that period, this revelation of the power of 11 ¹ According to the eternal purpose which he purposed in Christ Jesus our Lord:

12 In whom we have boldness and access ² with confidence by the faith of him.

13 Wherefore I desire that ye faint not at my tribulations ³ for you, ⁴which is my glory.

14 For this cause I bow my knees unto the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ,

15 Of whom the whole family in heaven and earth is named,

16 And to him all glory, honour, and thanksgiving, evermore, Amen.

God, the design of saving men, whose full infinite wisdom had foreseen, was not then revealed.

Who created all things by Jesus Christ] Some very judicious critics are of opinion that this does not refer to the material creation; and that we should understand the whole as referring to the formation of all God's dispensations of grace, mercy, and truth; which have been planned, managed, and executed by Christ from the foundation of the world to the present time. But the words εα ιησους χριστου, by Jesus Christ, are wanting in ABCDEFG, and several others; also in the Syriac, Arabic of Eripen, Coptic, Ethiopic, Vulgate, and Itala; as also in several of the Fathers. Griesbach has thrown the words out of the text, and Professor White says, "certissime delenda," they are indubitably spurious. The text therefore should be read, Which from the beginning of the world had been hidden in God, who created all things. No inferiority of Christ can be argued from a clause of whose spuriousness there is the strongest evidence.

10. That now unto the principalities and powers in heavenly places] Who are these principalities and powers? Some think evil angels are intended, because they are thus denominated, chap. vi. 12. Others think good angels are meant; for, as these heavenly beings are curious to investigate the wondrous economy of the Gospel, though they are not its immediate objects, see 1 Pet. i. 12, it is quite consistent with the goodness of God, to give them that satisfaction which they require. And in this discovery of the Gospel plan of salvation, which reconciles things in heaven and things in earth, both men and angels, these pure spirits are greatly interested, and their praises to the Divine Being rendered much more abundant. Others imagine the Jewish rulers and rabbins are intended, particularly those of them which were converted to Christianity, and who had now learnt from the preaching of the Gospel, what as Jesus, they could never have known. I have had several opportunities of showing, that this sort of phraseology is frequent among the Jews; and indeed not seldom used in the New Testament. Mr. Macknight, whose mode of arguing against this opinion, is not well chosen, supposes, that "the different orders of angels in heaven are intended; whose knowledge of God's dispensations must be as gradual as the dispensations themselves; consequently, their knowledge of the manifold wisdom of God must have been greatly increased by the constitution of the Christian church." Of this there can be no doubt, whether the terms in the text refer to them or not.

By the church] That is, by the Christians; and by the wonderful things done in the church; and by the apostles who were its pastors.

The manifold wisdom of God] Η πολυποικιλος σοφια, that multifarious, and greatly diversified wisdom of God; laying great and infinite plans, and accomplishing them by endless means, through the whole lapse of ages; making every occurrence subservient to the purposes of his infinite mercy and goodness. God's gracious design to save a lost world, by Jesus Christ, could not be defeated by any cunning, skill, or malice of man or devils; whatever hindrances are thrown in the way, his wisdom and power can remove; and his infinite wisdom can never want ways or means to effect its gracious designs.

11. According to the eternal purpose] Κατα προθεσιν του αιωνος, according to the purpose concerning the periods. This seems to refer to the complete round of the Jewish system, and to that of the Gospel. I have often observed that, though the proper grammatical meaning of the word is ever-during, or endless duration; yet it is often applied to those systems, periods, governments, &c. which have a complete duration, taking in the whole of them, from their commencement to their termination; leaving nothing of their duration unembraced. So here, God purposed that the Jewish dispensation should commence at such a time, and terminate at such a time; that the Gospel dispensation should commence when the Jewish ended, and terminate only with time itself; and that the results of both should be endless.—This is probably what is meant by the above phrase.

Which he purposed in Christ Jesus] Ην επιτησεν, which he made or constituted, in or for Christ Jesus. The manifestation of Christ, and the glory which should follow, were the grand objects which God kept in view, in all his dispensations.

12. In whom we have boldness] By whom we, Gentiles, have την ελευθεριαν, this liberty of speech; so that we may say any thing by prayer and supplication; and την προσωπιαν, this introduction, into the Divine presence, by faith in Christ. It is only in his name we can pray to God; and it is only by him that we can come to God; none can give us an introduction but Christ Jesus; and it is only for his sake that God will either hear or save us. It is on the ground of such scriptures

16 That he would grant you, ¹⁶ according to the riches of his glory, ¹⁷ to be strengthened with might by his Spirit in ¹⁸ the inner man;

17 ¹⁹ That Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith; that ye, ²⁰ being rooted and grounded in love,

18 ²¹ May be able to comprehend with all saints, ²² what is the breadth, and length, and depth, and height; as these, that we conclude all our prayers in the name and for the sake of Jesus Christ our Lord.

13. I desire that ye faint not! In those primitive times, when there was much persecution, people were in continual danger of falling away from the faith, who were not well grounded in it. This the apostle deprecates, and advances a strong reason why they should be firm—"I suffer my present imprisonment, on account of demonstrating your privileges, of which the Jews were envious: I bear my afflictions patiently, knowing that what I have advanced is of God, and thus I give ample proof of the sincerity of my own conviction. The sufferings, therefore, of your apostle are honourable to you and to your cause; and far from being any cause why you should faint, or draw back like cowards, in the day of distress, they should be an additional argument to induce you to persevere."

14. For this cause I bow my knees! That they might not faint, but persevere, I frequently pray to God, who is our God, and the Father of our Lord Jesus. Some very ancient and excellent MSS. and Versions, omit the words τοῦ κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, of our Lord Jesus Christ. And in them the passage reads, I bow my knees unto the Father. The apostle prays to God the Father, that they may not faint; and he bows his knees in this praying. What can any man think of himself, who, in his addresses to God, can either sit on his seat, or stand in the presence of the Maker and Judge of all men! Would they sit while addressing any person of ordinary respectability? If they did so, they would be reckoned very rude indeed. Would they sit in the presence of the king of their own land? They would not be permitted so to do. Is God then to be treated with less respect than a fellow-mortal? Paul knelt in praying, Acts xv. 36. xxi. 5. Stephen knelt when he was stoned, Acts xii. 53. And Peter knelt when he missed Tabitha, Acts ix. 40.

Many parts of this prayer bear a strict resemblance to that offered up by Solomon, 2 Chron. vi. 1, &c. when dedicating the temple, he knelt down upon his knees before all the congregation of Israel, and spread forth his hands towards heaven, 2 Chron. vi. 13. The apostle was now dedicating the Christian church that then was, and that ever should be, to God; and praying for those blessings which should ever rest on, and distinguish it: and he knelt down after the example of Solomon, and invokes him to whom the first temple was dedicated; and who had made it a type of the Gospel church.

15. Of whom the whole family! Believers in the Lord Jesus Christ on earth; the spirits of just men made perfect, in a separate state; and all the holy angels in heaven, make but one family, of which God is the Father and Head. St. Paul does not say of whom the families, as if each order formed a distinct household; but he says family, because they are all one, and of one. And all this family is named, derives its origin and being, from God, as children derive their name from him who is the father of the family: holy persons in heaven and earth derive their being and their holiness from God, and therefore his name is called upon them. Christ gives the name of Christians to all the real members of his church upon earth; and to all the spirits of just men, (saved since his advent, and through his blood,) in heaven. They are all the sons and daughters of God Almighty.

16. That he would grant you! This prayer of the apostle is one of the most grand and sublime in the whole oracles of God. The riches of the grace of the Gospel, and the extent to which the soul of man may be saved here below, are most emphatically pointed out here. Every word seems to have come immediately from heaven; labouring to convey ideas of infinite importance to mankind. No paraphrase can do it justice, and few commentators seem to have entered into its spirit; perhaps deterred by its unparalleled sublimity. I shall only attempt a few observations upon the terms, to show their force and meaning; and leave all the rest to that Spirit by which these most important words were dictated.

That he would grant you!—You can expect nothing from him but as a free gift through Christ Jesus; let this be a ruling sentiment of your hearts when you pray to God.

According to the riches of his glory! According to the measure of his own eternal fulness; God's infinite mercy and goodness being the measure according to which we are to be saved. In giving alms, it is a maxim that every one should act according to his ability. It would be a disgrace to a king or a nobleman, to give no more than a tradesman or a peasant. God acts up to the dignity of his infinite perfections; He gives according to the riches of his glory.

To be strengthened with might! Ye have many enemies, cunning and strong; many trials, too great for your natural strength; many temptations, which no human power is able successfully to resist; many duties to perform, which cannot be accomplished by the strength of man; therefore you need Divine strength; ye must have might; and ye must be 20 ²¹ Now I unto him that is able to do exceeding abundantly ²² above all that we ask or think, ²³ according to the power that worketh in us.

21 ²⁴ Unto him be glory in the church by Christ Jesus, throughout all ages, world without end. Amen.

strengthened every where, and every way fortified by that might; mightily and most effectually strengthened.

By his Spirit! By the sovereign energy of the Holy Ghost. This fountain of spiritual energy can alone supply the spiritual strength which is necessary for this spiritual work and conflict.

In the inner man! In the soul. Every man is a compound being: he has a body and a soul. The outward man is that alone which is seen and considered by men; the inward man is that which stands particularly in reference to God and eternity. The outward man is strengthened by earthly food, &c. the inward man, by spiritual and heavenly influences. Knowledge, love, peace, and holiness are the food of the inward man; or rather Jesus Christ, that bread of life which came down from heaven: he that eateth this bread, shall live and be strengthened by it. The soul must be as truly fed, and nourished by Divine food, as the body by natural food.

17. That Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith! In this, as well as in many other passages, and particularly that in chap. ii. 21, where see the note, the apostle compares the body or church of true believers to a temple, which, like that of Solomon, is built up to be a habitation of God through the Spirit. Here, as Solomon did at the dedication of the temple at Jerusalem, 2 Chron. vi. 1, &c. Paul having considered the church at Ephesus completely formed, as to every external thing, prays that God may come down and dwell in it. And as there could be no indwelling of God but by Christ, and no indwelling of Christ but by faith, he prays that they may have such faith in Christ, as shall keep them in a constant possession of his love and presence. God, at the beginning, formed man to be his temple; and while in a state of purity, he inhabited this temple; when the temple became defiled, God left it. In the breach of his eternal mercy, Christ, the repairer of the breach, comes to purify the temple, that it may again become a fit habitation for the blessed God. This is what the apostle points out to the believing Ephesians, in praying that Christ, κατοικοῦναι, might intensely and constantly dwell in their hearts by faith: for the man's heart, which is not God's house, must be a hold of every foul and unclean spirit; as Satan and his angels will endeavour to fill what God does not.

That ye, being rooted and grounded in love! Here is a double metaphor, one taken from agriculture, the other from architecture. As trees, they are to be rooted in love; this is the soil on which their souls are to grow: into the infinite love of God, their souls, by faith, are to strike their roots; and, from this love, derive all that nourishment which is essential for their full growth, till they have the mind in them that was in Jesus; or, as it is afterward said, till they are filled with all the fulness of God. As a building, their foundation is to be laid in this love. God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, &c. Here is the ground on which alone the soul, and all its hopes and expectations, can be safely founded. This is a foundation that cannot be shaken; and it is from this alone that the doctrine of redemption flows to man; and from this alone has the soul its form and comeliness. Is this, as its proper soil, it grows. On this, as its only foundation, it rests.

18. May be able to comprehend with all saints! ἵνα ἐν-εσχυόμεν κατὰ χάριν: these words are so exceedingly nervous, and full of meaning, that it is almost impossible to translate them. The first word ἐν-εσχυόμεν, from ἐξ, intensive, and αἰσχυομαι, to be strong, signifies that they might be thoroughly able, by having been strengthened with might, by God's power. The second word, κατὰ χάριν, from κατά, intensive, and χάρισμα, to take, catch, or seize on, may be translated, that ye may fully catch, take in, and comprehend, this wonderful mystery of God. The mind must be rendered apt, and the soul invigorated, to take in, and comprehend, these mysteries.

What is the breadth, and length, and depth, and height! Here the apostle still keeps up the metaphor, comparing the church of God to a building; and, as in order to rear a proper building, formed on scientific principles, a ground plan and specification must be previously made, according to which the building is to be constructed; the apostle refers to this, for this must be thoroughly understood, without which the building could not be formed. They were to be built up a heavenly house, a habitation of God through the Spirit; and this must have its latitude or breadth: its height, or length; its altitude, or height; and its profundity, or depth.

It is supposed by some, that the apostle is here alluding to the famous temple of Diana, at Ephesus; which, as I have already had occasion to remark, was reputed one of the wonders of the world, being in length 425 feet; in breadth 220: it was supported by 127 pillars, each 60 feet high; was builded at the expense of all Asia; and was 220 years in being completed. I cannot, however, allow of this allusion, while the apostle had a nobler model at hand; and one every way more worthy of being brought into the comparison. The temple of Jerusalem was that alone which he had in view; that alone could be fitly compared here; for that was built to be a habitation of God; that was His house, and that the place of His rest: so the Christian temple, and the believing heart, are to be the constant, the endless residence of God: and how august must that edifice be, in which the eternal Trinity dwells!

But what can the apostle mean by the breadth, length, depth, and height, of the love of God? Imagination can scarcely frame any satisfactory answer to this question. It takes in the eternity of God. God is LOVE; and in that, an infinity of breadth, length, depth, and height, is included; or rather all breadth, length, depth, and height, are lost in this immensity. It comprehends all that is above, all that is below; all that is past, and all that is to come. In reference to human beings, the love of God, in its BREADTH, is a girdle that encompasses the globe; its LENGTH reaches, from the eternal purpose of the mission of Christ, to the eternity of blessedness, which is to be spent in his ineffable glories; its DEPTH reaches to the lowest fallen of the sons of Adam, and to the deepest depravity of the human heart; and its HEIGHT to the infinite dignities of the throne of Christ. He that overcometh will give to sit down with me upon my throne, as I have overcome, and sat down with the Father upon his throne. Thus we see, that the Father, the Son, and all true believers in Him, are to be seated on the same throne! This is but the height of the love of God; and the height to which that love raises the souls that believe in Christ Jesus!

19. To know the love of Christ which passeth knowledge) It is only by the love of Christ that we can know the love of God; the love of God to man induced him to give Christ for his redemption; Christ's love to man induced him to give his life's blood for his salvation. The gift of Christ to man, is the measure of God's love; the death of Christ for man, is the measure of Christ's love. God so loved the world, &c. Christ loved us, and gave himself for us.

But how can the love of Christ which passeth knowledge, be known? Many have laboured to reconcile this seeming contradiction. If we take the verb know in a sense in which it is frequently used in the New Testament, to approve, acknowledge, or acknowledge with approbation; and knows, to signify comprehension; then the difficulty will be partly removed. That ye may acknowledge, approve, and publicly acknowledge, that love of God which surpasseth knowledge. We can acknowledge and approve of that which surpasses our comprehension. We cannot comprehend God; yet we can know that he is: approve of, love, adore, and serve him. In like manner, though we cannot comprehend the immensity of the love of Christ, yet we know that he has loved us, and washed us from our sins, in his own blood; and we approve of, and acknowledge Him, as our only Lord and Saviour. In this sense we may be said to know the love of Christ that passeth knowledge.

But it is more likely that the word knows, which we translate knowledge, signifies here science in general, and particularly that science of which the rabbin boasted; and that in which the Greeks greatly exulted. The former professed to have the key of knowledge, the secret of all Divine mysteries; the latter, considered their philosophers, and their systems of philosophy, superior to every thing that had ever been known among men; and reputed, on this account, all other nations as barbarians. When the apostle prays that they may know the love of God which passeth knowledge, he may refer to all the boasted knowledge of the Jewish doctors; and to all the greatly extolled science of the Greek philosophers. To know the love of Christ, infinitely surpasseth all other science.—This gives a clear and satisfactory sense.

That ye might be filled with all the fullness of God) Among all the great sayings in this prayer, this is the greatest. To be filled with God, is a great thing; to be filled with the fullness of God, is still greater; but to be filled with ALL the fullness of God, περὶ τὸ πληροῦν τοῦ Θεοῦ, utterly bewilders the sense, and confounds the understanding.

Most people, in quoting these words, endeavour to correct or explain the apostle, by adding the word communicable; but this is as idle as it is useless and impertinent. The apostle means what he says; and would be understood in his own meaning. By the fullness of God, we are to understand all those gifts and graces which he has promised to bestow on man; and which he dispenses to the church. To be filled with all the fullness of God, is to have the whole soul filled with meekness, gentleness, goodness, love, justice, holiness, mercy, and truth. And, as what God fills, neither sin nor Satan can fill; consequently, it implies that the soul shall be emptied of sin, that sin shall neither have dominion over it, nor a being in it. It is impossible for us to understand these words in a lower sense, than this. But how much more they imply, (for, more they do imply,) I cannot tell. As there is no end to the merits of Christ, no bounds to the mercy and love of God, no limits to the improbability of the human soul; so the ocean has no bounds set to the saving influence which God will dispense to the heart of every believer. We may ask, and we shall receive; and our joy shall be full.

20. Now unto him) Having finished his short, but most wonderfully comprehensive and energetic prayer, the apostle brings in his doxology, giving praise to Him from whom all blessings come, and to whom all thanks are due.

That is able to do exceeding abundantly) It is impossible to express the full meaning of these words. God is omnipotent.

therefore he is able to do all things; and able to do υπερ ἐκ πάντων, superabundantly above the greatest abundance. And who can doubt this, who has any rational or scriptural views of his power or his love.

All that we ask or think) We can ask every good of which we have heard: every good which God has promised in his word; and we can think of, or imagine, goods and blessings beyond all that we have either seen or read. Yea, we can imagine good things to which it is impossible for us to give a name; we can go beyond the limits of all human descriptions; we can imagine more than even God has specified in his word: and can feel no bounds to our imagination of good, but impossibility and eternity. And after all, God is able to do more for us than we can ask or think; and his ability here is so necessarily connected with his willingness, that the one indisputably implies the other: for, of what consequence would it be to tell the church of God, that he had power to do so and so, if there were not implied an assurance that he will do what his power can, and what the soul of man needs to have done?

According to the power that worketh in us) All that he can do, and all that he has promised to do, will be done according to what he has done; by that power of the Holy Ghost, τὴν ἐνεργουμένην, which worketh strongly in us; acts with energy in our hearts, expelling evil, purifying and refining the affections and desires, and implanting good.

21. Unto him) Thus possessed of power and goodness, be glory in the church, be praising praises ascribed in all the assemblies of the people of God, wherever these glad tidings are preached; and wherever this glorious doctrine shall be credited.

By Christ Jesus) Through whom, and for whom, all these miracles of mercy and power are wrought.

Throughout all ages) Εἰς πάντας τὰς γενεάς, through all succeeding generations; while the race of human beings continues to exist on the face of the earth.

World without end) Τὸν αἰῶνα τὸν αἰῶνα, throughout eternity; in the coming world, as well as in this. The song of praise began upon earth, and protracted through all the generations of men; shall be continued in heaven, by all that are redeemed from the earth, where eras, limits, and periods are no more for ever.

Amen) So be it. So let it be! and so it will be: for, all the counsels of God are faithful and true; and not one jot or tittle of his promise has failed, from the foundation of the world to the present day; nor can fail, till mortality is swallowed up of life. Therefore, to the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, be glory, dominion, power, and thanksgiving; now, henceforth, and for ever.—Amen and Amen.

1. For the great importance of the matter contained in this chapter, and the sublimity of the language and conceptions, there is no portion of the New Testament equal to this. The apostle was now shut up in prison, but the word of the Lord was not bound; and the kingdom of God seems to have been opened to him in a most astonishing manner. There seems to have been exhibited to him a plan of the Divine counsels and conduct, relative to the salvation of man, before, and from the foundation of the world, to the end of time; and while, with the eye of his mind, he contemplates this plan, he describes it in language at once the most elevated that can be conceived; and every where dignified and appropriate to his subject; so that he may with safety be compared with the finest of the Grecian writers. In the notes, I have already observed how hard it is to give any literal translation of the many compound epithets which the apostle uses. Indeed his own nervous language seems to bend and tremble under the weight of the divine ideas which it endeavours to express. This is most observable in the prayer and doxology which are contained in verses 14–21. A passage in Thucydides, lib. vii. cap. lxxxvii. in fine, where he gives an account of the total overthrow of the Athenian general Sicias, and his whole army, by the Sicilians, has been compared with this of the apostle; it is truly a grand piece, and no reader can be displaced with its introduction here.—ἔχρησεν τὸ ἐν αὐτῷ τοῦ ΕΛΛΗΝΙΚΟΥ τὸν κατὰ τὸν πόλεμον τὸρδὲ μετὰ τὴν γαλήνην—καὶ τοὺς τε κορυφαίους ἡμικροῦς, καὶ τοὺς ἐπιθωρηκτοὺς ἐπὶ τῶν κατὰ πύργους πύργους, καὶ οὐδὲν ὀλίγον ἐς οὐδὲν κατασφάλλειν, πανόληθρα ἐν τῷ λεγόμενῳ, καὶ πέδους καὶ ὄρους, καὶ οὐδὲν ἐν τῷ ἀπολέσῳ καὶ ὀλίγοι οὐκ πολλοὶ ἐπ' αὐτῶν ἀπὸ τῶν ὀπλῶν. This was the greatest disproportion which the Greeks sustained during the whole of this war; and was as brilliant to the conquerors, as it was calamitous to the vanquished. In every respect they were totally defeated; and they suffered no small evil in every particular; the destruction was universal, both of army and navy; there was nothing that did not perish; and scarcely any out of vast multitudes, returned to their own homes."

The learned may compare the two passages; and while due credit is given to the splendid Greek historian, no critic will deny the palm to the inspired writer.

2. With such portions of the word of God before us, how is it that we can be said consecutively to credit the doctrines of Christianity, and live satisfied with such slender attainments in the Divine life? Can any man that pleads for his necessary and everlasting continuance of inordinating sin, believe what the apostle has written? Can we, who profess any temper or passion that does not belong to the mind of Christ? Will it be said in answer, "that this is only a prayer of the apostle; and contains his wish from the overflows of his heart, for the spiritual prosperity of the Ephesians. Was the apostle inspired or not, when he penned this prayer? If he were not inspired, the prayer makes no part of Divine revelation; if he were inspired, every petition is tantamount to a positive promise: for, what God inspires the heart to pray for, that, God purposes to bestow. Then, it is his will, that all these blessings should be enjoyed by his true followers; that Christ should inhabit their hearts; and that they should be filled with all the fulness of God; yea, and that God should do for them more abundantly than they can ask or think.

This necessarily implies that they should be saved from all sin, inward and outward in this life: that the thoughts of their hearts should be cleansed by the inspiration of God's Holy Spirit, that they may perfectly love Him, and worthily magnify his holy Name.

As sin is the cause of the ruin of mankind, the Gospel system which is its cure, is called good news, or glad tidings; and it is good news because it proclaims Him who saves his people from their sins. It would be dishonourable to the grace of Christ, to suppose that sin had made wounds, which it could not heal.

CHAPTER IV.

The apostle exhorts them to walk worthy of their vocation, and to live in peace and unity, 1-6. Shows that God has distributed a variety of gifts, and instituted a variety of offices in his church, for the building up and perfecting of the body of Christ, 7-13. Pouches them the necessity of being well instructed and steady in Divine things, 14. Teaches how the body, or Church of Christ, is constituted, 15, 16. Warns them against acting like the Gentiles, of whose conduct he gives a lamentable description, 17-19. Points out how they had been changed in consequence of their conversion to Christianity, 20, 21. Gives various exhortations relative to the purification of their minds; their conduct to each other, and to the poor, 22-28. Shows them that their conversation should be chaste and holy, that they might not grieve the Spirit of God; that they should avoid all bad tempers, be kindly affectioned one to another, and be of a forgiving spirit, 29-32. 8. Wherefore he saith] The reference seems to be to Psal. xviii. 18, which, however it may speak of the removal of the tabernacle; appears to have been intended to point out the glorious ascension of Christ after his resurrection from the dead. The expositions of various commentators have made the place extremely difficult. I shall not trouble my reader with them; they may be seen in Rosenmüller.

When he ascended up on high] The whole of this verse, as it stands in the Psalm, seems to refer to a military triumph. Take the following paraphrase; Thou hast ascended on high: the conqueror was placed in a very elevated chariot. Thou hast led captivity captive; the conquered kings and generals were usually bound behind the chariot of the conqueror, to grace the triumph. Thou hast received (Paul, given) gifts to men; at such times, the conqueror was wont to throw money among the crowd. Even to the rebellious; those who had fought against him, now submit unto him, and share his munificence; for it is the property of a hero to be generous. That the Lord God might dwell among them; the conqueror being now come to fix his abode in the conquered provinces, and subdue the people to his laws.

All this the apostle applies to the resurrection, ascension, and glory of Christ; though it has been doubted by some learned men, whether the Psalmist had this in view. I shall not dispute about this; it is enough for me that the apostle, under the inspiration of God, applied the verse in this way; and whatever David might intend, and of whatever event he might have written, we see plainly that the sense in which the apostle uses it, was the sense of the Spirit of God: for the Spirit, in the Old and New Testaments, is the same. I may venture a short criticism on a few words in the original. Thou hast received gifts for men ^{לָקַחְתָּ חַסְדִּים לְבָנָאִים} lachuitha chasdim lebanaim; thou hast taken gifts in man, in Adam. The gifts which Jesus Christ distributes to man, he has received in man, and by virtue of his incarnation; and it is in consequence of his being made man, that it may be said, The Lord God dwelleth among them; for Jesus was called Immanuel, God with us, in consequence of his incarnation. This view of the subject is consistent with the whole economy of grace, and suits well with the apostle's application of the words of the Psalmist in this place.

9. But that he also descended] The meaning of the apostle appears to be this; the person who ascended is the Messiah; and his ascension plainly intimates his descent; and that is, his incarnation, humiliation, death, and resurrection.

10. He that descended] And he who descended so low, is the same who has ascended so high. He came to the lower parts of the earth: the very deepest abasement, having emptied himself, taken upon him the form of a servant, and humbled himself unto death, even the death of the cross; now he is ascended far above all heavens; higher than all height; he has a name above every name. Here his descending into the lower parts of the earth, is put in opposition to his ascending far above all heavens. His abasement was unparalleled; so also is his exaltation.

That he might fill all things] That he might be the fountain whence all blessings might flow; dispensing all good things to all his creatures, according to their several capacities and necessities; and particularly fill, both converted Jews and Gentiles, with all the gifts and graces of his Holy Spirit; hence it follows—

11. He gave some, apostles] He established several offices in his church; furnished these with the proper officers; and, to qualify them for their work, gave them the proper gifts. For a full illustration of this verse, the reader is requested to refer to the notes on 1 Cor. chap. xii. 6—10, and 28—30. and to the concluding observations at the end of that chapter.

12. For the perfecting of the saints] For the complete instruction, purification, and union of all who have believed in Christ Jesus, both Jews and Gentiles. For the meaning of καταρτισμος, perfecting, see the note on 2 Cor. xiii. 9.

For the work of the ministry] All those various officers, and the gifts and graces conferred upon them, were judged necessary by the great Head of the church, for its full instruction in the important doctrines of Christianity. The same officers and gifts are still necessary; and God gives them, but they do not know their places. In most Christian churches there appears to be but one office, that of preacher; and one gift, that by which he professes to preach. The apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors, and teachers, are all compounded in the class preachers; and many to whom God has given nothing but the gift of exhortation, take texts to explain them; and thus lose their time, and mar their ministry.

Edifying of the body] The body of Christ is his church; see chap. ii. 24, &c. and its edification consists in its thorough instruction in Divine things, and its being filled with faith and holiness.

13. In the unity of the faith] Jews and Gentiles being all converted according to the doctrines laid down in the faith, the Christian system.

The knowledge of the Son of God] A true understanding of the mystery of the incarnation; why God was manifest in the flesh, and why this was necessary in order to human salvation.

Unto a perfect man] ^{Εἰς ἀνδρα τέλειον} one thoroughly instructed; the whole body of the church being fully taught, justified, sanctified, and saved.

Measure of the stature] The full measure of knowledge, love, and holiness, which the Gospel of Christ requires. Many preachers, and multitudes of professing people, are studious to find out how many imperfections and infidelities, and how much inward sinfulness, is consistent with a safe state in religion; but how few, very few, are bringing out the fair Gospel standard, to try the height of the members of the church; whether they be fit for the heavenly army; whether their stature be such as qualifies them for the ranks of the church militant! The measure of the stature of the fulness, is seldom seen; the measure of the stature of littleness, deceitfulness, and emptiness, is often exhibited.

14. Be no more children] Children here are opposed to the perfect man in the preceding verse; and the state of both is well explained by the apostle's allusions. The man is grown up, strong and healthy; and has attained such a measure, or height, as qualifies him for the most respectable place in the ranks of his country.

The child is ignorant, weak, and unsteady; tossed about in the nurse's arms; or whirled round in the giddy sports or games of youth: this seems to be the apostle's allusion. Being tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine, refers to some kind of ancient play, but what I cannot absolutely determine: probably to something similar to a top; or to our paper kite.

By the sleight of men] The words ἐν τη κρυψία, refer to the arts used by gamblers, who employ false dice, that will always throw up one kind of number, which is that, by which those who play with them cannot win.

Cunning craftiness] It is difficult to give a literal translation of the original words, ἐν πανουργίᾳ καὶ πλοσῇ τῆς πελοδίας τῆς ἀνθρώπων; “by cunning, for the purpose of using the various means of deception.” Πανουργία, signifies craft and subtlety in general; cheating and imposition; πελοδία, from which we have our term method, signifies a riddle, a particular sleight, mole of tricking and deceiving; it is applied to the arts which the devil uses, to deceive and destroy souls; see chap. vi. 11, called there the wines of the devil. From this, it seems that various arts were used, both by the Greek sophists and the Judaizing teachers, to render the Gospel of none effect; or to adulterate and corrupt it.

15. But, speaking the truth in love] The truth recommended by the apostle, is the whole system of Gospel doctrine; this they are to teach and preach; and this is opposed to the deceit mentioned above. This truth, as it is the doctrine of God's eternal love to mankind, must be preached in love. Scolding, and abuse from the pulpit or press, in matters of religion, are truly monstrous. He who has the truth of God, has no need of any means to defend or propagate it, but those which live to God and man provides.

Grown up into him] This is a continuance of the metaphor taken from the members of a human body, receiving nourishment equally, and growing up, each in its due proportion to other parts, and to the body in general. The truth of God should be so preached to all the members of the church of God, that they may all receive an increase of grace and life; so that each, in whatever state he may be, may get forward in the way of truth and holiness. In the church of Christ, there are persons in various states, the careless, the penitent, the taken care of, the tempted, the diffident, the little child, the young man, and the father. He who had got a talent for the edification of only one of those classes should not stay long in a place, else the whole body cannot grow up in all things under his ministry.

16. From whom the whole body] Dr. Macknight has a just view of this passage; and I cannot express my own in more suitable terms: “The apostle's meaning is, that as the human body is formed by the union of all the members to each other, under the head, and by the fitness of each member for its own office and place in the body: so the church is formed by the union of its members under Christ, the head. Farther, as the human body increases till it arrives at maturity, by the energy of every part in performing its proper function; and by the sympathy of every part with the whole; so the body or church of Christ grows to maturity by the proper exercise of the gifts and graces of individuals for the benefit of the whole.²⁷

This verse is another proof of the wisdom and learning of the apostle. Not only the general ideas here are anatomical, but the whole phraseology is the same. The articulation of the bones, the composition and action of the muscles, the circulation of the fluids, carrying nourishment to every part, and depositing some in every place, the energy of the system in keeping up all the functions, being particularly introduced, and the whole terminating in the general process of nutrition; increasing the body, and supplying all the waste that had taken place in consequence of labour, &c. Let any medical man who understands the apostle's language, take up this verse, and he will be convinced that the apostle had all these things in view. I am surprised that some of those who have looked for the discoveries of the moderns among the ancients, have not brought in the apostle's word εργασμοί, supply, from εργασμοί, to lead up, lead along, minister supply, &c. as some proof that the circulation of the blood was not unknown to St. Paul!

17. Walk not as other Gentiles walk]. Ye are called to holiness by the Gospel: the other Gentiles have no such calling; walk not as they walk. In this and the two following verses, the apostle gives a most awful account of the conduct of the heathens who were without the knowledge of the true God. I shall note the particulars.

(1.) They walked in the vanity of their mind, εἰς ματαιότητα τῶν νοσῶν αὐτῶν; in the foolishness of their mind: want of genuine wisdom, is that to which the apostle refers; and it was through this that the Gentiles became addicted to every species of idolatry; and they fondly imagined that they could obtain help from gods which were the work of their own hands! Here their foolishness was manifested.

(2.) 18. Having the understanding darkened]. This is the second instance alleged by the apostle, in the degradation of the Gentiles. Having no means of knowledge, the heart naturally dark, became more and more so by means of habitual transgression; every thing in the Gentile system having an immediate tendency to blind the eyes, and darken the whole soul.

(3.) Being alienated from the life of God]. The original design of God was to live in man; and the life of God, in the soul of man, was that by which God intended to make man happy; and without which, true happiness was never found by any human spirit; from this, through the ignorance that was in them, διὰ τῶν ἀγνοῦν τῶν οὐσῶν, through the substantial, or temporarily existing ignorance, which there was, came the tendency to enlighten. For the most accurate writings of their best philosophers left them entirely ignorant of the real nature of God. And if they had no correct knowledge of the true God, they could have no religion; and if no religion, no morality. Their moral state became so wretched that they are represented as abhorring every thing spiritual and pure, for this is the import of the word ἀπλοθυρομένην, (which we translate alienated) in some of the best Greek writers. They abhorred every thing that had a tendency to lay any restraint on their vicious passions and inclinations.

(4.) Blindness of their heart]. Διὰ τῆς ποροσίν; because of the callousness of their hearts. Callus signifies a thickening of the outward skin of any particular part, especially on the hands and feet, by repeated exercise or use, through which such parts are rendered insensible. This may be metaphorically applied to the conscience of a sinner, which is rendered stupid and insensible by repeated acts of iniquity.

(5.) 19. Who being past feeling]. Οὐκ ἔχοντες ἀσπληγκυτές. The verb ἀσπληγναι, signifies—1. To throw off all sense of shame, and to be utterly devoid of pain for committing unrighteous acts.—2. To be desperate, having neither hope nor desire of reformation; in a word, to be without remorse; and to be utterly regardless of conduct, character, or final blessedness. Instead of ἀσπληγκυτές, several excellent MSS. and Versions have ἀσπληγκυτές, being without hope; that is, persons who, from their manner of life in this world, could not possibly hope for blessedness in the world to come; and who might feel it their interest to deny the resurrection of the body, and even the immortality of the soul.

(6.) Have given themselves over unto lasciviousness]. Λασκίvuσness ασχετα, is here personified; and the Gentiles in question are represented as having delivered themselves over to her jurisdiction. This is a true picture of the Gentile world; uncleanness, lechery, and debauchery of every kind, the old man, which is corrupt according to the deceitful lusts.

23 And ^a be renewed in the spirit of your mind;

24 And that ye ^a put on the new man, which after God ^b is created in righteousness and ^c true holiness.

25 Wherefore putting away lying, ^a speak every man truth with his neighbour: for ^b we are members one of another.

26 ^a Be ye angry, and sin not: let not the sun go down upon your wrath:

27 ^a Neither give place to the devil.

dourished among them without limit or restraint. Almost all their gods and goddesses were of this character.

(7.) To work all uncleanness with greediness]. This is a complete finish of the most abandoned character; to do an unclean act, is bad; to labour in it, is worse; to labour in all uncleanness, is worse still: but to do all this, in every case, to the utmost extent, εἰς πλεονεξία, with a desire exceeding time, place, opportunity, and strength, is worst of all; and leaves nothing more profligate, or more abandoned, to be described or imagined. Such was the state of the Gentiles before they were blessed with the light of the Gospel: and such is the state of those nations who have not yet received the Gospel; and such is the state of multitudes of those in Christian countries, who refuse to receive the Gospel; endeavour to decry it, and to take refuge in the falsities of infidelity, against the testimony of eternal truth.

20. But ye have not so learned Christ]. Ye have received the doctrines of Christianity, and therefore are taught differently: ye have received the Spirit of Christ, and therefore are saved from such dispositions. Some would point, and translate the original thus:—ὑμεῖς δὲ οὐκ οὕτως ἐμαθὲτε τὸν Χριστόν. But ye are not thus; ye have learned Christ.

21. If so be that ye have heard him]. Εἴτε, Seeing that, since indeed, ye have heard us proclaim his eternal truth; we have delivered it to you, as we received it from Jesus.

22. That ye put off]. And this has been one especial part of our teaching, that ye should abandon all these, and live a life totally opposite to what it was before.

The old man]. See the note on Rom. vi. 6. and especially the notes on Rom. xiii. 13, 14.

Which is corrupt]. The whole of your former life was corrupt and abominable; ye lived in the pursuit of pleasure and happiness: ye sought this in the gratification of the lusts of the flesh; and were ever deceived by these lusts, and disappointed in your expectations.

23. And be renewed in the spirit of your mind]. Their old mode of living was to be abandoned; a new one to be assumed. The mind is to be renovated; and not only its general complexion, but the very spirit of it, all its faculties and powers must be thoroughly, completely, and universally renewed.

24. Put on the new man]. Get a new nature; for in Christ Jesus, under the Christian dispensation, neither circumcision availed any thing, nor uncircumcision, but a new creation. Therefore ye must be renewed in the spirit of your mind.

Which after God is created in righteousness]. Here is certainly an allusion to the creation of man. Moses tells us, Gen. i. 27. That God created man in his own image: that is, God was the model according to which he was formed in the spirit of his mind. St. Paul says here, that they should put on the new man; which, after God, is created in righteousness and true holiness; or, κατὰ εἰκόνα τῆς ἀληθείας, in the holiness of truth. Both certainly refer to the same thing; and the one illustrates the other. From the apostle we learn what Moses meant by the Image of God; it was righteousness and the truth of holiness.—See the note on Gen. i. 26. It is not this or the other degree of moral good which the soul is to receive by Jesus Christ; it is the whole image of God: and is to be formed, κατὰ εἰκόνα, according to God: the likeness of the Divine Being is to be traced upon his soul; and he is to bear that as fully as his first father Adam bore it in the beginning.

25. Wherefore putting away lying]. All falsity, all prevarication: because this is opposite to the truth, as it is in Jesus, ver. 21. and to the holiness of truth, ver. 24.

Speak every man truth with his neighbour]. Truth was but of small account among many, of even the best heathens; for they taught that, on many occasions, a lie was to be preferred to the truth itself. Dr. Waity collects some of their maxims on this head.

Κρεῖττον δὲ εὐσεβεῖν ψεῦδος, ἢ ἀληθεῖς κακόν. "A lie is better than a hurtful truth."—Menander. Το γὰρ ἀγαθὸν κρεῖττον ἐστὶ τῆς ἀληθείας. "Good is better than truth."—Proclus. Εὐλα γὰρ τι δεῖ καὶ ψεῦδος λεγέσθαι, λεγέσθω. "When telling a lie will be profitable, let it be told."—Darius in Herodotus, lib. iii. pag. 191. "He may lie who knows how to do it, εἰ δέοντι καιρῷ in a suitable time."—Plato apud. Stob. ser. 12. "There is nothing decorous in truth but when it is profitable; yea, sometimes καὶ ψεῦδος ὠφελεῖν ἀνθρώπων, καὶ τὴν ἀλήθειαν ἐβλάπεν, truth is hurtful, and lying is profitable to men."—Marinus Tyrinus, Diss. 3. pag. 23.

Having been brought up in such a loose system of morality; these converted Gentiles had need of those apostolic directions; Put away lying, speak the truth; let lying never come near you; let truth be ever present with you. We are members one of another]. Consider yourselves as one body, of which Jesus Christ is the head: and as a man's right hand would not deceive or wrong his left hand, so deal honestly with each other; for ye are members one of another.

26. Be ye angry and sin not. Οἱ ὀργισθεῖς, here is the same as εὐφραίνεσθε, be ye joyful, do not sin. We can never suppose that the apostle delivers this as a precept, if we take the words as they stand in our version. Perhaps the sense is, Take heed that ye be not angry, lest ye sin: for it would be very difficult, even for an apostle himself, to be angry, and not sin. If we consider anger as implying displeasure simply, then there are a multitude of cases in which a man may be innocently, yea, laudably angry; for he should be displeased with every thing which is not for the glory of God, and the good of mankind. But in any other sense, I do not see how anger can be safely taken.

Let not the sun go down upon your wrath. That is, if you do get angry with any one, see that the fire be cast, with the utmost speed, out of your bosom. Do not go to sleep with any unkind or unbrotherly feeling: anger continued in, may produce malice and revenge. No temper of this kind can consist with peace of conscience, and the approbation of God's Spirit in the soul.

27. Neither give place to the devil. Your adversary will strive to influence your mind, and irritate your spirit: watch and pray that he may not get any place in you, or ascendancy over you.

As the word διαβολός, is sometimes used to signify a calumniator, tale-bearer, whisperer, or backbiter; (see in the original, 1 Tim. iii. 11. 2 Tim. iii. 3. and Tit. ii. 3.) here it may have the same signification. Do not open your ear to the tale-bearer, to the slanderer, who comes to you with accusations against your brethren; or with surmises and evil-speaking. These are human devils; they may be the means of making you angry, even without any solid pretence; therefore give them no place, that you may not be angry at any time: but if, unhappily, you should be overtaken in this fault, let not the sun go down upon your wrath; go to your brother, against whom you have found your spirit irritated; tell him what you have heard, and what you fear; let your ears be open to receive his own account; carefully listen to his own explanation; and, if possible, let the matter be finally settled, that Satan may not get advantage over either.

28. Let him that stole steal no more. It is supposed that among the rabbins, stealing was not entirely discommenced, provided a portion was given to the poor. The apostle here teaches them a different doctrine: as they should speak truth, every man with his neighbour, so they should in every respect act honestly; for nothing contrary to truth and righteousness could be tolerated under the Christian system. Let no man, under pretence of helping the poor, defraud another; but let him labour, working with his hands, to provide that which is good, that he may have to give to him who is in necessity. Stealing, overreaching, defrauding, purloining, &c. are consistent with no kind of religion that acknowledges the true God. If Christianity do not make men honest, it does nothing for them. Those who are not saved from dishonesty, fear not God, though they may dread man.

29. Let no corrupt communication. Πας λόγος σαπρός: Kypke observes, that λόγος σαπρός, signifies a useless, putrid, unsavoury, and obscene word, or conversation: 1. Useless, particularly that which has been rendered so by old age and corruption; 2. Putrid, impure; so Aristophanes in Lysistrat. pag. 859. calls a bad woman, σαπρά, ἥτις ὅν κορπὸν ὁ σαπρὸς; Tune, Kypke! habuimus mihi parabis? 3. Calumnious, or reproachful; whoever has a tendency to injure the name, fame, or interest of another. In short, it appears to mean any word or thing obscene, any thing that injures virtue, countenances vice, or scoffs at religion. In the parallel place, Col. iv. 6. the apostle exhorts that our speech may be seasoned with salt, to preserve it from putrefaction. See Kypke and Macknight.

But that which is good to the use of edifying. To be good for a thing, is a Grecianism as well as an Anglicism; for, to be fit, proper, suitable, &c. so Achilles Tatius, lib. 4. pag. 231. αὐθὺν εὖ σὺ δὲ αὐτὰ οὐκ εἶ, I know thee to be good (formed) for friendship. And, Appian, de Bell. Hisp. pag. 439. terms both the Scipios, ἀνδράς εὖ παύτα αὐτὰ εὖ εὐεργετοῖς, men who were good, suitable for all things. And also Lucian in Toxaris, pag. 53. οὐ ποῦνα ἀνατρεῖν αὐθὺν εὖ πάλιν Σειθῶν: The Seythians are not good, expert, in archery only.—See Kypke, from whom I quote.

That it may minister grace] ἵνα ὁ ὅτι χάρις. This may be understood thus: 1. Let your conversation be pure, wise, and holy, that it may be the means of conveying grace, or Divine influences, to them that hear: 2. Let it be such as to be grateful or acceptable to the hearers. This is the meaning of ἵνα ὁ ὅτι χάρις, in some of the most correct Greek writers. Never wound modesty, truth, or religion, with your discourse; endeavour to edify those with whom you converse; and, if possible, speak so as to please them.

30. Grieve not the Holy Spirit of God. By giving way to any wrong temper, unkind word, or unrighteous action. Even those who had already a measure of the light and life of God, both of which are not only brought in by the Holy Spirit, but maintained by his constant indwelling, may give way to sin, and so grieve this Holy Spirit, that he shall withdraw both his light and presence, and in proportion as it withdraws, then hardness and darkness take place; and what is still worse, a state of insensibility is the consequence: for the darkness prevents the fallen state from being seen; and the hardness prevents it from being felt.

Whereby ye are sealed.] The Holy Spirit, in the soul of a believer, is God's seal, set on his heart to testify that he is God's property; and that he should be wholly employed in God's service. It is very likely that the apostle had in view the words of the prophet Isa. lxiii. 10. But they rebelled and vexed his Holy Spirit; therefore he was turned to be their enemy, and fought against them. The Psalmist refers to the same fact, in nearly the same words, Psal. lxxviii. 4. How oft did they provoke him in the wilderness, and grieve him in the desert! Let every man, therefore, take heed that he grieve not the Spirit of God, lest God turn to be his enemy, and fight against him.

31. Let all bitterness.] Παρά πικρία. It is astonishing that any who profess the Christian name should indulge bitterness of Spirit. Those who are censorious, who are unmerciful to the failings of others; who have fixed a certain standard by which they measure all persons, in all circumstances; and unchristian every one that does not come up to this standard; these have the bitterness against which the apostle speaks. In the last century there was a compound medicine made up, from a variety of drastic acrid drugs, and ardent spirits, which was called Heru Pura, Ἡερὺ πύρα, the holy bitter; this medicine was administered in a multitude of cases, where it did immense evil; and perhaps in scarcely any case did it do good. It has ever appeared to me to furnish a proper epithet for the disposition he acted under the pretence of superior sanctity. I have known such persons to do much evil in Christian society; but never knew an instance of them doing any good.

And wrath.] Οἰσός, is more properly anger, which may be considered the commencement of the passion.

Anger.] Οἰσός, is more properly wrath, the passion carried to its highest pitch, accompanied with injurious words, and outrageous acts, some of which are immediately specified.

And clamour.] Κρόγος, loud and obstreperous speaking; brawling, railing, boisterous talk, often the offspring of wrath; all of which are highly unbecoming the meek, loving, quiet, sedate mind of Christ and his followers.

And evil speaking.] Βλασφημία, blasphemy; that is, injurious speaking; words which tend to hurt those of whom, or against whom, they are spoken.

With all malice.] Κίστος, all malignity: as anger produces wrath, and wrath clamour; so all together produce malice, that is, settled, sullen, fell wrath: which is always looking out for opportunities to revenge itself by the destruction of the object of its indignation. No state of society can be even tolerable where these prevail; and if eternity were out of the question, it is of the utmost consequence to have these banished from time.

32. Be ye kind one to another.] Ἑνδοθεῖς—χρηστοί: be kind and obliging to each other: study good breeding and gentleness of manners. A Christian cannot be a savage; and he need not be a boor. Never put any person to needless pain.

Tender-hearted.] Εὐσπλαγχνία, compassionateness; having the bowels easily moved, (as the word implies,) to commiserate the state of the wretched and distressed.

Forgiving one another.] Should you receive any injury from a brother, or from any man, be as ready to forgive him on his repentance and acknowledgement, as God was, for Christ's sake, to forgive you, when you repented of your sins, and took refuge in his mercy.

1. The exhortations given in this chapter, if properly attended to, have the most direct tendency to secure the peace of the individual, the comfort of every family, and the welfare and unity of every Christian society. That God never prohibits anything that is useful to us, is an unshaken truth. And that he never commands what has not the most pointed relation to our present and eternal welfare, is not less so. How is it, then, that we do not glory in his commandments, and rejoice in his prohibitions? If the gratification of our fleshly propensities could do us good, that gratification had never been forbidden. God plants thorns in the way, that would lead us to death and perdition.

2. From the provision which God has made for the soul's salvation, we may see the nature, and, in some sense, the extent of the salvation provided. Much on this subject has been said on the preceding chapter; and the same subject is continued here. God requires that the church shall be holy, so that it may be a proper habitation for himself; and he requires that each believer should be holy, and that he should, under the influence of His grace, arrive at the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ ver. 13. This is astonishing; but God is able to make all grace abound towards us.

3. It is the will of God, that Christians should be well instructed; that they should become wise and intelligent; and have their understandings well cultivated and improved. Sound learning is of great worth, even in religion; the wisest and best instructed Christians are the most steady and may be the most useful. If a man be a child in knowledge, he is likely to be tossed and about, and carried about with every wind of doctrine; and often lies at the mercy of interested, designing men: the more knowledge he has, the more safe is his state. If our circumstances be such, that we have few means of improvement, we should turn them to the best account. "Partial knowledge is better than total ignorance; he who cannot get all he may wish, must take heed to acquire all that he can." If total ignorance be a bad and dangerous thing, every degree of knowledge lessens both the evil and the danger. It must never be forgotten, that the Holy Scriptures themselves are capable of making men wise unto salvation, if read and studied with faith in Christ.

4. Union among the followers of Christ, is strongly recommended. How can spiritual brethren fall out by the way? Have they not all one Father, all one Head? do they not form one body, and are they not all members of each other? Would it not be monstrous to see the nails pulling out the eyes; the hands tearing off the flesh from the body; the teeth biting out the tongue, &c. &c. And is it less so to see the members of a Christian society bite and devour each other, till they are consumed one of another? Every member of the mystical body of Christ, should labour for the comfort and edification of the whole; and the honour of the Head. He that would live a quiet life, and keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace, must be as backward to take offence as to give it. Would all act on this plan, and surely it is as rational as it is Christian, we should soon have glory to God in the highest; and on earth, peace and good will among men.

5. A roughness of manners is to some unavoidable; it is partly owing to the peculiar texture of their mind, and partly to their education. But there are others who glory in, and endeavour to cultivate this ungente disposition: under this is often concealed a great degree of spiritual pride, and perhaps some malignity, for they think that this roughness gives them a right to say grating, harsh, and severe things. They should be taught another lesson; and if they will not demean themselves as they ought, they should be left to themselves, and no man should associate with them. They are not Christians; and they act beneath the character of men.

CHAPTER V.

Christians should imitate their heavenly Father, and walk in love, after the example of Christ, 1, 2. They should avoid all uncleanness, impurity, covetousness, and foolish jesting and idolatry, because these things exclude from the kingdom of God, 3-7. The Ephesians were once in darkness, but being now light in the Lord, they are exhorted to walk in that light, and bring forth the fruits of the Spirit; and to have no fellowship with the workers of iniquity, whose evil deeds are manifested by the light, 8-13. All are exhorted to awake; to awake circumspertly; to redeem the time, and to learn what the will of the Lord is, 14-17. The apostle gives particular directions relative to avoiding excess of wine, 18. To singing and giving thanks, 19, 20. Submission to each other, 21. To husbands, that they should love their wives, as Christ loved the church; for, by the marriage union, the union between Christ and the church is pointed out: and wives are exhorted to reverence their husbands, 22-33. NOTES.—Verse 1. Be ye therefore followers of God [The beginning of this chapter is properly a continuation of the preceding, which should have ended with the second verse of this. The word μυνηται, which we translate followers, signifies such as personate others, assuming their gait, mode of speech, accent, carriage, &c. and it is from this Greek word that we have the word mimic. Though this term is often used in a ludicrous sense, yet here it is to be understood in a very solemn and proper sense. Let your whole conduct be like that of your Lord: imitate him in all your actions, words, spirit, and inclinations: imitate him as children do their beloved parents, and remember that you stand in the relation of beloved children to him. It is natural for children to imitate their parents; it is their constant aim to learn of them, and to copy them in all things: whatever they see the parent do, whatever they hear him speak, that they endeavour to copy and imitate; yea, they go farther, they insensibly copy the very tempers of their parents. If ye, therefore, be children of God, show this love to your heavenly Father, and imitate all his moral perfections; and acquire the mind that was in Jesus.

2. And walk in love] Let every act of life be dictated by love to God and man.

As Christ hath loved us] Laying down your lives for your brethren, if necessary; counting nothing too difficult to be done in order to promote their eternal salvation.

Hath given himself for us] Christ hath died in our stead, and became thereby a sacrifice for our sins.

An offering] Προσφορά, an oblation, an eucharistic offering; the same as מנחה minchah, Lev. ii, 1, &c. which is explained to be an offering made unto the Lord, of fine flour, with oil, and frankincense. It means any offering by which gratitude was expressed for temporal blessings received from the bounty of God.

A sacrifice] Θυσία, a sin-offering, a victim for sin; the same as זבח zebach, which almost universally means that sacrificial act in which the blood of an animal was poured out as an atonement for sin. These terms may be justly considered as including every kind of sacrifice, offering, and oblation made to God on any account; and both these terms are with propriety used here, because the apostle's design was to represent the sufficiency of the offering made by Christ for the sin of the world. And the passage strongly intimates, that as man is bound to be grateful to God for the good things of this life, so he should testify that gratitude by suitable offerings; but having sinned against God, he has forfeited all earthly blessings, as well as those that come from heaven: and that Jesus Christ gave himself σπερ προσφορά, in our stead, and on our account, as the gratitude offering, προσφορά, which we owed to our MAKER, and without which, a continu-

1^a Neither filthiness, nor foolish talking, nor jesting, which are not convenient; but rather giving of thanks.

5 For this ye know, that no whore-monger, nor unclean person, nor covetous man, who is an idolater, hath any inheritance in the kingdom of Christ and of God.

6^m Let no man deceive you with vain words: for because of 19, 21. Col. 3, 5. 1 Thess. 4, 3, &c. — 1 Cor. 6, 1 — Matt. 19, 28. — Ch. 4, 20 — h. Rom. 1, 28. — 1 Cor. 6, 9. Gal. 5, 19, 21. — k. ance of temporal blessings could not be expected; and also as a sacrifice for sin, θυσία, without which we could never approach God; and without which we must be punished with an everlasting destruction from the presence of God, and the glory of his power. Thus we find, that even our temporal blessings come from and by Jesus Christ, as well as all our: pi-ritual and eternal mercies.

For a sweet-smelling savour.] Εἰς ὁσμὴν εὐωδίας, the same as is expressed in Gen. viii. 21. Lev. i. 9. ut. 16. ריח ניחוח riach nichoch highwah, "a sweet savour unto the Lord;" i. e. an offering of his own prescription, and one with which he was well pleased; and, by accepting of which, he showed that he accepted the person who offered it. The sweet-smelling savour refers to the burnt offerings, the fumes of which ascended from the fire, in the act of burning; and, as such odours are grateful to man, God represents himself as pleased with them when offered by an upright worshipper, according to his own appointment.

3. But fornication] It is probable that the three terms used here by the apostle, refer to different species of the same thing. The word fornication, πορνεία, may imply not only fornication, but adultery also; as it frequently does; uncleanness, ακαθαρσία, may refer to all abominable and unnatural lusts—sodomy, bestiality, &c. and covetousness, πλεονεξία, to excessive indulgence in that which, unobtainably, is lawful. As the covetous man never has enough of wealth, so the pleasure-taker and the libertine never have enough of the gratifications of sense; the appetite increasing in proportion to its indulgence. If, however, simple covetousness, i. e. the love of gain, be here intended, it shows from the connexion in which it stands, (for it is linked with fornication, adultery, and all uncleanness), how degrading it is to the soul of man, and how abominable it is in the eye of God. In other places, it is ranked with idolatry: for the man who has an inordinate love of gain, makes money his god.

Let it not be once named] Let no such things ever exist among you, for ye are called to be saints.

4. Neither filthiness] Αἰσχροπνία; any thing bust or vile, in words or acts.

Foolish talking] Μωρολογία; scurrility, buffoonery, ridicule; or what tends to expose another to contempt.

Nor jesting] Εὐπρόγελια; artfully turned discourses or words, from ευ, well or easily, and προς, προς, προς, words that can be easily turned to other meanings; double entendres, elaste words, which, from their connexion, and the manner in which they are used, convey an obscene or offensive meaning. It also means jest, puns, witty sayings, and mountebank repartees of all kinds.

Which are not convenient] Οὐκ ἀνασχετά, they do not come these things, ⁿ cometh the wrath of God ^o upon the children of ^p disobedience.

7 Be not ye therefore partakers with them.

8^q For ye were sometimes darkness, but now are ye light in the Lord: walk as ⁹ children of light:

9 (For ¹ the fruit of the Spirit is in all goodness, and righteousness, and truth;)

19 ^u Proving what is acceptable unto the Lord.

11 And ^v have no fellowship with ^w the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather ^x reprove them.

12 ^y For it is a shame even to speak of those things which are done of them in secret.

up to the proper standard : they are utterly improper in themselves, and highly unbecoming in those who profess Christianity.

But rather giving of thanks) Εὐχαριστία; decent and edifying discourse, or thanksgiving to God. Prayer or praise is the most suitable language for man: and he who is of a trifling, light disposition, is ill fitted for either. How can a man who has been talking foolishly, or jestingly, in company, go in private to magnify God for the use of his tongue, which he has abused; or his rational faculties, which he has degraded?

5. For this ye know] Ye must be convinced of the dangerous and ruinous tendency of such a spirit and conduct, when you know that persons of this character can never inherit the kingdom of God. See on ver. 3. and see the observations on the Greek article at the end of this epistle.

6. Let no man deceive you] Suffer no man to persuade you that any of these things is innocent; or that they are unavoidable frailties of human nature; they are all sins and abominations in the sight of God; those who practise them are children of disobedience; and on account of such practices, the wrath of God, Divine punishment, must come upon them.

7. Be not ye therefore partakers with them.] Do not act as your fellow-citizens do; nor suffer their philosophy, with vain words, κενοῖς λόγοις, with empty and illusive doctrines, to lead you astray from the path of truth.

That there was much need for such directions and cautions to the people of Ephesus, has been often remarked. It appears from Athenæus, that this people were addicted to luxury, effeminacy, &c. He tells us that the famous Aspidia, who was herself of the Socratic sect, brought a vast number of beautiful women into Greece, and by their means filled the country with prostitutes, καὶ ἐλθόντες αὐτὰς τῶν ταύτης εὐπόρην ἔβαλεν, lib. xiii. cap. 25. Ibid. cap. 31. he observes, that she had led into the temple, ἀφ' ὧν Ἀσπιδία τὰς πόλιν προέστηεν, i. e. introduced them; and again, cap. 25. lib. viii. books from Demosthenes, in Orai. contra Xerxam, τὰς περὶ εὐκαίαν λόγους ἐκείνην, τὰς δὲ πάλαιας τῆς κατ' ἀρετὴν παλαιότητας τὰς ἐξ ὑπακοῆς τοῦ πολυτελείου καὶ γυναικός, καὶ τὸν εὖ ποτ' ὀλίγον τι εἰσεύειν—“We have whores for our pleasure; harlots for daily use; and vipers for the procreation of legitimate children, and for the faithful preservation of our property.” Through the whole of this 13th book of Athenæus, the reader will see the most melancholy proofs of the most abominable practices among the Greeks; and the high estimation in which public dissipation was held by the greatest lawgivers, and the wisest philosophers among the Greeks. And how can we wonder at their authority and example? Is it not in reference to their teaching and laws, that the apostle says, Let no man decide you with vain words?

8. For ye were sometimes (ποτε, formerly,) darkness] While ye lived in darkness, ye lived in these crimes.

But now are ye light in the Lord] When ye were in heathenish darkness, ye served divers lusts and pleasures; but now ye have the light, the wisdom and teaching which come from God; therefore, walk as children of the light: let the world see that ye are not slaves to the flesh; but free, willing, rational servants of the Most High; not brutish followers of devil gods.

9. For the fruit of the Spirit) Instead of Spirit, Πνεῦμα, ABD' EFG, the Syriac, Coptic, Sahidic, Ethiopic, Armenian, Vulgate, and Itala, together with several of the Fathers, read φῶς, light, which is supposed by most critics to be the true reading, because there is no mention made of the Spirit in any part of the context. As light, ver. 8, not only means the Divine influence upon the soul, but also the Gospel; with great propriety it may be said, The fruit of the light, i. e. of the Gospel; is in all goodness, and righteousness, and truth. Goodness, ἀγαθότητα, in the principle and disposition; truthfulness, ἀκαταστροφή, the exercise of that goodness, in the whole conduct of life; truth, ἀλήθεια, the director of that principle and its exercise, to the glorification of God, and the good of mankind.

10. Proving what is acceptable] By walking in the light, under the influence of the Divine Spirit; according to the dictates of the Gospel: ye shall be able to try, and bring to full proof, that by which God is best pleased. Ye shall be able to please him well in all things.

11. Have no fellowship Have no religious connexion whatever with heathens or their worship.

Unfruitful works of darkness]. Probably alluding to the mysteries among the heathens; and the different illustrations and rites through which the initiated went, in the caves and dark recesses where these mysteries were celebrated; all which he denominated works of darkness, because they were destitute of true wisdom; and unfruitful works, because they were of no use to mankind; the initiated being obliged, on pain of death, to keep secret what they had seen, heard, and felt; hence they were called αποκρυφά μυστήρια, unprophable things. Things, which were unsearchable. That the apostle may refer to magic and incantations is also probable; for to these the Ephesians were greatly addicted. See the proofs in the notes on Acts xix. 19.

[Rather reprove them.] Bear a testimony against them; convince them that they are wrong; confute them in their vain reasons; reprove them for their vices, which are flagrant, while pretending to superior illumination. All these meanings has the Greek word ἐλέγχο, which we generally render to convince, or reprove.

12. For it is a luciferæ nec tepelesti! This no doubt refers to the Eleusinian and Eleuchian mysteries, which were performed in the night and darkness: and were known to be so impure and abominable, especially the latter, that the Roman senate banished them both from Rome and Italy. How the discovery of these depths of Satan was made, and the whole proceedings in that case, may be seen in Livy, Hist. lib. xix. cap. 1. which the reader will find very curious. What the prophet says here, It is shame to speak of those things which are done of them in secret; the abominations being of the most stupendous kind, and of the deepest dye.

13. But all things that are reported. Dr. Macknight paraphrases this verse as follows. "None of these irreproachable actions, deceit, which are practised in celebrating these mysteries, are made manifest as sinful by the Gospel; and seeing every thing which discovers the true nature of actions is light, the Gospel, which discovers the evil nature of the actions performed in these mysteries, is light." The apostle speaks against the mysteries, as he speaks against fornication, adultery, and murder; and he uses the same figurative expression, or similitude from them, to illustrate Divine truth: for, as it would be a shame, even to speak of these things; surely it would be an abomination to allude to them in the illustration of the doctrines of the Gospel.

11. Wherefore he saith. It is a matter of doubt and controversy, whence this saying is derived: some think it taken from Isa. xxvii. 19. Thy dead men shall live; with my dead body shall they arise; awake and sing ye that dwell in the dust, &c. Others think that it is taken from Isa. lx. 1—3. Arise, shine, for thy light is come, &c. but these passages neither give the words nor the meaning of the apostle. Epiphanius supposed them to be taken from an ancient prophecy of Elijah, but since lost: Sacerdotus and Euthelius think they were taken from an apocryphal work attributed to Jeremiah the prophet, and which is now part of a kyrie in some of the Christian church; but that there were words in the apostle's time, hymns and spiritual songs, as well as Isaias, we learn from himself, in ver. 19. and from Col. iii. 16. The words is supposed to have been thus:

Ἐγεραι ὁ καθεδων,
 Καὶ ἀναστα ἐκ τῶν νεκρῶν,
 Ἐπιφανισαι ὁ Χριστός.
 Awake, O thou who sleepest,
 And from the dead arise thou,
 And Christ shall shine upon thee.

See Rosenmüller, Wolf, and others. But it seems more natural to understand the words he saith, as referring to the light, i. e. the Gospel, mentioned ver. 13. And the ἐν λέγει, should be translated, Wherefore it saith, Ἄνθρωποι, &c. that is, this is the general, the strong commanding voice of the Gospel in every part: receive instruction; leave your sins, which are leading you to perdition; believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and he will enlighten and save thee.

As a man asleep neither knows nor does any thing that can be called good or useful; so the Gentiles, and all others, while without the knowledge of Christianity, had not only no proper knowledge of vice and virtue; but they had no correct notion of the true God.

As the dead can perform no function of life ; so the Gentiles, and the unconverted, were incapable of performing any thing worthy either of life or being. But, though they were asleep, in a state of complete spiritual torpor, yet they might be awake by the voice of the Gospel: and, though dead to all goodness, and to every function of the spiritual life; yet, as their animal life was whole in them, and perception and reason were still left, they were capable of hearing the Gospel, and under that influence which always accompanies it, when faithfully preached, they could discern its excellency, and find it to be the power of God to their salvation. And they are addressed by the apostle as possessing this capacity; and on their using it properly, have the promise that Christ shall enlighten them.

15. Walk circumspectly.) Our word circumspect, from the Latin circumspicio, signifies to look round about; on all hands, to be every way watchful; wary and cautious; in order to avoid danger, discern enemies before they come too nigh; and secure a man's interest by every possible and lawful means. But the original word cautus, signifies correctly, accurately, consistently, or perfectly. Be ye, who have received the truth, careful of your conduct; walk by the rule which God has given you; be ye as wise as the ancient fathers; exemplify the principles which are holy and good, by a corresponding conduct; do not only profess, but live the Gospel. If you embrace all its promises, be careful also to embrace all its precepts; and behave yourselves so that your enemies may never be able to say, that ye are holy in your doctrines and profession, but irregular in your lives.

truths and profession, οὐκ ἐπὶ τῷ λόγῳ καὶ τῷ ἔργῳ (Not as fools, but as wise) Μη ὡς Ἀσσοφοι ἀλλ' ὡς Σοφοί. The heathens affected to be called Σοφοί, or wise men; Pythagoras was perhaps the first who corrected this vanity, by assuming the title of φιλοσοφός, a lover of wisdom; hence our term philosopher, used now in a much prouder sense, than that in which the great Pythagoras wished it to be applied. The apostle here takes the term σοφός, and applies it to the Christian; and instead of it, gives the empty Gentile philosopher the title of ασοφός, without wisdom; fool.

16. Redeeming the time Εἰς τὴν ὥραν τοῦ χρόνου: buying up those moments which others seem to throw away; steadily improving every present moment, that ye may, in some measure, regain the time ye have lost. Let time be your chief commodity: deal in that alone; buy it all up, and use every portion of it yourselves. Time is that on which eternity depends; in time ye are to get a preparation for the kingdom of God; if ye get not this in time, your ruin is inevitable; therefore buy up the time.

Some think there is an allusion here to the case of debtors, who, by giving some valuable consideration to their creditors, obtain further time for paying their debts. And this appears to be the sense in which it is used by the Septuagint, Dan. ii. 8. Εἰς ἀνέλεος οὐκ ἐστὶν ὁ χρόνος ὑμῖν ἐτι; ὁπότε. I know certainly that ye would gain or buy time. Ye wish to have the time prolonged, that ye may seek out for some plausible explanation of the dream. Perhaps the apostle means, in general, embrace every opportunity to glorify God, save your own souls, and do good to men.

Because the days are evil.] The present times are dangerous; they are full of troubles and temptations; and only the watchful and diligent have any reason to expect that they shall keep their garments unspotted.

17. Wherefore be ye not unwise.] Μη γυνεσθε ἀνδρες, ὑπομνησθε not become madmen. Here is a most evident allusion to the orgies of Bacchus, in which his votaries acted like madmen, running about to sing their heads from shoulder to shoulder, appearing to be in every sense completely frantic. See the whole of the passage in Livy, to which I have referred, cap. vi. 12.

But understanding what the will of the Lord is.] It is the will of God that ye should be sober, chaste, holy, and pure. Get a thorough understanding of this; acquaint yourselves with God's will, that ye may know how to glorify Him.

18. Be not drunk with wine, wherein is excess. This is a farther allusion to the Bacchanalian mysteries; in them the votaries got drunk, and ran into all manner of excesses; Plato, though he forbade drunkenness, in general, yet allowed that the people should get drunk in the solemnities of that god who invented wine. And indeed this was their common custom, when they had offered their sacrifices, then they indulged themselves in drunkenness, and ran into all kinds of extravagance. Hence it is probable that μεθύω, to get drunk is derived from μετα, after, and θύω, to sacrifice; for having completed their sacrifices, they indulged themselves in wine. Τὸ μεθύω, which we translate excess, means prodigality and debauchery of every kind; as also are the genera concomitants of drunkenness; and especially among the votaries of Bacchus, in Greece and Italy.

But be filled with the Spirit.] The heathen priests pretended to be filled with the influence of the god they worshipped.

and it was in these circumstances that they gave out their oracles. See a remarkable instance of this quoted in the notes on Luke ix. 39, where the case of a Bacchanalian is described. The apostle exhorts the Ephesians not to resemble these, but instead of being filled with wine, to be filled with the Spirit of God; in consequence of which, instead of those discoveries of the Divine will, to which in their drunken worship the votaries of Bacchus pretended, they should be wise indeed; and should understand what the will of the Lord is.

19. Speaking to yourselves in psalms.] We can scarcely say what is the exact difference between these three expressions. Psalms, Ψαλμοι, may probably mean those of David.

Hymns.] ὕμνοι; extemporaneous effusions in praise of God, uttered under the influence of the Divine Spirit, or a sense of his especial goodness. See Acts xvi. 25.

Songs.] Ὅδα, odes; premeditated and regular poetic compositions; but in whatever form they were composed, we learn that they were all πνευματικά, spiritual, tending to magnify God, and edify men.

singing and making melody in your heart]. The heart always goes with the lips. It is a shocking profanation of Divine worship, to draw nigh to God with the lips, while the heart is far from him. It is too often the case, that in public worship, men are carried off from the sense of the words by the sounds that are put to them. And how few choirs of singers are there in the universe, whose hearts ever accompany them in what they call singing the praises of God!

20. Giving thanks always] God is continually loading you with his benefits; you deserve nothing of his kindness therefore give Him thanks for his unmerited bounties.

[God and the Father] That is, God, who is your Father, and the Father of mercies. See the observations on the Greek article, at the end of this epistle.

In the name of our Lord Jesus] He is the only Mediator and through him alone can ye approach to God : and it is for his sake only, that God will hear your prayers ; or receive your praises.

21. Submitting—one to another] Let no man be so tenacious of his own will, or his opinion, in matters indifferent as to disturb the peace of the church; in all such matters give way to each other; and let love rule.

(the joy of God.) Setting him always before your eyes and considering that he has commanded you to love one another, and to hear each other's burdens; and that what you do in this or any other commanded case, you do as unto the Lord. Instead of ἐν ὁνόματι, in the fear of God, ἐν φόβῳ κυρίου, in the fear of CHRIST, is the reading of ABDEFG, with all others of most value; besides the Syriac, Coptic, Sahidic, Ethiopic, Armenian, Vulgate, and Itala; Basil the Great, and Chrysostom. Neither reading makes any difference in the sense.

22. Wives, submit yourselves unto your own husbands As the Lord, viz. Christ, is the head or governor of the Church and the head of the man: so is the man the head or governor of the woman. This is God's ordinance, and should not be transgressed. The husband should not be a tyrant; and the wife should not be the governor. Old Francis Quarles, in his homely rhymes, alluding to the superstitious notion, that the crowing of a hen bodes ill luck to the family, has said—

"All thrives the hapless family that shows,
A cock that's silent, and a hen that crows :
I know not which live most unnatural lives,
Obeys husbands, or commanding wives."

As unto the Lord.] The word church, seems to be necessarily understood here ; that is, act under the authority of you husbands, as the church acts under the authority of Christ.—As the church submits to the Lord, so let wives submit to their husbands.

23. For the husband is the head of the wife] This is the reason which the apostle gives for his injunctions.—See above. He is the saviour of the body.] As Christ exercises authority

He is the saviour of the body.] As Christ exercises authority over the church, so as to save and protect it; so let the husband exercise authority over his wife, by protecting, comforting, and providing her with every necessary and comfort of life, according to his power.

21. In every thing.] That is, every lawful thing; for it is not intimated that they should obey their husbands in any thing criminal, or in any thing detrimental to the interests of his wife to become such also; he may be an enemy to true religion, and use his authority to prevent his wife from those means of grace which she finds salutary to her soul; in non of these things should she obey him.

25. Husbands, love your wives] Here is a grand rule, according to which every husband is called to act. Love your wife as Christ loved the church. But how did Christ love the 28 So ought men to love their wives as their own bodies. He that loveth his wife loveth himself.

29 For no man ever yet hated his own flesh; but nourisheth and cherisheth it, even as the Lord the church:

30 For we are members of his body, of his flesh, and of his bones.

31 * For this cause shall a man leave his father and mother, d Gen 2:23 Rom 12:5 1 Cor 6:15 & 12:27—e Gen 2:24 Matt. 19:5.

church? He gave himself for it: he laid down his life for it. So then husbands should, if necessary, lay down their lives for their wives: and there is more implied in the words than mere protection and support: for, as Christ gave himself for the church, to save it; so husbands should, by all means in their power, labour to promote the salvation of their wives, and their constant edification in righteousness. Thus we find that the authority of the man over the woman is founded on his love to her: and this love must be such as to lead him to risk his life for her. As the care of the family devolves on the wife, and the children must owe the chief direction of their minds, and formation of their manners, to the mother, she has need of all the assistance and support which her husband can give her; and if she perform her duty well, she deserves the utmost of his love and affection.

26. That he might sanctify and cleanse it.] The church is represented as the spouse of Christ, as the woman is the spouse of the man; and to prepare this church for himself, he washes, cleanses, and sanctifies it. There is certainly an allusion here to the ancient method of purifying women, who were appointed to be consorts to kings; twelve months, it appears, were in some instances spent in this purification; six months with oil of myrrh, and six months with sweet odours, and with other things for the purifying of women. See the case of Esther, chap. ii. ver. 12. see also Psal. xlv. 13, 14. Ezek. xvi. 7—14.

With the washing of water.] Baptism, accompanied by the purifying influences of the Holy Spirit.

By the word.] The doctrine of Christ crucified; through which baptism is administered, sin cancelled, and the soul purified from all unrighteousness: the death of Christ giving efficacy to all.

27. That he might present it to himself.] It was usual to bring the royal bride to the king in the most sumptuous apparel; and is there not here an allusion to Psal. xlv. 13, 14. The king's daughter (Pharaoh's) is all glorious within, her clothing is of wrought gold; she shall be brought unto the king (Solomon) in raiment of needle work. This presentation here spoken of by the apostle, will take place on the last day. See the note on 2 Cor. xi. 2.

A glorious church.] Every way splendid and honourable, because pure and holy.

Not having spot.] Ἐπίλοιπον, no blemish on the face; no spots upon the garment; the heart and life both holy.

Wrinkle.] Ῥυτίτις, no mark of superannuation or decay. The word is commonly applied to wrinkles on the face, indicative of sickness or decrepitude.

Holy and without blemish.] In every sense, holy, pure, and perfect. Now it was for this purpose that Christ gave himself for the church; and for this purpose he continues the different ordinances which he has appointed; and particularly the preaching of the word, the doctrine of reconciliation through faith in his blood. And it is in this life that all this purification is to take place, for none shall be presented at the day of judgment to him, who has not here been sanctified, cleansed, washed, made glorious, having neither spot, wrinkle, blemish, nor any such thing. How vain is the pretension of multitudes to be members of the true church, while full of spots, wrinkles, blemishes, and many such things; fondly supposing that their holiness is in their Surety, because not in themselves! Reader, lay thy hand on thy conscience, and say, dost thou believe that this is St. Paul's meaning? See the notes on chap. iii. 14, &c.

28. As their own bodies.] For the woman is, properly speaking, a part of the man; for God made man male and female, and the woman was taken out of his side; therefore is she flesh of his flesh, and bone of his bone; and, therefore, he that loveth his wife, loveth himself, for they two are one flesh. The apostle, in all these verses, refers to the creation and original state of the first human pair.

29. No man ever yet hated his own flesh.] And this is a natural reason why he should love his wife, and nourish and cherish her.

30. We are members of his body.] He has partook of our nature, as we have partaken of the nature of Adam. And as he is the head of the church, and the Saviour of this body; so we, being members of the church, are members of his mystical body. That is, we are united to him by one Spirit, in the closest intimacy, even similar to that which the members have with the body.

31. Shall be joined unto his wife.] Προσκόλληθησεται; he shall be glued or cemented to her; and, as a well glued board will sooner break in the whole wood than in the glued joint, so death alone can part the husband and wife: and nothing but death should dissolve their affection. See the notes on Gen. ii. 21—24.

32. This is a great mystery.] Το μυστήριον τοῦ μενῶντος; this mystery is great. Sacramentum hoc magnum est; this and shall be joined unto his wife, and they two shall be one flesh.

32 This is a great mystery: but I speak concerning Christ and the church.

33 Nevertheless, let every one of you in particular, so love his wife even as himself; and the wife see that she reverence her husband.

Mark 13:7—f 1 Cor. 6:16—g Ver. 35 Col. 2:19—h 1 Pet. 2:6

sacrament is great, VULGATE. And on the evidence of this version the church of Rome has made matrimony a sacrament; which, as they use it, is no meaning of the original. By mystery, here, we may understand a natural thing by which some spiritual matter is signified; which signification the Spirit of God alone can give. So here, the creation, and union of Adam and Eve, were intended in the design of God, to point out the union of Christ and the church; a union the most important that can be conceived; and therefore the apostle calls it a great mystery. See the observations at the end of this chapter.

33. Nevertheless.] Ἦνυ, moreover, or therefore, on the consideration of God's design in the institution of marriage, let every one of you love his wife as himself, because she is both naturally, and by a Divine ordinance, a part of himself.

That she reverence her husband.] Let the wife ever consider the husband as her head; and this he is, not only by nature, but also by the ordinance of God. These are very important matters, and on them the apostle lays great stress. See the following observations.

There is one subject in the preceding verse, on which I could not enlarge sufficiently in the notes; and which I have reserved for this place; viz. what the apostle says concerning the mystery of marriage, which certainly has a deeper meaning than what is generally apprehended. Dr. Macknight has some good observations on this part of the subject, which I shall beg leave to lay before my readers.

1. The apostle calls the formation of Eve from Adam's body his marriage with her, and the intimate union established between them by that marriage, a great mystery, because it contained an important emblematical meaning, concerning the regeneration of believers, and their union with Christ, which hitherto had been kept secret, but which he had discovered in the 30th verse. For there, in allusion to what Adam said concerning Eve, 'This now is bone of my bones, and flesh of my flesh,' the apostle says concerning Christ and believers, 'We are bone of his bones, and flesh of his flesh,' that is, we are parts of his body the church; and by this application of Adam's words concerning Eve, to Christ and to his church, he intimates, first, That the formation of Eve, of a rib taken out of Adam's body, was a figure of the regeneration of believers by the breaking of Christ's body, mentioned ver. 25. Secondly, That Adam's love to Eve, on account of her being formed of his body, was a figure of Christ's love to believers, because they are become his body, ver. 30. Thirdly, That Adam's marriage with Eve was a figure of the eternal union of Christ with believers in heaven, mentioned ver. 27. For he left his Father to be united to his church.

2. In giving this emblematical representation of these ancient facts, the apostle has not exceeded the bounds of probability. In the first age, neither the art of writing, nor any permanent method of conveying instruction being invented, it was necessary to make such striking actions and events as could not easily be forgotten, emblems of the instruction meant to be perpetuated. On this supposition, Adam, in whom the human race began, was a natural image of Christ, in whom the human race was to be restored; and his deep sleep, the opening of his side, and the formation of Eve of a rib taken out of his side, were fit emblems of Christ's death, of the opening of his side on the cross, and of the regeneration of believers by his death. The love which Adam expressed towards Eve, and his union with her by marriage, were lively images of Christ's love to believers, and of his eternal union with them in one society, after their resurrection; and Eve herself, who was formed of a rib taken from Adam's side, was a natural image of believers, who are regenerated both in their body and in their mind, by the breaking of Christ's side on the cross. Thus the circumstances which accompanied the formation of Eve, being fit emblems of the formation of the church, we may suppose they were brought to pass to prefigure that great event; and, by prefiguring it, to show that it was decreed of God from the very beginning.

3. The aptness however of these images, is not the only reason for supposing that the formation of Eve, and her marriage with Adam in Paradise, were emblems of the regeneration of believers by the death of Christ, and of their eternal union with him in heaven. The singular manner in which Eve was formed, and the declaration at her marriage with Adam, 'Therefore shall a man leave his father and his mother, and cleave unto his wife, and they shall be one flesh,' strongly lead to that conclusion. Eve was not formed of the dust of the earth, as all other living things were made, (not excepting Adam himself,) but of a rib taken from Adam's side, while he was in a deep sleep. Now for this diversity, what reason can be assigned, if that which the apostle hath suggested is not admitted? Further, unless some deep instruction were couched under the formation of Eve, what use case was there for Adam, at his marriage with her, to declare, 'This is now bone of my bones, and flesh of my flesh; she shall be called Woman, because she was taken out of man; therefore shall a man leave' &c. For, although the taking of Eve out of Adam might be a reason for Adam's affection towards her, it was no reason for the affection of his posterity towards her; their wives, who were not so formed. The reason of their love to their wives, is their being creatures of the same species with themselves. This Eve might have been, though like Adam she had been formed of the dust of the earth. Wherefore Adam's declaration concerning Eve's being taken out of his body, and concerning his love to her on that account, was intended for some purpose peculiar to himself; namely, as he was a type of Him who was to restore the human race by the breaking of his body on the cross; and who, on that account, loves them, and will unite them to himself for ever. Upon the whole, the formation of Eve, and her marriage with Adam, and his love to, and union with her, because she was taken out of his side, and the declaration, that, on that account, all his posterity should love their wives, and continue united to them through life, an union which does not subsist among other animals, are events so singular, that I do not see what account can be given of them, unless, with the apostle Paul, we suppose that, agreeably to the most ancient method of instruction, God intended these things as figurative representations of the regeneration of believers by the death of Christ, and of his eternal union with them in heaven; and that Adam and Eve were taught by God himself to consider them as such.

4. "It is no small confirmation of the apostle's emblematical interpretation of the formation and marriage of Eve, that in Scripture we find a variety of images and expressions founded on that interpretation. For example—Rom. v. 11. Adam is expressly called a type of him who was to come, on which account, 1 Cor. xv. 45. Christ is called the last Adam. Next, the catholic church, consisting of believers of all nations, is called the body of Christ, and the members thereof are said to be members of his body, of his flesh, and of his bones, in allusion to the formation of Eve, the emblem of the church. For, as Eve was formed of a rib taken out of Adam's body during his deep sleep; so believers are regenerated both in mind and body, and formed into one great society, and united to Christ as their head and governor, by the breaking of his body on the cross. Thirdly, to this emblematical meaning of the formation of Eve, our Lord, I think, alluded when he instituted his supper. For instead of appointing one symbol only of his death, he appointed two; and, in explaining the first of them, he expressed himself in such a manner as to show that he had his eye on what happened to Adam when Eve was formed. This is my body which is broken for you, for your regeneration. Fourthly, the eternal union of the regenerated with Christ after the resurrection, is called a marriage, Rev. xix. 7. and the new Jerusalem, that is, the inhabitants of the new Jerusalem, the society of the redeemed, is termed the bride, the Lamb's wife; and the preparing of men for that happy union, by introducing them into the church upon earth, through faith, and by sanctifying them through the word, is called 2 Cor. xi. 2. A fitting time for our husband, that at the resurrection they may be presented a chaste virgin to Christ, in allusion, I suppose, to the presenting of Eve to Adam, in order to her marriage with him; and to show, that in this expression, the apostle had the figurative meaning of Eve's marriage in his mind, he mentions, ver. 3. the subtlety of the devil in deceiving Eve. Finally, the union of the Jewish church, with God, as the figure of the catholic church, consisting of the regenerated of all nations, is by God himself termed a marriage, Jer. iii. 14. Ezek. xvi. 8, 32. and God is called the husband of that people, Isa. liv. 5. and their union to him by the law of Moses is termed, The day of their espousals, Jer. ii. 2—"1. A truly Christian marriage has an excellence, holiness, and unity in it, that cannot be easily described; and let it be observed, that while it prefigures the union of Christ with his church, it is one means of giving children to the church, and members to the mystical body of Christ. It is an ordinance of God, and cannot be too highly honoured: endless volumes might be written on its utility to man; without marriage, by which every man is assigned his own wife, and every woman her own husband, even the multitude of spurious births which would take place, would fail to keep up the population of the earth; and natural, moral, and political wretchedness, would be the consequence of promiscuous, fruitless, and transitory connexions. For, without that ascertainment of peculiar property which marriage gives to every man in his wife, and to every woman in her husband, the human progeny would be unnoticed, unclaimed, undisciplined, and totally neglected. This would continually increase the wretchedness, and in process of time bring about the total depopulation of the world.

2. The husband is to love his wife; the wife, to obey and venerate her husband: love and protection on the one hand, affectionate subjection and fidelity on the other. The husband should provide for his wife without encouraging profuseness; watch over her conduct, without giving her vexation; keep her in subjection, without making her a slave; to love her, without jealousy; oblige her, without flattery; honour her, without making her proud; and to be hers entirely, without becoming either her foeman or her slave. In short, they have equal rights and equal claims: but superior strength gives the man dominion; affection and subjection entitle the woman to love and protection. Without the woman, man is but half a human being; a union with the man, the woman finds her safety and station.

In the above remarks there are many things solid and useful; there are others which rest more on fancy than judgment.

3. Of marriage, the church of Rome has made a sacrament; and it is one of the secrets which that church acknowledges. That it is an ordinance, if God is sufficiently evident; that He has not made it a sacrament is not less so. Though the minister of religion celebrates it, yet the regulation of it, in reference to inheritance &c. is assumed by the state. This is of great moment, as, by it, many evils are prevented, and many political and domestic advantages secured. If a man enter hastily into this state, it is at his own risk; after he has once entered it, the seal of the legislature is imposed upon it, and with his engagerments he cannot trifle. A consideration of this has prevented many hasty and disproportionate alliances. Though they might hope to trifle with the church, they dare not do it with the state.

CHAPTER VI.

Children should obey their parents, that they may be long and be happy, 1-3. Parents should be tender towards their children, 4. Servants should show all obedience and fidelity to their masters, 5-8. And masters should treat their servants with humanity, 9. All should be strong in the Lord, and be armed with his armour, because of their wily, powerful, and numerous foes, 10-13. The different parts of the Christian armour enumerated, 14-17. The necessity of all kinds of prayer and watchfulness, 18-20. CHILDREN,* obey your parents in the Lord: for this is right.

2 Honour thy father and mother; which is the first commandment with promise;

3 That it may be well with thee, and thou mayest live long on the earth.

4 And, ye fathers, provoke not your children to wrath: but as the Lord

NOTES.—Verse 1. Children, obey your parents] This is a duty with which God will never dispense; He commands it, and one might think that gratitude, from a sense of the highest obligations, would most strongly enforce the command.

In the Lord] This clause is wanting in several reputable MSS. and in some Versions. In the Lord, may mean on account of the commandment of the Lord; or, as far as the parent's commands are according to the will and word of God. For, surely, no child is called to obey any parent, if he give unreasonable or unscriptural commands.

2. Honour thy father] See the notes on Exod. xv. 12, &c. where this subject, together with the promises and threatenings connected with it, are particularly considered; and the reasons of the duty laid down at large.

4. Fathers, provoke not your children to wrath] Avoid all severity; this will hurt your own souls, and do them no good; on the contrary, it punished with severity or cruelty, they

4 bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord.

5 *Servants, be obedient to them that are your masters according to the flesh, with fear and trembling, in singleness of your heart, as unto Christ;

6 Not with eye-service as men-pleasers; but as the servants of Christ, doing the will of God from the heart.

7 With good will doing service, as if to the Lord, and not to men: as if to the Lord

Parents are called to correct, not to punish their children. Those who punish them, do it from a principle of revenge; those who correct them, do it from a principle of affectionate concern.

The mind is to be nourished with wholesome discipline and instruction, as the body is with proper food. However, discipline, may refer to all that knowledge which is proper for children, including elementary principles and rules for behaviour, &c. Nourish, instruction, may imply whatever is necessary to form the mind—to touch, regulate, and purify, the passions, and necessarily include, the whole of religion. Both these should be administered in the Lord; according to his will and word; and in reference to his eternal glory. All the important lessons and doctrines being derived from his revelation, therefore they are called the discipline and instruction of the Lord.

5. Servants, be obedient! Though δουλος frequently signifies a slave or bondman; yet it often implies a servant in general; or any one bound to another either for a limited time, or for life. Even a slave, if a Christian, was bound to serve him faithfully, by whose money he was bought, howsoever illegal that traffic may be considered. In heathen countries slavery was in some sort excusable; among Christians, it is an enormity and a crime for which perdition has scarcely an adequate state of punishment.

According to the flesh! Your masters in secular things: for they have no authority over your religion, nor over your souls.

With fear and trembling! Because the law gives them a power to punish you for every act of disobedience.

In singleness of your heart! Not merely through fear of punishment, but from a principle of uprightness, serving them as you would serve Christ.

6. Not with eye-service! Not merely in their presence, when their eye is upon you, as unfaithful and hypocritical servants do, without consulting conscience in any part of their work.

Doing the will of God! Seeing that you are in the state of servitude, it is the will of God that you should act conscientiously in it.

7. With good will! Μετ' εὐνοίας, with cheerfulness: do not take up your service as a cross, or bear it as a burden; but take it as coming in the order of God's providence, and a thing that is pleases you to him.

8. Whatsoever good thing any man doeth! Though your masters should fail to give you the due reward of your fidelity and labour, yet as ye have done your work as unto the Lord, he will take care to give you the proper recompense.

Whether he be bond! A slave, bought with money;—Or free! A person who has hired himself of his own free accord.

9. Ye masters do the same things unto them! Act in the same affectionate, conscientious manner, towards your slaves and servants, as they do towards you.

The words forbearing threatening, ἀνέχεται τὴν ἀπειλήν, signify to mitigate, relax, or not exact threatening; that is, the threatened punishment. The sense is given above.

In Shemoth Rabba, sect. 21. fol. 120. there is a good saying concerning respect of persons. "If a poor man comes to a rich man to converse with him, he will not regard him; but if a rich man comes, he will hear and rehear him. The holy and blessed God acts not thus; for all are alike before him, women, slaves, the poor and the rich."

Knowing that your Master also is in heaven! You are their masters, God is yours. As you deal with them, so God will deal with you; for, do not suppose because their condition on earth is inferior to yours, that God considers them to be less worthy of his regard than you are; this is not so, for there is no respect of persons with him.

Forbearing threatening! If they should transgress at any time, bear more to the side of mercy, than justice; and when ye are obliged to punish, let it be as light and as moderate as possible; and let revenge have no part in the chastisement, for that is of the devil, and not of God.

10. Finally! Having laid before you your great and high calling; and all the doctrines and precepts of the Gospel, it is necessary that I should show you the enemies that will oppose you; and the strength which is requisite to enable you to repel them.

Be strong in the Lord! You must have strength, and strength of a spiritual kind; and such strength too as the Lord himself can furnish; and ye must have this strength through an indwelling God; the power of His might working in you.

11. Put on the whole armour of God! Εὐδυσάσθε τὴν πανοπλίαν τοῦ Θεοῦ. The apostle considers every Christian as having a warfare to maintain against numerous, powerful, and subtle foes; and that therefore they would need much strength, much courage, complete armour, and skill to use it. The panoply which is mentioned here, refers to the armour of the heavy troops among the Greeks; those who were to sustain the rudest attacks; who were to support the foundations of walls, storm cities, &c. Their ordinary armour was the shield, the helmet, the sword, and the greaves, or brass boots. To all these the apostle refers below.—See on ver. 13.

The reins of the devil! Τὰς μεθόδους τοῦ διαβόλου, the methods of the devil; the different means, plans, schemes, and machinations which he uses to deceive, entrap, enslave, and ruin the souls of men. A man's method of sinning, i. e. Sedra, method of ruining his soul. See on chap. iv. 11.

parts of the Grecian armour, I shall give a short account of the whole. It consisted properly of two sorts, 1. Defensive armour, or that which protected themselves. 2. Offensive armour, or that by which they injured their enemies.—The apostle refers to both.

1.—Defensive armour. Περικεφαλαια, the HELMET: this was the armour for the head, and was of various forms, and embossed with a great variety of figures. Connected with the helmet was the crest, or ridge on the top of the helmet, adorned with several emblematic figures: some for ornament, some to strike terror. For crests on ancient helmets, we often see the winged lion, the griffin, chimera, &c. St. Paul seems to refer to one which had an emblematic representation of hope.

Ζωρα, the GIRDLE: this went about the loins, and served to brace the armour tight to the body, and to support daggers, short swords, and such like weapons, which were frequently stuck in it. This kind of girdle is in general use among the Asiatic nations to the present day.

Θωραξ, the BREAST-PLATE: this consisted of two parts, called πτερuges, or wings; one covered the whole region of the thorax, or breast, in which the principal viscera of life are contained; and the other covered the back, as far down as the front part extended.

Κνυίδες, ORNAVES, or bracen boots, which covered the shin or front of the leg: a kind of solea was often used, which covered the sole, and laced about the instep, and prevented the foot from being wounded by rugged ways, thorns, stones, &c.

Χειρίδες, GLOVES: a kind of gloves that served to defend the hands, and the arm up to the elbow.

Ασπίς, the CLYPEUS, or SHIELD: it was perfectly round, and sometimes made of wood, covered with bullocks' hides; but often made of metal. The aspis, or shield of Achilles, made by Vulcan, was composed of five plates, two of brass, two of tin, and one of gold; so Homer, Il. Y. v. 270.

ἡτοιμασε περὶ αὐτοῦ καὶ ἡσπέραν καὶ ἡσπέραν, ἡτοιμασε περὶ αὐτοῦ καὶ ἡσπέραν καὶ ἡσπέραν, ἡτοιμασε περὶ αὐτοῦ καὶ ἡσπέραν καὶ ἡσπέραν.

Of shields there were several sorts: Τερρόν, or gerroon, a small square shield, used first by the Persians.

Λασιόνη, LASEION: a sort of oblong shield, covered with rough hides, or skins with the hair on.

Πέλιν, the BELTA: a small light shield, nearly in the form of a demicrescent, with a small ornament similar to the recurved leaves of a flower de luce, on the centre of the diagonal edge, or straight line: this was the amazonian shield.

Θυρεός, the SCUTA, or oblong shield: this was always made of wood, and covered with hides. It was exactly in the shape of the laseion, but differed in size, being much larger; and being covered with hides, from which the hair had been taken off. It was called θυρεός, from θυρα, a door, which it resembled in its oblong shape; but it was made curved, so as to embrace the whole forepart of the body. The aspis and the thyreus were the shields principally in use; the former for light, the latter for heavy armed troops.

2.—Offensive armour, or weapons; the following were chief: Εγχύς, ENCHUS, the SPEAR; which was generally a head of brass or iron, with a long shaft of ash.

Δορυ, the LANCE: differing perhaps little from the former, but in its size and lightness; being a missile used both by infantry and cavalry, for the purpose of annoying the enemy at a distance.

Ξιφος, the SWORD; these were of various sizes, and in the beginning all of brass. The swords of Homer's heroes are all of this metal.

Μαχαίρα, called also a sword, sometimes a knife; it was a short sword, used more frequently by gladiators, or in single combat. What other difference it had from the xiφος, I cannot tell.

Αίτιον, from which our word AXE; the common battle-axe. Πέλκυσ, the PIPKEN; a sort of battle-axe, with double face, one opposite to the other.

Κορύν, an iron club, or mace, much used both among the ancient Greeks and Persians.

Τοξόν, the BOW: with its pharetra or quiver, and its stock or sheaf of arrows.

Σπένδον, the SLING; an instrument, in the use of which most ancient nations were very expert; particularly the Hebrews and ancient Greeks.

The arms and armour mentioned above, were not always in use; they were found out and improved by degrees. The account given by Lucretius of the arms of the first inhabitants of the earth, is doubtless as correct as it is natural.

Arma antiqua manus, unguis, dentes, fuerunt,
Et lapides, et item silvarum fragmina rami,
Et flammæ atque ignes postquam sunt cognita primum:
Posterioris ferri vis est, quærimus repleta:
Sed prius erant erat quàm ferri cognitus usus:
Quo facilis magis est natura, et copia major.

Brass first was used, because the softer ore, And earth's cold veins contained a greater store.

CHRECH.

I have only to observe farther on this head—1. That the ancient Greeks and Romans went constantly armed. 2. That before they engaged, they always ate together: and 3. That they commenced every attack with prayer to the gods for success.

14. Stand therefore] Prepare yourselves for combat: Having your loins girt about with truth. He had told them before to take the whole armour of God, ver. 13. and to put on this whole armour. Having got all the pieces of it together, and the defensive parts put on, they were then to gird them close to their bodies with the ζωρα, or girdle; and, instead of a fine ornamental belt, such as the ancient warriors used, they were to have truth. The Gospel of Jesus Christ, is the truth of God: unless this be known, and conscientiously believed, no man can enter the spiritual warfare with any advantage or prospect of success. By this alone, we discover who our enemies are, and how they come on to attack us; and by this we know where our strength lies: and, as the truth is great, and must prevail, we are to gird ourselves with this against all false religion, and the various winds of doctrine by which cunning men, and insidious devils, lie in wait to deceive. Truth may be taken here for sincerity; for if a man be not conscious to himself that his heart is right before God, and that he makes no false pretences to religion, in vain does he enter the spiritual lists. This alone can give him confidence—

Hic murus athenæus esto

Ni conspire sibi, nullâ pallescere culpa.

Let this be my brazen wall; that no man can approach me with a crime; and that I am conscious of my own integrity.

The breast-plate of righteousness] What the θοραξ, or breast-plate was, see before. The word righteousness, δικαιοσύνη, we have often had occasion to note, is a word of very extensive import: it signifies the principle of righteousness; it signifies the practice of righteousness, or living a holy life; it signifies God's method of justifying sinners; and it signifies justification itself. Here it may imply a consciousness of justification, through the blood of the cross; the principle of righteousness, or true holiness, implanted in the heart: and a holy life; a life regulated according to the testimonies of God. As the breast-plate defends the heart and lungs, and all those vital functionalities that are contained in what is called the region of the thorax; so this righteousness, this life of God in the soul of man, defends every thing on which the man's spiritual existence depends. While he possesses this principle, and acts from it, his spiritual and eternal life is secure.

15. Your feet shod] The κνυίδες, or greaves; have been already described; they were deemed of essential importance in the ancient armour: if the feet, or legs, are materially wounded, a man can neither stand to resist his foe, pursue him if vanquished, nor flee from him, should he have the worst of the fight. That the apostle has obedience to the Gospel in general in view, there can be no doubt; but he appears to have more than this, a readiness to publish the Gospel: for, How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings, that publisheth peace; that bringeth good tidings of good, that publisheth salvation; that saith unto Zion, thy God reigneth! Isa. lii. 7. Rom. x. 15. The Israelites were commanded to eat the pass-over with their feet shod, to show that they were ready for their journey. And our Lord commands his disciples to be shod with sandals, that they might be ready to go and publish the Gospel; as the Israelites were to go to possess the Promised Land. Every Christian should consider himself on his journey from a strange land to his own country; and, not only stand every moment prepared to proceed, but be every moment in actual progress towards his home.

The preparation of the Gospel] The word ετοιμασία, which we translate preparation, is variously understood; some think it means a habitual readiness in walking, in the way prescribed by the Gospel: others, that firmness and solidity which the Gospel gives to them who conscientiously believe its doctrines: others, those virtues and graces, which, in the first planting of Christianity, were indispensably necessary to those who published it. Should we take the word preparation in its common acceptance, it may imply that, by a conscientious belief of the Gospel, receiving the salvation provided by its Author, and walking in the way of obedience, which is pointed out by it, the soul is prepared for the kingdom of heaven. The Gospel is termed the Gospel of peace, because it establishes peace between God and man, and proclaims peace and good will to the universe; contentions, strif, quarrels, and all wars, being as alien from its nature and design, as they are opposed to the nature of Him, who is love and compassion to man.

17 And take the helmet of salvation, and the sword of the spirit, which is the word of God;

18 Praying always with all prayer and supplication in the spirit, and watching thereunto with all perseverance and supplication for all saints;

19 And for me, that utterance may be given unto me, that I may open my mouth boldly to make known the mystery of the Gospel,

20 For which I am an ambassador in bonds: that therein I may speak boldly, as I ought to speak.

16. Above all (Ἐν παντί, over all the rest of the armour) taking the shield of faith]. In the word θώρας, thureos, the apostle alludes to the great oblong shield, or scutum, which covers the whole body: see its description before. And as faith is the grace by which all others are preserved and rendered active, so it is properly represented here under the notion of a shield, by which the whole body is covered and protected. Faith, in this place, must mean that evidence of things unseen which every genuine believer has, that God, for Christ's sake, has blotted out his sins; and by which he is enabled to call God his Father, and feel him to be his portion. It is such an appropriating faith as this, which can quench any dart of the devil.

The fiery darts of the wicked] ἱκλός, a dart, signifies any kind of missile weapon; every thing that is projected to a distance by the hand, as a javelin, or short spear; or by a bow, as an arrow; or a stone by a sling.

The fiery darts—Τὰ ἑκατὶ τὰ πνευματικά. It is probable, that the apostle alludes to the darts called falarica, which were headed with lead, in or about which some combustible stuff was placed, that took fire in the passage of the arrow through the air, and often burnt up the enemy's engines, ships, &c.: they were calculat'd, also, to stick in the shields, and set them on fire. Some think that poisoned arrows may be intended, which are called fiery, from the burning heat produced in the bodies of those who were wounded by them. To quench, or extinguish, such fiery darts, the shields were ordinarily covered with metal on the outside, and thus the fire was prevented from catching hold of the shield. Where they stuck on a shield of another kind, and set it on fire, the soldier was obliged to cast it away, and thus became defenceless. The fiery darts of the wicked, τῶν πονηρῶν, or devil, are evil thoughts, and strong injections, as they are termed, which, in the unregenerate, inflame the passions, and excite the soul to acts of transgression. While the faith is strong in Christ, it acts as a shield to quench these. He who walks so as to feel the witness of God's spirit that he is his child, has all evil thoughts in abhorrence; and, though they pass through his mind, never fix in his passions. They are caught on this shield, blunted, and extinguished.

17. Take the helmet of salvation.] Or, as it is expressed, 1 Thess. v. 8. And, for a helmet the hope of salvation. It has already been observed, in the description of the Grecian armour, that on the crest and other parts of the helmet, were a great variety of emblematical figures; and that it is very likely the apostle refers to helmets which had on them an emblematical representation of hope; viz. that the person should be safe who wore it; that he should be prosperous in all his engagements, and ever escape safe from battle. So the hope of conquering every adversary, and surmounting every difficulty through the blood of the Lamb, is as a helmet that protects the head: an impenetrable one, that the blow of the battle-axe cannot cleave. The hope of continual safety and protection, built on the promises of God, to which the upright follower of Christ feels he has a Divine right, protects the understanding from being darkened, and the judgment from being confused by any temptations of Satan, or subtle arguments of the sophistical ungodly. He who carries Christ in his heart, cannot be cheated out of the hope of his heaven.

The sword of the Spirit] See what is said before on ῥήσος and μαχαίρα, in the account of the Greek armour. The sword of which St. Paul speaks, is, as he explains it, the word of God; that is, the revelation which God has given of himself; or what we call the Holy Scriptures. This is called the sword of the Spirit, because it comes from the Holy Spirit, and receives its fulfilment in the soul through the operation of the Holy Spirit. An ability to quote this, on proper occasions, and especially in times of temptation and trial, has a wonderful tendency to cut in pieces the snares of the adversary. In God's word, a genuine Christian may have unlimited confidence; and to every purpose to which it is applicable, it may be brought with the greatest effect. The shield, faith, and the sword, the word of God, or faith in God's unchangeable word, is the principal armour of the soul. He, in whom the word of God dwells richly, and who has that faith by which he knows that he has redemption, even the forgiveness of sins, need not fear the power of any adversary. He stands fast in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made him free. Some suppose, that οὐν πνευματικός, of the Spirit, should be understood of our own spirit, or soul; the word of God being the proper sword of the soul; or that offensive weapon, the only one which the souls use. But though it is true, that every Christian soul has this for its sword, yet the first meaning is the most likely.

18 Praying always] The apostle does not put praying

21 But that ye also may know my affairs, and how I do, Tychicus, a beloved brother and faithful minister in the Lord, shall make known to you all things:

22 Whom I have sent unto you for the same purpose, that ye might know our affairs, and that he might comfort your hearts.

23 Peace be to the brethren, and love with faith, from God the Father, and the Lord Jesus Christ.

24 Grace be with all them that love our Lord Jesus Christ with sincerity. Amen among the armour; had he done so, he would have referred it, as he has done all the rest, to some part of the Grecian armour; but, as he does not do this, therefore we conclude, that his account of the armour is ended, and that now, having equipped his spiritual soldier, he shows him the necessity of praying that he may successfully resist those principalities, powers, the rulers of the darkness of this world, and the spiritual wickednesses in heavenly places, with whom he has to contend. The panoply, or whole armour of God, consists in—1. The girdle—2. The breast-plate—3. The greaves—4. The shield—5. The helmet—and 6. The sword. He who had these was completely armed. And as it was the custom of the Grecian armies before they engaged, to offer prayers to the gods for their success, the apostle shows that these spiritual warriors must depend on the Captain of their salvation; and pray with all prayer, i. e. incessantly, being always in the spirit of prayer, so that they should be ever ready for public, private, mental, or ejaculatory prayer; always depending on HIM who can alone save, and who alone can destroy. When the apostle exhorts Christians to pray with all prayer, we may at once see that he neither means spiritual nor formal prayer, in exclusion of the other. Praying, προσευχόμενοι, refers to the state of the spirit as well as to the act.

With all prayer] Refers to the different kinds of prayer that is performed in public, in the family, in the closet, in business, on the way, in the heart without a voice, and with the voice from the heart. All these are necessary to the genuine Christian: and he whose heart is right with God, will be frequent in the whole. "Some there are," says a very pious and learned writer, "who use only mental prayer or ejaculations, and think they are in a state of grace, and use a way of worship far superior to any other; but such only fancy themselves to be above what is really above them; it requiring far more grace to be enabled to pour out a fervent and continued prayer, than to offer up mental aspirations." J. Wesley.

And supplication] There is a difference between προσευχή, prayer, and δέσους, supplication. Some think the former means prayer for the attainment of good; the latter prayer for averting evil. Supplication, however, seems to mean prayer continued in—strong and incessant pleadings, till the soul is relieved, or the good communicated. There are two things that must be attended to in prayer—1. That it be εὐ τῷ καιρῷ, in every time, season, or opportunity—2. That it should be ἐν ἡμετέρῳ, in or through the Spirit; that the heart should be engaged in it, and that its infirmities should be helped by the Holy Ghost.

Watching thereunto] Being always on your guard, lest your enemies should surprise you. Watch not only against evil, but also for opportunities to do good, and for opportunities to receive good. Without watchfulness, prayer and al. the spiritual armour will be ineffectual.

With all perseverance] Being always intent on your object, and never losing sight of your danger, or of your interest. The word implies stretching out the neck, and looking about, in order to discern an enemy at a distance.

For all saints] For all Christians; for this was the character by which they were generally distinguished.

19. And for me, that utterance may be given unto me] ἵνα μοι δοθῇ λόγος. Kypke has proved, by many examples, that λόγος δοθῆναι signifies permission and power to defend oneself in a court of justice; and this sense of the phrase is perfectly applicable to the case of St. Paul, who was an ambassador in bonds, ver. 20. and expected to be called to a public hearing, in which he was not only to defend himself, but to prove the truth and excellency of the Christian religion. And we learn from Phil. i. 12—14, that he had his desire in this respect. For the things which happened to him fell out to the furtherance of the Gospel, so that his bonds in Christ were manifest in all the palace, and in all other places. Thus God had enabled him to make a most noble defence, by which the Gospel acquired great credit.

The mystery of the Gospel] The whole doctrine of Christ, not fully revealed previously to that time.

20. An ambassador in bonds] An ambassador being the representative of his king, his person was, in all civilized countries, held sacred. Contrary to the rights of nations, this ambassador of the King of Heaven was put in chains! He had, however, the opportunity of defending himself, and of vindicating the honour of his Master—See above.

As I ought to speak] As becomes the dignity and the importance of the subject.

21. That ye also] As well as other churches, to whom I have communicated the dealings both of God and man to me

May know my affairs.] May be acquainted with my situation and circumstances.

And how I do.] How I employ my time, and what fruit there is of my apostolical labours.

Tychicus, a beloved brother.] We learn from Acts xx. 4. that Tychicus was of Asia, and that he was a useful companion of St. Paul. See the note on the above place.

This same person, and with the same character and commendation, is mentioned in the Epistle to the Colossians, chap. iv. 7. He is mentioned also in Tit. iii. 12. and in 2 Tim. iv. 12. from all these places it is evident that he was a person in whom the apostle had the highest confidence; and that he was a very eminent minister of Christ.

22. Whom I have sent—for the same purpose.] Namely, that the Ephesian might know his affairs, and those of the church at Rome. Messengers of this kind frequently passed between the churches in those ancient times.

Comfort your hearts.] By showing how powerfully he was upheld in all his tribulations; and now God turned his bonds to the furtherance of the Gospel. This must have been great consolation to all the followers of God; and particularly to those in Ephesus, or Lodicea, or to whomsoever the epistle was directed. The question, To whom was it sent? is divided between the Ephesians and the Lodiceans. Dr. Lardner has argued strongly in favour of the former; Dr. Paley not less so in favour of the latter.

23. Peace be to the brethren.] If the epistle were really sent to the Ephesians, a people with whom the apostle was so intimately acquainted, it is strange that he mentions no person by name. This objection, on which Dr. Paley lays great stress, (see the Preface to this epistle,) has not been successfully answered.

Peace.] All prosperity, and continual union with God and among yourselves; and love to God and man, the principle of all obedience and union; with faith, continually increasing, and growing stronger and stronger, from God the Father, as the fountain of all our mercies; and the Lord Jesus Christ, through whose sacrifice and mediation they all come.

21. Grace be with all them.] May the Divine favour, and all the benedictions flowing from it, be with all them who love our Lord Jesus Christ, who has so loved us as to give his life to redeem ones, and to save us unto life eternal.

24. In sincerity.] In uprightness, in incorruptibility. Those who show the genuineness of their love by walking before Him in holiness of life. Many profess to love our Lord Jesus who are corrupt in all their ways; on these the grace or favour of God cannot rest; they profess to know him, but in works deny him. Such can neither expect favour here, nor hereafter.

Amen.] This is wanting in ABFG. and some others. It is, however, more likely to be a genuine subscription here, than most others of its kind. The apostle might have sealed his most earnest wish by this word, which means not so much, so be it! or may it be so! but rather implies the faithfulness of Him who had given the promises; and whose prerogative it was to give effect to the prayers which his own Spirit had inspired.

The principal subscriptions to this epistle are the following:—To the Ephesians. The Epistle to the Ephesians is finished. To the Ephesians, written from Rome. To the Ephesians written from Rome by Tychicus. This is the subscription which we have followed; and it is that of the larger number of modern MSS. and Editions. The Epistle to the Ephesians, written from Rome, and sent by Tychicus—SYRIAC. To the Ephesians—ETHIOPIA. VULGATE, no subscription. The end of this epistle, which was written from Rome by Tychicus. Praise be to God for ever. AMEN—ARABIC. Written at Rome, and sent by Tychicus—CORNIC. The same is defective. The Epistle to the Ephesians is ended, which was written at Rome by Tychicus—PHILOENIAN. SYRIAC.

We have had already occasion to observe that the subscriptions to the sacred books were not written by the authors themselves, but were added in a much later age; and generally by unskilful hands. They are consequently not much to be depended on; and never should be quoted as a part of the Divine oracles.

1. It may be supposed that on the principal subject of this concluding chapter, the armour of God, I should have been much more diffuse. I answer, my constant aim is just to say enough, and no more, on any point. Whether I attain this in general, or not, I can still say, it is what I have desired. As to the Christian armour, it does not appear to me that the apostle has couched such a profusion of mystical meaning in it, as to require a huge volume to explain. I believe the Ephesians did not understand it so; nor did the primitive church of God. Men of rich imaginations may write large volumes on such subjects; but when they come to be fairly examined, they will be found not to be explanations of the text, on which they profess to treat; but immense bodies of divinity, in which the peculiar creed of the writer, both with respect to doctrine and discipline, is amply set forth. Mr. Gualard's Christian Armour contains a great many excellencies; but surely it does not require such a volume to explain the few verses of this chapter, in which the apostle speaks of the spiritual armour! The grand design of the epistle seems to show that both righteousness and obedience to the Gospel, faith in our Lord Jesus Christ, a well-grounded hope of salvation, a thorough knowledge of the word of God, and a continual dependence on, and application to Him by prayer, were essentially necessary to every soul who desired to walk uprightly in this life, and finally to attain everlasting blessedness. This is the obvious meaning of the apostle; in this sense it was understood by the Ephesians, and by the primitive church; see may amplify it as we please.

2. In two or three places in the preceding notes, I have referred to a piece on a very remarkable rule relative to the Greek article, to be introduced at the end. From the labours of several learned men, this subject has acquired considerable importance, and has excited no small interest among biblical critics. The late benevolent, learned, and excellent Mr. Grenville Sharp was, I believe, the first who brought this subject fairly before the public; he was followed by the Rev. Dr. Hordsworth, a learned and intelligent clergyman of the established church.

The Rev. Dr. Middleton, now bishop of Calcutta, has since presented the subject in all its force and excellence, fortified by innumerable proofs, and a great variety of critical disquisition. The principal design of these writers was to exhibit a new and substantial mode of proving the Divinity of our Lord and Saviour. Their works are before the public, and within the reach of all who are capable of judging of this mode of proof.

The piece which I now subjoin is the result of the researches of one of my literary friends, H. S. Boyd, Esq. author of Translations from Chrysostom, &c. who has read the Greek writers, both sacred and profane, with peculiar attention; and has collected a vast number of additional examples, both from prose and poetic writers, for the confirmation and illustration of the rule in question; and in support of the great doctrine of the Godhead of Christ.

Till now, this piece has existed only in MS. but the critical reader, who has entered into this subject, will be glad to see such a number of pointed examples brought within his reach, which at once serve the purpose both of philology and divinity. The learned author has transmitted them to me for the purpose of insertion in this place; but want of room has obliged me to omit several of his quotations.

I would now wish the reader to suppose that these are the only proofs of the grand doctrine of the Godhead of Christ; they are not; the Holy Scripture, in its plain obvious meaning, independently of such criticism, affords the most numerous and convincing proofs of the doctrine in question; but this is no sufficient reason that we should reject any additional light, which may come to us in the way of Divine Providence.

BRIEF REMARKS ON THE GREEK ARTICLE.

"It has been now completely proved, and irrefragably established by the labours of learned men, that, independently of the common laws of syntax, the Greek article is governed by a very remarkable rule, to which it is universally subject. The rule is this:—When two or more personal nouns, (of the same gender, number, and case,) are coupled together by the conjunction καί, and the article is prefixed to the first, but not to the second, third, &c. those two or more nouns, whether they be substantives or adjectives, denote one and the same person. This is the case also when two participles are thus coupled together.

I have given the rule nearly as it is laid down by Mr. Sharp; it is however subject to certain limitations. Whenever we meet, in a Greek writer, with a sentence constructed according to the rule, if the substantives, adjectives, or participles, be indicative of qualities and properties which are inconsistent and contradictory; in that case, two different persons may be intended, although the article be not prefixed to the latter. The reason of this is obvious. When a Greek writer is speaking of two persons, whom he designated by terms which were opposite and irreconcilable to one another, it was not necessary that he should prefix the article to the second, although he had placed it before the first. Every reader would see at once that the same person could not be both sober and drunken, both virtuous and wicked, both handsome and ugly, &c. It is also manifest, that all proper names must, for the same reason, be excepted. Every body knows that Paul and Peter cannot be the same person; therefore the article may be placed before Paul, but omitted before Peter. But if a Greek writer was speaking of two different persons, and the substantives, &c. which he employed, were indicative of qualities and attributes which might harmonize and coalesce in one person; it then became necessary that the article, if prefixed to the first, should also be placed before the second, for otherwise the reader might be misled. It follows from hence, that whenever we meet with a passage constructed according to our rule, if the substantives, &c. indicate qualities and properties which are not contradictory, but may be united in one person, we may then be absolutely certain that one person only is intended.

Corollary. It follows from hence, that when two personal nouns are united by the conjunction καί, and those nouns are descriptive of two different persons, the article must be prefixed to both, or prefixed to the last only, or prefixed to neither. Let us apply this doctrine to the criticism of the New Testament, and see if we can arrive at any conclusion of importance. I shall first select some passages where different persons are plainly and obviously meant. — Οι υπηρέται και οι άγγελοι.—"The publicans and the sinners." — Οι Φαρισαίοι και οι γραμματεῖς.—"The Pharisees and the scribes." Luke xv. 1, 2. Οι αρχιερεῖς και οι γραμματεῖς.—"The high-priests and the scribes." Luke xx. 1. Οι αποστολοι και οι αδελφοι.—"The apostles and the brethren." Acts xi. 1. Ο βασιλευς και ο ηγεμεν.—"The king and the governor." (Viz. Aëtippus and Festus.) Acts xxvi. 30. Οι κνεις, και οι φαρισαιο, και οι πυριτοι.—"Dogs, and enchanters, and fornicators." Rev. xxi. 13. Απο Θεου Πατρος ημων, και Κυριου Ιησου Χριστου.—"From God our Father, and the Lord Jesus Christ." 2 Thess. i. 2. Ιεσους Θεου και Ιησου Χριστου υιους.—"James, a servant of God, and of Jesus Christ." James i. 1.

We see that in the above instances, the article is either used twice, or is wholly omitted.

Let us now examine some passages, wherein it is evident from the context, that two nouns, coupled together by the conjunction, refer to one and the same person. And here I would observe, that the examples which I have just adduced, and am about to adduce, are not all which the New Testament contains. The catalogue might be easily increased; but my object is to be as brief and as plain as possible. — Ο Θεος και Πατερ ημων.—"The God and Father of our Lord." 2 Cor. i. 3. 2 Cor. xi. 31. Ephes. i. 3. Το Θεο και Πατρος ημων.—"Of our God and Father." 1 Thess. i. 3. Το Θεο και Πατερ ημων.—"To the God and Father of our Lord." Coloss. i. 3. Το Θεο και Πατερ αυτου.—"To his God and Father." Rev. i. 6. Επισκοπος ημων ητι ημεν Πατρος και Επισκοπος των ψυχων ημων.—"Ye have now returned to the Shepherd and Bishop of your souls." 1 Pet. ii. 25. Τεχνιτης, ο αγαπτος αδελφος και πιστος δακτυλος.—"Technicus, a beloved brother and faithful servant." Ephes. vi. 21. Ο βασιλευς και ημενικος δυναστης, ο Βασιλες ημων ητις δυναται και βασιλευς των κεραιων ημων.—"The blessed and only potentate; the King of kings, and Lord of lords." 1 Tim. vi. 15. Τον αποστολον και αρχιερα των ηθελωντας ημεν Χριστον Ιησουν.—"The apostle and high priest of our confession, Christ Jesus." Heb. iii. 1. Τον της πιστεως αρχην και τελωτοτην Ιησουν.—"Jesus, the author and perfecter of our faith." Heb. xii. 2. Το Κερας και Σωτηριος ημων Χριστου.—"Of the Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ." 2 Pet. ii. 20. iii. 18. Εγώ η Ιωαννης ο και αδελφος και υιός κατανοους.—"I John, your brother and companion." Rev. i. 9.

In all the above cases, the nouns are substantives.—In the following, they are adjectives.

Μετ' τον τρυφον και κοσμον και λιπεν και βλεπεν.—"So that the man who was blind and dumb, both saw and spake." Matt. xii. 22. Ο μακαριος και ημενικος δυναστης.—"The blessed and only Potentate." 1 Tim. vi. 15. Ο πιστος υδλος και φορητος.—"The faithful and wise servant." Matt. xxiv. 45. Οσος υδλος οτι ου ει ο ταλαπαιρος, και ελεεινός, και πτωχος, και τυφλος, και ημενικος.—"Thou knowest not that thou art wretched, and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked." Rev. iii. 17. Οι Αγγελοι της αγγελιας και ευαγγελιου ημων.—"To Philemon, our beloved and co-soldier." Philem. i. 1.

This rule extends also to participles. — Ο δε φιλων τον Ναυφον ο εγγιστος και ιμενικος αυτου.—"But the friend of the friend whom he staideth and heareth him." 1 John iii. 22. Το ο αγαπητον και δαυκατον ημεν.—"To Him who loved us, and purified us." Rev. i. 5. Εγώ η Ιωαννης, ο βλεπων ταυτα και αυτον.—"I John, the man seeing and hearing these things." Rev. xii. 8. Ης ο δαυκα και πτωχος Φωδως.—"Every person who loveth and maketh a liar." Rev. xii. 15. Ο τροπος ου εν τω σαρκι, και τινωμεν εν τω πνευματι.—"He that eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood." 1 John vi. 51.

I have now laid before the reader examples of the phraseology which is employed, when two different persons are manifestly and obviously spoken of in the same member of a sentence; and when our person is as obviously depicted, under two different appellations. We see that in the one case the article is prefixed to both words, or to neither; whereas in the other case, the article is prefixed to the first word, but wanting to the second, whether they be substantives, or adjectives, or participles. Let us then apply it, as we do the other rules of syntax, to the explanation of a passage in Ephesians, chap. v. verse 5: Εν τη βασιλεια του Χριστου και Θεου. "In the kingdom of the Christ and God." This passage speaks for itself; and to make any comment upon it would be utterly superfluous. I shall only observe, that as far as certainty can be attained in this present life, as far as we can be assured of the meaning and import of human language, so far may we be certain, that the writer of the Epistle to the Ephesians, pronounces Christ to be God.

But what will the Arian say to this? He will tell us, that in this passage the apostle pronounces Jesus Christ to be a god, quark, a coo; that is, a being of a high and exalted nature. There are one or two passages in the Old Testament where angels are called gods on account of their transcendent dignity; and Christ, whom we allow in dignity and power, to be equal to the highest of the angels, viz. the reform, to be called a god. This, I believe, is the sum and substance of the Arian doctrine.

In the second chapter of the Epistle to Titus, and the thirteenth verse, we have the following glorious testimony: Εκδηλων της δόξης του μεγαλου Θεου και Σωτηριου ημων, Ιησου Χριστου.—"The manifestation of the glory of the great God and Saviour of us, Jesus Christ."

In the last passage that I quoted, Christ is styled God. But here, He is called the Great God. If angels have a right to be deified, and to be called gods, we must confess that there are in heaven only can be designated. Angels may be termed θεοι, but ὁ ὁστος Θεος is the incommunicable appellation of the Lord God Jehovah!

Although I have already proved, to the satisfaction of the unprejudiced, that the rule we have laid down is inherent in the language, and that certain passages of Scripture can admit of no other interpretation than that which we have given, an objection may be started, and a question may be proposed, which claims our most serious attention. The question I mean is this.—In what sense were those passages understood by the Fathers of the Greek church? As they lived nearer to the primitive times of Christianity than we do, we must allow that they were at least as competent as ourselves to pass judgment in any subject of theological discussion; but in the case now before us, their authority must be vastly greater. In addition to the circumstance of the Greek being their native tongue, some of them were men of very extensive learning, and of distinguished skill in philological researches; they must, therefore, have had a more accurate perception, than the most learned amongst us can pretend to, of the precise application of every rule in syntax, the exact meaning of the minutest particle, and the determinate effect of the slightest inflection in the language. They are therefore the properest persons to decide if such expressions as τω Χριστω και Θεω, and τῷ μεγαλω Θεω και Σωτηριω, have, according to the laws of grammar, the meaning which we affix to them. If they perceived in them the force and evidence that we do, they would of course have appealed to them in their controversies with the Arians; and happy would they have been in bringing forward such resistless testimonies to the Divinity of our Lord. And they did appeal to them! yes, the most illustrious of the Fathers, St. Chrysostom himself, appealed to them! In his fifth discourse on the incomprehensible nature of Deity, he sums up those texts of Scripture wherein Christ is called God; and he reckons amongst them the 5th verse of the 5th chapter of Ephesians, and the 13th verse of the second of Titus. For the satisfaction of the reader, I shall translate the passage; and that he may have the clearest view of the subject, I shall transcribe a considerable portion of the context.

An extract from St. Chrysostom's Fifth Homily, Πρὸς Ακαταστατους, Tom. VI. pag. 417, 418. Edit. Savat.—"Of the titles which are attributed to the Deity, some are common, and some particular; the common denote the indivisibility of the Divine essence; the particular, characterize the personality of the hypostases. Thus the name of Father and of Son appertain each to its peculiar hypostasis; but the name of God, and of Lord, is common to both. Since the Scripture has applied the appellation of God to all the Persons of the Trinity, it was needful also to make use of a distinguishing appellation, that we might know of which Person it was speaking, and not run into the error of Subellius. For, that the name God, is not greater than that of Lord, nor the name Lord inferior to that of God, is manifest from hence: in every part of the Old Testament the Father is continually styled Lord, the Lord thy God; again, there is one Lord; and again, Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and Him only shalt thou serve; and again, Great is our Lord and mighty is His power; and again, Let them know that thy name is Lord, Thou only art the highest over all the earth. Now, if the name Lord be inferior to that of God, and consequently unworthy of the Divine essence, it should not have been said, Let them know that thy name is Lord; again, if the name of God be greater, and more venerable than that of Lord, the Son, who, according to them is an inferior being, should not have been addressed by a name appropriated to the Father, and which was his own peculiar title; but far otherwise is the case, for neither is the Son of a lower nature than the Father, nor is the name of Lord inferior to that of God. Wherefore with regard to the Father and the Son, the Scripture uses, indiscriminately, the selfsame appellations.

Having laid before you the passages wherein the Father is called Lord, it is necessary to adduce those passages wherein the Son is styled God. Prohilo, τριγων shall conquer, and shall bear a Son, and they shall call his name ΕΜΜΑΝΟΥΗΛ, which signifies God is with us. We now perceive, that the name of Lord is given to the Father, and that of God unto the Son; for, as in the other place it is said, Let them know that thy name is Lord; so here it saith, They shall call his name ΕΜΜΑΝΟΥΗΛ. And again, A child is born to us, and a Son is given us, and his name is called, The Angel of High Counsels, The great and mighty God. And here observe the cautious prudence, and spiritual wisdom, of the prophetic writers; for when they are speaking of the great and mighty God, lest they should seem to be speaking of the Father, they make the most particular mention of the miraculous conception. It is evident, at once, that the Father was not born of a virgin, and did not become a little child; again, another of the prophets somewhere says, This is our God. But concerning whom doth he say it? Is it of the Father? By no means; for he also alludes to the miraculous economy. Having said, This is our God, he adds, He explored the way of knowledge, and gave it to Jacob his child, and to Israel his son.—Isaiah. After this, he was seen upon the earth, and as David our great man—Psal also writes, Of whom, as to

'he flesh, is Christ, who is over all, God blessed for evermore: again, No fornicator, or covetous man, hath any inheritance in the kingdom of the Christ and God: and again, The glorious appearance of the GREAT God and Saviour of us, Jesus Christ. John likewise calls him by the same name, for he says, In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God.

"But perhaps an adversary will say, Can you show me any passage where the Scripture, ranking him with the Father, calls the Father Lord? I will not only show this; but I will produce passages where the Scripture calls both the Father Lord, and the Son Lord: and where it calls both the Father God, and the Son God. Christ, one day discoursing with the Jews, said, What think ye concerning Christ? Whose Son is He? They say unto him, He is the Son of David. He saith to them, How then doth David in Spirit, call him Lord; saying, The Lord said unto my Lord, Sit thou on my right hand? Mark, here are two Lords. I will now show you where the Scripture, speaking at once of the Father and the Son, calls both the one and the other God. Hear then the words of the prophet David, and of the apostle Paul, commenting upon that prophet:—Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever: a sceptre of righteousness is the sceptre of thy kingdom. Thou hast loved righteousness, and abhorred iniquity; therefore, O God, thy God hath anointed Thee with the oil of gladness above thy fellows. And Paul, bringing forward this testimony concerning Christ, writes thus: Of His angels he saith, Who maketh his ANGELS spirits. But of the Son He saith, Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever!"

In his 5th Hom. on the Epistle to Titus, he thus comments on chap. iv. ver. 13. Που είναι ο τον Πατρος छात्रα τον 'Υιον λεγοντες; τον μεγαλυ, φησι, Θεου και Σωτηρος. "Where are they who assert that the Son is inferior to the Father? Mark, he saith, 'of the great God and Saviour!'"—Tom. IV. p. 401. Edit. Sav.

There is, however, another passage in the writings of that learned Father, more absolute and conclusive than those which are already given. The original may be found in the 4th vol. of Sir Henry Saville's edition, page 32. It is in English as follows:

"He that is small cannot be God; for every where in the Scripture God is denominated Great. GREAT is the Lord, says David, and greatly to be praised. (Mark, he also speaks of the Son, for every where he calls him Lord.) And again: GREAT art thou, and doing wonders: thou art God alone. And again: GREAT is our Lord, and mighty is His power.—But these things, you will say, are spoken of the Father; but the Son is small. You say this, but the Scripture asserts the contrary; for, as it speaks of the Father, so likewise does it of the Son. Listen unto Paul, who says, Expecting the blessed hope and glorious appearance of the GREAT God. Surely he could not apply the word appearance to the Father. And that he may refute you more completely, he adds, of the GREAT God. Well then, must not this have been spoken of the Father? Certainly not; for the words which follow will not admit it. The appearance of the Great God and Saviour of us, JESUS CHRIST. You perceive that the Son also is denominated Great. Away then with your idle talk about small and great! Listen also to the prophet, who calls him, The Angel of GREAT COUNSEL. The Angel of great counsel, is he not Great? The Mighty God, is he not Great, but small? How then can these obstinate and shameless wretches assert that he is a less God? I often repeat their words, that ye may the more eschew them."

If a reader wholly impartial could be found, I think he would confess that, as far as we can attain to certainty in any thing, we may be certified, from the above extract, that the canon laid down by Mr. Sharp is correct and genuine. Chrysostom supposes an adversary to address him thus:—

"I see that in this sentence God is spoken of; and not merely spoken of, but likewise styled THE GREAT God. Surely such an expression as this must refer to the Father. No, replies our saint, that is impossible; for the phrase καὶ Σωτηρ, which follows, shows at once that Θεός and Σωτηρ mean the same person; and Σωτηρ, in this place, is spoken of Jesus Christ."

Such is the testimony of Chrysostom, the most eloquent, if not the most learned, of the Fathers. Basil, archbishop of Cæsarea, though inferior to Chrysostom in richness of imagination and brilliancy of rhetoric, far surpassed him, and almost all the Fathers, in the universality of his learning, and in his profound knowledge of the Sacred Writings. No authority can be higher, or more unquestionable, than his. As I have not his works at hand, I can only refer to them from memory; but I am confident, that what I am about to state, will be found, upon examination, to be correct. In his fourth book against Eunomius, speaking of the Divinity of Christ, he cites the latter of these texts: but, having done so, he is fearful lest some of his hearers should be misled by it. The expression, τον μεγαλυ Θεου, appears to him so strong, that he is apprehensive lest it should be thence inferred, that the Son is greater than the Father!

This passage will be found in the first volume of the Benedictine edition, and at page 294.—Tom. II. pag. 107. Edit. Par. 1618. As we have proved that the best and purest of the Greek Fathers were well acquainted with the full force of the article, it may be asked, Do their own writings abound with examples to confirm it? I answer, that they abound with them in numerous instances; let a few examples suffice;

From Chrysostom.—Ὁ ἀγιαζων αυτα και μετασκευαζων αυτους εστι.—"It is He who sanctifies and transforms the bread and wine." Homil. 82. In Matt.

Εγκαλει τον Σωτηρα και Ευεργετη.—"He would accuse the Saviour and Benefactor." De Sacerd. lib. iv.

Ἡ σφοδρα εὐαγγελς και ακαθαρτος, (πορν).—"Who was most impious and impure." Orat. in Eutrop.

Συν το ζωοτιο και παναγιο Πνευματι.—"With the life-bestowing and all-holy Spirit." De Incompreh. Hom. 2.

Που δε οι σοφοντες και αυρια εγκλημα λεγοντες.—"Where are they who walk insolently, and utter ten thousand panegyrics?" Orat. in Eutrop.

Και τι λεγο τον προφητην; αυτον αγιο σοι, τον τον προφητην δεσποτην, τον κοινον ημων Θεον και Κυριον, τον Χριστον. Αυτος γαρ φησι, οτι Πεινῶντα με εδεδε, και εβρεψατε.—"But why do I quote the prophet? I will bring against you Him who is the Master of the prophet, our common God and Lord, the Christ. For he says, 'Ye saw me hungering, and ye fed me.'" Orat. in Eliaim, et in viduam.

Mark, either Chrysostom speaks of one single Person, or the sentence is ungrammatical. Now the passage in the 15th of the 2d chapter of Titus, τον μεγαλυ Θεου και Σωτηρος, must have the same meaning as τον κοινον Θεον και Κυριον.

From Gregory Nazianzen.—"Ο ποιητη και μαρτυρ." "Who was both a pastor and martyr." Orat. de Manian.

Οι την πτωχει ημιν αντιειδοντες και τον πλεοντον κορηαζοντες.—"Reproaching our poverty, and boasting of their own wealth." Orat. in Arianos.

Των θραυον ετι και το ζην ηρησενων.—"Who were in the bloom of youth, and fitted to enjoy life." Orat. Funer. in Patrem.

Των εστωτων και ου θρονων.—"Beings, permanent and imperishable." Ibid.

Τον συν Ιeron και θρωνον.—"Me, thy priest and namesake." Ibid.

From Basil.—"Οι απητητοι και γενναιοι τον Χριστον στρατιωται."—"These unconquered and noble Soldiers of Christ." Orat. in quadrages. Martyr.

Τον λυοντα και επανωγοντα.—"Him who liberates us, and brings us back." Orat. in Martyr. Julitt.

But what say the heathen authors? Is this doctrine of the Greek article founded only upon the phraseology of ecclesiastical writers, or does it exist in the works of those who wrote in the utmost purity and perfection of the language? It reigns triumphant in them all. Take up whatever authority you please, whether in prose or verse: consult the poets, the philosophers, and the historians; peruse the writings of Homer and of Sophocles, of Aristotle and of Plato, of Thucydides and Xenophon, of Isocrates or Demosthenes; in them you will meet with the most decisive testimonies to the truth of the doctrine already laid down. If you appeal to Lucian, you will find that Ulysses is called τον εγω κα φλυον, "the host and friend." You may, perchance, have heard that the great Person pronounced Lucian to be a writer of small authority; and you may wish to be convinced from the example of a pure Attic writer. Was ever writer more pure than Xenophon? And he will tell you, that Cyrus was, at once, α βασιλευς και ηγεμων.—"The king and the general."

In the Agamemnon of Æschylus, (and indeed in every tragedy of that poet,) we are presented with numerous confirmations of our rule.

Ο χρυσαοιβος δ' Αρης, σωματων και ταλαντοχος εν μαχη δορος.—V. 432, 433. "Mars, the exchanger of bodies; and holder of the balance in the conflict of the spear."

Πατερα Θυεσην τον εμον, αυτον 'σ' αδελφον.—V. 1593, 1594. "Thyestes, my father and his brother."

This last is a happy instance. Ægisthus is speaking of his father, who was brother to Atræus.

One of the passages which I have cited from the New Testament, may be thought, by some, to be liable to an objection. I mean the 5th verse of the 5th chapter of Ephesians. It may be said, that the word Χριστος is not a substantive, but an adjective: αυτη, or ανθρωπος, being understood; and it may be asked, Does this rule apply, when an adjective and a substantive are united by the conjunction, the article being prefixed to the first, and not to the second? I answer, by referring the objector to an example which I have given from St. Gregory Nazianzen: there μυσος is a substantive, and υπατος an adjective; and it is manifest that Jupiter, and Jupiter only, is intended.

Let it should appear to any, that I have been too conclusive, and have not furnished a sufficient number of corroborating examples, I have subjoined the following: two from the New Testament, some from the Fathers, and some from heathen poets.

Αναβαινω προς τον Πατερα μου και Πατερα υμων, και Θεον μου και Θεον υμων.—"I ascend to my Father and your Father, and my God and your God." John xxi. 17. This is an excellent example, where the Supreme Being is considered in the four distinct relations of God and Father of Christ, and God and Father of men; the article being placed before the first only.

Αναγκαιον δε ηγησαμην Επαφροδιτον τον αδελφον και σινηγον και συσρατιωτην με, ὅμων δὲ ἀποβολον, και λειτουργον της χρειας μου, περὶαι προς υμας.—"Yet I supposed it necessary to send to you Epaphroditus, my brother and companion in labour, and fellow-soldier, but your messenger, and he that ministered to my wants." Philip. ii. 25. This is a very remarkable example, where the article is placed before ἀποβολον, and wanting before συσρατιωτην, συσρατιωτην, αποβολον, and λειτουργον, because all referring to Επαφροδιτον.

Οικειται του Σταυρουμένου και λεγοντος, Αφες ανους.—"The servants of Him that was crucified, and saith, 'Forgive them.'" Chrysostom. Orat. in Eutrop.

Πειθομενος ορατ 'Ερμου του καλλιστου και αγαθωτατου των θεων.—"Being persuaded by Mercury, the fairest and best of the gods." Heliad.

Αρφη του αναρχου και ανωλεδρου βασιλεα.—"Around the King without beginning, and immortal." Methodius.

Τον κορυφαιοτατον των ημων και πρωτον των ποιητων, 'Ομηρον.—"Homer, the most distinguished among you, and first of the poets." Justin Martyr, Cohortatio ad Græcos.

Ο δυστυχης δαιμων, ο σης κομος.

"Mine and thine evil genius."

Sophocles Electra.

Ο Αρχιστρατηγος και ποιητην των κει' ουρανου 'ω παντα ποιουνται.—"The Great Ruler and Shepherd of them in heaven, whom all things obey." Methodius.

Ινα τον βασιλεα γερατην παντων και ποιητην.—"That he may venerate the King and Maker of all." Ibid.

Ο στρατηγος ημων και ποιητην Ιησους, και αρχην, και νυμφιον.—"Jesus, our leader, and shepherd, and governor, and bridegroom." Ibid.

The three following instances are from the poems of Gregory Nazianzen. It will be seen that even in poetry he cannot deviate from the established rule:

Ο μανιωδης και κακιστος ζωγραφος.

"The insane and most execrable painter."

Adv. Iram, p. 234, Edit. Paris.

Τι λοιπον: ὀρκιζω σε των κακων φιλον,
Τον θυμενην ζυνηγορον και προσατην.—Ibid. p. 237.

"What remains? I adjure thee, the friend of the wicked, the unvalued advocate and patron."

Ο λυσσωδης και βισκαανος οια τιν' Ιωβ

Ες ἑθνην καλεει

"Both the infuriate and invidious demon call me, like another Job, unto the combat?"

Most of the above writers have not yet been quoted on this subject. The examples from Methodius, appear to me to be the most valuable; and we may see from these, that any Greek writer whatever, will furnish sufficient examples to illustrate and establish this important rule.

Τον θεον μονον αριεστε, τον δεσποτην και δημιουργον του παντος.—"Ye deny the only God, the Lord and Creator of all." Chrysostom Orat. De non anathem. vivis aut defunctis.

Τον πνευτα και πλουσιον, (speaking of Elias) —"The indigent and rich man." Chrysostom. Adv. Anom. Orat. 6.

Τον μακαριον και ασιδμον τονον.—"This blessed and celebrated man." Georg. Archiep. Alexand. De Vita Chrysostomi.

Οι ταχεις τα παντα και ουκ ασφαλεις, ὁ ραδιος οικοδομουντες και καταλυντες.—"They who are swift in every thing, and not firm; who readily rear superstructures, and destroy them." Gregor. Nazianz. Orat. Apol. de Eugē.

Αρης—ἡ της χρυσης Αφροδιτης αδυς ερανης και μοιχος απειροεπιτος.—"Mars, the ungraceful lover of the golden Venus, and the uncircumspect adulterer." Ibid. Orat. 1. adv. Julianum.

Μουσης—ἡ του θεου Φαραω, και το Ισραηλ προσατην και νομοστης.—"Moses, the god of Pharaoh, and governor and law-giver of Israel." Ibid. Orat. 4. adv. Julian.

Ο μιν αρχουν αρχουντων, και ιερειν ιερειων, (speaking of Moses)—"The ruler of rulers, and priest of priests." Ibid.

Εν τε ο της ευτης φιλοσοφιας βασανιστης και κρητης.—"Thou art both the investigator and judge of my philosophy." Ibid.

Εν ημερα επιφανειας και αποκαλυψεως του μεγαλυ θεου και Αρχιποιμηνος ημων, Ιηου Χριστου.—"In the day of the appearing and revelation of Jesus Christ, the Great God and chief Shepherd of us." Ibid. in fine.

Τον των γεννητων απαντων Κυριον και θεον και βασιλεα.—"The Lord, and God, and King of all mortals." (De Christo loquitur.) Eusebii Pamph. Eccles. Hist. lib. i. c. 2

Οτα ρας τηρεας

Μητιδος οκτρας αλοχου

Κιρκηλατον τ' ανδρους.

Æschyli Supplices, l. 62—64.

"The voice of the wretched wife of Tereus, the nightingale, pursued by the falcon."

This is an excellent example. It may be necessary to inform the unlearned, that, according to Æschylus, the wife, and not the sister-in-law of Tereus, was changed into the nightingale. See the Agamemnon, v. 1146. Edit. Porson.

Ο μακαριος Ειρηναος, δε μαρτυρ και επισκοπος Λυγουδιου.—"The blessed Irenæus, the martyr and bishop of Lugundium." Irenæus in Responsione ad Questionem 115 ad Orthodoxos.

Ιουστιν του φιλοσοφου και μαρτυρου, και Ειρηναίου του τα Κιληνια και γεωγραφησαντος και φωτισαντος εθνῃ.—"Justin, the philosopher and martyr; and Irenæus, who cultivated and illuminated the Celtic nations." Theodoreti in Præfatione Hæreticorum Fabularum.

Ια Χριστω Ιησου του Κυριου ημων, και θεου, και Σωτηρι, και Βασιλει, κατα την ευδοκίαν του Πατρος του αρατου, παν γονε καμψη.—"That to Christ Jesus, our Lord, and God, and Saviour, and King, according to the good pleasure of the invisible Father, every knee may bow." Irenæus adversus Hæreses, lib. i. c. 2, p. 45. Edit. Oxon. 1702.

Τον Κριστην και Δημιουργον.—"The Creator and Maker." Ibid. c. 4. p. 49.

Ο Πατηρ —ο ανεννητος και ανουσιος.—"The Father that cannot be fathomed by the understanding, and who is immaterial." Ibid. c. 10. page 63.

Α εστι κατα πιστην και αγαπην Ιησου Χριστου, του θεου και Σωτηρος ημων.—"Which are according to the faith and love of Jesus Christ, our God and Saviour." Ignatii Epist. ad Romanos.

Μονον ινα τον Χριστον ιδω τον Σωτηρα μου και θεον.—"That I may know Christ only, my Saviour and God." Epistola ad Tarsenses, Ignatii adscripta.

Οι παντα προς χαριν ποιουντες και λεγοντες.—"They who do and say every thing to gain favour." Chrysostom. Orat. in Eutrop.

FARTHER OBSERVATIONS on the Greek article, intended as a supplement to the essay on that subject. The author of the above-mentioned Essay, conceiving that he has been misunderstood, and that certain objections raised against the doctrine of the Greek Article require a more particular answer, has requested me to subjoin the following Postscript. This I do without pretending to determine any thing relative to the merits of the objections, or the answers here given.

As they who disbelieve the Divinity of Christ, are naturally ready to assail whatever tends to confirm and to establish it: and as the lovers of disputation are often prone to the same conduct, without having the same excuse; I deem it necessary to answer the objections which have been brought against me, in conversation, and by letter. The most ingenious objection which I have yet heard, I shall notice first. "It was made by a Unitarian of considerable acuteness. 'You allow,' said he, 'that when two nouns of an opposite and contradictory meaning, are coupled by the conjunction, two different persons are intended, although the article be prefixed to the first, but not to the second. Do you not perceive, that you hereby furnish us with a reply? We have only to say, that Χριστός and Θεός are opposite and irreconcilable terms. The passage in Ephesians is therefore an exception." This is the most subtle objection I have met with; but it is not unanswerable. The fallacy consists in this—our opponent takes for granted the very thing which it is his business to prove.

Instead of making assertions, we will demonstrate, that Χριστός and Θεός are not irreconcilable, but consistent, and capable of application to the same Person. In the opening of St. John's Gospel we read, that the Word was God. A little after we are informed, that the Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us. From hence it is evident, to the humblest capacity, that the Word means Christ. But the Word was God; therefore, Χριστός and Θεός are not inconsistent, but compatible. If, however, the Gospel of St. John were not in existence, we should still be able to answer this objection, by an appeal to the passage in Titus. We there find, that Θεός and Σωτήρ are most providentially united by the conjunction. Now Θεός and Σωτήρ are unquestionably compatible. God may be a Saviour if he pleases, and we know that in the Scripture He is sometimes styled a Saviour. The expression το μέγαλον Θεόν καὶ Σωτήρα, is therefore subject to the influence of the rule, and one Person only is intended. But Σωτήρ is spoken of Christ; therefore Christ is here styled The Great God; consequently Χριστός and Θεός are perfectly consistent, perfectly compatible.

I shall next take notice of an objection, which has less strength and force than the preceding: "You admit," said the objector, "because the very numerous instances oblige you to admit it, that proper names are excepted from the influence of the rule. Do you not see, that by this confession, your whole system is completely overthrown? An Unitarian will immediately observe, that Χριστός and Θεός are proper names, and consequently exceptions." In answer to this objection, I beg leave to state, first, with respect to Θεός, it is simply an appellation. Jehovah is the proper name of God; but the word God is a term, by which we designate the incomprehensible Being, the Great First Cause. Secondly, with regard to Χριστός, it is evident from the various places where it occurs, that it is simply a title of office, given unto that Divine Person whose name is Jesus. That the word Christ has become a proper name amongst us, I readily admit; but we must not confound English with Greek idioms. As I have no right, however, to expect, that my unsupported assertion should be admitted as an authority, I shall cite the learned professor Michaelis.

In the time of the apostles, says he, the word Christ was never used as the proper name of a person, but as an epithet expressive of the ministry of Jesus: Introd. Vol. I. p. 337. See also these notes, on Matthew, chap. i. ver. 16.

I have now to offer my observations, on an argument, which at first sight appears plausible. It was urged against me, by the same man who made the above objection; but it had already passed through my own mind, and I had already answered it to my own satisfaction. Whether it be answered to the satisfaction of my reader, he will now determine. "In St. John, chap. xx. ver. 28, we find the following expression: Ὁ Κριςτός μου καὶ ὁ Θεός μου. All the orthodox are agreed, that Jesus is here styled both Lord and God. If, then, the rule you contend for was real and genuine, the article ought not to have been repeated before the second noun, inasmuch as one person only is intended. The same argument may be deduced from a passage in Revelation, chap. xii. ver. 13." I answer, it is well known to every mathematician, that the converse of a proposition does not necessarily hold. Now it is the same in philology, as in science. I have maintained, and do still maintain, that when two substantives, &c. are coupled by the conjunction, the article being prefixed to the first, but not to the second, one person only is intended. It does not follow from hence, that when one person only is intended, the article must be prefixed to the first, but not to the second. It may be affixed to neither, or it may be affixed to both, as in the example above quoted, for the purpose of giving greater force and energy.

I have now to answer another objection, which I should have passed unregarded, if it had not been made by persons of considerable consequence, and of opposite creeds. We cannot admit, say they, that a doctrine of such importance should rest upon a mere form of speech, a mere rule of syntax. Now I should be glad to know, what truth is there, however sacred, what doctrine, however important, which does not rest upon some form of speech, upon some rule of syntax. A single example will suffice. How can we be certain whether the apostle, in 1 Tim. chap. i. ver. 15, meant to inform us, whether Christ came into the world to save sinners, or whether sinners came into the world to save Christ? What other answer than the following can be given? It is an universal law of syntax, that a verb in the indicative mood must be preceded by a nominative; and if there be an accusative case in the sentence, that accusative must be governed either by a verb or by a preposition. We are therefore certain, that the passage admits of one meaning only. All Divine knowledge, as well as all human knowledge, is communicated through the medium of language; and where would be the certainty of judgment, if it were not governed by fixed unalterable rules?

I have now gone through the principal objections, which have been urged against our system. If it should appear to the enlightened reader, that I have not sufficiently refuted them; I hope, I entreat, that he will attribute this to the inability of the advocate, and not to the imperfection of the cause. When the admirable Porson was alive, he might have lulled the question into an everlasting rest. With one effort of his mind, with one glance of his eye, with one stroke of his pen, he could have poured upon the subject a flood of light, which Satan could never have extinguished, and the opposers of this doctrine could never have withstood. But, alas! his studies were not directed to subjects of sacred criticism.

I shall conclude this Postscript, with a few general observations on the subject.

When the Monthly Reviewers sat down to criticise Dr. Middleton's work upon the Greek Article, the subject was but in its infancy. It had not attained the matured vigour, and perfect bloom, which it now displays. These gentlemen imagined, that they had given a death-blow to the system, by bringing forward such examples as the following: τον σοφον, και ακολυτον; the temperate, and intemperate. We now see, that their arguments are most successfully turned against themselves. It is evident from what has been said at the beginning of my Essay, that this instance is no exception to the rule. A temperate and an intemperate person, are characters essentially different, and therefore it was unnecessary to repeat the article. Thus Æschylus, in his Agamemnon, speaking of the Trojans and the Greeks, says, Και τον αδιον και κρατητον.

"Of the captured, and those who gained the victory;" in which place it is manifest, that the repetition of the article would have been needless. I must not omit to mention, that in this part of the subject, I am indebted for some of my ideas to Bishop Burgess: who, in an appendix to one of his Charges, has maintained and illustrated the rule.

I have also stated, that proper names are exempted from its jurisdiction. It is clear that Peter and John are distinct persons; therefore St. Luke, chap. ix. ver. 25, writes, παλαβον τον Πητρον, και Ιωαννην, και Ιακωβον; having taken Peter, and John, and James.

In Acts xxvi. 30, St. Luke informs us, that the king and the governor arose. If we examine the original, we shall find that the article is prefixed to both these nouns, ανηγειρθη βασιλεως, και ο ηγεμων. Why was the article here repeated? Was it to give force and energy to the expression? No, it was for a reason more important; the evangelist intended us to understand that, when Paul had ceased to speak, the king Agrippa, and the governor Festus, arose. Now, the offices of a king and a governor are perfectly compatible. If then, he had written ο βασιλεως και ηγεμων, he would have conveyed a very different idea from that which was intended. The reader would have supposed that Agrippa united in his own person the offices of king and governor; that he and Bernice rose up, and that Festus was left by himself, unless, indeed, he included among those, α ος καθηνοντο αυτοις, ιχοι σοι τοις αλλοις μεθ' αυτων. But St. Luke knew, and felt the force, the influence, and the universality of the rule which we contend for, and wrote accordingly.

In the course of my Essay, I quoted those passages of Chrysostom wherein he proves the Godhead of Christ, from Titus ii. 13. I then brought forward the testimony of Basil, and appealed to his fourth book against Eunomius. It may, however, be objected, that some critics have doubted whether that book be genuine. If we should even allow that it is spurious, and admit as a fact what is merely a matter of opinion, we shall not be thereby deprived of the testimony of St. Basil. His Homilies on the Psalms are unquestionably genuine; and in the very first of these he quotes Titus ii. 13, and applies the whole of it to Christ. As I have not my copy of his works at present with me, I am unable to specify the page. It may suffice to say, that it is in the first volume both of the Benedictine edition, and the Paris edition, of 1618. This important verse is also cited by Athanasius, by Gregory of Nyssa, and by Cyril of Alexandria.

When I look attentively at the two passages of Holy Writ which have been the especial objects of this discussion, I think that, leaving the doctrine of the Greek article out of the question, I perceive sufficient evidence to warrant our belief that one person only is intended. In the passage from Ephesians, two circumstances claim our notice: Θεου, is placed last in the sentence, and the article is not prefixed to it, although it had been prefixed to Πατρι;—but this is aberrant from the phraseology of St. Paul. When he speaks of God the Father, and of Jesus Christ, and connects them by the conjunction, it is his custom to mention the Father first, and to omit the article altogether. In the following texts the reader may see a few examples—Rom. i. 7. 1 Cor. i. 3. 2 Cor. i. 2. Gal. i. 3. Eph. i. 2. Phil. i. 2. The article, however, is sometimes prefixed to both; see, for instance, Col. ii. 2. This passage, by the way, is a most powerful confirmation of Mr. Sharp's rule; but with that rule we have nothing to do at present. St. John expresses himself in the same manner in the Apocalypse, xi. 15. We see, then, what is the prevailing diction of St. Paul; and we may defy any man to produce a single passage, either from him, or from any other inspired writer, where God the Father, and Christ are manifestly spoken of, the Father placed last in the sentence, and yet unobscured by the article, while on Christ that distinction is conferred.—We may then conclude that if, in Ephes. v. 5. St. Paul had spoken both of the Father and of the Son, he would have said, To Oeuo kat re Nouto, or at least re Nouto kat re Oeuo.

On Titus ii. 13. I have an observation to offer, which is also unconnected with Mr. Sharp's rule. If God the Father be meant in the first clause, then the Son is simply called σωτηρς ημων. But this expression as applied to Christ, hath no parallel in the whole book of God. I wish the intelligent reader to mark this distinctly. The following are, I believe, all the passages of the New Testament where Christ is styled our Saviour, and in every one of these the article is added.—2 Tim. i. 10. Tit. i. 4. Tit. iii. 6. We have reason then to believe, that if St. Paul had here meant the glorious appearance of God the Father, he would have added, kat re σωτηρς ημων. I may add, that as the three passages where Christ is styled our Saviour, all occur in the writings of this apostle, the reason of our belief is greatly strengthened.

I have reasoned boldly and confidently on the above cited passage, because I am persuaded that my reasoning can never be overturned. If, however, an example, such as a Bartholomew, should be brought against me; if the two nouns be perfectly compatible; and if, notwithstanding this, it be manifest that two different persons are intended; I must acknowledge that my labours have ended in uncertainty.

It is my unalterable opinion that, at all times, and on all occasions, truth should be explored; and, when discovered, exhibited to view, whatever be the consequences. I think it will be impossible for the opposers of this doctrine to produce such an example as I have been supposing: but, should any be inclined to look for such an example, I think it necessary to mention, that two things are indispensable—in the first place, the citation must be made from an unexceptionable Greek writer; in the second place, there must be no various reading to the passage, in any extant manuscript. First, it must be from an unexceptionable Greek writer; it must be from an author whose native language was Greek, and who flourished not later than the fourth, or, at most, the fifth century after Christ. When I have established a fact, by instances taken from the best and purest of the Greek authors, I may then call to my assistance whatever writers I please, for the purpose of rather corroboration; but the opponent who comes forward to dispute, and to destroy, must deduce the streams of his criticism from the fountain head. His weapons must be taken from the armoury of Homer or Plato, of Sophocles or Pindar, of Zenophon or Demosthenes. Secondly, there must be no various reading in any MS. which is extant. If there be but one various reading, the passage will be inadmissible: in rejecting it, I shall be acting with impartial justice; for I have passed over a very important passage in my favour, because there is a various reading. By the application of Mr. Sharp's rule to 2 Peter i. 1. it might have been shown that Jesus is there styled our God. There is no doubt that τοῦ Θεοῦ ἡμῶν καὶ σωτηρς, is the genuine reading. If not quite as precious as the instance in Titus ii. 13. it is more valuable than that in Ephes. v. 5. and yet I passed it over, being determined to make use of nothing to which the slightest objection might be made.

If, at some future period, an exception in itself unexceptionable, shall be brought against this rule, I will acknowledge, though painful the confession, that my sweetest, because my best directed labours, have been unavailing. I shall retire from the field discomfited, but not disheartened; disappointed, but not dispirited; sorrowful, and yet rejoicing.—Yes, I shall still rejoice, because I am assured there are other and mightier proofs of the Divinity of Jesus; proofs, which neither the subtilty of philologists, nor the rage of demons, can overthrow.

H. S. BOYD.

PREFACE TO THE

EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE TO THE PHILIPPIANS.

We have already seen, Acts xvi. 12. that Philippi was a town of Macedonia, in the territory of the Edonians, on the confines of Thrace, and very near the northern extremity of the Balkan Sea. It was a little eastward of Mount Pangæus, and about midway between Nicomædia on the east, and Thessalonica on the west. It was at first called Crenides, and afterward Dorus; but Philipp, king of Macedonia, and father of Alexander, having taken possession of it, and fortified it, called it Philippi, after his own name. Julius Cæsar planted a colony here, which was afterward enlarged by Augustus; and hence the inhabitants were considered as freemen of Rome. Near this town, it is thought, the famous battle was fought between Brutus and Cassius, on the one side; and Augustus and Mark Antony on the other; in which the former were defeated, and the fate of the empire decided. Others think that this battle was fought at Philippi, a town of Thrace, in Thessaly.

The Gospel was preached first here by St. Paul. About the year of our Lord 53, St. Paul had a vision in the night; a man of Macedonia appeared to him, and said, Come over to Macedonia and help us. He was then at Troas in Mysia; from thence he immediately sailed to Samothracia, came the next day to Neapolis, and thence to Philippi. There he continued for some time, and converted Lydia, a seller of purple, from Thyatira; and afterward cast a demon out of a Pythoness, for which he and Silas were persecuted, cast into prison, scourged, and put into the stocks; but the magistrates afterward finding that they were Romans, took them out of prison, and treated them civilly. See the account, Acts xvi. 9, &c.

The Philippians were greatly attached to their apostle, and testified their affection by sending him supplies, even when he was labouring for other churches; and they appear to have been the only church that did so. See chap. iv. 15, 16.

There is not much controversy concerning the date of this epistle; it was probably written in the end of A. D. 62, and about a year after that to the Ephesians. Dr. Paley conjectures the date by various intimations in the epistle itself. "It purports," says he, "to have been written near the conclusion of St. Paul's imprisonment at Rome; and after a residence in that city of considerable duration. These circumstances are made out by different intimations; and the intimations upon the subject preserve among themselves a strict consistency; and a consistency certainly unimpeached. First, the apostle had already been a prisoner at Rome so long, that the reputation of his bonds, and of his confinement, had then had contributed to advance the success of the Gospel.—See chap. i. 12—13. Secondly, the account given of Epaphroditus, imports that St. Paul, when he wrote the epistle, had been in Rome a considerable time. He longed after you all, and was full of heaviness, because ye had heard that he had been sick, ch. ii. 26. Epaphroditus had been with Paul at Rome; he had been sick; the Philippians had heard of his sickness; and he again had received an account how much they had been affected by the intelligence. The passing and repassing of these advices must necessarily have occupied a large portion of time; and must have all taken place during St. Paul's residence at Rome. Thirdly, after a residence at Rome, thus proved to have been of considerable duration, he now regards the decision of his fate as high at hand; he contemplates either alternative, that of his deliverance, chap. ii. 23. "Him, therefore, (Timothy,) I hope to send presently, so soon as I shall see how it will go with me; but I trust in the Lord that I also myself shall come shortly." Ver. 24. that of his condemnation. Verse 17. Yea, and if I be offered upon the sacrifice and service of your faith, I joy and rejoice with you all. This consistency is material, if the consideration of it be confined to the epistle. It is farther material, as it agrees, with respect to the duration of St. Paul's first imprisonment at Rome, with the account delivered in the Acts; which, having brought the apostle to Rome, closes the history, by telling us that he dwelt there two whole years in his own hired house.¹ Hor. Paul. p. 212.

On the agreement between the epistle and the history, as given in the Acts, Dr. Paley makes many judicious remarks, which I have not time to insert, but must refer to the work itself; and I wish all my readers to get and peruse the whole work, as an inestimable treasure of sacred criticism, on the authenticity of Paul's epistles.

The Epistle to the Philippians is written in a very pleasing and easy style; every where bearing evidence of that contented state of mind in which the apostle then was; and of his great affection for the people. It appears that there were false apostles, or Judaizing teachers, at Philippi, who had disturbed the peace of the church; against these, he warns them; exhorts them to concord; comforts them in their afflictions for the Gospel; returns them thanks for their kindness to him; tells them of his state, and shows a great willingness to be a sacrifice for the faith he had preached to them. There is a divine affection in this epistle, which every serious reader will perceive.

CHAPTER I.

Paul, in conjunction with Timothy, addresses himself to the saints at Philippi, and gives them his apostolical benediction, 1, 2. Thanks God for their conversion and union; and expresses his persuasion that God will continue his work among them, 3-6. Tells them of his strong affection for them, and prays that they may be filled with the salvation of God, 7-11. Shows them how much his persecution had contributed to the success of the Gospel, 12-14. Informs them that there were some at Rome who preached the Gospel from unworthy motives; yet he was convinced that this which was designed to injure him should turn to his advantage, 15-19. Mentions his uncertainty whether he should be liberated or martyred, and his perfect readiness to meet either; yet on the whole, expresses a hope that he should again visit them, 20-26. Exhorts them to a holy life, and comforts them under their tribulations, 27-30. [A. M. cir. 4066. A. D. cir. 62. A. U. C. 814. An. Imp. Neronis Cæs. Aug. 9.]

NOTES.—Verse 1. Paul and Timotheus] That Timothy was at this time with the apostle in Rome, we learn from ch. ii. 19, and also that he was very high in the apostle's estimation. He had also accompanied the apostle on his two voyages to Philippi, see Acts xvi. xx. and was therefore deservedly dear to the church in that city. It was on these accounts that St. Paul joined his name to his own, not because he was in any part the author of this epistle; but he might have been the apostle's amanuensis, though the subscription to the epistle gives this office to Epaphroditus. Neither in this epistle, nor in those to the Thessalonians and to Philemon, does St. Paul call himself an apostle; the reason of which appears to be, that in none of these places was his apostolical authority called in question.

Bishops and deacons] Επισκοποι, the overseers of the church of God, and those who ministered to the poor, and preached occasionally. There has been a great deal of paper wasted in the inquiry, "Who is meant by bishops here, as no place could have more than one bishop?" To which it has been answered, "Philippi was a metropolitan see, and might have several bishops." This is the extravagance of trifling. I believe no such officer is meant as we now term bishop.

² Grace be unto you.] See on Rom. i. 7.

³ Upon every remembrance.] As often as you recur to my mind, so often do I thank God for the great work wrought among you. Some think that the words should be translated, For all your kind remembrance; referring to their kind attention to the apostle, in supplying his wants, &c.

⁴ Always in every prayer.] I pray often for you, and have great pleasure in doing it, seeing what God has already wrought among you.

⁵ For your fellowship in the Gospel.] If we consider κοινωνία as implying spiritual fellowship or communion; then it signifies not only their attention to the Gospel, their readiness to continue it, and perseverance in it, but also their unity and affection among themselves. Some understand the word as expressing their liberality to the apostle, and to the Gospel in general; for the term may not only be applied to communion among themselves, but to communications to others. This sense, though followed by Chrysostom and Theophylact, does not appear to be the best, though we know it to be a fact that they were liberal in supplying the apostle's necessities; and, no doubt, in ministering to the support of others.

⁶ Being confident.] There shall be nothing lacking on God's part to support you, and to make you wise, holy, and happy; and bring you at last to his kingdom and glory.

⁷ It is meet for me to think this.] Εὐδοκῶν; it is just that I should think so, because I have you in my heart; you live in my warmest love and most affectionate remembrance.

Inasmuch as both in my bonds] Because you have set your hearts upon me in my bonds, sending Epaphroditus to minister to me in my necessities, ch. ii. 25. and contributing of your own substance to me, ch. iv. 14. sending once and again to me while I was in bonds for the defence of the faith, ver. 15, 16. those things which being a sweet savour, a sacrifice well pleasing and acceptable to God, ver. 18. confirm my hope concerning you; especially when I find you yet standing firm under the like afflictions, having the same conflict which ye run for a good work in you^e will perform it^h until the day of Jesus Christ:

⁷ Even as it is meet for me to think this of you all, because I have you^k in my heart; inasmuch as both in^l my bonds, and in^m the defence and confirmation of the Gospel, ye all areⁿ partakers of my grace.

⁸ For God is my record, how greatly I long after you all in the bowels of Jesus Christ.

⁹ And this I pray, that your love may abound yet more and more in knowledge, and in all^o judgment;

¹⁰ That ye may^p approve things that are excellent; so that saw in me when I was among you, Acts xvi. and now hear to be in me, ch. i. 30. Whitby.

⁸ For God is my record.] I call God to witness that I have the strongest affection for you; and that I love you with that same kind of tender concern, with which Christ loved the world when he gave himself for it: for I am even ready to be offered on the sacrifice and service of your faith, chap. ii. 17.

⁹ This I pray.] This is the substance of all my prayers for you, that your love to God, to one another, and to all mankind, may abound yet more and more, ετι μαλλον και πολλων περισσους, that it may be like a river perpetually fed with rain and fresh streams, so that it continues to swell and increase till it fills all its banks, and floods the adjacent plains.

In knowledge] Of God's nature, perfections, your own duty and interest, his work upon your souls, and his great designs in the Gospel.

And in all judgment] Και παση αισθησει, in all spiritual or moral feeling; that you may at once have the clearest perception, and the fullest enjoyment, of those things which concern your salvation: that ye may not only know, but feel that you are of God, by the Spirit which he has given you; and that your feeling may become more exercised in Divine things, so that it may be increasingly sensible and refined.

¹⁰ That ye may approve things that are excellent.] Εις το δοκιμαζειν υμας τα διαφέροντα; to the end that ye may put to proof the things that differ; or the things that are more profitable. By the pure and abundant love which they received from God, they would be able to try whatever differed from the teaching they had received, and from the experience they had in spiritual things.

That ye may be sincere] Ινα ητε ειλικρινεis. The word ειλικρινεia, which we translate sincerity, is compounded of ειλη, the splendour of the sun, and κρινω, I judge; a thing which may be examined in the clearest and strongest light, without the possibility of detecting a single flaw or imperfection. "A metaphor," says Mr. Leigh, "taken from the usual practice of chapmen in the view and choice of their wares, that bring them forth into the light, and hold up the cloth against the sun, to see if they can espy any default in them. Pure as the sun." Be so purified and refined in your souls by the indwelling Spirit, that even the light of God shining into your hearts shall not be able to discover a fault that the love of God has not purged away.

Our word sincerity, is from the Latin sinceritas, which is compounded of sine, without, and cera, wax, and is a metaphor taken from clarified honey; for the mel sincerum, pure or clarified honey, is that which is sine cera, without wax: no part of the comb being left in it. Sincerity, taken in its full meaning, is a word of the most extensive import; and when applied in reference to the state of the soul, is as strong as the word perfection itself. The soul that is sincere, is the soul that is without sin.

Without offence] Απραγκατοι; neither offending God, nor your neighbour; neither being stumbled yourselves, nor the cause of stumbling to others.

Till the day of Christ] Till he comes to judge the world, or till the day in which you are called into the eternal world. According to this prayer, a man under the power and influence of the grace of God, may so love as never to offend his ya may be sincere and without offence * till the day of Christ ;

11 Being filled with the fruits of righteousness, * which are by Jesus Christ, * unto the glory and praise of God.

12 But I would ye should understand, brethren, that the things which happened unto me have fallen out rather unto the furtherance of the Gospel ;

13 So that my bonds * in Christ are manifest in all * the palace, and in all other places ;

14 And many of the brethren in the Lord, waxing confident by my bonds, are much more bold to speak the word without fear.

15 Some indeed preach Christ even of envy and * strife ; and come also of good will :

16 The one preach Christ of contention, not sincerely, supposing to add affliction to my bonds :

17 But the other of love, knowing that I am set for * the defence of the Gospel.

18 What then ? notwithstanding, every way, whether in pre-

Maker, to the latest period of his life. Those who deny this, must say that the Spirit of God either cannot or will not do it ; or, that the blood of Christ cannot cleanse from all unrighteousness. And this would be not only anti-scriptural, but also blasphemous.

11. Being filled with the fruits of righteousness By righteousness we may understand here, the whole work of the Spirit of God in the soul of a believer ; and by the fruits of righteousness, all holy tempers, holy words, and right actions. And with these they are to be filled, πληρωσάμενοι, filled up, filled full ; the whole soul and life occupied with them ; ever doing something by which glory is brought to God, or good done to man.

By Jesus Christ] That is, according to his doctrine, through the power of his grace, and by the agency of his Spirit.

Unto the glory and praise of God] God being honoured when the work of his grace thus appears to men in the fruits of righteousness ; and God is praised by all the faithful when his work thus appears. Every genuine follower of God has his glory in view by all that he does, says, or intends. He loves to glorify God, and he glorifies him by showing forth in his conversion, the glorious working of the glorious power of the Lord.

12. That the things which happened unto me St. Paul was at this time a prisoner at Rome : and it appears probable that he had already been called to make a defence for himself, and to vindicate the doctrines of the Gospel ; and this he had been enabled to do in such a manner that the honour of the Gospel had been greatly promoted by it. As the Philippians loved him greatly, he felt it right to give them this information relative to his state ; and how God had turned his bonds to the advantage of that cause on account of which he was bound.

13. My bonds—are manifest in all the palace In consequence of the public defence which he was obliged to make, his doctrines must be fully known in the court, and throughout the whole city ; as on his trial he would necessarily explain the whole. The prætorium, ποταριον, which we here translate palace, signifies the court where causes were heard and judged by the prætor, or civil magistrate ; it sometimes signifies the general's tent, and at others, the emperor's palace. It is supposed that it is used in this latter sense here.

There were, no doubt, persons belonging to the emperor's household who would bring the news of so remarkable a case to the palace ; for we find that there were Christians even in Cesar's household, ch. iv. 22.

14. Waxing confident Finding the effect produced by the public defence which the apostle made, they were greatly encouraged, and the more boldly and openly proclaimed the doctrine of Christ crucified.

The word The doctrine of Christ ; several excellent MSS. and Versions, add, some Θεου, others Κυρίου, the word of God, or the word of the Lord. This is a respectable reading, and is probably genuine.

15. Some—preach Christ even of envy and strife These must have been the Judaizing teachers, who insisted on the necessity of connecting the Mosaic rites with the Christian institutions ; and probably denounced Paul to the Jews dwelling at Rome, as not only an enemy to the law and the prophets, but also as a very imperfect Christian, because he declared strongly against the doctrine of circumcision, &c. and no doubt endeavoured to prejudice him with the heathen Romans.

Some also of good will Some, through mere benevolence to the apostle, both espoused his doctrine, and vindicated his cause.

16. Preach Christ of contention The Judaizing teachers ;—they also preach Christ ; they acknowledge that Jesus is the Christ, or promised Messiah, and preach him as such.

Not sincerely Οὐκ ἀγνως ; not chastely, garbling the Gospel ; not speaking the whole truth, but just what served their purpose ; and at the same time they denounced the apostle as an enemy to the Divine institutions, because he spoke against circumcision.

17. The other of love Through a sincere desire, not only to make known the way of salvation to the people ; but also to vindicate and help the apostle, because they considered him tence, or in truth, Christ is preached ; and I therein do rejoice, yea, and will rejoice.

19 For I know that this shall turn to my salvation * through your prayer, and the supply of * the Spirit of Jesus Christ, 20 According to my * earnest expectation and my hope, that in nothing I shall be ashamed ; but that * with all boldness, as always, so now also, Christ shall be magnified in my body, whether it be by life or by death.

21 For to me to live is Christ and to die is gain.

22 But if I live in the flesh, this is the fruit of my labour : yet what I shall choose I wot not.

23 For * I am in a strait betwixt two, having a desire to a depart, and to be with Christ ; which is far better :

24 Nevertheless to abide in the flesh is more needful for you.

25 And * having this confidence, I know that I shall abide and continue with you all for your furtherance and joy of faith :

26 That * your rejoicing may be more abundant In Jesus Christ for me by my coming to you again.

as appointed by God to preach and defend the Gospel. The 16th and 17th verses are transposed by ABDEFG, and several others: the Syriac, Arabic of Erpen, Coptic, Sahidic, Ethiopic, Armenian, Vulgate, Italia, and several of the others. On this evidence Griesbach transposes them in his edition.

13. What then ? It is a matter of little importance to me how Christ is preached, provided he be preached. I rejoice that any thing is known of him ; and am truly glad that the Gospel is even made partially known, for this will lead to farther inquiries, and in the end be of service to the truth.

13. This shall turn to my salvation That is, it will be the means of my temporal safety : of my deliverance ; for so the word σωτηρια, is here to be understood. The Jews had denounced the apostle as an enemy to Cesar ; but he knew that when the nature of the Gospel should be fully known, the Romans would see that he could be no enemy to Cesar, who proclaimed a prince whose kingdom was not of this world ; and who had taught in the most unequivocal manner, that all Christians were to give tribute to whom tribute was due ; and while they feared God, to honour also the king ; though that king was Nero.

Through your prayer] Knowing them to be genuine followers of Christ, he was satisfied that their prayers would be very available in his behalf ; and under God, he places much dependence upon them.

The supply of the spirit of Jesus Christ] The word παισχυνη, which we translate supply, signifies also furnishing whatever is necessary ; the Spirit of God he expected to help all his infirmities, and to furnish him with all the wisdom, prudence, strength of reason, and argument, which might be necessary for him in the different trials he had to pass through with his persecutors, and the civil powers, at whose judgment seat he stood.

20. Earnest expectation He had the most confident expectation that God would stand by him, so that he should be enabled, with the utmost liberty of speech, εὐ ταν παρρησια, to testify the Gospel of the grace of God ; and should he have the liberty of doing so, he was perfectly regardless what the issue might be relative to himself. Whether life or death, was to him perfectly equal and perfectly indifferent, providing Christ were magnified ; his person, nature, doctrine, &c. shown to be what they really are, most noble, most excellent, most necessary, and most glorious.

21. For to me to live is Christ Whether I live or die, Christ is gain to me. While I live I am Christ's property and servant, and Christ is my portion ; if I die, if I be called to witness the truth at the expense of my life, this will be gain ; I shall be saved from the remaining troubles and difficulties in life, and be put immediately in possession of my heavenly inheritance. As, therefore, it respects myself, it is a matter of perfect indifference to me whether I be taken off by a violent death, or whether I be permitted to continue here longer : in either case I can lose nothing.

22. But if I live in the flesh Should I be spared longer, I shall labour for Christ as I have done ; and this is the fruit of my labours, that Christ shall be magnified by my longer life, ver. 20.

Yet what I shall choose I wot not] Had I the two conditions left to my own choice, whether to die now, and go to glory ; or, whether to live longer in persecutions and affliction, (glorifying Christ by spreading the Gospel,) I could not tell which to prefer.

23. For I am in a strait betwixt two Viz. the dying now, and being immediately with God ; or living longer to preach and spread the Gospel, and thus glorify Christ among men.

Having a desire to depart and be with Christ] Τὴν ἐπιθυμιαν εἶχον εἰς το ἀναβατει—It appears to be a metaphor, taken from the commander of a vessel, in a foreign port, who feels a strong desire, ἀναβατει, to set sail, and get to his own country and family ; but this desire is counterbalanced by a conviction that the general interests of the voyage may be best answered by his longer stay in the port where his vessel now rides : for, he is not in dock, he is not aground, but rides at anchor in the port, and may any hour weigh and be gone. Such was the condition of the apostle ; he was not at home ; but

27 Only ^a let your conversation be as it becometh the Gospel of Christ; that whether I come and see you, or else be absent I may hear of your affairs, ^c that ye stand fast in one spirit ^d with one mind ^e striving together for the faith of the Gospel;

28 And in nothing terrified by your adversaries: ^a which is ^q Eph. 4.1. Col. 1.10. 1 Thess. 2.12 & 4.1.—^r Chap. 4.1.—^s 1 Cor. 1.10.—^t Jude 3.—^u 2 Thess. 1.5.

although he was abroad, it was on his Employer's business: he wishes to return, and is cleared out and ready to set sail; but he has not received his last orders from his owner: and whatever desire he may feel to be at home, he will faithfully wait till his final orders arrive.

Which is far better) Πολλοῦ—μαλλον κρεισσον: multo magis melior, Vulgate; much more better. The reader will at once see, that the words are very emphatic.

21. To abide in the flesh) It would certainly be gain to myself to die; but it will be a gain to you if I live. If I die, I shall go immediately to glory: if I live, I shall continue to minister to you, and strengthen you in the faith.

25. Having this confidence, I know that I shall abide] Convinced that it is necessary that I should live longer, for the spreading and defence of the Gospel, I am persuaded that I shall now be liberated. This was, in fact, the case; for after having been two years in bonds at Rome, he was released.

For your furtherance] In the way of righteousness. And joy of faith] And happiness in that way. The farther a man proceeds in the way of truth, the stronger his faith will be; and the stronger his faith, the greater his joy or happiness.

26. That your rejoicing may be more abundant] Men rejoice more in recovering a thing that was lost, than they do in the continual possession of what is of much greater value.

27. Let your conversation be as it becometh the Gospel.] The apostle considers the church at Philippi as a free or imperial city, which possesses great honours, dignities, and privileges; and he exhorts them to act, anthonly or suitably to these honours and privileges. This is the idea that is expressed by the word παρεσβεω, act according to the nature of your political situation; the citizenship and privileges which you possess in consequence of your being free inhabitants of Christ's imperial city, the church. The apostle resumes the same metaphor, chap. iii. 20, νηυν—το πολιτευμα εν ουρανω παρχει; for our citizenship is in heaven; but in this last verse he puts heaven in the place of the church; and this is all right; for he who is not a member of the church of Christ on earth, can have no right to the kingdom of heaven: and he who does not walk anthonly of the gospel of Christ, cannot be counted worthy to enter through the gates into the city of the Eternal King.

Whether I come and see you] Leaving the matter still in doubt as to them, whether he should again visit them.

In one spirit] Being all of one mind under the influence of the Holy Ghost.

Striving together) Συναθλοντες; wrestling together, not to them an evident token of perdition, & but to you of salvation, and that of God.

29 For unto you ^a it is given in the behalf of Christ ^b not only to believe on him, but also to suffer for his sake;

30 ^c Having the same conflict ^d which ye saw in me, and now hear to be in me.

v Rom. 8.17. 2 Tim. 2.11.—w Acts 5.41. Rom. 5.3.—x Ephes. 2.8.—y Col. 2.1.—z Acts 16.19, &c. 1 Thess. 2.2.

in contention with each other; but in union against the enemies of the Gospel faith; the doctrine of Christ crucified, and freedom from all Mosaic rites and ceremonies, as well as from sin and perdition, through his passion and sacrifice.

23. In nothing terrified by your adversaries] So it appears that the church at Philippi was then under persecution.

Which is to them) ἡτις αυτοις εστιν; some very judicious critics consider ἡτις, as referring to πιστις, the faith of the Gospel, which they, the heathen, considered to be a token of perdition to all them who embraced it; but, as the apostle says, it was to them, the Philippians, on the contrary, the most evident token of salvation: for, having embraced the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ, they were incontestably in the way to eternal blessedness.

29. Unto you it is given in the behalf of Christ.] ὑμιν εχωρισθῃ; to you it is graciously given; it is no small privilege that God has so far honoured you, as to permit you to suffer on Christ's account. It is only his most faithful servants that he thus honours. Be not therefore terrified by your enemies: they can do nothing to you, which God will not turn to your eternal advantage. We learn from this that it is as great a privilege to suffer for Christ, as to believe on him: and the former in certain cases, (as far as the latter, in all cases,) becomes the means of salvation to them who are thus exercised.

30. Having the same conflict] When Paul preached the Gospel at Philippi, he was grievously persecuted, as we learn from Acts, chap. xvi. 19—40 being stripped, scourged, thrown into prison, even into the dungeon, and his feet made fast in the stocks. This was the conflict he had seen in him: and now they heard that he had been sent prisoner to Rome as an evil doer; and that he was at present in bonds, and shortly to be tried for his life before the Roman emperor, to whom he had been obliged to appeal.

1. It was no small encouragement to these persons, 1. That whatever sufferings they met with, they were supported under them. 2. That they suffered in the same cause in which their illustrious apostle was suffering. 3. That they suffered, not because they had done any evil or could be accused of any; but because they believed in the Son of God, who died for them and for all mankind. 4. That all these sufferings were sanctified to their eternal good.

2. And God is able to make the same grace abound towards us in like circumstances: it is for this purpose that such consolatory portions are left on record. He who is persecuted or afflicted for Christ's sake, is most eminently honoured by his Creator.

CHAPTER II.

The apostle beseeches them, by various considerations, to live in unity and in the spirit of the Gospel, loving each other; and each to prefer his brother to himself, 1—4. He exhorts them to be like-minded with Christ, who, though in the form of God, and equal with God, made himself of no reputation, and humbled himself to the death of the cross, for the salvation of man; in consequence of which he was highly exalted, and had a name above every name; to whose authority every knee should bow, and whose glory every tongue should acknowledge, 5—11. They are exhorted to work out their own salvation, through his power who works in them; that they may be blameless, and that the apostle's labour may not be in vain, 12—16. He expresses his readiness to offer his life for the Gospel, 17, 18. Intends to send Timothy to them, of whom he gives a very high character; yet hopes to see them himself shortly, 19—21. In the mean time, he sends Epaphroditus, who had been near death, and whom he begs them to receive with especial tenderness, 22—30. [A. M. cir. 4006. A. D. cir. 62. A. U. C. 814. An. Imp. NOTES.—Verse 1. If there be therefore any consolation] The et, does not express any doubt here, but on the contrary is to be considered as a strong affirmation; as there is consolation in Christ; as there is comfort of love, &c.

The word παράκλησις, translated here consolation, is in other places rendered exhortation; and is by several critics understood so here: as if he had said, If exhorting you in the name of Christ have any influence with you, &c. It is extremely difficult to give the force of these expressions; they contain a torrent of the most affecting eloquence, the apostle pouring out his whole heart to a people, whom with all his heart he loved; and who were worthy of the love, even of an apostle.

If any comfort of love.] If the followers of Christ, by giving proofs of their ardent love to each other, in cases of distress, alleviate the sufferings of the persecuted:—

If any fellowship of the Spirit] If there be an intimate relation established among all Christians, by their being made mutual partakers of the Holy Ghost:—

If any bowels and mercies] If you, as persons whom I have brought to God at the hazard of my life, feel sympathetic tenderness for me, now, in a farther state of suffering.

3 ^c Let nothing be done through strife or vain-glory; but ^d in lowliness of mind let each esteem other better than themselves

4 ^e Look not every man on his own things, but every man also on the things of others.

5 ^f Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus

2. Fulfill ye my joy] Ye ought to complete my joy, who have suffered so much to bring you into the possession of these blessings, by being like-minded with myself, having the same love to God, his cause, and me, as I have to him, his cause, and you.

Being of one accord] Being perfectly agreed in labouring to promote the honour of your Master; and of one mind, being constantly intent upon this great subject; keeping your eye fixed upon it, in all you say, do, or intend.

3. Let nothing be done through strife] Never be opposed to each other; never act from separate interests; ye are all brethren, and of one body; therefore let every member feel and labour for the welfare of the whole. And in the exercise of your different functions, and in the use of your various gifts, do nothing so as to promote your own reputation, separately considered from the comfort, honour, and advantage of all.

But in lowliness of mind] Have always an humbling view of yourselves, and this will lead you to prefer others to yourselves; for as you know your own secret defects, charity will lead you to suppose that your brethren are more holy, and more devoted to God than you are; and they will think the same of you: their secret defects, as being known only to themselves.

6 Who, being in the form of God, thought it not robbery to be equal with God;

7 But made himself of no reputation, and took upon him the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of men:

8 And being found in fashion as a man, he humbled himself, and obeyed unto death, even the death of the cross.

4. Look not every man on his own things. Do nothing through self-interest, in the things of God; nor arrogate to yourselves gifts, graces, and fruits which belong to others: ye are all called to promote God's glory, and the salvation of men. Labour for this; and every one shall receive the honour that comes from God: and let each rejoice to see another, whom God may be pleased to use in a special way, acquiring much reputation by the successful application of his talents to the great work.

5. Let this mind be in you which was also in Christ Jesus. Christ laboured to promote no separate interest; as man, he studied to promote the glory of God, and the welfare and salvation of the human race. See, then, that ye have the same disposition that was in Jesus: he was ever humble, loving, patient, and laborious; his meat and drink was to do the will of his Father, and to finish his work.

6. Who, being in the form of God. This verse has been the subject of much criticism, and some controversy. Dr. Whitby has, perhaps, on the whole, spoken best on this point; but his arguments are too diffuse to be admitted here. Dr. Macknight has abridged the works of Dr. Whitby, and properly observes, that "as the apostle is speaking of what Christ was before he took the form of a servant; the form of God, of which he divested himself when he became man, cannot be any thing which he possessed during his incarnation, or in his divested state; consequently, neither the opinion of Erasmus, that the form of God consisted in those sparks of Divinity by which Christ, during his incarnation, manifested his Godhead; nor the opinion of the Socinians, that it consisted in the power of working miracles, is well founded: for Christ did not divest himself either of one or the other, but possessed both all the time of his public ministry. In like manner, the opinion of those who, by the form of God, understand the Divine Nature, and the government of the world, cannot be admitted; since Christ, when he became man, could not divest himself of the nature of God: and with respect to the government of the world, we are led, by what the apostle tells us, Heb. i. 3. to believe that he did not part with even that; but, in his divested state, still continued to uphold all things by the word of his power. By the form of God, we are rather to understand that visible glorious light in which the Deity is said to dwell, 1 Tim. vi. 16. and by which he manifested himself to the patriarchs of old, Dent. v. 22, 21. which was commonly ascribed to a numerous retinue of angels, Psal. lxxvii. 17. and which in scripture is called the Shekinah, Num. xii. 8. The Shekinah, Psal. xxxi. 16. The Presence, Ezech. xxxiii. 15. and The Shape of God, John v. 37. This interpretation is supported by the term μορφή, form, here used, which signifies a person's external shape or appearance, and not his nature or essence. Thus we are told, Mark xvi. 12. that Jesus appeared to his disciples in another, μορφή, shape or form. And Matt. xvii. 2. μεταμορφωθὼν, he was transfigured before them; his outward appearance or form was changed. Further, this interpretation agrees with the fact: the form of God, that is, his visible glory, and the attendance of angels, as above described, the Son of God enjoyed with his Father before the world was, John xvii. 5. and on that, as on other accounts, he is the brightness of the Father's glory, Heb. i. 3. Of this he divested himself when he became flesh; but having resumed it after his ascension, he will come with it in the human nature to judge the world; so he told his disciples, Matt. xvi. 27. For the Son of man will come in the glory of his Father, with his angels, &c. Lastly, this sense of μορφή Θεοῦ is confirmed by the meaning of μορφή δουλοῦ, ver. 7. which evidently denotes the appearance and behaviour of a servant or bondman; and not the essence of such a person." See Whitby and Macknight.

Thought it not robbery to be equal with God. If we take these words as they stand here, their meaning is, that as he was from the beginning in the same infinite glory with the Father; to appear in time during his humiliation, as God and equal with the Father, was no encroachment on the Divine prerogative; for, as he had an equality of nature, he had an equality of rights.

But the word ἀπαυτῶν, which we translate robbery, has been supposed to imply a thing eagerly to be seized, coveted, or desired; and on this interpretation, the passage has been translated, who being in the form of God, did not think it matter to be earnestly desired, to appear equal to God; but made himself of no reputation, &c. However the word be translated, it does not affect the eternal Deity of our Lord. Though he was from eternity in the form of God, possessed of the same glory; yet he thought it right to relinquish this glory, and not to appear with it among the children of men; and therefore he was made in the likeness of men, and took upon him the form or appearance of a servant; and had he retained the appearance of this ineffable glory, it would, in many respects, have prevented him from accomplishing the work which God

9 Wherefore God also hath highly exalted him, and given him a name which is above every name:

10 That at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of things in heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth;

11 And that every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father.

gave him to do; and his humiliation, as necessary to the salvation of men, could not have been complete. On this account, I prefer this sense of the word ἀπαυτῶν, before that given in our text; which does not agree so well with the other expressions in the context. In this sense the word is used by Heliodorus, in his Ethiopes, lib. vii. cap. 19. &c. which passage Whitby has produced, and on which he has given a considerable phrase. The reader who wishes to examine this subject more particularly, may have recourse to Heliodorus as above; or to the notes of Dr. Whitby on the passage.

7. But made himself of no reputation. ἑαυτὸν ἐκενότα; he emptied himself; did not appear in this glory, for he assumed the form of a servant, being made in the likeness of man. And his being made in the likeness of man, and assuming the form of a servant, was a proof that he had emptied himself, and aside the effulgence of his glory.

8. And being found in fashion as a man. καὶ ὡς ἀνθρώπου ἐκείνης ὡς ἀνθρώπου. This clause should be joined to the preceding, and thus translated:—being made in the likeness of man, and was found in fashion as a man.

He humbled himself. Laid himself as low as possible:

1. In emptying himself; laying aside the effulgence of his glory. 2. In being incarnate, taking upon him the human form. 3. In becoming a servant, assuming the lowest innocent character, that of being the servant of all. 4. In condescending to die, to which he was not naturally liable, as having never sinned; and therefore had a right in his human nature, to immortality, without passing under the empire of death. 5. In condescending not only to death, but to the lowest and most ignominious kind of death; the death of the cross: the punishment of the meanest of slaves, and worst of felons. What must sin have been in the sight of God, when it required such abasement in Jesus Christ to make an atonement for it, and undo its influence and malignity!

9. Wherefore God also hath highly exalted him. If by his humiliation he has merited pardon and final salvation for the whole world: is it to be wondered that the human body in which this fullness of the Godhead dwelt, and in which the punishment due to our sins was borne upon the tree: should be exalted above all human and all created beings? And this is the fact; for he hath given him a name, το ὄνομα, the Name, which is above every name: so is prefixed to εὐαγγέλιον, 17. Ὁρίζων, Δεσπότης, Alexandrinus, Eusebius, Cyprian, and Procopius. This makes it much more emphatic. According to Eph. i. 20, 21. the man Christ Jesus, is exalted to the right hand of God, far above all principality, and power, and might, and dominion, and every name that is named, not only in this world, but also in that which is to come. From which it appears, that no creature of God is so far exalted, and so glorious, as the man Christ Jesus; human nature being, in him, dignified infinitely beyond the angelic nature; and that this nature has authority and pre-eminence which no being either in heaven or earth enjoys. In a word, as man was, in the beginning, at the head of all the creatures of God; Jesus Christ, by assuming human nature, suffering and dying in it, has raised it to its pristine state. And this is probably what is here meant by this high exaltation of Christ, and giving him a name which is above every name. But if we refer to any particular epithet, then the name JESUS or Saviour must be that which is intended; as no being either in heaven or earth can possess this name, as He who is the Redeemer of the world does; for He is the only Saviour, none has or could redeem us to God but He; and throughout eternity he will ever appear as the sole Saviour of the human race. Hence, before his birth, Gabriel stated, that his name should be called JESUS, giving for reason, he shall save his people from their sins. The qualifications of the Saviour of the world were so extraordinary, the redeeming acts so stupendous, and the result of all so glorious both to God and man; that it is impossible to conceive a higher name or title than that of JESUS, or Saviour of the world.

10. That at the name of Jesus every knee should bow. That all human beings should consider themselves redeemed unto God by his blood; and look for an application of this redemption price; and that all who are saved from their sins should acknowledge him the author of their salvation. In a word, that πᾶν κτίσματος, all the spirits of just men made perfect, now in a state of blessedness:—καὶ ἐν ὕψι, all human beings still in their state of probation on earth:—καὶ κτὰς θανάτου, and all that are in the shades below, who have, through their own fault, died without having received his salvation, should acknowledge him.

11. And that every tongue should confess. That all those before-mentioned should acknowledge that Jesus Christ is Lord, or absolute sovereign, and thus glorify God the Father, who has exalted this human nature to this state of ineffable glory, in virtue of its passion, death, resurrection, and the atonement which it has made; by which so many attributes of the Divine nature have become illustrated, the Divine law magnified and made honourable, and an eternal glory provided for man.

Others, by things in heaven, understand the holy angels; by things on earth, human beings generally; and by things under the earth, fallen spirits of every description. Perhaps the three expressions are designed to comprehend all beings, of all kinds; all creatures; as it is usual with the Hebrews, and indeed with all ancient nations to express by things in heaven, things on earth, and things under the earth, all beings of all kinds; universal nature. See similar forms of speech, Exodus xx. 4. Deut. iv. 17, 18. Psal. xcvi. 11. and Ezek. xxxviii. 20. But intelligent beings seem to be those which are chiefly intended by the words of the apostle; for, it appears that nothing less than absolute rule over angels, men, and devils, can be designed in these extraordinary words; and by confessing him to be Lord, we may understand that worship which all intelligent creatures are called to pay to God manifested in the flesh: for all should honour the Son even as they honour the Father. And the worship thus offered is to the glory of God: so that far from being idolatrous, as some have rashly asserted, it is to the honour of the Divine Being. We may add, that the tongue which does not confess thus, is a tongue that dishonours the Almighty.

12. As ye have always obeyed.] Continue to act on the same principles, and from the same motives: having the same disposition which was in Christ; labouring so as to promote his glory.

Work out your own salvation.] Go on, walking by the same rule, and minding the same thing, till your salvation be completed: till, filled with love to God and man, ye walk unblameably in all his testimonies, having your fruit unto holiness, and your end everlasting life.

With fear and trembling.] Considering the difficulty of the work, and the danger of miscarriage. If you do not watch, pray, and continually depend on God, your enemies will surprise you; and your light and life will become extinct: and then, consider what an awful account you must give to Him whose spirit ye have grieved; and of whose glory ye have come short.

13. For it is God which worketh in you.] Every holy purpose, pious resolution, good word, and good work, must come from him; ye must be workers together with him, that ye receive not his grace in vain, because he worketh in you; therefore work with him, and work out your own salvation.

To will and to do.] Το θελειν και το ετοιμα. The power to will, and the power to act, must necessarily come from God, who is the author both of the soul and body, and of all their powers and energies; but the act of volition, and the act of working, come from the man. God gives power to will; man wills through that power; God gives power to act; and man acts through that power. Without the power to will, man can will nothing: without the power to work, man can do nothing. God neither wills for man, nor works in man's stead; but he furnishes him with power to do both: he is therefore accountable to God for these powers.

Because God works in them the power to will and the power to do; therefore the apostle exhorts them to work out their own salvation: most manifestly showing, that the use of the powers of volition and action belongs to themselves. They cannot do God's work; they cannot produce in themselves a power to will and to do; and God will not do their work: he will not work out their salvation with fear and trembling.

Though men have grievously puzzled themselves with questions relative to the will and power of the human being; yet no case can be plainer than that which the apostle lays down here: the power to will and do comes from God: the use of that power belongs to man. He that has not got this power, can neither will nor work: he that has this power can do both. But it does not necessarily follow, that he who has these powers will use them: the possession of the power does not necessarily imply the use of those powers; because a man might have them, and not use, or abuse them; therefore the apostle exhorts, work out your own salvation.

This is a general exhortation; it may be applied to all men; for to all it is applicable, there not being a rational being on the face of the earth, who has not from God both power to will and act in the things which concern his salvation. Hence the accountableness of man.

Of his good pleasure.] Every good is freely given of God: 256

15 For the same cause also do ye joy, and rejoice with me.

19 ^aBut I trust in the Lord Jesus to send ^aTimotheus shortly unto you, that I also may be of good comfort, when I know your state.

22 But ye know the proof of him, ^athat as a son with the father, he hath served with me in the Gospel.

23 Him therefore I hope to send presently, so soon as I shall see how it will go with me.

24 But ^aI trust in the Lord that I also myself shall come shortly.

no man deserves any thing from him; and as it pleases him, so he deals out to man those measures of mental and corporeal energy which he sees to be necessary; giving to some more, to others less; but to all what is sufficient for their salvation.

14. Do all things without murmurings.] Τω ὑποταγῶν, και ἐπαλογασθῶν. without grumbings and alterations. Be patient in, and associated with, your work; and see that ye fail not out by the way.

15. That ye may be blameless.] In yourselves, and harmless to others.

The sons of God.] Showing by your holy conduct that ye are partakers of the Divine nature.

Without rebuke.] Persons against whom no charge of transgression can justly be laid.

A crooked and perverse.] Probably referring to the Jews, who were the chief opponents, and the most virulent enemies which the Christian church had.

Among whom ye shine.] Be like the sun and moon; bless even the perverse and disobedient by your light and splendour. Let your light shine before men; some will walk in that light; and by its shining God will be glorified. It is evident that the apostle by φασην εν κοσμῳ, lights in the world, refers to the sun and moon particularly; and perhaps to the heavenly bodies in general.

16. Holding forth the word of life.] An allusion, some think, to those towers which were built at the entrance of harbours, on which fires were kept during the night, to direct ships into the port. Genuine Christians, by their holy lives and conversation, are the means of directing others, not only how to escape those dangers to which they are exposed on the tempestuous ocean of human life; but also of leading them into the haven of eternal safety and rest.

That I have not run in vain.] This appears to be a part of the same metaphor; and alludes to the case of a weather-beaten mariner, who has been long tossed on a tempestuous sea, in hazy weather and dark nights; who has been obliged to run on different tacks, and labour intensely to keep his ship from foundering; but is, at last, by the assistance of the luminous fire on the top of the tower, directed safely into port. Live so to glorify God and do good to men, that it shall appear that I have not run and laboured in vain for your salvation.

17. Yea, and if I be offered upon the sacrifice and service.] The metaphor appears to be still carried on. As it was customary for the weather-beaten mariner, when he had gained his port to offer a sacrifice, θυσια, to God, of some particular animal which he had vowed while in his state of danger; and this was considered to be a religious service, λειτουργια: the apostle, pursuing the idea, states himself to be willing to become the libation (or so much the word προειδοιαι imports) that was to be poured upon the sacrifice. Parkhurst observes that the apostle compares the faith of the Philippians to the sacrificial victim, and his own blood shed in martyrdom to the libation, i. e. the wine poured out on occasion of the sacrifice. Rappellus observes, that Arrian uses the phrase σπινθηρ εν θυρία for pouring out the libation after the sacrifice. The apostle had guided them safely into port; their faith in the atoning death of Christ was their sacrifice; and he was willing that his blood in martyrdom, should be poured out as a libation on that sacrificial offering.

18. For the same cause also do ye joy.] Should I be thus offered, as I shall rejoice in it, do ye also rejoice that I am counted worthy of this high honour.

19. But I trust in the Lord Jesus.] He is governor and disposer of all events, being above all principality and power; and I humbly confide in his power and goodness that I shall be a little longer spared to visit you again, ver. 24. and to be able to send Timothy shortly to you.

When I know your state.] By the correct information which I shall receive from Timothy.

20. For I have no man like-minded.] None of all my fellow-helpers in the Gospel have the same zeal and affectionate concern for your prosperity in every respect as he has. He is εὐαγγελιστης, of the same soul; a man after my own heart.

21. For all seek their own.] This must relate to the persons who preached Christ even of envy and strife, chap. i. 15. These must be very careless whether souls were saved or not by such preaching; and even those who preached the Gospel out of good will, might not be fit for such an embassy as this,

25 Yet I supposed it necessary to send to you ¹ Epaphroditus, my brother, and companion in labour, and ² fellow-soldier, ³ but your messenger, and ⁴ he that ministered to my wants.

26 ⁵ For he longed after you all, and was full of heaviness, because that ye had heard that he had been sick.

27 For indeed he was sick nigh unto death: but God had mercy on him; and not on him only, but on me also, lest I should have sorrow upon sorrow.

which required many sacrifices; and consequently, much love and zeal to be able to make them.

22. Ye know the proof of him, that as a son with the father, he hath served with me. The Philippians had full proof of the affectionate attachment of Timothy to Paul; for he had laboured with him there, as we learn from Acts xvi. 1—3. and xvi. 14. and we find from what is said here, that Timothy was not a servant to the apostle, but that he had served with him. They both laboured together in the word and doctrine: for apostles and Christian bishops, in those times, laboured as hard as their deacons. There were no sinecures; every one was a labourer; every labourer had his work; and every workman had his recesses.

23. How it will go with me. The apostle was now in captivity; his trial appears to have been approaching, and of its issue he was doubtful; though he seems to have had a general persuasion that he should be spared. See v. 19. and v. 21.

25. Epaphroditus, my brother, &c. Here is a very high character of this minister of Christ: he was, 1. A brother, one of the Christian family; a thorough convert to God; without which he could not have been a preacher of the Gospel. 2. He was a companion in labour: he laboured, and laboured in union with the apostle in this great work. 3. He was a fellow-soldier; the work was a work of difficulty and danger; they were obliged to maintain a continual warfare, fighting against the world, the devil, and the flesh. 4. He was their apostle: a man whom God had honoured with apostolical gifts, apostolical graces, and apostolical fruits: and 5. He was an affectionate friend to the apostle; knew his soul in adversity, acknowledged him in prison, and contributed to his comfort and support.

26. Ye had heard that he had been sick. "In this passage," says Dr. Paley, "no intimation is given, that the recovery of Epaphroditus was miraculous; it is plainly spoken of as a natural event. This instance, together with that in the second Epistle to Timothy, Trophimus have I left at Miletum sick, affords a proof that the power of performing cures, and by pity of reason, of working other miracles, was a power which only visited the apostles occasionally; and did not at all depend upon their own will. Paul undoubtedly would have healed Epaphroditus, if he could; nor would he have left Trophimus at Miletum sick, had the power of working cures awaited his disposal. Had this epistle been a forgery, forgery on this occasion would not have spared a miracle: much less would it have introduced St. Paul professing the utmost anxiety for the safety of his friend, yet acknowledging himself unable to help him; which he does almost expressly in the case of Trophimus; him have I left sick; and virtually in the passage before us, in which he felicitates himself on the recovery of Epaphroditus in terms which almost exclude the supposition of any supernatural means being used to effect it. This is a reverse, which nothing but truth would have imposed."—Horæ Paulinæ, pag. 231.

27. Lest I should have sorrow upon sorrow. The sorrows of his death, added to the sorrow he endured on account of his sickness; or, he may refer to his own state of affliction, being imprisoned and maltreated.

28. The more carefully. Συνεπαρεσβεος; With the more

23 I sent him therefore the more carefully, that when ye see him again, ye may rejoice, and that I may be the less sorrowful.

29 Receive him therefore in the Lord with all gladness; and hold ¹ such in reputation:

30 Because for the work of Christ he was nigh unto death, not regarding his life, ² to supply your lack of service toward me.

haste, or despatch; because, having suffered so much on account of his apprehended death, they could not be too soon comforted by seeing him alive and restored.

29. Receive him therefore in the Lord. For the Lord's sake receive him, and as the Lord's servant; and hold such zealous, disinterested, and holy preachers, in reputation; honour those whom ye perceive God hath honoured.

30. For the work of Christ. Preaching the Gospel, and ministering to the distressed.

He was nigh unto death. Having laboured far beyond his strength.

Not regarding his life. Instead of παροδεδωκεν τὴν ψυχὴν, not regarding his life: παροδεδωκεν, risking his life, is the reading of ABDEFG and is received by Griesbach into the text. His frequent and intense preaching, and labouring to supply the apostle's wants, appear to have brought him nigh to the gates of death.

The humiliation and exaltation of Christ are subjects which we cannot contemplate too frequently; and in which we cannot be too deeply instructed.

1. God destroys opposites by opposites; through pride and self-confidence man fell; and it required the humiliation of Christ to destroy that pride and self-confidence, and to raise him from his fall. There must be an indescribable malignity in sin, when it required the depest abasement of the highest Being to remove and destroy it. The humiliation and passion of Christ were not accidental; they were absolutely necessary; and had they not been necessary, they had not taken place. Sinner, behold him that cost the Son of God to save thee! And wilt thou, after considering this, imagine that sin is a small thing? Without the humiliation and sacrifice of Christ, even thy soul could not be saved. Slight not, therefore, the mercies of thy God, by underestimating the guilt of thy transgressions, and the malignity of thy sin.

2. As we cannot contemplate the humiliation and death of Christ without considering it a sufficient sacrifice, atonement, and atonement for sin, and for the sin of the whole world; so we cannot contemplate his unlimited power and glory in his state of exaltation without being convinced that he is able to save them to the uttermost that come unto God through him. What can withstand the merit of his blood? What can resist the energy of his omnipotence? Can the power of sin—its infection—its malignity? No! He can as easily say to an impure heart, Be thou clean, and it shall be clean, as he could to the leper, Be thou clean, and immediately his leprosy was cleansed. Reader, have faith in Him: for all things are possible to him that believeth.

3. There are many ungodly men in the world, who deny the inspiration of God's Holy Spirit, and affect to ridicule those who profess to have received, what they know Christ has purchased, and God has promised; and which, in virtue of this, they have claimed by faith; because, say these mockers, "If you had the Spirit of God, you could work miracles: show us a miracle, and we will believe you to be inspired." Will these persons assert that St. Paul did not God's Spirit, when he could neither heal himself, nor restore his friends and fellow-helpers from apparent death?—What then, doth their arguing prove? Silly men, of shallow minds.

CHAPTER III.

The apostle exhorts the Philippians to rejoice in the Lord. 1. And to beware of false teachers, 2. Shows that Christians are the true circumcision, who worship God in the Spirit, 3. And that himself had more reason to trust in the flesh than any of the Jews, 4—6. But that he counted all things loss for Christ, 7—11. He longs after a conformity to Christ in his death, and presses onward to the attainment of his high-calling, 12—14. Exhorts them to be like minded, 15—17. Warns them against certain persons who were enemies to the cross of Christ, 18, 19. Shows the nature of their heavenly privileges, and the resurrection and glorification of the human body, 20, 21. NOTES.—Verse 1. Rejoice in the Lord. Be always happy; but let that happiness be such as you derive from the Lord.

To write the same things. He means those which he had formerly preached to them, or to other churches: for he had but one Gospel: and we may rest assured that the doctrine of this epistle was the same with his preaching.

For you it is safe. It is much better to have these Divine things committed to writing, than confided to memory. By the latter, they may be either lost or corrupted; by the former, they will be preserved.

Beware of dogs. The Jews, who have here the same appellation which they formerly gave to the Gentiles; because the Gentiles were not included in the covenant, they called them dogs; and themselves, the children of the Most High. Now, they are cast out of the covenant, and the Gentiles taken in; therefore, they are the dogs, and the Gentiles the children.

Evil workers. Judaizing teachers, who endeavoured to pervert the Gospel.

The concision. Καρατὸν, the cutting, or excision: not περιτομήν, the circumcision: the word is used by the apostle to degrade the pretensions which the Jews made to sanctity by the cutting in their flesh. Circumcision was an honourable thing, for it was a sign of the covenant; but as they now had rejected the new covenant, their circumcision was rendered uncircumcision, and is termed a cutting, by way of degradation.

3. We are the circumcision] We, who have embraced the faith of Christ crucified, are now entered into the new covenant; and, according to that new covenant, worship God in the Spirit, exulting, καυχόμενοι, making our boast of Christ Jesus, as our only Saviour; having no confidence in the flesh, in any outward rite or ceremony, prescribed by the Jewish institutions.

4. Though I might also have confidence If any of them have any cause to boast in outward rites and privileges, I have as much; yea, more.

5. Circumcised the eighth day] This was the time that the law required the males to be circumcised: and we find, from Gen. xvii. 14, both in the Samaritan Pentateuch, and in the Septuagint, though the clause is now lost out of the common Hebrew text, that The male child which is not circumcised the eighth day, shall be cut off from among his people: this precept was literally observed in the case of St. Paul.

Of the stock of Israel] Regularly descended from the patriarch Jacob.

Of the tribe of Benjamin] The most favourite son of that patriarch; and a tribe that did not revolt with Jeroboam, 1 Kings xii. 21. nor pollute the worship of God by idolatry.

Touching the law, a Pharisee] One that not only received the law and the prophets, as coming from God ; but belonged to that sect which, of all others, was most scrupulously attached to it.

6. Concerning zeal] As to my zeal for Pharisaism, I gave the fullest proof of it by persecuting the church of Christ; and this is known to all my countrymen.

Touching the righteousness] And as to that plan of justification, which justification the Jews say is to be obtained by an observance of the law; I have done every thing so conscientiously from my youth up, that in this respect I am blameless; and may, with more confidence than most of them, expect that justification which the law appears to promise.

7. But what things were gone? The credit and respect which I had, as being zealously attached to the law, and to the traditions of the elders, I counted loss for Christ. I saw that this could stand me in no stead; that all my acts of righteousness were nothing on which I could depend for salvation; and that Christ crucified could alone profit me; for I found that it is impossible that the blood of bulls and goats could take away

8. I count all things but loss] Not only my Jewish privileges, but all others of every kind; with every thing that men count valuable or gainful, or on which they usually depend for salvation.

The excellency of the knowledge of Christ That superior light, information, and blessedness, which come through the Gospel of Jesus Christ. Justification through His blood; sanctification by His Spirit: and eternal glory through His merits and intercession. These are the blessings held out to us by the Gospel; of which, and the law, Jesus Christ is the sum and substance

I have suffered the loss of all things) Some translate δι or πρὸς πάντα ἐξήριώθην, for whom I have thrown away all things; I have made a voluntary choice of Christ, his cross, his poverty, and his reproach; and freely for these I have sacrificed all I had from the world; and all I could expect from it.

And do count them but dung) The word σκυβαλα means the vilest dross or refuse of any thing; the worst excrement. The word shows how utterly insignificant and unavailing, in point of salvation, the apostle esteemed every thing but the Gospel of Jesus. With his best things he freely parted, judging them all loss while put in the place of Christ crucified; and Christ crucified he esteemed infinite gain, when compared with all the rest. Of the utter unavailability of any thing but Christ, to save the soul, the apostle Paul stands as an incontrovertible proof. Could the law have done any thing, the apostle must have known it. He tried, and found it vanity: he tried the Gospel system, and found it the power of God to his salvation. By losing all that the world calls excellent, he gained Christ, and endless salvation through Him. Of the glorious influence of the Gospel, he is an unimpeachable witness. See the concluding observations on the 9th chapter of the Acts, on the character of St. Paul.

I have suffered the loss of all things, and do count them but dung, that I may win Christ,

9 And be found in him, not having ^u mine own righteousness, which is of the law, but ^v that which is through the faith of Christ, the righteousness which is of God by faith :

10 That I may know him, and the power of his resurrection, and the fellowship of his sufferings, being made conformable unto his death ;

11 If by any means I might ^x attain unto the resurrection of the dead.

12 Not as though I had already ^y attained, either were already ^z perfect; but I follow after, if that I may apprehend that for which also I am apprehended of Christ Jesus.

13 Brethren, I count not myself to have apprehended; but

9. And be found in him] Be found a believer in Christ; not having mine own righteousness: not trusting in any thing I have done or could do, in order to my salvation; relying on no scheme of justification, set up either formerly by myself or by others.

But that which is through the faith of Christ] That justification, which is received by faith through the atonement made by Christ.

The righteousness which is of God] God's method of justifying sinners through faith in his Son. See the notes on Rom. iii. 21, 23, and 25, where this subject is treated at large.

10. That I may know him] To be the true and promised Messiah; and experience all that salvation which he has bought by his blood.

The power of his resurrection] In having this body of my humiliation raised from death, and made like unto his glorious body. This seems to be the sole meaning of the apostle; for it is in virtue of Christ's resurrection that we are to be raised incorruptible and immortal.

And the fellowship of his sufferings] Christ died, not only as a victim for sin, but as a martyr to the truth. No creature can have fellowship with Him in his ricarious sufferings; as a martyr to the truth, St. Paul wished to imitate Him.—Not only in the apostle, but in the primitive Christians generally, there seems to have been a strong desire after martyrdom.

11. The resurrection of the dead. That is, the resurrection of those who, having died in the Lord, rise to glory and honour: and hence St. Paul uses a peculiar word which occurs nowhere else in the New Testament, ἐξανάστασις. The words as they stand in the best MSS. are as follows, εἰς τὴν ἐξανάστασιν τῆς ἐκ νεκρῶν, to that resurrection which is of the dead. This glorious resurrection, and perhaps peculiarly glorious in the words ἀνάστασις of martyrs, is the subject of the next verse. The word ἀνάστασις signifies the resurrection in general, both of the just and unjust; ἐξανάστασις, may signify that of the blessed only.

12. Not as though I had already attained Οὐκ οτι ἤνελαιβον, For I have not yet received the prize: I am not glorified, for I have not finished my course: and I have a conflict still to maintain; and the issue will prove, whether I should be crowned. From the beginning of the 11th, to the end of the 17th verse, there is one continued allusion to the contests at the Olympic games: exercises with which, and their laws, the Philippians were well acquainted.

Either were already perfect) ἢ ἡν τέλεισθαι, nor am I yet perfect; I am not yet crowned, in consequence of having suffered martyrdom. I am quite satisfied that the apostle here alludes to the Olympic games; and the word τέλεισθαι, is the proof: for τέλεισθαι, is spoken of those who have completed their race, reached the goal, and are honoured with the prize. Thus it is used by Philo Allegoriar. lib. iii. page 101. Edit. Mangey, ἵστε οὐδὲν εὐχόμεν, καὶ οὐκ ἐκροσσην (οὐκ ὀνομασθῆναι) τέλεισθαι; καὶ οὐκ ἐκροσσην ἔτι ἐν τῇ κούρῃ. καὶ ἡμεῖς οὐκ ἐκροσσην ἐσμεν. "When is it, O soul, that thou shalt appear to have the victory?—Is it not when thou shalt be perfected, (have completed thy course by death,) and be honoured with prizes and crowns?"

That τελειωσις, signified martyrdom, we learn most expressly from Clement of Alexandria. Stromata. lib. iii. page 480. where he has these remarkable words, τὸ τελῶσιν μαρτυρίαν καὶ λῆμψιν, οὐχ ὅτι τέλος τοῦ βίου τοῦ ἀνθρώπου ἐλάβεν, ὡς οἱ λοιποὶ, ἀλλ' ὅτι τελειὸν ἐργον ὑπάρχει ἐνεδεικνύται. "We call martyrdom, τελειωσις, or perfection, not because man receives it as the end, τέλειος, or completion of life; but because it is the consummation, τελειον, of the work of charity."

So Basil the great, Hom. in Psal. cxvi. ver. 13. Ποτηριον σωτηριον ληψομαι τούτοις, διψων ἐπὶ τὸν δία τοῦ μαρτυρίου τελειώσωιν ἐρχομαι; "I will receive the cup of salvation, that is, thirsting and earnestly desiring to come, by martyrdom, to the consummation."

So Erasmianus, on Acts xxviii. Πάντα ἐτη ἀπο τῆς κλήσεως τοῦ Παύλου, μέχρι τῆς τελευτώσεως αὐτοῦ, πριακόντα καὶ πεντε; "All the years of Paul, from his calling to his martyrdom, were thirty and five."

And in Balsamon, Can. i. Ancyran. page 764. Τὸν τῆς τελειώσεως σεφάρον ἀνάεσθαι; is, 'to be crowned

Eusebius, Hist. Eccles. lib. vii. cap. 13. uses the word τελειοῦσθαι, to express to suffer martyrdom. I have been the more particular here, because some critics have denied that this one thing I do, *forgetting those things which are behind, and *reaching forth unto those things which are before, 14 *I press toward the mark for the prize of ⁴the high calling of God in Christ Jesus.

15 Let us therefore, as many as be ^cperfect, ^bbe thus minded: and if in any thing ye be otherwise minded, God shall reveal even this unto you.

16 Nevertheless, whereto we have already attained, ^glet us walk ^hby the same rule, ⁱlet us mind the same thing.

17 Brethren, ^kbe followers together of me, and mark them which walk so as ^jI ye have us for an ensample.

the word has any such signification.—See Saüer, Rosenmüller, Macknight, &c.

St. Paul, therefore, is not speaking here of any deficiency in his own grace, or spiritual state: he does not mean by not being yet perfect, that he had a body of sin and death cleaving to him, and was still polluted with intrinseal sin; as some have most falsely and dangerously imagined: he speaks of his not having terminated his course by martyrdom, which he knew would sooner or later be the case. "This he considered as the relaxatio, or perfection of his whole career; and was led to view every thing as imperfect or unfinished, till this had taken place.

But I follow after.] Διωκὼ ἐγὼ, but I pursue: several are gone before me in this glorious way, and have obtained the crown of martyrdom; I am hurrying after them.

That I may apprehend.] That I may receive those blessings to which I am called by Christ Jesus. There is still an allusion here to the Stadium and exercises there; the apostle considers Christ as the Brabeus or judge, in the games, who proclaimed the victor, and distributed the prizes; and he represents himself as being introduced by this very Brabeus, or judge, into the contest; and this Brabeus brought him in, with the design to crown him, if he contended faithfully. To complete this faithful contention, is what he has in view; that he may apprehend, or lay hold on that for which he had been apprehended, or taken by the hand by Christ, who had converted, strengthened, and endowed him with apostolical powers, that he might fight the good fight of faith, and lay hold on eternal life.

13. I count not myself to have apprehended.] Whatever gifts, graces, or honours I may have received from Jesus Christ, I consider every thing as incomplete till I have finished my course, got this crown, and have my body raised and fashioned after His glorious body.

Forgetting those things which are behind.] My conduct is not regulated, nor influenced by that of others: I consider my calling, my Master, my work, and my end. If others think they have time to loiter or trifle, I have none; time is flying! Eternity is at hand! and my all is at stake!

This one thing I do.] This is the concern, as it is the sole business, of my life.

Reaching forth.] The Greek word επεκτείνω points out the strong exertions made in the race; every muscle and nerve is exerted; and he puts forth every particle of his strength in running. He was running for life; and running for his life.

14. I press toward the mark.] Κατὰ σκοπὸν διώκω, I pursue along the line: this is a reference to the white line that marked the ground in the stadium, from the starting place to the goal, on which the runners were obliged to keep their eye fixed; for they who transgressed, or ran beyond this line, did not run lawfully, and were not crowned, even though they got first to the goal. See the concluding observations on 1 Cor. chap. ix.

What is called σκοπός, mark or scope, here, is called καρὸν, the line, i. e. the marked line, ver. 16. When it was said to Diogenes the Cynic, "Thou art now an old man; rest from thy labours?" to this he answered: Εὐ δάτω ἐράων, ἥτις ἔχει ἐπὶ τῷ ἀντιπῶν, καὶ με μάλλον ἐπετρέφει, "If I have run long in the race, will it become me to slacken my pace when close near the end; should I not rather stretch forward?" Diog. Laert. lib. 6. cap. 2. sec. 6.

For the prize of the high calling of God.] The reward which God from above calls me, by Christ Jesus, to receive. The apostle still keeps in view, his crown of martyrdom, and his glorious resurrection.

15. As many as be perfect.] As many as are thoroughly instructed in Divine things; who have cast off all dependance on the law, and on every other system, for salvation; and who discern God, calling them from clære, by Christ Jesus, be thus minded; be intensely in earnest for eternal life; nor ever halt till the race is finished.

The word τέλειος, the perfect, is taken here in the same sense in which it is taken 1 Cor. xiv. 20. Be not children in understanding; but in understanding be ye τέλειος, τέλειος, τελειώθης, be ye perfect, thoroughly instructed, deeply experienced, 1 Cor. it. 6. We speak wisdom among the perfect, ἐν τοῖς τέλειος; among those who are fully instructed; adults in Christian knowledge, Eph. iv. 13. Till we all come—unto a perfect man, ἐς ἀνδρα τέλειον; to the state of adults in Christianity, Heb. v. 14. But strong meat belongeth to them that are of full age, τέλειος, the perfect; those who are thoroughly instructed and experienced in Divine things. 1 Pet. ii. 2.

18 (For many walk, of whom I have told you often, and now tell you even weeping, that they are ^mthe enemies of the cross of Christ:

19 ⁿWhose end is destruction, ^owhose god is their belly, and ^pwhose glory is in their shame, ^qwho mind earthly things.)

20 For ^rour conversation is in heaven; ^sfrom whence also we look for the Saviour, the Lord Jesus Christ:

21 ^tWho shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body, ^vaccording to the working whereby he is able even to subdue all things unto himself.

18. (For many walk, of whom I have told you often, and now tell you even weeping, that they are ^mthe enemies of the cross of Christ: 19. ⁿWhose end is destruction, ^owhose god is their belly, and ^pwhose glory is in their shame, ^qwho mind earthly things.) 20. For ^rour conversation is in heaven; ^sfrom whence also we look for the Saviour, the Lord Jesus Christ: 21. Who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body, ^vaccording to the working whereby he is able even to subdue all things unto himself.

fore, says the apostle, as many as be perfect, as have entered fully into the spirit and design of the Gospel, be thus minded:—viz. Forget the things which are behind, and stretch forward along the mark, for the prize.

If in any thing ye be otherwise minded.] If ye have not yet entered into the full spirit and design of this Gospel, if any of you have yet remaining any doubts relative to Jewish ordinances, or their expediency in Christianity, God shall reveal even this unto you; for while ye are sincere and upright, God will take care that ye shall have full instruction in these Divine things.

16. [Whereto we have already attained.] Let us not lose that part of the race which we have already run; let us walk by the same rule, let us keep the white line continually in view: Let us mind the same thing, always considering the glorious prize which is held out by God through Christ Jesus, to animate and encourage us.

The MSS., Versions, and Fathers, of the Alexandrian recension, or edition, and which are supposed by Griesbach and others, to contain the purest text, omit the words καρὸν, το αὐτὸ σποῦν, and read the verse thus, Ὡς ἔπειτα, το ἔπειτα, ὥς ἔπειτα, let us walk; or, according to what we have already attained, let us regulate our life. There is so much disagreement about the above words in the MSS., &c. that most critics consider them as a sort of gloss, which never made an original part of the text. Dr. White says, certissimè delenda. Most certainly they should be obliterated.

17. Brethren, be followers—of me.] In the things of Christ let me be your line; and my writing, preaching, and conduct, your rule.

And mark them.] Εσώτεροι; still alluding to the line in the stadium: keep your eye steadily fixed on those who walk, live, as ye have us, myself, Timothy, and Epaphroditus, for an example.

18. For many walk, &c.] The Judaizing teachers continue to preach, who wish to incorporate circumcision, and other ordinances of the law, with the Gospel.

They are the enemies of the cross of Christ.] They rather attribute justification to the Levitical sacrifices, than to the sacrificial death of Christ; and thus they are enemies to that cross, and will not suffer persecution for his sake. They please the world, and are in no danger of reproach.

19. [Whose end is destruction.] This is the issue of their doctrine, and of their conduct. They are here described by three characters—1. Their god is their belly; they live not in any reference to eternity; their religion is for time; and they make a gain of godliness; and live only to eat, drink, and be merry. 2. Their glory is in their shame; they lay it down as a proof of their address, that they can fare sumptuously every day, in consequence of preaching a doctrine which flatters the passions of their hearers. 3. They mind earthly things; their whole study and attention are taken up with earthly matters; they are given to the flesh and its lusts; they have no spirituality; nor do they believe that there is or can be any intercourse between God and the souls of men;—but their lasciviousness and uncleanness seem to be principally intended.—See Kypke. Despicable as these men were, the apostle's heart was deeply pained on their account—1. Because they held and taught a false creed. 2. Because they perverted many by that teaching; and, 3. Because they themselves were perishing through it.

20. Our conversation is in heaven.] Ἦμεν—το πολιτεύμεθα, our city, or citizenship, or civil rights. The word properly signifies the administration, government, or form of a republic or state; and is thus used by Demosthenes, more 107. 25, and 262. 27. Edit. Reiske. It signifies also a republic, a city, or the inhabitants of any city or place; or a society of persons living in the same place, and under the same rules and laws.—See more in Schlesinger.

While those gross and Jewish teachers have no city but what is on earth; no rights; but what are derived from their secular connexions; no society but what is made up of men like themselves; who mind earthly things, and whose belly is their God: we have a heavenly city, the New Jerusalem; we have rights and privileges which are heavenly and eternal; and our society or fellowship is with God the Father, Son, and Spirit; the spirits of just men made perfect; and the whole church of the first-born. We have crucified the flesh with its affections and lusts; and regard not the body, which we know must perish; but which we confidently expect shall be raised from death and corruption into a state of immortal glory.

21. Who shall change our vile body.] Ὁ μετασχηματίζων το σῶμα

εἰς τὴν ταπεινότητα; ἢ ἡμῶν; who will refashion, or alter the fashion and condition of the body of our humiliation; this body that is dead, adjudged to death because of sin; and must be purified, dissolved, and decomposed:—

That it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body] Εἰς τὴν γέσην αὐτοῦ ὡς αὐτοῦ τὸ σῶμα τὴν δόξαν αὐτοῦ; that it may bear a similar form to the body of his glory. That is, the bodies of true believers shall be raised up at the great day, in the same likeness, immortality, and glory, of the glorified humanity of Jesus Christ; and be so thoroughly changed, as to be not only capable, through their immortality, of eternally existing; but also of the infinite spiritual enjoyments at the right hand of God.

According to the working] Κατὰ τὴν ἐνεργεσίαν; according to that energy by which he can bring all things under subjection to himself. Thus we find, that the resurrection of the body is attributed to that power which governs and subdues all things; for nothing less than the energy that produced the human body at the beginning, can restore it from its lapsed and degraded state, into that state of glory which it had at its creation; and render it capable of enjoying God throughout eternity. The thought of this glorious consummation was a subject of the highest joy and confidence amongst the primitive Christians. This earth was not their home; and they passed through things temporal, so as not to lose those which were eternal.

1. The preceding chapter, to which the first verse of the succeeding should be joined, contains a fund of matter the most interesting that can well be conceived. The apostle seems to stand on the verge of eternity, and to have both worlds opened to his view. The one he sees to be the place in which a preparation for the other is to be attained. In the one he sees the starting place, where the Christian is to commence his race; in the other, the goal at which his course terminates, and the prize which he is there to obtain. One is the place from and over which the Christian is to run; the other, is that to which he is to direct his course; and in which he is to receive infinite blessedness. In the one, he sees all manner of temptations, and hindrances, and dangers, standing thick through all the ground; in the other, he sees the forerunner, the Lord Jesus, who has entered into the heaven of heavens for him; through whom, God calls him from above, τὰς αὐτοῦ κλητίων τοῦ Θεοῦ, ver. 14. for what he hears in the Gospel, and what he sees by faith, is the calling of God from above; and therefore he departs from this, for this is not his rest.

2. The nearer a faithful soul comes to the verge of eternity, the more the light and influence of heaven are poured out upon it; time and life are fast sinking away into the shades of death and darkness; and the effulgence of the dawning glory of the eternal world, is beginning to illustrate the blessed state of the genuine Christian; and to render clear and intelligible those counsels of God partly displayed in various inextinguishable providences; and partly revealed and seen as through a glass darkly, in his own sacred word. Unutterable glories now begin to burst forth; pains, afflictions, persecutions, wants, distresses, sickness, and death, in any or all of its forms, are exhibited as the way to the kingdom; and as having in the order of God, an ineffable glory, for their result. Here are the wisdom, power, and mercy of God! Here the patience, perseverance, and glory of the saints! Reader, is not earth, and its concerns, lost in the effulgence of this glory? Arise and depart, for this is not thy rest.

CHAPTER IV.

The apostle exhorts them to stand fast in the Lord, 1. And beseeches Euodias and Syntyche to be of one mind in Divine things, 2. And requests his true yoke-fellow to help them to a good understanding, 3. Gives them directions concerning their temper and frame of mind, 4–7. And how to act in all respects, as becomes the purity and excellence of the Gospel: as they had heard from, and seen in him, 8, 9. Thanks them for their attention to him in his captivity, in sending him what was necessary for his support; though he had learned to be contented in all situations in life, 10–14. Mentions particular cases in which they had ministered to him: promises them, through the riches of glory in Christ, a supply of all their spiritual wants; and renders thanks to God, 15–20. Statutes all the saints, and those particularly of the emperor's household, 21, 22. And concludes with his usual apostolical benediction, 22. [A. M. cir. 4066. A. D. cir. 62. A. U. C. 814. An. Imp. Neronis Cæs. Aug. 9.]

WHEREFORE, my brethren, dearly beloved and longed for, my joy and crown, so stand fast in the Lord, my dearly beloved.

2 I beseech Euodias, and beseech Syntyche, that they be of the same mind in the Lord.

3 And I entreat thee also, true yoke-fellow, help those women which laboured with me in the Gospel, with Clement also, and with other my fellow-labourers, whose names are in the book of life.

4 Rejoice in the Lord always: and again I say, Rejoice. 5 Let your moderation be known unto all men. 6 The Lord is at hand.

7 Be careful for nothing; but in every thing by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving let your requests be made known unto God.

8 And the peace of God, which passeth all understanding, shall keep your hearts and minds through Christ Jesus.

29 Finally, brethren, whatsoever things are true, whatsoever 30 And the peace of God, which passeth all understanding, shall keep your hearts and minds through Christ Jesus.

31 Finally, brethren, whatsoever things are true, whatsoever 32 And the peace of God, which passeth all understanding, shall keep your hearts and minds through Christ Jesus.

his most beloved children; God, your Father, is infinite in the riches of his grace and glory; and out of his abundance we have all received, and grace for grace. Therefore, to God our Father be glory for ever and ever!

21. Salute every saint! Remember to present my affectionate wishes to every Christian at Philippi.

The brethren which are with me! Those who were fellow-labourers with him, generally supposed to be Aristarchus, Mark, Justus, Epaphras, Luke, and Demas. See the end of the epistles to the Colossians and to Philemon.

22. All the saints! All the Christians now at Rome.

They that are of Cesar's household! Nero was at this time emperor of Rome; a more worthless, cruel, and diabolical wretch, never disgraced the name or form of man; yet in his family there were Christians; but whether this relates to members of the imperial family, or to guards, or courtiers, or to servants, we cannot tell. If even some of his slaves were converted to Christianity, it would be sufficiently marvellous. Converts to Christianity in this family there certainly were; and this shows how powerfully the Divine word had been preached and spread. That the empress Poppæa may have been favourably inclined to Christianity is possible: for Josephus relates of her, Antiq. lib. xx. cap. 7. Ὁμορφὸς yap η, she was a worshipper of the true God: it is not likely, therefore, that she threw any hindrances in the way of her servants, who might wish to embrace the Christian faith. St. Jerome, in Philem. states that St. Paul had converted many in Cesar's family; for, a Cesaris missus in carcerem, notor familie ejus factus; persecutoris Christi domum fecit Ecclesiam. "For, being by the emperor cast into prison, he became the more known to his family, and he turned the house of Christ's persecutor into a church." Some imagine that Seneca, the preceptor of Nero, and the poet Lucan, were converted by St. Paul; and there are still extant, and in a MS. now before me, letters which profess to have passed between Paul and Seneca; but they are worthy of neither. They have been printed in some editions of Seneca's works. See the remarks below.

23. The grace of our Lord! The usual apostolical benediction, which has often occurred; and been more than once explained. See on Rom. i. 7. and Galat. vi. 18. The word quoniam, our, is omitted by many MSS. and several versions, which simply read, The grace of the Lord Jesus Christ.

Be with you all! Instead of carum, all, Hieronym. Spirit, is the reading of ADEFG. several others, with the Coptic, Sahidic, Ethiopic, Armenian, Vulgate, and Itala; besides several of the Fathers.

There are various subscriptions to this epistle in the different MSS. and Versions. In the common Greek text it stands thus: Written to the Philippians from Rome by Epaphroditus. The Epistle to the Philippians was written from Rome, and sent by Epaphroditus, SYRIAC. To the Philippians, ETHIOPIC. The end of the Epistle; it was written at Rome, and sent by Epaphroditus, ARABIC. The Philippians, by Timothy and Epaphroditus, COPTIC.

1. The MSS. generally agree with the Versions; and all unite in stating that this epistle was written and sent from Rome; so that the common subscription may well stand. Yet there have been some strong objections made against this, as far as the place is concerned. Some foreign critics have maintained, that were it to be granted that the apostle was now a prisoner for the testimony of Christ, yet it does not follow that he was a prisoner at Rome; for, he himself tells us, 2 Cor. xi. 23. that he was in prisons more abundant; and, consequently, he might be in prison somewhere else; but they have gone farther, and denied that this epistle was written while Paul was a prisoner, that he had been already liberated; and that of this there are several evidences in the epistle itself. J. Christopher Wolf, in his Curæ, has considered all these objections in detail, and appears to have answered them in a very satisfactory manner. That St. Paul was not in prison, these words seem clearly to prove, chap. i. 16. The one preach Christ of contention, not sincerely, supposing to add affliction to my bonds. This strongly argues that he was then suffering imprisonment, and that certain persons of perverse minds preached the Gospel in such a way as was calculated to make his bonds still more grievous. And, as he sends the salutations of saints which were of Cesar's household, it seems most evident that he was then at Rome; as, had he been a prisoner in any of the provinces, it is not likely that he would send to Philippi the greetings of those who lived at Rome.

2. The cause of this imprisonment has been variously understood. Theodorus Metochita says, it was in consequence of his having converted Nero's baker, and one of his concubines, at which the emperor being enraged, ordered him to be cast into prison; but the authority on which this rests, is scarcely sufficient to render it credible.

3. Paul is generally allowed to have been twice imprisoned at Rome: this was, without doubt, the first time of his being there in bonds; as there is every appearance that he was delivered after this; but his second imprisonment issued in his martyrdom. Every apostle of God is immortal till his work is done. Paul became a martyr when God saw that there was no further need either for his preaching or his writing; he had kept and defended the faith, and had finished his course; God took him then from the evil to come, and crowned him with the glory which his Redeemer had provided for him; in reference to which he lived, and after which he had continually aspired.

4. Reader, be thankful to God, who, in pity to thy weakness, has caused thee to believe and enjoy, and not to suffer for his sake. It is not for us to court seasons of martyrdom; we find it difficult to be faithful, even in ordinary trials; yet as persecutions may come, and times of sore trial and proof may occur, we should be prepared for them; and we should know that nothing less than Christ in us, the hope of glory, will enable us to stand in the cloudy and dark day. Let us, therefore, put on the whole armour of God, and fighting under the Captain of our salvation, expect the speedy destruction of every inward foe; and triumph in the assurance, that death, the last enemy, will, in his destructions, shortly be brought to a perpetual end. Hallelujah! The Lord God Omnipotent reigneth!—Amen, and Amen.

PREFACE TO

THE EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE TO THE COLOSSIANS.

Colosse, or rather Colassa; (see on chap. i. 1.) was a city of Phrygia Pacatiana, now a part of Natolia, in Asia Minor, seated on an eminence on the south side of the river Mæander, now Mender, near to the place where the river Lycus enters the earth, and begins to run under ground, which course it continues for about three quarters of a mile, before it emerges and falls into the Mæander. Of this ancient city not much is known; it was situated between Laodicea and Hierapolis, and at an equal distance from either; and to this place Nero came in his expedition against Geecæ.

The government of this city is said to have been democratic; and its first magistrate bore the title of Archon and Prætor. The Macedonians transferred Colosse to the Persians; and it afterward passed under the government of the Seleucids. After the defeat of Antiochus III. at the battle of Megastene, it became subject to Eumenes, king of Perægia; and when Attalus, the last of his successors, bequeathed his dominions to the Romans, this city, with the whole of Phrygia, formed a part of the proconsular province of Asia; which division subsisted till the time of Constantine the Great. After the death of this emperor, Phrygia was divided into Phrygia Pacatiana, and Phrygia Salutaris; and Colosse was the sixth city of the first division.

The ancient city of Colosse has been extinct for nearly eighteen hundred years; for about the tenth year of the emperor Nero, about a year after the writing of this epistle, not only Colosse, but Laodicea and Hierapolis, were destroyed by an earthquake, according to Eusebius; and the city which was raised in the place of the former was called Chonos or Konos, which name it now bears.—See New Encyclopædia. On modern maps, Konos is situated about twenty miles N. E. of Dogubaz, in lat. about 38° north, and long. 29° 40' east of London.

The epistle to this city appears to have been written about the same time with that to the Philippians, viz. towards the end of the year 62, and in the ninth of the emperor Nero.

That the two epistles were written about the same time, is rendered probable by the following circumstance:—In the Epistle to the Philippians, chap. ii. 19. St. Paul purposes to send Timothy to Philippi, who was then with him at Rome, that he might know their state. As Timothy joins with the apostle in the salutation at the beginning of this epistle, it is evident that he was still at Rome, and had not yet been sent to Philippi; and as St. Paul wrote the former epistle nearly at the close of his first imprisonment at Rome, the two epistles must have been written within a short space of each other. See the Preface to the Epistle to the Philippians.

When, or by whom, Christianity was first preached at Colosse, and a church founded there, we cannot tell; but it is most likely that it was by St. Paul himself, and during the three years in which he dwelt at Ephesus; for he had then employed himself with such zeal and diligence, that we are told, Acts xix. 10. "That all they that dwell in Asia heard the word of the Lord Jesus, both Jews and Greeks." And that Paul preached in Phrygia, the district in which this city was situated, we learn from Acts xvi. 6. "Now when they had gone through Phrygia and the region of Galatia;" and at another time we find that "he went over all the country of Galatia and Phrygia in order, strengthening all the disciples." Acts xviii. 23. It has, however, been argued from chap. i. ver. 1. of this epistle, that Paul had never been at Colosse; for he there says, I would that you knew what great conflict I have for you, and for them of Laodicea, and for as many as have not seen my face in the flesh. But the consequence drawn from these words does not absolutely follow. Dr. Lardner alleges a variety of considerations which induced him to believe that the churches of Colosse, and Laodicea, were founded by St. Paul, viz.

1. That the apostle was twice in Phrygia, in which were Colosse, Laodicea, and Hierapolis, see the places above quoted, from the Acts of the Apostles.

2. That he does in effect, or even expressly say, that he had dispensed the Gospel to the Colossians, chap. i. 21—25. See particularly the 23d, 24th, and 25th verses.

3. From several passages in the epistle it appears, that the apostle does not speak as to strangers, but to acquaintances, disciples, and converts. Some think that Epaphras, who is called their apostle, chap. i. 7, was the first who planted Christianity among the Colossians.

But the arguments drawn from Acts, chap. xvi and xviii, referred to above, are quite invalidated, if we allow the opinion of some learned men, among whom are Suidas, Colepinus, Munster, and others; that the Colossians, a gigantic statue at Rhodes, gave its own name to the people among whom it stood; for the ancient poets call the inhabitants of the island of Rhodes Colossians; and hence they thought that the Colossians, to whom St. Paul directs this epistle, were the inhabitants of Rhodes. This opinion, however, is not generally adopted. From a great similarity in the doctrine and phraseology of this epistle to that written to the Ephesians, that to the Colossians has been considered an epitome of the former; as the Epistle to the Galatians has been considered an abstract of that to the Romans. See the concluding observations on the Epistle to the Galatians; and the notes on chap. i. 4. of this epistle; and elsewhere.

Whether the Colossians to whom the apostle addresses this epistle were Jews or Gentiles, cannot be absolutely determined. It is most probable that they were a mixture of both; but that the principal part were converted Jews, is most likely. This, indeed, appears to have been the case in most of the Asiatic and Grecian churches; for there were Jews, at this time, scattering in almost every part of the Roman empire, which then comprehended the greatest portion of the known world.

The language of this epistle is bold and energetic; the sentiments grand; and the conceptions vigorous and majestic. The phraseology is in many places Hebrew; and the reason is obvious, the apostle had to explain the subjects which never had a name in any other language. The mythology of the Gentiles could not furnish terms to explain the theology of the Jews; much less the more refined and spiritual system of Christianity.

CHAPTER I.

The salutation of Paul and Timothy, to the church at Colosse, i. 1, 2. They give thanks to God for the good estate of that church, and the wonderful progress of the Gospel in every place, 3—6. Having received particulars of their state from Epaphroditus, which not only excited their gratitude, but led them to pray to God that they might walk worthy of the Gospel; and they give thanks to Him who had made them meet for an inheritance among the saints in light, 7—12. This state is described as a deliverance from the power of darkness, and being brought into the kingdom of God's Son, 13, 14. The glorious character of Jesus Christ, and what He has done for mankind, 15—23. The salvation which the Colossians had received, and of which the apostle had been the minister and dispenser, 24—26. The sum and substance of the apostle's preaching, and the manner in which he executed his ministry, 27—29. [A. M. cir. 1005. A. D. cir. 62. A. U. C. 814. An Imp. Neronis Cæs. Aug. 9.]

PAUL, * an apostle of Jesus Christ by the will of God, and Timothy, our brother.

2 To the saints and faithful brethren in Christ which are at Colosse: * Grace be unto you, and peace, from God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ.

3 ¶ We give thanks to God and the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, praying always for you, NOTES—Verse 1. Paul an apostle—by the will of God As the word ἀπόστολος, apostle, signifies one sent, an envoy, or messenger; any person or persons may be the senders; but the word is particularly restrained to the messengers of the everlasting Gospel, sent immediately from God himself; and this is what St. Paul particularly remarks here, when he calls himself an apostle by the will of God; signifying that he had derived his commission from an express vocation or purpose of the Almighty.

And Timothy Though Timothy is here joined in the salutation, yet he has never been understood as having any part in composing this epistle. He has been considered as the amanuensis or scribe of the apostle.

2. To the saints Those who professed Christianity.—See the note on Eph. i. 1.

Which are at Colosse Instead of ἐκ Κολοσσαίς, at Colosse, or among the Colossians, A.B.C. and many other excellent MSS., with both the Syriac, Coptic, Sinaitic, Origen, Gregory Nyssen, Amphilochius, Theodoret, Damasceus, Theophylact, and others, read ἐκ Κολοσσαίς in Colosse, or among the Colossians; and this is most probably the true reading. That this city perished by an earthquake, a short time after the date of this epistle, we have the testimony of Lucebius. That, which at present is supposed to occupy the site of this ancient city, is called Lonos. For other particulars, see the Preface to this epistle.

Grace be unto you See on Rom. i. 7.

And the Lord Jesus Christ This clause is omitted by many MSS., several Versions, and some of the Fathers. Griesbach has left it out of the text; not, in my opinion, on sufficient evidence.

3. We give thanks to God Who is the author of all good; and from whom the grace, which has produced your conversion, has sprung by his mission of Christ Jesus. See the note on Eph. i. 15. and 16.

4. Since ye heard of your faith This is very similar to Ephes. i. 15. And it is certain that the apostle seems to have considered the church at Ephesus, and that at Colosse, to have been nearly in the same state; as the two epistles are very similar in their doctrine and phraseology.

5. For the hope which is laid up for you in heaven That eternal life, both of body and soul, which the apostle mentions, Titus i. 2. In hope of eternal life, which God, that can not lie, promised before the world began. The hope is here used for the object of hope; as every person that is born of God, hopes for the resurrection of his body; and the glorification of both it and his soul in the realms of eternal blessedness.

In the word of the truth of the Gospel In the doctrine of that Gospel of your salvation, which is the truth of God. Of this hope, by this doctrine, they had heard before, probably by persons who had heard and received the Gospel either at Ephesus or some other place; either in Asia Minor or Greece, where the apostles had preached. Some critics suppose that the word προηέκουσαν, heard before, refers to their heathen state, previously to their having heard the Gospel; as they could have no rational hope either of eternal life, or the resurrection of the body, till they had heard the doctrine of the truth of the Gospel. Heathenism knew nothing of the resurrection of the body; and had very indistinct and uncertain notions of the immortality of the soul.

6. Which is come unto you The doctrine of the Gospel is represented as a traveller, whose object it is to visit the whole habitable earth; and, having commenced his journey in Judea, had proceeded through Syria, and through different parts of Asia Minor, and had lately arrived at their city, every where proclaiming glad tidings of great joy to all people.

As it is in all the world So rapid is this traveller in his course, that he had already gone nearly through the whole of the countries under the Roman dominion; and will travel on till he has proclaimed his message to every people, and kindred, and nation, and tongue.

In the beginning of the apostolic age, the word of the Lord had certainly free course, did run, and was glorified. Since that time, the population of the earth has increased greatly; to follow the metaphor, the traveller still continues in his great journey; and it is the glory of the present day, that, by means of the British and Foreign Bible Society, multiplying Bibles in all the languages of Europe; and by means of the Christian Missionaries in India, Carey, Marshman, and Hard, who, with a zeal, constancy, and ability, rarely equalled, and perhaps never surpassed, have succeeded in the compass of a few years, in translating the Sacred Writings into most of the written languages of India, in which they were not previously extant; and in this labour they have been ably seconded by the Rev. Henry Martin, one of the East India Company's chap-

Jains, who was taken to his great reward, just when he had completed a pure and accurate version of the New Testament, into Persian. And the Rev. R. Morrison, at Canton, has had the honour to present the whole of the New Testament, in Chinese, to the immense population of that greatest empire of the earth. May that dark people receive it; and walk in the light of the Lord! And let every reader pray that all these noble attempts may be crowned with unlimited success; till the earth is filled both with the knowledge and glory of the Lord. Tulia secla currie! Amen.

And bringeth forth fruit] Wherever the pure Gospel of Christ is preached, it is the seed of the kingdom, and must be fruitful in all those who receive it by faith, in simplicity of heart.

After ἀποφωρονμεν, bringeth forth fruit; AED' EFG. many others, both the Syriac, Erpen's Arabic, the Coptic, Sahidic, Ethiopic, Armenian, Slaronic, Vulgate, and Itala; together with many of the Fathers, add καὶ ἀναγαγετον, and increaseth. It had not only brought forth fruit but was multiplying its own kind; every fruit containing seed, and every seed producing thirty, sixty, or a hundred fold. This reading is very important, and is undoubtedly genuine.

The grace of God in truth] Ye were fruitful, and went on increasing in the salvation of God, from the time that ye heard and acknowledged this doctrine to be of God; to spring from the grace or benevolence of God; and received it in truth, sincerely and uprightly, as His greatest gift to man.

7. As ye also learned of Epaphras—who is for you] Who this Epaphras was, we cannot tell; only it is likely that he was a Colossian; and became, by the call and grace of Christ, a deacon of this church, faithfully labouring with the apostle to promote its best interests. Some think that he is the same with Epaphroditus, Epaphras, being a contraction of that name, as Demas is of Demetrius; and it is remarkable that one of the Slaronic Versions has Epaphroditus in this place. That he was a Colossian, is evident from chap. iv. 12. Epaphras, who is one of you, ὁ ἐξ υμῶν; and some think that he was the first who preached the Gospel among this people, and hence called an apostle. He was raised up among themselves to be their minister in the absence of the apostle; and he showed himself to be worthy of this calling, by a faithful discharge of his ministry; and by labouring fervently for them all; and pressing them forward, that they might stand perfect and complete in all the will of God.

8. Your love in the Spirit.] So ye preached, and so ye believed. The heavenly flame in the heart of this minister, communicated itself to those who heard him: it was, like priest, like people. They enjoyed a spiritual, energetic ministry; and they were a spiritual people; they had a loving Spirit; and love through the Spirit of God, which dwelt in them. And of this love of theirs in the Spirit, and particularly towards the apostle, Epaphras gave full proof, not only by describing to the apostle the affection they felt for him, but in presenting to him those supplies which their love to him caused them to furnish.

9. For this cause] See on Ephes. i. 15 and 16. where the same sentiment occurs.

That ye might be filled] Nothing could satisfy the apostle, either for himself or his hearers, but the fulness of the blessing of the Gospel of peace: The Colossians had knowledge, but they must have more; it is their privilege to be filled with it. As the bright shining of the sun in the firmament of heaven fills the whole world with light and heat; so the light of the Son of righteousness is to illuminate their whole souls, and fill them with Divine splendour, so that they might know the will of God in all wisdom and spiritual understanding; in a word, that they might have such a knowledge of Divine things, as the Spirit of truth can teach to the soul of man.

10. That ye might walk worthy of the Lord] Suitably to your Christian profession; exemplifying its holy doctrines, by a holy and useful life. See the notes on Eph. iv. 1. and on Phil. i. 27.

Unto all pleasing] Doing every thing in the best manner, in the most proper time, and in a becoming spirit. Even a good work may be marred, and rendered fruitless, by being done improperly; out of season; or in a temper of mind that grieves the Holy Spirit.

Being fruitful in every good work] See on ver. 6.

St. Paul exhorts the Christians at Colosse—1. To walk; to be active in their Christian calling. 2. To walk worthily; suitable to the dignity of that calling; and to the purity of that God who had called them into this state of salvation. 3. That every work should be good; they must not be fruitful in some works, and fruitless in others. 6. That they should increase in religious knowledge as time rolled on; by knowing, by genuine Christian experience, more of God, of his love, and of his peace, day by day.

11. Strengthened with all might] That they might be able to walk worthily of the Lord, bring forth fruit, &c. See the notes on Ephes. iii. 13, &c.

According to his glorious power] According to that sufficiency of strength, which may be expected from him who has all power, both in the heavens and in the earth.

Unto all patience] Believing, hoping, and enduring all things;

With joyfulness] Feeling the continual testimony, that ye please God; which will be a spring of perpetual comfort.— See the notes on Eph. chap. iv. 2.

12. Giving thanks unto the Father] Knowing that ye have nothing but what ye have received from His mere mercy: and that, in point of merit, ye can never claim any thing from Him.

Which hath made us meet] ἡκανοσάτω, who has qualified us to be partakers, &c. Instead of ἡκανοσάτω, some MSS. and Versions have καλεσάτω, called, and B. (the Codex Vaticanus,) has both readings. Giving thanks unto the Father, who hath created and qualified us to be partakers—

Of the inheritance] Εἰς τὴν κληρονομίαν τὴν ἐκ πατρὸς. A plain allusion to the division of the Promised Land, by lot, among the different families of the twelve Israelitish tribes. The κληρονομία, was the lot or inheritance, belonging to the tribe. The πατὴρ, was the portion in that lot, which belonged to each family of that tribe. This was a type of the kingdom of God, in which portions of eternal blessedness are dispensed to the genuine Israelites; to them who have the circumcision of the heart, by the Spirit, whose praise is of God, and not of man.

Of the saints in light] Light, in the Sacred Writings, is used to express knowledge, felicity, purity, comfort, and joy of the most substantial kind: here, it is put to point out the state of glory at the right hand of God. As in Egypt, while the judgments of God were upon the land, there was a darkness which might be felt; yet all the Israelites had light in their dwellings: so in this world, while the darkness and wretchedness occasioned by sin, remain, the disciples of Christ are light in the Lord, walk as children of the light, and of the day; have in them no occasion of stumbling; and are on their way to the ineffable light at the right hand of God. Some think there is an allusion here to the Eleusinian mysteries, celebrated in deep caves, and darkness, in honour of Ceres: but I have already, in the notes to the Epistle to the Ephesians, expressed my doubts that the apostle has ever condescended to use such a simile. The phraseology of the text, is frequent through various parts of the Sacred Writings, where it is most obvious that no such allusion could possibly be intended.

13. Delivered us from the power of darkness] Darkness is here personified; and is represented as having εἰσενεῖκα, power, authority, and sway: all Jews and Gentiles which had not embraced the Gospel, being under this authority and power. And the apostle intimates here, that nothing less than the power of God can redeem a man from this darkness, or prince of darkness; who, by means of sin and unbelief, keeps men in ignorance, vice, and misery.

Translated us into the kingdom, &c.] He has thoroughly changed our state, brought us out of the dark region of vice and impiety, and placed us in the kingdom under the government of his dear Son, Υἱὸν τῆς ἀγάπης αὐτοῦ, the Son of his love; the Person who, in His infinite love, He has given to make an atonement for the sin of the world.

14. In whom we have redemption] Who has paid down the redemption price, even His own blood, that our sins might be cancelled, and we made fit to be partakers of the inheritance among the saints in light.

The clause δὲ τὸν ἀγαπᾶς αὐτοῦ, through his blood, is omitted by ABCDEFG. and by most others of weight and importance; by the Syriac, Arabic of Erpen. Coptic, Ethiopic, Sahidic, some copies of the Vulgate, and by the Itala; and by most of the Greek Fathers. Griesbach has left it out of the text. It is likely that the reading here is not genuine; yet, that we have redemption any other way than through the sacrifice of Christ, the Scriptures declare not. The same phrase is used Eph. i. 7. where there is no various reading in any of the MSS., Versions, or Fathers.

16 For^a by him were all things created, that are in heaven, and that are in earth, visible and invisible, whether they be thrones, or dominions, or principalities, or powers: all things were created^b by him, and for him:

17 And he is before all things, and by him all things consist.

The forgiveness of sins. Ἀφεσις τῶν ἀμαρτιῶν, the taking away of sins; all the power, guilt, and infection of sin. All sin of every kind; with all its influence and consequences.

15. Who is the image of the invisible God? The counterpart of God Almighty: and if the image of the invisible God, consequently nothing that appeared in him could also be that image; for if it could be visible in the Son, it could also be visible in the Father: but if the Father be invisible, consequently His image in the Son must be invisible also. This is that form of God of which He divested himself; the ineffable glory in which He not only did not appear, as to its splendour and accompaniments, but concealed also its essential nature; that inaccessible light which no man, no created being, can possibly see. This was that Divine Nature, the fulness of the Godhead bodily, which dwelt in him.

The first-born of every creature. I suppose this phrase to mean the same as that Philip. ii. 9. God hath given him a name which is above every name: He is, as man, at the head of all the creation of God: nor can he, with any propriety, be considered as a creature, having himself created all things, and existed before any thing was made. If it be said that God created Him first, and then he, by a delegated power from God, created all things, this is most flatly contradicted by the apostle's reasoning in the 16th and 17th verses. As the Jews term Jehovah שֵׁם יְהוָה hecara shel omni, the first-born of all the world, or of all the creation; to signify His having created or produced all things. See Wolfius in loc. No Christ is here termed; and the words which follow, in the 16th and 17th verses, are the proof of this. The phraseology is Jewish; and, as they apply it to the Supreme Being, merely to denote His eternal pre-existence, and to point Him out as the cause of all things, it is most evident that St. Paul uses it in the same way, and illustrates his meaning by the following words, which would be absolutely absurd, if we could suppose that, by the former, he intended to convey any idea of the inferiority of Jesus Christ.

16, 17. For by him were all things created? These two verses contain parts of the same subject: I shall endeavour to distinguish the statements of the apostle, and reason from them in such a way as the premises shall appear to justify, without appealing to any other Scripture in proof of the doctrine which I suppose these verses to vindicate.

Four things are here asserted.—1. That Jesus Christ is the Creator of the universe, of all things visible and invisible; of all things that had a beginning, whether they exist in time or in eternity. 2. That whatsoever was created, was created non himself; that he was the sole end of his own work. 3. That he was prior to all creation, to all beings, whether in the visible or invisible worlds. 4. That he is the preserver and governor of all things; by for him all things consist.

Now, allowing St. Paul to have understood the terms which he used, he must have considered Jesus Christ as being truly and properly God. 1. Creation is the proper work of an infinite, unlimited, and unoriginated Being; possessed of all perfections in their highest degrees; capable of knowing, willing, and working, infinitely, unlimitedly, and without control: and as creation signifies the production of being, where all was absolute nonentity; so it necessarily implies, that the Creator acted of and from himself; for, as previously to this creation, there was no being, consequently he could not be actuated by any motive, reason, or impulse, without himself; which would argue there was some being to produce the force, or impulse, or to give the reason. Creation, therefore, is the work of Him who is unoriginated, infinite, unlimited, and eternal. But Jesus Christ is the Creator of all things; therefore Jesus Christ must be, according to the plain construction of the apostle's words, truly and properly God.

II. As, previously to creation, there was no being but God, consequently the great First Cause must, in the exertion of His creative energy, have respect to Himself alone; for he could no more have respect to that which had no existence, than he could be moved by non-existence to produce existence or creation; the Creator, therefore, must make every thing for himself.

Should it be objected that Christ created officially, or by delegation, I answer, this is impossible; for, as creation requires absolute and unlimited power, or Omnipotence, there can be but one Creator, because it is impossible that there can be two or more Omnipotents, Infinities, or Eternals. It is therefore evident, that creation cannot be effected officially, or by delegation; for this would imply a Being conferring the office, and delegating such power; and that the Being to whom it was delegated was a dependent being; consequently not unoriginated and eternal: but this, the nature of creation proves to be absurd.—1. The thing being impossible in itself, because no limited being could produce a work that necessarily requires Omnipotence. 2. It is impossible; because if Omnipotence be delegated, he to whom it is delegated, had it not before; and he who delegates it, ceases to have it; and consequently ceases to be God; and the other, to whom it was delegated, becomes God; because such attributes, as those with which he is supposed to be invested, are essential to the nature of God. On this supposition, God ceases to exist, though infinite and eternal; and another, not naturally infinite and eternal, becomes such: and thus an infinite and eternal Being ceases to exist, and another infinite and eternal Being is produced in time, and has a beginning, which is absurd. Therefore, as Christ is the creator, he did not create by delegation, or in any official way.

18 And^a he is the head of the body, the church: who is the beginning,^b the first-born from the dead: that^c in all things he might have the pre-eminence.

19 For it pleased^d the Father that^e in him should all fulness dwell;

^a 1 Eph. 1, 10, 22 & 15 & 23. ^b 1 Cor. 11, 3.—^c Acts 26, 23. ^d 1 Cor. 15, 20, 23. Rev. 1, 5.—^e In Or, among all.—^f John 1, 15 & 3, 34. Ch. 2, 9 & 3, 11.

Again, if he had created by delegation, or officially, it would have been for that Being who gave him that office, and delegated to him the requisite power; but the text says, that all things were made by Him, and non Him, which is a demonstration that the apostle understood Jesus Christ to be truly and essentially God.

III. As all creation necessarily exists in time, and had a commencement, and there was an infinite duration in which it did not exist; whatever was before or prior to that, must be no part of creation; and the Being who existed prior to creation, and before all things, all existence of every kind, must be the unoriginated and eternal God: but St. Paul says, Jesus Christ was before all things; ergo, the apostle conceived Jesus Christ to be truly and essentially God.

IV. As every effect depends upon its cause, and cannot exist without it; so creation, which is an effect of the power and skill of the Creator, can only exist and be preserved by a continuance of that energy that first gave it being. Hence God, as the Preserver, is as necessary to the continuance of all things as God the Creator was to their original production. But this preserving or continuing power is here ascribed to Christ; for the apostle says, And by Him do all things consist; for, as all being was derived from Him, as its cause; so all being must subsist by him, as the effect subsists by and through its cause. This is another proof that the apostle considered Jesus Christ to be truly and properly God, as he attributes to Him the preservation of all created things; which property of preservation, belongs to God alone;—ergo, Jesus Christ is, according to the plain obvious meaning of every expression in this text, truly, properly, independently, and essentially God.

Such are the reasonings to which the simple letter of these two verses necessarily leads me. I own it is possible that I may have misapprehended this awful subject; for, humanum est errare et necesse; but I am not conscious of the slightest intentional flaw in the argument. Taking, therefore, the apostle as an uninspired man, giving his own view of the Author of the Christian religion, it appears, beyond all controversy, that himself believed Christ Jesus to be God: but, considering him as writing under the inspiration of the Holy Ghost; then we have, from the plain grammatical meaning of the words which he has used, the fullest demonstration, (for the spirit of God cannot lie,) that He who died for our sins, and redemption, was God over all. And, as God alone can give salvation to men, and God only can remit sin; hence, with the strictest propriety, we are commanded to believe on the Lord Jesus, with the assurance that we shall be saved.—Glory be to God for this unspeakable gift!

18. He is the head of the body. What the apostle has said in the two preceding verses, refers to the Divine nature of Jesus Christ: he now proceeds to speak of his human nature; and to show how highly that is exalted beyond all created things; and how, in that, He is Head of the church; the author and dispenser of light, life, and salvation, to the Christian world; or, in other words, that from Him as the man, in whom the fulness of the Godhead bodily dwelt, all the mercy and salvation of the Gospel system is to be received.

The beginning, the first-born from the dead. In 1 Cor. xv. 20. Christ is called the first-fruits of them that sleep; and here the chief and first-born from the dead: He being the first that ever resumed the natural life, with the employment of all its functions, never more to enter the empire of death, after having died a natural death; and in such circumstances as precluded the possibility of deception. The apex, chief, head, or first, answers in this verse to the ἀρχή, or first-fruits. 1 Cor. xv. 20. Jesus Christ is not only the first who rose from the dead, to die no more; but he is the first-fruits of human beings; for, as surely as the first-fruits were an indication and pledge of the harvest, so surely was the resurrection of Christ the proof that all mankind should have a resurrection from the dead.

That in all—he might have the pre-eminence. That he might be considered, in consequence of his mediatorial office, as possessing the first place in, and being chief over, all the nature with which the great Creator condescended to unite himself, should be set over all the works of His hands?

19. For it pleased the Father that in him should all fulness dwell. As the words of the Father, are other in the text, some have translated the verse thus: For in him it seemed right that all fulness should dwell; that is, that the majesty, power, and goodness of God, should be manifested in and by Christ Jesus; and thus, by him, the Father reconciles all things to himself. The ἀπαρκα, or fulness, must refer here to the Divine nature dwelling in the man Christ Jesus.

20. And having made peace through the blood of his cross] Peace between God and man; for man being in a sinful state, and there being no peace to the wicked, it required a reconciliation to be made to restore peace between heaven and earth; but peace could not be made without an atonement for sin; and the consequence shows, that the blood of Christ shed on the cross, was necessary to make this atonement.

To reconcile all things unto himself] The enmity was on the part of the creature: though God is angry with the wicked every day; yet He is never unwillingly to be reconciled.—But man, whose carnal mind is enmity to God, is naturally averse from this reconciliation: it requires, therefore, the blood of the cross to atone for the sin; and the influence of the Spirit to reconcile the transgressor to Him against whom he has offended! See the notes on 2 Cor. v. 19, &c.

Things in earth, or things in heaven.] Much has been said on this very obscure clause; but, as it is my object not to write dissertations but notes, I shall not introduce the opinions of learned men, which have as much ingenuity as variety to recommend them. If the phrase be not a kind of collective phrase, to signify all the world, or all mankind, as Dr. Hammond supposed, the things in heaven may refer, according to some, to those persons who died under the Old Testament dispensation; and who could not have a title to glory but through the sacrificial death of Christ; and the apostle may have intended these merely to show, that, without this sacrifice, no human beings could be saved; not only those who were then on the earth, and to whom, in their successive generations, the Gospel should be preached, but even those who had died before the incarnation; and, as those of them that were faithful, were now in a state of blessedness, they could not have arrived there but through the blood of the cross; for the blood of calves and goats could not take away sin.—After all, the apostle probably means the Jews and the Gentiles; the state of the former being always considered a sort of Divine or celestial state; while that of the latter was reputed to be merely earthly; without any mixture of spiritual or heavenly good. It is certain, that a grand part of our Lord's design, in His incarnation and death, was to reconcile the Jews and the Gentiles, and make them one fold under Himself, the great Shepherd and Bishop of souls. That the enmity of the Jews was great against the Gentiles, is well known; and that the Gentiles held them in supreme contempt, is not less so.—It was, therefore, an object worthy of the mercy of God, to form a scheme that might reconcile these two grand divisions of mankind: and, as it was His purpose to reconcile and make them one, we learn from this circumstance, as well as from many others, that His design was to save the whole human race.

21. And you, that were some time alienated] All men are alienated from God; and all are enemies in their minds to Him; and show it by their wicked works; but this is spoken particularly of the Gentiles. The word ἀλλοτρίω, which we render to alienate, to give to another, to estrange, expresses the state of the Gentiles: while the Jews were, at least by profession, dedicated to God, the Gentiles were alienated; that is, given up to others: they worshipped not the true God, but had gods many, and lords many, to whom they dedicated themselves, their religious service, and their property. The verb ἀλλοτρίω, to alienate, being compounded here with the preposition ἀπ, from, signifies to alienate; to estrange utterly; to be wholly the property of another. Thus, the Gentiles had alienated themselves from God; and were alienated, or rejected by Him, because of their wickedness and idolatry.

Enemies in your mind] They had the carnal mind, which is enmity against God; and this was expressed in their outward conduct, by wicked works.—See the note on Rom. v. 10. The mind is taken here for all the soul, heart, affections, passions, &c.

22. In the body of his flesh] By Christ's assumption of a human body, and dying for man, he has made an atonement for sin, through which men become reconciled to God and to each other.

ten His law in your hearts; so that His love shed abroad in your hearts, becomes the principle and motive to every action. The tree, therefore, being good, the fruit is also good.

And unreprouvable] For, being filled with love, joy, peace, meekness, gentleness, and goodness; against these, there is no law; and, as they were called to love God with all their heart, soul, mind, and strength, and their neighbour as themselves; the whole spirit and design of the law was fulfilled in them: for love is the fulfilling of the law.

In his sight.] At the day of judgment. None can enjoy heaven, who has not been reconciled to God here; and shown forth the fruits of that reconciliation in being made holy and unblemished; that when they come to be judged, they may be found unreprouvable.

If ye continue in the faith] This will be the case, if you, who have already believed in Christ Jesus, continue in that faith; grounded in the knowledge and love of God; and settled, made firm and perseveringly steadfast in that state of salvation.

And be not moved away] Not permitting yourselves to be seduced by false teachers.

The hope of the Gospel] The resurrection of the body, and the glorification of it and the soul together, in the realms of blessedness. This is properly the Gospel more.

To every creature which is under heaven] A Hebraism for the whole human race; and particularly referring to the two grand divisions of mankind, the Jews and Gentiles; to both of these the Gospel had been preached; and to each, salvation by Christ had been equally offered. And, as none had been excluded from the offers of mercy; and Jesus Christ had tasted death for every man; and the Jews and Gentiles, in their great corporate capacity, had all been invited to believe the Gospel; therefore, the apostle concludes, that the Gospel was preached to every creature under heaven; as being offered without restrictions or limitations to these two grand divisions of mankind, including the whole human race.

24. Rejoice in my sufferings for you] St. Paul always considers his persecutions, as far as the Jews were concerned in them, as arising from this simple circumstance, his asserting that God had chosen the Gentiles, and called them to enjoy the very same privileges with the Jews; and to constitute one church with them.

It was on this account that the Jews attempted his life at Jerusalem; when, in order to save it, he was obliged to appeal to Cæsar; the consequences of which persecution he was now suffering in his imprisonment in Rome.—See on chapter iv. 2.

That which is behind of the afflictions of Christ] I have still some afflictions to pass through, before my race of glory be finished; afflictions, which fall on me on account of the Gospel, such as Christ bore from the same persecuting people.

It is worthy of remark, that the apostle does not say παθηματα, the passion of Christ; but simply ταπεινας, the afflictions; such as are common to all good men who bear a testimony against the ways and fashions of a wicked world. In these, the apostle had his share; in the passion of Christ, he could have none: He trod the wine-press alone; of the people, there were none with Him.

His body's sake] Believers both of Jews and Gentiles, who form that one body, of which Christ is the head.

25. Whereof I am made a minister] Having received especial commission from God, to preach salvation to the Gentiles.

According to the dispensation] Κατὰ τὴν οἰκονομίαν, according to the Gospel economy, or institution, the scheme or plan of salvation by Christ crucified.

To fulfil the word of God] The Greek, πληρῶσαι τὸν λόγον τοῦ Θεοῦ, may be translated, fully to preach the doctrine of God.—See Rom. xv. 19, and the note there. Were we to take the word in its common meaning, it might signify to accomplish the purpose of God, as predicted by the prophets.

26. The mystery which hath been hid] The mystery is this, that God had designed to grant the Gentiles the same privileges with the Jews; and to make them his people who were not his people. That this is what St. Paul means by the mystery, see Eph. iii. 3, &c.

Made manifest to his saints] It is fully known to all who have embraced the doctrine of Christ crucified: to all Christians.

27. The riches of the glory] God manifests to these how abundantly glorious this Gospel is among the Gentiles; and how effectual is this doctrine of Christ crucified to the salvation of multitudes.

Which is Christ in you, the hope of glory.] In this, and the following verse, there are several remarkable particulars:

1. We find here the sum and substance of the apostle's preaching.

2. He preached Christ, as the only Saviour of sinners.

3. He proclaimed this Christ as being in them: for the design of the Gospel is to put men in possession of the Spirit and power of Christ; to make them partakers of the Divine nature; and thus prepare them for an eternal union with Himself. Should it be said that the preposition in, should be translated among, it amounts to the same; for Christ was among them to enlighten, quicken, purify, and refine them; and thus he could not do without dwelling in them.

4. He preached this present, and indwelling Christ, as the hope of glory; for no man could rationally hope for glory who had not the pardon of his sins; and whose nature was not sanctified. And none could have pardon but through the blood of His cross; and none could have glorification, but through the indwelling, sanctifying Spirit of Christ.

5. We see the manner in which the apostles preached.

1. They warned every one; they showed every man his danger; they proved that both Jews and Gentiles were under sin; and that the wrath of God was revealed against all iniquity, and unrighteousness of men; that time and life were uncertain; and that now was the day of salvation.

2. They taught every man in all wisdom; they considered the world in a state of ignorance and darkness; every man being, through sin, ignorant of himself and God; and the apostles taught them to know themselves, viz. that they were sinners, wretched, helpless, and perishing; and they taught them to know God, in His purity, justice, and truth; and in His mercy through Christ Jesus. Thus they instructed men in all wisdom, for the knowledge of a man's self, and his God, constitute all that is essentially necessary to be known for present and eternal happiness.

3. The end which the apostles had in view in this preaching, was Christ; to present every man perfect in Christ Jesus. The words, εὐαγγέλιον Χριστοῦ, perfect in, or through Christ, signify two things—1. That they should be thoroughly instructed in the doctrines of Christianity, so that they should know the truth, as it is in Jesus. 2. That they should be made partakers of the grace of the Gospel, so that they might be saved from all their sins, and be filled with his fullness. The succeeding chapter amply proves that nothing less than this entered into the apostle's design. Men may dispute as they please about Christian perfection; but, without it, no soul shall ever see God. He who is not saved from all sin here, cannot, to his joy, see God hereafter. This perfection, of which the apostle speaks, and to which he laboured to bring all men, was something to be attained in and through Christ. The apostles preached Christ in the people; and they preached Him as crucified for mankind. He who died for them, 29 [†] Whereunto I also labour, [†] striving [†] according to his working, which worketh in me mightily.

21 Cor 15 16—4 Ch 2 1—u Eph 1 19 & 2 7, 20.

was to live in them; and fill their whole souls with his own purity. No indwelling sin can be tolerated by an indwelling Christ; for, he came into the world to save his people from their sins.

IV. We see who were the objects of the apostle's ministry. The Jews and Gentiles; πᾶσα ἀνθρώπων, every man, the whole human race. Every man had sinned; and, for every sinner, Christ had died; and He died for them that they might be saved from all their sins. The apostles never restrained the offices of salvation; they made them frankly to all, believing that it was the will of God that all should believe and be saved; hence they warned, and taught every man that they might, at the day of judgment, present every man perfect in Christ Jesus: for, although their own personal ministry could not reach all the inhabitants of the earth; yet it is by the doctrines which they preached, and by the writings which they have left on record, that the earth is to be filled with the knowledge and glory of God, and the souls of men brought to the enjoyment of the fullness of the blessing of the Gospel of peace.

29. Whereunto I also labour] "In order to accomplish this end, I labour with the utmost zeal and earnestness; and with all that strength with which God has most powerfully furnished me." Whoever considers the original words, ἀγωνίζομαι κατὰ τὴν ἐνεργίαν αὐτοῦ τὴν ἐπισημαίνουσαν—ἐν δυνάμει, will find that no verbal translation can convey their sense. God worked energetically in St. Paul; and he struggled energetically with God; and all this was in reference to the salvation of mankind.

1. The preceding chapter contains the highest truths in the Christian religion, conveyed in language peculiar to this apostle; a language never taught by man, clothing ideas, as vast as the human mind can grasp; and both coming immediately from that inspiration of the Almighty which giveth understanding.

2. What the apostle says on the Godhead of Christ has already been distinctly noted; and from this we must conclude, that unless there be some secret way of understanding the 16th and 17th verses, which God has nowhere revealed, taken in their sober and rational sense and meaning, they must for ever settle this very important point. Let any man of common sense and reason hear these words, whose mind had not been previously warped by any sentiment on the subject; and who only knew, in religious matters, this one great truth, that there is a God; and that He made and governs all things; and then let it be asked, of whom doth the apostle speak this? Would he not immediately answer, He speaketh of God. As to the difficulties on this subject, we must consider them difficulties rather to our limited intellect, than as belonging to the subject. We can know but little of an infinite and eternal Being; nothing, properly speaking, but what Himself is pleased to reveal. Let us receive this with gratitude and reverence.

CHAPTER II.

The apostle shows his great concern for the church at Colosse, and at Laodicea; and exhorts them to steadfastness in the faith, and to beware of being seduced by specious and enticing words, 1—5. And to walk in Christ, as they had been taught, and to abound in faith and holiness, 6, 7. To beware of false teachers, who strove to pervert the Gospel, and to lead their minds from Him in whom the fullness of the Godhead dwells; with whom they were filled; by whom they had received spiritual circumcision; and into whom they were baptized, and were quickened, and raised from a death of sin, to a life of righteousness, 8—12. He points out their former state, and the great things which Christ had done for them, 13—15. Warns them against particular tenets of the Judaizing teachers, relative to meats, drinks, holidays, festivals, and the specious pretences of deceivers, 16—19. And shows, that all the things taught by these, though they had a show of wisdom, yet perished in the using, and were the commandments and doctrine of men, 20—23. [A. M. cir. 4066.

NOTES.—Verse 1. What great conflict] The word αγων, which we here render conflict, is to be understood as implying care and solicitude; accompanied, undoubtedly, with the most fervent application to the throne of grace in their behalf. The αγωνισμα, of the preceding verse, gave the apostle occasion to use the word αγων, here. He agonized with God, and his agony was for them.

Laodicea] A city of Asia Minor, on the borders of Caria, Phrygia, and Lydia. It was originally called Diospolis, or the city of Jupiter; and afterward Rhœus; but obtained the name of Laodicea from Laodice, the wife of Antiochus. It is now called Ladik. It was formerly celebrated for its commerce, and the fine black wool of its sheep. Colosse, or the city of the Colossians, lay between it and Hierapolis. This Hierapolis was also a town of Phrygia, famous for its hot baths: it is now called Bambuckholas.

has been conjectured that St. Paul had never been at either Colosse or Laodicea; and this, from the letter of the text, appears probable; and yet, his having passed more than once through this country, preaching and strengthening the churches, renders it very improbable. It is, therefore, most likely that we should understand the apostles as speaking collectively, that he had the most earnest concern, not only for the welfare of those churches with which he was acquainted, such as Colosse and Laodicea; but also for those to whom he was not personally known.

2. That their hearts might be comforted] That they might have continual happiness in God, having constant affiance in him.

of Christ cannot be in union with God, unless it have unity in itself ; and, without love, this unity is impossible.

Unto all riches of the full assurance of understanding] That is, that they might have the most indubitable certainty of the truth of Christianity, of their own salvation, and of the general design of God, to admit the Gentiles into his church. This is the grand mystery of God, which was now laid open by the preaching of the Gospel.

And of the Father, and of Christ] These words are variously written in different MSS. Versions, and Fathers.—The mystery of God—of God in Christ—of God who is Christ—of God concerning Christ—of God who is Christ—of the Father of Christ—of God and Christ—of God the Father of Christ—of God the Father, and our Lord Christ—of God and the Father of Christ—of God the Father, in Christ—of the God Christ Jesus, the Father and Lord, &c. &c. &c.

This great variety of versions leaves the strongest presumption that the words in question are glosses which have crept into the text ; and are of no authority. Griesbach has left them out of the text.

3. In whom are hid] Or rather, in which ; referring to the mystery mentioned above. In this glorious scheme of Christianity, all the treasures, the abundance and excellency of wisdom and knowledge, are contained. No scheme of salvation, or Divine knowledge, ever equalled, in its depth and excellency, the Gospel plan. A scheme which the wisdom of God alone could devise ; and which his power and infinite mercy alone could accomplish.

4. Lest any man should beguile you] The word παραλογίζεσθαι, means to deceive by sophistry, or subtle reasoning, in which all the conclusions appear to be fairly drawn from the premises ; but the premises are either assumed without evidence, or false in themselves ; but this not being easily discovered, the unthinking or unwary are carried away by the conclusions which are drawn from these premises. And this result is clearly intimated by the term ραβδολογία, enticing words, plausible conclusions, or deductions from this mode of reasoning. The apostle seems to allude to the Gentile philosophers, who were notorious for this kind of argumentation. Plato and Socrates are not free from it.

5. For though I be absent in the flesh] It is hardly possible that such words as these, in this verse, could have been used to perfect strangers ; they argue a considerable knowledge of the people, and a knowledge founded on personal acquaintance. The original is exceedingly soft and inusual :

Εν γὰρ καὶ τῇ ἀουσίᾳ ἄρτι.
Ἀλλὰ τὸ πνεῦμα ὄντι ὡς ἐν ἐμῇ,
Χαίρων καὶ βλεπόντων ὑμῶν τὴν ψαῖν, κ. τ. λ.

The whole verse shows that this church was sound in doctrine, and strict in discipline. They had steadfast faith in Christ ; and regular order or discipline among themselves.

6. As ye have therefore received Christ Jesus] Many persons lay a certain stress on the words as and so, and make various fine heads of discourses from them, viz. As ye received Christ in a spirit of humility, so walk in Him ; as ye received Him in a spirit of faith, so walk in Him, &c. &c. This may be all proper in itself ; but nothing of the kind was intended by the apostle. His meaning is simply this : " Seeing ye have embraced the doctrine of Christ, continue to hold it fast ; and not permit yourselves to be turned aside by sophistical or Judaizing teachers."

7. Rooted and built up in him] It is not usual with the apostle to employ this double metaphor ; taken partly from the growth of a tree, and the increase of a building. They are to be rooted ; as the good seed had been already sown, it is to take root ; and the roots are to spread far, wide, and deep. They are to be grounded ; as the foundation has already been laid, they are to build thereon. In the one case, they are to bear much fruit ; in the other, they are to grow up to be a habitation of God through the Spirit. See the notes on Eph. ii. 21, 22, and iii. 17.

Abounding therein with thanksgiving] No limitation is ever set to the operations of God on the soul ; or to the growth of the soul in the knowledge, love, and image of God. Those who are brought into such a state of salvation, should abound in gratitude, and loving obedience, as they grow in grace.

8. Beware lest any man spoil you] The word ἐκστερησέτω, from ἐκ, pre, and ἀγνν, to lead or carry away, signifies to be robbed or spoiled of their goods, as if by violence or rapine. Their goods was the salvation they had received from Christ ; and both the Gentile and Jewish teachers endeavoured to deprive them of these, by perverting their minds, and leading them off from the truths of Christianity.

Philosophy and vain deceit] Or the vain, or empty deceit of philosophy ; such philosophizing as the Jewish and Gentile teachers used. As the term philosophy stood in high repute among the Gentiles, the Jews of this time affected it, and both Philo and Josephus use the word to express the whole of the Mosaic institutions. So the former, οὐ κατὰ Μωσῆν φιλοσοφοῦντες, "those who embrace the philosophy of Moses."

Phil. De Nomin. Muland. And the latter, τρεῖς παρὰ Ἰουδαίους εἶδη φιλοσοφείαν, "there are three systems of philosophy among the Jews." Bell. Jud. lib. ii. cap. 8. sec. 2. meaning the Pharisees, Sadducees, and Essenes, as immediately follows. The Jewish philosophy, such as is found in the Cabala, Kabbalah, and other works, deserves the character of vain deceit, in the fullest sense and meaning of the words. The inspired writers excepted, the Jews have ever been the most puerile, absurd, and ridiculous reasoners in the world. Even Rabbi Maimon, or Maimonides, the most intelligent of them all, is often, in his master-piece, the Moreh Nevuchim, the teacher of the perplexed, most deplorably empty and vain.

After the rudiments of the world] According to the doctrine of the Jewish teachers ; or, according to the Mosaic institutions, as explained and glossed by the scribes, Pharisees, and rabbins, in general. We have often seen, that ἡτοιμασμένον ἡαυτον ἡαυτον ἡαυτον, this world, of which τὸν κόσμον τούτον, is a literal translation, is frequently used to express the Jewish system of rites, ceremonies, and institutions in general ; what the apostle calls the tradition of men ; namely, what men, unauthorized by God, have taught as doctrines received from Him. Our Lord frequently refers to, and condemns these traditions.

Not after Christ] Not according to the simple doctrine of Christ ; viz. He died for our offences : believe on the Lord Jesus, and thou shalt be saved.

9. For in him dwelleth all the fullness] This is opposed to the vain or empty doctrine of the Gentile and Jewish philosophers : there is a fullness in Christ suited to the empty, destitute state of the human soul ; but in the philosophy of the Jews and Gentiles, nothing like this was found ; nor indeed in the more refined and correct philosophy of the present day. No substitute has ever been found for the grace of the Lord Jesus ; and those who have sought for one, have disquieted themselves in vain.

By the Godhead, or Deity, Θεωτης, we are to understand the state or being of the Divine Nature ; and, by the fullness of that Deity, the infinite attributes essential to such a nature.

Bodily.] Ζωτικως, signifies truly, really, in opposition to τυπικως, figuratively. There was a symbol of the Divine presence in the Hebrew tabernacle, and in the Jewish temple ; but in the body of Christ, the Deity, with all its plenitude of attributes, dwelt really, and substantially ; for so the word σωματικός, means ; and so it was understood by the ancient Greek Fathers, as is fully shown by EICHER, in his Thesaurus, under the word.

"The fullness of the Godhead dwelt in Christ bodily," as opposed to the Jewish tabernacle or temple ; truly, and really, in opposition to types and figures ; not only effectually, as God dwells in good men, but substantially, or personally, by the strictest union, as the soul dwells in the body ; so that God and man is one Christ." See Parkhurst.

10. And ye are complete in him] Καὶ ἐπεὶ ἐν αὐτῷ πληρωμένοι, and ye are filled with him. Our word complete quite destroys the connexion subsisting in the apostle's ideas. The philosophy of the world was empty, κενὴ ; but there was a πληρωμα, or fullness in Christ : the Colossians were empty, spoiled and deprived of every good, while following the empty philosophy, and groundless traditions of Jewish and Gentile teachers ; but since they had received Christ Jesus, they were πληρωμένοι, filled with Him. This is the true meaning of the word ; and, by this, the connexion and assemblage of ideas in the apostle's mind are preserved. No fanciful completeness in Christ of a believer, while incomplete in himself, is either expressed or intended by St. Paul. It is too bad a doctrine to exist in the oracles of God.

The head of all principality.] See the notes on chap. i. 16, 17.

11. In whom also ye are circumcised] All that was designed by circumcision, literally performed, is accomplished in them that believe through the Spirit and power of Christ. It is not a cutting off a part of the flesh, but a putting off the body of the sins of the flesh, through the circumcision of Christ ; He having undergone and performed this, and all other rites, necessary to qualify Him to be a mediator between God and man ; for being made under the law, He was subject to all its ordinances ; and every act of His, contributed to the salvation of men. But, by the circumcision of Christ, the operation of His grace and Spirit may be intended : the law required the circumcision of the flesh : the Gospel of Christ required the circumcision of the heart. The words τὸν ἀπαρτῶν, of the sins, are omitted by ABCD'EFG several others, by the Coptic, Ethiopic, Armenian, Vulgate, and Itala ; and by Clement Athanasius, Basil, Cyrill, and several others. Griesbach has omitted them.

12. Buried with him in baptism] Alluding to the immersions practised in the case of adults, wherein the person appeared to be buried under the water, as Christ was buried in the heart of the earth. His rising again the third day, and their emerging from the water, was an emblem of the resurrection of the body; and in them, of a total change of life.

The faith of the operation of God] They were quickened, changed, and saved, by means of faith in Christ Jesus; which faith was produced by the operation or energy of God. Believing, is the act of the soul; but the grace or power to believe, comes from God himself.

13. And you, being dead in your sins] See the notes on Eph. i. 1, &c.

The uncleanness of your flesh] This must refer to that part of the Colossian church which was made up of converted heathens; for the heathens alone were unclean.

14. Blotting out the handwriting of ordinances] By the hand-writing of ordinances, the apostle most evidently means the ceremonial law; this was against them, for they were bound to fulfil it; and it was contrary to them, as condemning them for their neglect and transgression of it. This law God himself has blotted out.

Blotting out the hand-writing, is probably an allusion to Num. v. 23, where the curses written in the book, in the case of the woman suspected of adultery, are directed to be blotted out with the bitter waters. And there can be little doubt of a farther allusion; viz. to the custom of discharging the writing from parchment, by the application of such a fluid as the muric acid, which immediately dissolves those ferruginous calcs which constitute the blackening principle of most inks. But the East India inks, being formed only of simple black, such as burnt ivory or cork, and gum water, may be wiped clean off from the surface of the paper or parchment, by the application of a wet sponge, and leave not one legible vestige remaining; this I have often proved.

Nailing it to his cross] When Christ was nailed to the cross, our obligation to fulfil these ordinances was done away. There may be another reference here to some ancient mode of annulling legal obligations, by nailing them to a post; but I do not recollect at present an instance or example. Antiquated laws are said to have been thus abrogated.

15. And having spoiled principalities and powers] Here is an allusion to the treatment of enemies when conquered; they are spoiled of their armour, so much the word ἀρσενεύω implies; and they are exhibited with contumely and reproach to the populace; especially when the victor has the honour of a triumph; to the former of which there is an allusion in the words ἐκείνους ἐν παντί, making a public exhibition of them; and to the latter, in the words ὡπαυξάνοντες ὀνόμας, triumphing over them. And the principalities and powers refer to the emperors, kings, and generals, taken in battle, and reserved to grace the victor's triumph. It is very likely that, by the αἰσας καὶ ἐξουσίας, principalities and powers, over whom Christ triumphed, the apostle means the ῥωμαιοὶ Nesioth, and ῥωμαιοὶ Roshah, who were the rulers and chiefs in the synhedrim and synagogues; and who had great authority among the people, both in making constitutions, and explaining traditions. The propagation of Christianity in Judea, quite destroyed their spiritual power and domination; just as the propagation of Protestantism, which was Christianity revived, destroyed, wherever it appeared, the false doctrine and domination of the pope of Rome.

In it.] The words ἐν αὐτῷ, refer rather to Christ, than to the cross, if indeed they be genuine; of which there is much reason to doubt, as the Versions and Fathers differ so greatly in quoting them. Griesbach has left them out of the text.

16. Let no man—judge you, in meat, or in drink] The apostle speaks here in reference to some particulars of the hand-writing of ordinances, which had been taken away, viz. the distinction of meats and drinks, what was clean, and what unclean, according to the law; and the necessity of observing certain holidays or festivals; such as the new moons, and particular sabbaths, or those which should be observed with more than ordinary solemnity; all these had been taken out of the way, and nailed to the cross, and were no longer of moral obligation. There is no intimation here that the Sabbath was done away, or that its moral use was superseded, by humility and worshipping of angels, intruding into those things which he hath not seen, vainly puffed up by his fleshly mind,

19. And not holding^a the head, from which all the body by joints and bands having nourishment ministered, and knit together, increaseth with the increase of God.

the introduction of Christianity. I have shown elsewhere, that remember the Sabbath-day to keep it holy, is a command of perpetual obligation, and can never be superseded but by the final termination of time. As it is a type of that rest which remains for the people of God, of an eternity of bliss, it must continue in full force till that eternity arrives: for no type ever ceases till the antitype be come. Besides, it is not clear that the apostle refers at his to the Sabbath in this place, whether Jewish or Christian; his τοὺς σαββάτους, of sabbaths, or weeks, most probably refers to their feasts of weeks; of which much has been said in the notes on the Pentateuch.

17. Which are a shadow] All these things were types; and must continue in force till the Christ, whom they represented, came: the apostle, therefore, says that the body, the substance or design of them, was of Christ: pointed him out, and the excellent blessings which He has procured. The word σῆμα, shadow, is often used to express any thing imperfect or unsubstantial; while the term σῶμα, body, was used in the opposite sense, and expressed any thing substantial, solid, and firm. The law was but the shadow, or representation, of good things to come: none should rest in it; and that it pointed out is to be sought and obtained in Christ.

18. Let no man beguile you] Μὴ τις ὑμᾶς καταβαστεύω Let no man take the prize from you which the βραβεύς, braves, or judge in the contests, has assigned you, in consequence of your having obtained the victory. Thus, any reader will see, is an allusion to the Olympic and Isthmian games, and to the prizes assigned to those who had obtained the victory in one or more of the contests which there took place. The Colossians had fought and conquered under the direction of Christ; and He, as the sole judge in this contest, had assigned to them the prize: the false teachers, affecting great modesty, humility, and sanctity, endeavoured to turn them aside from the Gospel; and to induce them to end in the flesh who had begun in the Spirit. Against these the apostle warns them.

In a voluntary humility and worshipping of angels] This is a difficult passage; and, in order to explain it, I shall examine the meaning of some of the principal terms of the original:—The word ὑπεικνέω, to will, signifies also to delight; and ταπεινοφροσύνη, signifies not only lowliness or humility of mind, but also affliction of mind; and ταπεινωμένη τῇ ψυχῇ, Lev. xvi. 29, 31, and in many other places, signifies to afflict the soul by fasting, and self-abnegation; and δοξασκία, signifies reverence and modesty. Hence the whole passage has been paraphrased thus:—Let no man spoil you of the prize adjudged to you, who delights in mortifying his body, and walking with the apparent modesty of an angel; affecting superior sanctity in order to gain disciples; intruding into things which he has not seen; and, notwithstanding his apparent humility, his mind is carnal, and he is puffed up with a sense of his superior knowledge and piety. It is very likely that the apostle here alludes to the Essenes, who were remarkably strict and devout, spent a principal part of their time in the contemplation of the Divine Being; abstained from all sensual gratification; and affected to live the life of angels upon earth. With their pretensions, all the apostle says here perfectly agrees; and on this one supposition, the whole of the passage is plain and easy. Many have understood the passage as referring to the adoration of angels, which seems to have been practised among the Jews, who appear (from Tobit xii. 15. Philo in lib. de Somn. Josephus, War, lib. ii. cap. 8. sec. 7.) to have considered them as a sort of mediators between God and man; presenting the prayers of men before the throne, and being, as Philosophy, Μεγάλων βασιλέων ὁφθαλμοὶ καὶ ὦτα, the eyes and ears of the Great King. But this interpretation is not so likely as the foregoing.

19. And not holding the head] Not acknowledging Jesus Christ as the only Saviour of mankind; and the only head or chief of the Christian church; on whom every member of it depends, and from whom each derives both light and life. For a farther explanation of these words, see the notes on Ephes. iv. 16. where the figures and phraseology are the same.

20. If ye be dead with Christ] See the notes on Rom. vi. 3, 5. From the rudiments of the world] Ye have renounced all hope of salvation from the observance of Jewish rites and ceremonies, which were only rudiments, first elements, or the alphabet out of which the whole science of Christianity was composed. We have often seen, that the world, and this world, signify the Jewish dispensation : or the rites, ceremonies, and services performed under it.

Why, as though living in the world? Why, as if ye were still under the same dispensation from which you have been already freed, are ye subject to its ordinances, performing them as if expecting salvation from this performance?

21. Touch not; taste not; handle not These are forms of expression very frequent among the Jews. In Maccath, fol. 21. 1. "If they say to a Nazarite, Don't drink, don't drink; and he, notwithstanding, drinks, he is guilty. If they say, Don't shave, don't shave; and he shaves, notwithstanding, he is guilty. If they say, Don't put on these clothes, don't put on these clothes; and he, notwithstanding, puts on heterogeneous garments, he is guilty."—See more in Schoettgen.

22. Which all are to perish with the using These are not matters of eternal moment; the different kinds of meats were made for the body, and grow into corruption; in like manner, all the rites and ceremonies of the Jewish religion now perish, having accomplished the end of their institution; namely, to lead us to Christ, that we might be justified by faith.

After the commandments and doctrines of men? These words should follow the 20th verse, of which they form a part; and it appears from them, that the apostle is here speaking of the traditions of the elders, and the load of cumbersome ceremonies which they added to the significant rites prescribed by Moses.

23. Which things have indeed a show of wisdom All these prescriptions and rites have indeed the appearance of wisdom, and are recommended by plausible reasons; but they form a worship which God has not commanded; and enjoin macera-tions of the body, accompanied with a humiliation of spirit, that are neither profitable to the soul, nor of any advantage to the body : so that the whole of their religion is nothing worth.

What is here termed will-worship, εὐλαβοῦσκειν, signifies simply a mode of worship which a man chooses for himself, independently of the revelation which God has given. The whole system of Deism is an εὐλαβοῦσκειν, a worship founded in the will or caprices of man, and not in the wisdom or will of God; and it is just as profitable to body and soul, as that of which the apostle speaks. God will be served in his own way; it is right that He should prescribe to man the truths which he is to believe, and the ordinances which he is to use. To refuse to receive His teaching, in order to prefer our own fancied, is to light a farthing candle as a substitute for the noon-day sun. From the beginning of the world, God has prescribed the worship which was best pleasing to Himself; and never left a matter of such moment to man. The nations which have either not had a revelation, or refused to receive that which God has given, show, by their diversity of worship, superstition, absurdity, and in many cases, cruelty; what the state of the whole world have been, had not God, in His infinite mercy, blessed it with a revelation of His will. God has given directions concerning His worship; and He has appointed the seventh day for the peculiar exercises of spiritual duties; other times, He has left to man's convenience; and they abuse the text, who say, that the appointment of particular times and places for religious service is will-worship. God prescribes the thing; and leaves it to man, except in the case of the Sabbath, to appoint the time and the place; nor is it possible to be too frequent in God's worship; no more than to be too fervent.

CHAPTER III.

The apostle exhorts the Colossians to heavenly-mindedness after the example of Christ, that they may be prepared to appear with Him in glory, 1—2. Exhorts them also to mortify their members, and calls to their remembrance their former state, 3—7. Shows how completely they were changed from that state, and gives them various directions relative to truth, compassion, meekness, long-suffering, forgiveness, and charity, 8—14. Shows that they are called to unity and holiness; and commands them to hure the doctrine of Christ dwelling richly in them; and how they should teach and admonish each other, and do every thing in the name of the Lord Jesus, 15—17. The relative duties of wives, 18. Of husbands, 19. Of children, 20. Of fathers, 21. Of servants, 22. He concludes by showing, that he that does wrong, shall be treated accordingly; for God is no respecter of persons, 23—25. [A. M. c. 4066. A. D. c. 62. A. U. C. 814. An. Imp. Neronis Cæs. Aug. 9.]

NOTES.—Verse 1. If ye then ^a be risen with Christ this refers to what he had said, ver. 12. Buried with Him in baptism; wherein also ye are risen with Him. As, therefore, ye have most cordially received the doctrine of Christ, and profess to be partakers of a spiritual religion, that promises spiritual and eternal things; seek those things, and look to be prepared for the enjoyment of them.

2. Set your affection on things above Ταυτο ὀφείετε, love heavenly things: study them: let your hearts be entirely engrossed by them. Now, that ye are converted to God, act in reference to heavenly things, as ye did formerly in reference to those of earth; and vice versa. This is a very good general rule: "Be as much in earnest for heavenly and eternal things, as ye formerly were for those that were earthly and perishing."

3. For ye are dead To all hopes of happiness from the present world; and, according to your profession, should feel no more appetite for the things of this life, than he does whose soul is departed into the invisible state.

Your life is hid with Christ in God. Christ is your treasure; and where your treasure is, there is your heart. Christ lives in the bosom of the Father; as your heart is in Him, ye, also, sit in heavenly places with Christ Jesus. Christ is the life of your souls; and, as He is hidden in the bosom of the Father, so are ye, who live through and in Him.

4. When Christ, who is our life When Christ comes to judge the world, ye shall appear with Him in His glory; and in an eternal state of blessedness.

5. Mortify, therefore, your members Νεκρωσατε, put them to death: the verb is used metaphorically, to signify to deprive a thing of its power; to destroy its strength. Use no member of your body to sin against God; keep all under dominion; and never permit the beast to run away with the man. To gratify any sensual appetite, is to give it the very food and nourishment by which it lives, thrives, and is active. However the body may suffer by excessive sensual indulgences, the appetite increases with the indulgence. Deny yourselves, and let reason rule; and the animal will not get the ascendancy over the rational man. See the notes on Rom. vi. 11, &c.

Inordinate affection Παθος, unatural and degrading passion, brutal lusts. See Rom. i. 26. 27. and the notes there.

Evil concupiscence Εὐκατακακία. As ἐπιθυμία, signifies strong and vehement desire of any kind; it is here joined with κακία, evil, to show the sense more particularly, in which the apostle uses it.

Covetousness, which is idolatry For the covetous man makes his money his God. Now, it is the prerogative of God to confer happiness; every godly man seeks his happiness in God: the covetous man seeks that in his money, which God alone can give; therefore, his covetousness is properly idolatry. It is true, his idol is of gold and silver; but his idolatry is no less criminal on that account.

6. The wrath of God cometh God is angry with such persons; and He inflicts on them the punishment which they deserve.

7. In the which ye also walked sometime When ye were in your unconverted state, ye served divers lusts and pleasures. See on Rom. vii. 5. and Eph. i. 2.

8. But now ye also put off all these See on Eph. iv. 22. Being now converted, sin had no more dominion over them.

Anger, wrath, &c. They had not only lived in the evils mentioned, ver. 5. but also in those enumerated here; and they had not only laid aside the former, but they had laid aside the latter also. They retained no bosom, no easily besetting sin. They were risen with Christ; and they sought the things which were above.

Blasphemy The word seems here to mean injurious and calumnious speaking.

9. Lie not one to another Do not deceive each other: speak the truth in all your dealings; do not say, "My goods are so and so," when you know them to be otherwise. Do not undervalue the goods of your neighbour, when your conscience tells you that you are not speaking the truth. It is naught, it is naught, saith the buyer; but afterward he boasts him; i. e. he underrates his neighbour's property till he gets him persuaded to part with it for less than its worth; and, when he has thus got it, he boasts what a good bargain he has made. Such a knave speaks not truth with his neighbour.

Ye have put off the old man See the notes on Rom. vi. 6 and particularly on Rom. xiii. 11—14. Ye have received a religion widely different from that ye had before: act according to its principles.

11 Where there is neither ⁷ Greek nor Jew, circumcision nor uncircumcision, Barbarian, Scythian, bond nor free: ⁸ but Christ is all, and in all.

12 ⁹ Put on therefore, ¹⁰ as the elect of God, holy and beloved, ¹¹ bowels of mercies, kindness, humbleness of mind, meekness, long suffering;

13 ¹² Forbearing one another, and forgiving one another, if any man have a quarrel against any; even as Christ forgave you, so also do ye.

10. And have put on the new man.] See on Rom. xii. 1, 2. Is renewed in knowledge.] Ignorance was the grand characteristic of the heathen state; KNOWLEDGE of the Christian. The utmost to which heathenism could pretend, was a certain knowledge of nature. How far this went, and how much it fell short of the truth, may be seen in the writings of Aristotle and Pliny. Christianity reveals God himself the author of nature; or, rather, God has revealed himself in the Christian system with which He has blessed mankind. Christianity teaches a man the true knowledge, both of himself and of God; but it is impossible to know one's self, but in the light of God: the famous γνῶθι σεαυτόν, know thyself, was practically only under the Christian religion.

After the image of him that created him.] We have already seen, that God made man in His own image; and we have seen in what that image consisted.—See the notes on Gen. i. 26.—See, also, on Ephes. iv. 23, 24. Does not the apostle refer here to the case of an artist who wishes to make a perfect resemblance of some exquisite form, or person? God, in this case, is the artist; man is the copy; and God, himself, the original, from which this copy is to be taken. Thus, then, man is made by his Creator, not according to the image or likeness of any other being, but according to His own; the image τὸ εἶκαστος, of the Creator. And, as the Divine Nature cannot exist in forms, or fashions, moral qualities, alone, are these which must be produced. Hence, the apostle, interpreting the words of Moses, says, that the image in which man was made, and in which he must be re-made, ἀναμωμοῦ, and γενώμενος ἀνέκω, consists in, knowledge, righteousness, and true holiness.

11 Where there is neither Greek nor Jew.] In which new creation, no inquiry is made what nation the persons belonged to; or from what ancestry spring; whether in Judea or Greece:—

Circumcision, nor uncircumcision.] Nor is their peculiar form of religion of any consideration, whether circumcised like the Jews, or uncircumcised like the Heathens:—

Barbarian, Scythian.] Nor whether of the more or less tractable of the nations of the world: for, although knowledge, and the most refined and sublime knowledge, is the object to be attained; yet, under the teaching and influence of the blessed Spirit, the most dull, and least informed, are perfectly capable of comprehending this Divine science; and becoming wise unto salvation:—

Bond nor free.] Nor does the particular state, or circumstances, in which a man may be found, either help him to, or exclude him from, the benefit of this religion; the slave having as good a title to salvation by grace as the freeman:—

But Christ is all and in all.] All mankind are His creatures; all conditions are disposed and regulated by His Providence; and all human beings are equally purchased by His blood. He, alone, is the source whence all have proceeded; and, to Him, alone, all must return. He is the Maker, Preserver, Saviour, and Judge, of all men.

12 Put on—as the elect of God.] As the principal design of the apostle was to show that God had chosen the Gentiles, and called them to the same privileges as the Jews, and He intended to make them as truly His people as the Jews ever were, he calls them the elect or chosen of God; and, as the Jews, who were formerly the elect, were still beloved, and called to be holy; so he calls the Colossians beloved; and shows them that they are called with the same holy calling.

Bowels of mercies, &c.] Be merciful, not in act merely, but in spirit and affection. In all cases of this kind, let your heart dictate to your hand; be clothed with bowels of mercy; let your tenderest feelings come in contact with the miseries of the distressed, as soon as ever they present themselves. Though I know that to put on, or to be clothed with, are figurative expressions, and mean to assume such and such characters, and qualities; yet there may be a higher meaning here. The apostle would have them to feel the slightest touch of another's misery; and, as their clothes are put over their body, so their tenderest feeling should be always within the reach of the miserable. Let your feelings be at hand; and feel and commiserate as soon as touched.—See on Ephes. iv. 2. Instead of οὐκ ὀκνητοῦ, mercies, in the plural, almost every MSS. of importance, with many of the Fathers, read οὐκ ὀκνητοῦ, bowels of mercy, in the singular. This various reading, makes scarcely any alteration in the sense.

13. Forbearing one another.] Avoid all occasions of irritating or provoking each other.

Forgiving one another.] If ye receive offence, be instantly ready to forgive, on the first acknowledgment of the fault.

Even as Christ forgave you.] Who required no satisfaction, and sought for nothing in you but the broken, contrite

14 And above all these things ¹⁵ put on charity, which is the bond of perfectness.

15 And let the peace of God rule in your hearts, ¹⁶ to the which also ye are called ¹⁷ in one body; ¹⁸ and be ye thankful.

16 Let the word of Christ dwell in you richly in all wisdom; teaching and admonishing one another ¹⁹ in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing ²⁰ with grace in your hearts to the Lord.

17 And ²¹ whatsoever ye do in word or deed, do all in the name heart, and freely forgive you, as soon as you returned to Him. No man should, for a moment, harbour ill-will in his heart to any; but the offended party is not called actually to forgive, till the offender, with sorrow, acknowledge his fault. He should be ready to forgive; and, while he is so, he can neither feel hatred nor malice towards the offender: but, as Christ does not forgive us, till, with penitent hearts, we return unto Him, acknowledging our offences; so those who have trespassed against their neighbour, are not to expect any act of forgiveness from the person they have injured, till they acknowledge their offence. Forgive, says the apostle, καθὼς καὶ ὁ Θεός, even as Christ forgave you: show the same disposition, and the same readiness to forgive your offending brethren, as Christ showed towards you.

14. And above all these things.] Ἐν παντὶ ἐν καρδίᾳ, upon all, over all; as the outer garment envelops all the clothing; so let charity, or love, invest and encompass all the rest. Even bowels of mercy are to be set in motion by love; from love they derive all their feeling, and all their power and promptitude to action. Let this, therefore, be as the upper garment; the surcoat that invests the whole man.

Which is the bond of perfectness.] Love to God and man is not only to cover all, but also to unite and consolidate the whole. It is, therefore, represented here under the notion of a girdle, by which all the rest of the clothing is bound close about the body. To love God with all the heart, soul, mind, and strength, and one's neighbour as one's self, is the perfection which the New Covenant requires, and which the grace and Spirit of Christ work in every sincerely obedient, humble believer; and that very love which is the fulfilling of the law, and the perfection itself which the Gospel requires, is also the bond of that perfection. It is by love to God and man, that love is to be preserved. Love begets love; and the more a man loves God and his neighbour, the more he is enabled to do so. Love, while properly exercised, is ever increasing and re-producing itself.

Instead of ἀγαπᾶτε, perfection, several reputable MSS. with the Itala, read ἑνότης, unity; but the former is doubtless the genuine reading.

15. And let the peace of God rule.] Instead of Θεοῦ, God, Ναὺρον, Christ, is the reading of ABCD'EFG. several others; both the Syriac, the Arabic of Erpen, Coptic, Ethiopic, Armenian, Vulgate, and Itala, with several of the Fathers: on this evidence, Griesbach has inserted it in the text.

Rule in your hearts.] Ἐπαυκροῦ, let the peace of Christ, judge, decide, and govern in your hearts, as the brabeus, or judge, does in the Olympic contests. No heart is right with God, where the peace of Christ does not rule; and the continual prevalence of the peace of Christ is the decisive proof that the heart is right with God. When a man loses his peace, it is an awful proof that he has lost something else; that he has given way to evil, and grieved the Spirit of God. While peace rules, all is safe.

In one body.] We cannot have peace with God, in yourselves, nor among each other, unless ye continue in unity; and, as one body, continue in communion and dependence on Him who is your only head; to this ye are called, it is a glorious state of salvation, and ye should be for ever thankful that ye are thus privileged.

16. Let the word of Christ dwell in you richly.] I believe the apostle means that the Colossians should be well instructed in the doctrine of Christ; that it should be their constant study; that it should be frequently preached, explained, and enforced among them; and that all the wisdom comprised in it should be well understood. Thus the doctrine of God will dwell richly, that is, abundantly among them. But there appears to be here an allusion to the Shechinah or symbol of the Divine presence, which dwelt in the tabernacle, and first temple; and to an opinion common among the Jews, which is thus expressed in Melchita, fol. 38, 4. שכינה שם שבתה כל מקום ששבתה שם עזתו. In whatever place the law is, there the shechinah is present with it. Nor is this a vain supposition; wherever God's word is seriously read, heard, or preached, there is God himself. And in that church or religious society where the truth of God is proclaimed and conscientiously believed, there is the constant dwelling of God. Through bad pointing, this verse is not very intelligible: the several members of it should be distinguished thus: Let the doctrine of Christ dwell richly among you; teaching and admonishing each other in all wisdom; singing, with grace in your hearts unto the Lord, in psalms, hymns, and spiritual songs. This arrangement the original will not only bear; but it absolutely requires it, and is not seen without it. See the note on Ephes. v. 19.

The argu in which is here recommended is widely differ-of the Lord Jesus, giving thanks to God and the Father by him.

18 ^r Wives, submit yourselves unto your own husbands, ^s as it is fit in the Lord.

19 ^r Husbands, love your wives, and be not ^a bitter against them.

20 ^r Children, obey your parents ^w in all things: for this is well pleasing unto the Lord.

21 ^r Fathers, provoke not your children to anger, lest they be discouraged.

ent from what is commonly used in most Christian congregations; a congeries of unmeaning sounds, associated to bundles of nonsensical and often ridiculous repetitions, which at once both deprave and disgrace the church of Christ. Melody, which is allowed to be the most proper for devotional music, is now sacrificed to an exuberant harmony, which requires not only many different kinds of voices, but different musical instruments, to support it. And by these preposterous means, the simplicity of the Christian worship is destroyed; and all edification totally prevented. And this kind of singing is amply proved to be very injurious to the personal piety of those employed in it: even of those who enter with a considerable share of humility and Christian meekness, how few continue to sing with grace in their hearts unto the Lord!

17. Whatever ye do in word or deed] Let your words be right, and your actions upright.

Do all in the name of the Lord Jesus] Begin with Him, and end with Him; invoke His name; and pray for His direction and support in all that ye do; and thus every work will be crowned with all requisite success. Doing every thing in the name of God, and referring every thing to His glory, is as rational as it is pious. Could it be ever supposed that any person would begin a bad work in God's name!—However, it is so. No people in the universe more strictly adhere to the letter of this advice, than the Mohammedans; for they never undertake a work, eat meat, nor write a book, without prefacing all with—بسم الله الرحمن الرحيم Bismillahi, Arrahmani, Arraheemi: "In the name of the most merciful and compassionate God!" Not only books of devotion, but books on all arts and sciences: books of tales and romances; books of poetry, and those on the elements of reading, &c. begin thus. Nay, it is prefixed to لَا إِلَهَ إِلَّا اللَّهُ Lā ilāh illa Nissa, one of the most abominable productions that ever came from the pen of man; and is precisely the same among the Mohammedans, as the infamous work of Nicholas Chorier, called Elegantie Latini Sermonis, falsely attributed to John Meursius, has been among some called Christians. Of both, with a trifling hyperbole, it may be said, "Surely these books were written in hell; and the author of them must certainly be the devil." Give thanks to God] Even praises, as well as prayers, must ascend to God through this Mediator. We have no authority to say that God will accept even our thanksgiving, unless it ascend to Him through Christ Jesus.

22 ^r Servants, obey ^a in all things your masters ^s according to the flesh; not with eye-service, as men-pleasers; but in singleness of heart, fearing God:

23 ^b A I whatsoever ye do, do it heartily, as to the Lord, and not unto men:

24 ^r Knowing that of the Lord ye shall receive the reward of the inheritance; ^d for ye serve the Lord Christ.

25 But be that doeth wrong shall receive for the wrong which he hath done: and ^e there is no respect of persons.

18. Wives, submit yourselves] Having done with general directions, the apostle comes to particular duties, which are commonly called relative; because they only belong to persons in certain situations; and are not incumbent on all. No woman has the duty of a wife to perform, but she who is one; and no man has the duty of a husband to perform, but he who is married.

The directions here to wives, husbands, children, parents, servants, and masters, are so exactly the same in substance with those in Ephes. v. 22—33, and vi. 1—9, that there is no need to repeat what has been said on those passages; and to the notes there, the reader is requested to refer.

As it is fit in the Lord] God commands it; and it is both proper and decent.

19. Be not bitter against them] Wherever bitterness is, there love is wanting. And where love is wanting in the married life, there is hell upon earth.

20. Children, obey—in all things] That is, in the Lord; in every thing that your parents command you, which is not contrary to the will or word of God.

21. Fathers, provoke not] See the notes on Ephes. vi. 4.

22. Servants, obey] See on Ephes. vi. 5—8.

24. The reward of the inheritance] Here, ye have neither lands nor property; ye are servants or slaves. Be not discouraged; ye have an inheritance in store; be faithful unto God and to your employers, and Christ will give you a heavenly inheritance.

25. But he that doeth wrong] It is possible for an unfaithful servant to wrong and defraud his master in a great variety of ways, without being detected: but let all such remember what is here said—He that doeth wrong, shall receive for the wrong which he has done: God sees him, and will punish him for his breach of trust and his dishonesty. Wasting or not taking proper care of the goods of your master, is such a wrong as God will resent. He that is unfaithful in that which is little, will be unfaithful in much, if he have an opportunity; and God alone is the defence against an unfaithful servant.

There is no respect] God neither esteems nor despises any man because of his outward condition and circumstances; for there is no respect of persons with Him. Every man is, in the eye of God, what he is in his soul: if holy, loved; if wicked, despised and rejected.

The duty of masters to their servants. 1. Continence in prayer recommended; to which watchfulness and thanksgiving should be joined, 2. And to pray particularly for the success of the Gospel, 3, 4. Directions concerning walking wisely, redeeming of time, and Godly conversation, 5, 6. He refers them to Tychicus and Onesimus, whom he sends to them, for particulars relative to his present circumstances, 7—9. Mentions the salutations of several then at Rome, of whom he gives some interesting particulars, 10—14. Sends his own salutations to the brethren in Laodicea; and to Nymphas, and the church at his house, 15. Directs this epistle to be read in the church of the Laodiceans; and that to them to be read at Colosse, 16. Directions to Archippus, relative to his ministry, 17. Concludes with salutations to the people at Colosse, to whom he sends his apostolical benediction, 18. [A. M. cir. 4066. A. D. cir. 62. A. U. C. 814. An. Imp. Neronis Cas. Aug. 9.]

NOTES.—Verse 1. Masters, give unto your servants] This verse should have been added to the preceding, to which it properly belongs: and this chapter should have begun with ver. 2.

That which is just and equal.] As it is bondmen or slaves, of whom the apostle speaks, we may at once see with what propriety this exhortation is given. The condition of slaves among the Greeks and Romans, was wretched in the extreme: they could appeal to no law; and they could neither expect justice nor equity. The apostle, therefore, informs those proprietors of these slaves, that they should act towards them both according to justice and equity; for God, their Master, required this of them; and would at last call them to account for their conduct in this respect. Justice and equity required that they should have proper food, proper raiment, due rest, and no more than moderate work. This is a lesson that all masters throughout the universe should carefully learn. Do not treat your servants as if God had made them of an inferior blood to yours.

2. Continue in prayer] This was the apostle's general advice to all; without this, neither wives, husbands, children, parents, servants nor masters, could fulfil the duties, which God, in their respective stations, required of them.

All light, power, and life, come from God; his creatures are 3 ^c Withal praying also for us, that God would ^e open unto us a door of utterance, to speak ^f the mystery of Christ, ^h for which I am also in bonds:

continually dependent upon Him for all these; to earnest, persevering prayer, He has promised every supply; but he who prays not, has no promise. How few wives feel it their duty to pray to God to give them grace to behave as wives! How few husbands pray for the grace suited to their situation, that they may be able to fulfil its duties! The like may be said of children, parents, servants, and masters. As every situation in life has its peculiar duties, trials, &c. so, to every situation, there is peculiar grace appointed. No man can fulfil the duties of any station, without the grace suited to that station. The grace suited to him, as a member of society in general, will not be sufficient for him as a husband, father, or master. Many proper marriages become unhappy in the end, because the parties have not earnestly besought God for that grace necessary for them as husbands and wives. This is the origin of family broils in general; and a proper attention to the apostle's advice, would prevent them all.

Watch in the same] Be always on your guard; and when you have got the requisite grace by praying, take care of it, and bring it into its proper action by watchfulness; by which you will know when, and where, and how, to apply it.

With thanksgiving] Being always grateful to God, who has called you into such a state of salvation; and affords you such abundant means and opportunities to glorify Him.

3. Praying also for us] Let the success and spread of the Gospel be ever dear to you; and neglect not to pray fervently to God that it may have free course, run, and be glorified.

A door of utterance] Θύρα του λόγου. The word θύρα, which commonly signifies a door, or such like entrance into a house, or passage through a wall, is often used metaphorically for an entrance to any business, occasion or opportunity to commence or perform any particular work. So in Acts xiv. 27. the door of faith is opened to the Gentiles, i. e. there is now an opportunity of preaching the Gospel to the nations of the earth. 1 Cor. xvi. 9. A great and effectual door is opened unto me; i. e. I have now a glorious opportunity of preaching the truth to the people of Ephesus. 2 Cor. ii. 12. When I came to Troas, a door was opened unto me; I had a fine opportunity of preaching Christ crucified at that place. So here the θύρα του λόγου, which we translate door of utterance, signifies an occasion, opportunity, or entrance, for the doctrine of the Gospel. The same metaphor is used by the best Latin writers. Cicero, xiii. Ep. 10. Avantia foris aperta sunt—the doors of friendship are opened; there is now an opportunity of reconciliation. And, Ovid Amor. lib. iii. lileg. xii. ver. 12.

Janua per nostras est ad aperta manus.

"The gate is opened by our hands."

Of this use of the word among the Greek writers, Schleusner gives several examples. See also Rev. iii. 8. where the word is used in the same sense. To multiply examples, would be needless; the apostle excites them to pray, not that a door of utterance, i. e. a readiness and fluency of speech, may be given to him and his fellow-labourers, but that they may have an opportunity of preaching the doctrine of Christ; and so the term λόγος is to be understood here, as well as in many other places of the New Testament: in most of which we have either lost or obscured its meaning by translating it word, instead of doctrine.

The mystery of Christ] The Gospel, which had been hidden from all former times, and which revealed that purpose long hidden in the Divine councils, that the Gentiles should be called to enjoy the same privileges with the Jews.

For which I am also in bonds] He was suffering under Jewish malice; and for preaching this very mystery; for they could not bear to hear announced as from heaven, that the Gentiles, whom they considered eternally shut out from any participation of the Divine favour, should be made fellow-heirs with them of the grace of life; much less could they bear to hear that they were about to be reprobated, and the Gentiles elected in their place. It was for asserting these things that they persecuted Paul at Jerusalem; so that to save his life, he was obliged to appeal to Cæsar; and, being taken to Rome, he was detained a prisoner, till his case was fully heard; and he was a prisoner at Rome on this very account, when he wrote this Epistle to the Colossians.—See the note on chap. i. 24.

4. That I may make it manifest] It was a mystery, and he wished to make it manifest; to lay it open, and make all men see it.

5. Walk in wisdom] Act wisely and prudently in reference to them who are without; who yet continue unbelieving Gentiles, or persecuting Jews.

The church of Christ was considered an enclosure, a field, or vineyard, well hedged or walled. Those who were not members of it, were considered without; i. e. not under that especial protection and defence which the true followers of Christ had. This has been since called, "the Pale of the Church;" from pala, a stake; or, as Dr. Johnson defines it, "a narrow path of wood, joined above and below to a rail, to enclose grounds." As to be a Christian, was essential to the salvation of the soul; so, to be in the church of Christ, was essential to the being a Christian; therefore it was concluded that "there was no salvation out of the pale of the church." Now this is true in all places where the doctrines of Christianity are preached; but when one description of people, professing Christianity, with their own peculiar mode of worship and creed, arrogate to themselves, exclusive of all others, the title of The Church; and then, on the ground of a maxim which is true in itself, but falsely understood and applied by them, assert that, as they are the church, and there is no church besides, then you must be one of them; believe as they believe, and worship as they worship; or you will be infallibly damned. I say, when this is asserted, every man, who feels he has an immortal spirit, is called on to examine the pretensions of such spiritual monopolists. Now, as the church of Christ is formed on the foundation of the prophets and apostles, Jesus Christ being the chief cornerstone, the doctrines of this Christian church must be sought for in the Sacred Scriptures. As to fathers, councils, and human authorities of all kinds, they are, in this question, I judge than vanity: the Book of God alone must decide. The church which has been so hasty to condemn all others, and, by its own sedes, or self-constituted authority, to make itself the d-terminer of the fates of men, dealing out the mansions of glory to its partisans, and the abodes of endless misery to all those who are out of its antichristian and inhuman pale; this church, I say, has been brought to this standard, and proved, by the Scriptures, to be fallen from the faith of God's elect, and to be most awfully and dangerously corrupt; and that, to be within its pale, of all others professing Christianity, would be the most likely means of endangering the final salvation of the soul. Yet, even in it, many sincere and upright persons may be found, who, in spirit and practice, be- longing to the true church of Christ. Such persons are to be found in all religious persuasions, and in all sorts of Christian societies.

Redeeming the time.] See on Ephes. v. 15.

6. Let your speech be always with grace, seasoned with salt] Let it be such as has a tendency to oppose and preserve from the corruption of sin. The apostle says, "the who, in prayer, omits any word, should be grieved at the omission; for he who does not is like him who is dead, in which there is no salt."—Beauchef, lib. 24. c. 1. Let all your conversation be such as may tend to exemplify and recommend Christ and his cause; let it not only be holy, but wise, agreeable, and intelligent. A harsh method of proposing or defending the doctrines of Christianity only serves to repel from that cause, Gentiles, and from the way of salvation. Let them to use in preserving food from corrupt and rendering it soft, savory and wholesome, has always been made the emblem of wisdom. The word has been also used to express, in composition or conversation, what is terse, comprehensive, useful, elegant, and impressive. The term Altit salis has been used to express some of the principal beauties of the Greek tongue; of such beauties, the Gospel of Christ has an endless store.—See on Matt. v. 13. and Mark ix. 50.

How ye ought to answer every man.] That your discourse may be so judiciously managed, that ye may discern how to treat the prejudices, and meet the objections, both of Jews and Gentiles.

7. All that ye shall Tychicus.] See the note on Eph. vi. 21. Tychicus well knew the apostle's zeal and perseverance in preaching the Gospel; his sufferings on that account; his success in converting both Jews and Gentiles; and the converts which were made in Cæsar's household; he could give these to the Colossians in ample detail; and so one of them, it would not have been prudent to commit to writing.

8. That he may know your estate] Instead of να γνω- ρισατε, that HE may know your affairs, ABD'FG, many others, with the Aethiops, Itala, Thalutæ, and Dinascenus, read να γνω- ρισατε επι εστων, that YE may know our affairs: which is probably the true reading. Tychicus was sent to them, not to know their affairs, but with Onesimus, to carry this epistle, and make the apostle's state known to them; and comfort their hearts by the good news which he brought it. The next verse confirms this meaning.

9. With Onesimus—who is one of you.] Onesimus was a native of some part of Parthia, if not of Colosse itself; and being lately converted to the Christian faith, by the instrumentality of the apostle, he would be able, on this account, to give them satisfactory information concerning the apostle's state, which would be doubly acceptable to them, as he was their countryman.—See the Epistle to Philemon.

All things which are done here.] FG, the Palæstra, Itala, Jerom, and Bede, add here επι εστων, which is done, which we have supplied in Italics in our translation. These brethren could give an account of the transactions at Rome, relative to the apostle and Christianity, which it might be prudent for him to commit to writing.—see on ver. 7. The reign of Nero was not only cruel, but suspicious, jealous, and dangerous.

10. Aristarchus my fellow-prisoner.] Concerning Aristarchus, see Acts xix. 24 xx. 4. and xxvii. 2 and see the note on this latter place. Aristarchus and Epaphras are mentioned as salutors in this epistle; and in that to Philemon, written at the same time; but here he is said to be a prisoner, and Epaphras not. In that to Philemon, Epaphras is said to be a prisoner, and Aristarchus not. One of them is wrong, and one it is uncertain which, unless both were prisoners.—see Wells's Crit. Notes. As Aristarchus had been a zealous and ardent adherent to St. Paul, and followed him in all his journeys, ministering to him in prison, and assisting him in preaching the Gospel in Rome, he might have been imprisoned on this account. We need not suppose that both he and Epaphras were imprisoned at the same time: about the same time they might be imprisoned, but it might be so ordered by the providence of God, 12 * Epaphras, who is one of you, a servant of Christ, saith, ye may stand perfect and complete in all the will of God.

13 For I bear him record, that he hath a great zeal for you, and that that are in Laodicea, and them in Hierapolis.

14 * Luke, the beloved physician, and * Demas, greet you.

15 Salute the brethren which are in Laodicea, and Nymphas, and * the church which is in his house.

that when Aristarchus was imprisoned, Epaphras was at liberty; and while Epaphras was in prison, Aristarchus was at liberty.

This is a very possible, and easily to be conceived case. [Marcus] See the account of this person, Acts xv. 39. Though there had been some difference between the apostle and this Mark; yet, from this, and 2 Tim. iv. 11, we find they were fully reconciled, and that Mark was very useful to St. Paul, in the work of the ministry.

Touching whom ye received commandments. What these were we cannot tell: it was some private communication which had been previously sent to the Colossian church.

11. Jesus, which is called Justus Jesus, Joshua, or Jehoshua, was his name among his countrymen the Jews: Justus was the name which he bore among the Greeks and Romans.

These only [That is, only Aristarchus, Marcus, and Jesus Justus, who were formerly Jews or proselytes: οι οντες εκ προσηλυτων, for they were of the circumcision, and assisted the apostle in preaching the Gospel. There were others who did preach Christianity; but they did it from envy and strife, in order to add affliction to the apostle's bonds. It is evident, therefore, that St. Peter was not now at Rome; else he certainly would have been mentioned in this list; for we cannot suppose that he was in the list of those who preached Christ in an exceptional way, and from impure and unholy motives; indeed, there is no evidence that St. Peter ever saw Rome. And as it cannot be proved that he ever was bishop or pope of that city, the key-stone of the triumphal arch of the pope of Rome is pulled out: this building, therefore, of his supremacy, cannot stand.

12. Epaphras, who is one of you. A native of some part of Phrygia; and probably of Colosse itself.

A servant of Christ. A minister of the Gospel.

Labouring fervently for you. ἁγωνίζομαι, agonizing; very properly expressed by our translators, labouring fervently.

That ye may stand perfect and complete. ἵνα ὑμεν τέλει και πληροῦσται; that ye may stand firm, perfectly instructed, and fully persuaded, of the truth of those doctrines which have been taught you as the revealed will of God: this I believe to be the meaning of the apostle.

Instead of πληροῦσται, complete, or filled up: almost all the MSS. of the Alexandrian Recension, which are considered the most authentic and correct, have πληροφόρησται, that ye may be fully persuaded. The word πληροφόρια, signifies such a complete persuasion of the certainty of a thing, as leaves the mind, which has it, neither room nor inclination to doubt; and πληροφόρα, the verb, has the same meaning, viz. to be thus persuaded, or to persuade thus by demonstrative argumentation, and exhibition of unquestionable facts.

This is such a persuasion as the Spirit of God, by means of the Gospel, gives to every sincere and faithful man; and from which arises the solid happiness of the genuine Christian. They who argue against it, prove, at least, that they have not got it.

13. He hath a great zeal for you. Instead of ζῆλον πολλόν, much zeal, ABCD⁷: several others, with Versions and Fathers, read πολὴν τὴν, much labour; they are here nearly of the same meaning, though the latter appears to be the better, and genuine reading.

Laodicea—and Hierapolis. These were both cities of Phrygia, between which Colosse, or the city of Colassia, was situated: see on chap. ii. 1. The latter was called Hierapolis, or the holy city, from the multitude of its temples. Apollo, Diana, Esculapius, and Hygiea, were all worshipped here, as appears by the coins of this city, still extant.

14. Luke, the beloved physician. This is generally supposed to be the same with Luke the evangelist.—See the preface to the notes on this Gospel. Some, however, suppose them to be different persons; because, where it is evident that Luke the evangelist is meant, he never has more than his simple name Luke; and because the apostle is supposed to intend a different person here, he adds, ὁ ἀγαπῶς ὁ ἀγαπῶς, the beloved physician. The word ἰατρος, signifies a healer, and must not be restricted to physician, in the sense in which we use that word: he was surgeon, physician, and dispenser of medicines, &c. for all these were frequently combined in the same person.

15. Salute—Nymphas, and the church—in his house. This person, and his whole family, which probably was very numerous, appear to have received the Gospel: and it seems that, for their benefit and that of his neighbours, he had opened his house for the worship of God. In those primitive times, there were no consecrated places; for it was supposed that the simple setting apart of any place for the worship of God, was a sufficient consecration.—See of these domestic churches, Rom. xvi. 5. 1 Cor. xvi. 19.

16 And when this epistle is read among you, cause that it be read also in the church of the Laodiceans; and that ye likewise read the epistle from Laodicea.

17 And say to Archippus, Take heed to the ministry which thou hast received in the Lord, that thou fulfil it.

18. The salutation by the hand of me Paul. Remember my bonds. Grace be with you. Amen.

16. Cause that it be read also in the church of the Laodiceans. That is, let a copy be taken and sent to them, that it may be read there also. This appears to have been a regular custom in the apostolic church.

That ye likewise read the epistle from Laodicea. Some suppose that this was an epistle sent from Laodicea to the apostle, which he now sent by Aristarchus to the Colossians, that they might peruse it; that thereby they might see the propriety of sending a copy of his epistle to them, to the Laodicean church. Many eminent critics are of this opinion, which appears to me to be both forced and far-fetched. Others think that the Epistle to the Ephesians is the epistle in question; and that it was originally directed to them, and not to the Ephesians.—See the notes on Ephes. i. 1, &c. But others, equally learned, think that there was an epistle, different from that to the Ephesians, sent by St. Paul to the Laodiceans, which is now lost. There was an epistle under this direction, in the times of Theodoret and Jerom, for both of them mention it; but the latter mentions it as apocryphal, Legunt quidam et ad Laodiceenses Epistolam, sed ab omnibus expellitur; "Some read an epistle to the Laodiceans, but it is exploded by all." The seventh Œcumenic council, held in 787, states, that the ancients allowed that there was an epistle with this direction, but that all the orthodox rejected it as superstitious.

An epistle, ad Laodiceenses, is still extant in the Latin language; a very ancient copy of which is in the library Sancti Albini Antilegarensis. St. Alban's of Anjou. Hutter has translated it into Greek; but his translation is of no authority. Cabnet has published this epistle, with various readings from the above MS. I shall subjoin it at the end of this epistle; and give my opinion relative to its use and authenticity.

17. Say to Archippus. Who this person was we cannot tell; there have been various conjectures concerning him; some think he was bishop, or overseer, of the church at Colosse, in the absence of Epaphras. Whatever he was, it has been supposed that he had been remiss in discharging the duties of his office; and hence this direction of the apostle, which appears here in the light of a reprehension. But if the same person be meant, as in the Epistle to Philemon, ver. 2, whom St. Paul calls his fellow-labourer and fellow-soldier, it cannot be supposed that any reproof is here intended: for, as the Epistle to the Colossians, and that to Philemon, were evidently written about the end of the year 62, Archippus could not be a fellow-labourer and fellow-soldier of the apostle at Rome, and yet a delinquent at Colosse at the same time. It is more likely, therefore, that the words of the apostle convey no censure, but are rather intended to stir him up to further diligence, and to encourage him in the work, seeing he had so much false doctrine, and so many false teachers to contend with.

18. The salutation by the hand of me Paul. The preceding part of the epistle was written by a scribe, from the mouth of the apostle; this, and what follows, was written by the hand of St. Paul himself. A similar distinction we find 1 Cor. xvi. 21, and in 2 Thess. iii. 17, and this, it seems, was the means by which the apostle authenticated every epistle which he sent to the different churches. The salutation of Paul with mine own hand, which is the token in every epistle, so I write.

Remember my bonds. See what proof ye have of the truth of the Gospel; I am in bonds on this account; I suffer patiently; yea, exult in the Lord Jesus, so perfectly am I upheld by the grace of the Gospel. Remember my bonds, and take courage. How eloquent were these concluding words. That such a man should be in bonds for the Gospel, was the fullest proof of the truth of the Gospel; a cunningly devised fable could not have imposed on Saul of Tarsus; he was fully satisfied of the truth of the doctrines of Christianity; he proclaimed them as truths from heaven; and for their sake cheerfully suffered the loss of all things. The bonds of such a man are a plenary proof of the truth of the doctrines for which he was bound.

Grace be with you. May you still possess the favour and blessing of our Lord Jesus Christ: the apostle ends as he began this epistle. Without the grace of Christ they could not have become a church; without this grace, they could not continue to be one.

Amen. This is omitted by the most ancient and correct MSS.

The subscriptions, as usual, are various and uncertain:—The common GREEK Text, has, To the Colossians, written from Rome by Tychicus and Onesimus. The epistle to the Colossians; written at Rome, and sent by the hand of Tychicus. SYRIAC. To the Colossians. ARMENIC. In the Vulgate there is no subscription. The end of the epistle; and it was written from Rome, and sent by the hand of Tychicus and Onesimus. Praise be to God for ever and ever; and may His mercy be upon us—Amén. ARABIC. Written from Athens, by Tychicus, and Onesimus, and Mark, his disciples. GREEK. The MSS. are not less various than the Versions; To the Colossians—That to the Colossians is completed; that to the Philippians begins.—That to the Colossians is finished; the First Epistle to the Thessalonians begins.—To the Colossians, from Rome.—Written to the Colossians from Rome.—Written from Rome by Tychicus, and Timothy, and Onesimus.—Written by Paul and Timothy; and sent by Tychicus and Onesimus.

That the epistle was written from Rome, there is little cause to doubt: that Timothy might be the scribe is very probable, because it appears he was at Rome with the apostle in the same year in which this epistle was written.—See Philip ii. 19. And that it was sent by Tychicus and Onesimus, seems evident from the 8th and 9th verses of this chapter.

The common subscription, has the consent of the greater number of the most recent, and comparatively recent MSS. but this is not, in general, a proof of authenticity.

In the note on ver. 16. I promised to subjoin what is called the Epistle to the Laodicæans; I give it here from the best copies; and add a literal translation, that the curious, whether learned or unlearned, may have what some have believed to be authentic, and what has doubtless existed, in one form or other, from a very remote antiquity.

Epistola Pauli, Apostoli, ad The Epistle of Paul the Apostle to the Laodicæans.

1 Paulus, Apostolus, non ab hominibus, neque per hominem, sed per Jesum Christum, Fratribus qui estis (sunt) Laodicæe:

2 Gratia vobis et pax à Deo Patre nostro; et Domino Jesu Christo.

3 Gratias ago Christo per omnem orationem meam, quod permanentes estis, et perseverantes in operibus bonis, promissionem expectantes in die judicii.

4 Neque disturbet (deficiunt) vos quorundam vaniloquia insinuantium veritatem, (insanientium) ut vos aveant in veritate evangelii quod à me predicatur.

5 Et nunc faciet Deus ut qui sunt ex me addi perfectionem veritatis evangelii sint deservientes, et benignitatem operum facientes que sunt salutis vite æternæ.

6 Et nunc patioris sunt vincula mea qui pator in Christo; in quibus labor et gaudeo.

7 Et hoc mihi est ad salutem perpetuam, quod (apud) faciem est in orationibus vestris, et administrante Spiritu sancto, sive per vitam, sive per mortem.

8 Est enim mihi vivere vita in Christo, et mihi gaudium (et lucrum).

9 Et ipse Dominus noster in vobis faciet misericordiam suam, ut eandem dilectionem habeatis; et sitis unanimes.

10 Ergo, dilectissimi, ut audistis præsentiam Domini, ita sentite (retinete) et facite in timore (Domini) et erit vobis vita in æternum:

1 Paul an Apostle, not from men, nor by man, but by Jesus Christ, to the brethren which are in Laodicæa.

2 Grace be to you, and peace from God our Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ.

3 I give thanks to Christ in all my prayers, that ye continue and persevere in good works; waiting for the promise in the day of judgment.

4 Be not troubled with the vain speeches of certain who pretend to the truth, that they may draw away your hearts from the truth of the Gospel which was preached by me.

5 And may God grant that those who are of me, may be led forward to the perfection of the truth of the Gospel, and perform the benignity of works which become the salvation of eternal life.

6 And now my bonds are manifest, which I suffer in Christ; and in them I rejoice and am glad.

7 And this shall turn to my perpetual salvation, by means of your prayers, and the assistance of the Holy Spirit, whether they be for life or for death.

8 For my life is to live in Christ; and to die will be joyous.

9 And may our Lord himself grant you his mercy; that ye may have the same love, and be of one mind.

10 Therefore, my beloved, as ye have heard of the coming of the Lord, so think and act in the fear of the Lord, and it shall be to you eternal life.

11 Est enim Dominus qui operatur in vobis;

12 Et facite sine peccato quancunque facitis, (sine reatu) et quod est optimum.

13 Delectissimi, gaudete in Domino Jesu Christo, et cave omnes sordes (sordidos) in omni loco.

14 Omnes petitiones vestre sint prædictæ Deum.

15 Estote firmi in sensu Christi, et que integra, et vera, et pudica, et casta, et justa, et amabilia sunt, facite.

16 In quæ audistis, et accepistis in corde retinete; et erit vobis pax.

17 Salutate vos omnes sancti.

18 Salutate omnes fratres in osculo sancto.

19 Gratia Domini nostri Jesu Christi cum spiritu vestro. Amen.

20 Et hanc facite legi Colossensibus; et eam quæ est Colossensium vobis.

Ad Laodicenses scripta fuit à Roma, per Tychicum et Onesimum.

Such is the composition which pretends to be the Epistle of Paul the apostle to the Laodicæans, and of which I have endeavored to give a literal version; though, even with the assistance of the various readings of the Aug in MS. which I have included in brackets, I found this difficult, so as to preserve any sense. Elias Butler has published it after the Epistle to the Colossians, as if it were the genuine production of the apostle to whom it is attributed; and has taken the pains to exhibit it in twelve languages; viz. Syriac, Hebrew, Greek, Latin, German, Bohemian, Italian, Spanish, French, English, Danish, and Polish—All, the Latin excepted, appear to be of his own composing. To criticise them would be lost labour. The Greek is too bold to be the production of any remote age; and as to the English, no Englishman can understand it. The editor deserves the strongest reprobation, because he has associated it with the genuine Epistles of St. Paul, without a single note of its spuriousness.

As to its being a work of St. Paul, little or nothing need be said; its barrenness of meaning, poverty of style, meanness of manner, and total want of design and of proper and sufficient refutation of its pretensions. It is said to be a work of some heretics of ancient times; this is very unlikely, as there is no heresy ever honored in the Christian church at so early a date as any support from any thing found in this epistle. It is a congeries of scraps, very irregularly collected, and there, from St. Paul's epistles without arrangement, without connexion; and, as they stand here, almost without sense. It is a poor wretched tale, in no danger of ever being discredited even a cunningly devised fable. It should keep me company, but that of the pretended Epistle of Paul to Socrates, to which I have in the notes referred, and of which I have given my opinion.

Should it be asked, "Why I have introduced it here?" I answer, to satisfy the curious reader; and to show how little ground there is for the opinion of some, that this epistle is of any importance; and, to prove how necessarily forgery itself succeeds, when it endeavors to add to, or corrupt, the word of God. The Sacred Writings are of such a peculiar character that it is utterly impossible to imitate them with any kind of success. They bear, deeply impressed, the seal of infinite wisdom; a seal which no human art can counterfeit. This is the criterion by which spurious Gospels, and apocryphal writings in general, have been judged and detected; and this heavenly stamp, under the care of Divine Providence, will continue to be their chief preservative, as long as sun and moon shall endure.

PREFACE TO THE FIRST EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE TO THE THESSALONIANS.

THESSALONICA, now called by the Turks Salonichi, a mere corruption of its ancient name, is a seaport town of Turkey in Europe, situated on what was called the Thermaic Gulf, and was anciently the capital of Macedonia. According to Stephanus Byzantinus, it was embellished and enlarged by Philip, king of Macedonia, father of Alexander the Great, who called it Thessalonica, or the victory of Thessalia, on account of the victory he obtained there over the Thessalians; prior to which, it was called Therma. Strabo, Tzetzès, and Zona ras, says that it obtained the name of Thessalonica from Thessalonica, wife of Cassander, and daughter of Philip. In 431, it was taken from the Venetians by the Turks, in whose possession it still continues. It is still a large, rich, and populous city, being ten miles in circumference, and carrying on an extensive trade in silk, the principal merchants being Greek Christians, and Jews.

Christianity has never been extinct in Thessalonica since the year 54 or 55, in which it was planted, here, by the apostle Paul; see Acts xvii. &c. It contains at present thirty churches, belonging to the Greek Christians; and as many Jewish synaagoges, besides some Mohammedan mosques. Thessalonica is the see of an archbishop; and is well fortified, being surrounded with walls, flanked with towers, and defended on the land side by a citadel; and near the harbour, with three forts.

St. Paul, in company with Silas, first preached the Gospel in this city, and the adjacent country, about A. D. 52 or 53. Though the Jews, who were sojourners in this city, rejected the Gospel in general; yet a great multitude of the devout Greeks, i. e. such as were proselytes to Judaism, or the descendants of Jewish parents, born and naturalized in Greece, believed, and associated with Paul and Silas; and not a few of the chief women of the city embraced the Christian faith. Acts xvii. 4.

As the Jews found, that according to the doctrine of the Gospel, the Gentiles were called to enjoy the same privileges with themselves, without being obliged to submit to circumcision, and other ordinances of the law, they persecuted that Gospel, and them who proclaimed it; for, moved with indignation, they employed certain lewd fellows of the baser sort; the beasts of the people, set the city on an uproar, assaulted the house of Jason, where the apostles lodged; dragged him, and certain brethren, before the rulers; and charged them with seditious designs, and treason against the Roman emperor! The apostles escaped, and got to Berea, where they began anew their important evangelical labours: thither, the Jews of Thessalonica pursuing them, raised a fresh tumult; so that the apostle, being counselled by the brethren, made his escape to Athens, Acts xvii. 5-15. Thus he followed the command of his Master; being persecuted in one city, he fled to another; not to hide himself, but to proclaim, in every place, the saving truths of the Gospel of Christ.

It does not appear that St. Paul staid long at Athens; he soon went thence to Corinth, where Timothy and Silas were, but probably not before Timothy met him, for whom he had sent, Acts xvii. 15. to come to him speedily; and whom, it appears, he sent immediately back to Thessalonica, to establish the believers there, and comfort them concerning the faith, 1 Thess. iii. 2. While Paul abode at Corinth, Timothy and Silas came to him from Thessalonica; and hearing by them of the steadfastness of the Thessalonian converts, in the faith of Christ, he wrote this epistle, and shortly after the second, to comfort and encourage them; to give them further instructions in the doctrine of Christianity; and to rectify some mistaken views relative to the day of judgment, which had been propagated amongst them.—See the Preface to the second epistle.

Who the persons were who formed the apostolic church at Thessalonica, is not easy to determine. They were not Jews, for these, in general, persecuted the apostle and the Gospel in this place. We are therefore left to infer, that the church was formed, 1st, of Jewish proselytes, called, Acts xvii. 4. devout Greeks. And, 2dly, of converts from heathenism; for, on the preaching of the Gospel to them, it is said, chap. i. 9. that they turned to God from idols, to serve the living and true God. Though some of the Jews believed on the preaching of Paul and Silas, Acts xvii. 3 and 4. yet it is evident, that the great bulk of the church was composed of Grecian proselytes, and converts from heathenism. Hence we find, in this epistle, but few allusions to the Jews; and but few references to the peculiarities of their religious or civil institutions.

There is a remarkable reading in the text of Acts xvii. 4. which I neglected to quote in the note on that place: instead of των σεβειμενων Ελληνων πολυπληθος, of devout Greeks a great multitude; the Coder Alexandrinus, Coder Beza, both in the Greek and Latin, two others, with the Vulgate, read των Σεβειμενων και Ελληνων, of the devout; i. e. those who worshipped the true God: AND of the Greeks, i. e. those who were previously heathens, a great multitude; so that—1. Some few Jews.—2. A great number of those who acknowledged the true God—and, 3. A great multitude of heathens, besides many of the chief women, received the doctrine preached by the apostle, and became members of the church at Thessalonica. See Dr. Paley's remarks on this various reading. The First Epistle to the Thessalonians is allowed, on all hands, to be the first epistle that St. Paul wrote to any of the churches of God; and from it two things may be particularly noted—1. That the apostle was full of the Spirit of love.—2. That the church at Thessalonica was pure, upright, and faithful, as we scarcely find any reprehension in the whole epistle: the Thessalonian converts had FAITH that worked; a love that laboured; and a hope which induced them to bear afflictions patiently; and wait for the coming of the Lord Jesus Christ.

This epistle has been divided into different parts by commentators; but these are arbitrary, the apostle having made no division of this kind; for, although he treats of several subjects, yet he has not so distinguished them from each other, as to show that he had any formal division in his mind. In the divisions imposed on this epistle by commentators, we do not find two of them alike:—a full proof that the apostle has made no divisions; else some of these learned men would have certainly found them out. Technical distinctions of this nature are of little use to a proper understanding of the contents of this epistle.

CHAPTER I.

The inscription by Paul, Silvanus, and Timothy, to the church of the Thessalonians, 1. St. Paul gives thanks to God for their good estate, and prays for their continuance in the faith, 2-4. Shows how the Gospel came to them, and the blessed effects it produced in their life and conversation, 5-7. How it became published from them, through Macedonia and Achaia; and how their faith was every where celebrated, 8. He shows farther, that the Thessalonians had turned from idolatry; became worshippers of the true God, and were waiting for the revelation of Christ, 9, 10. [A. M. cir. 4056. A. D. cir. 52. A. V. PAUL, and ^a Silvanus, and Timothy, unto the church of the Thessalonians which is in God the Father, and in the Lord Jesus Christ: ^b Grace be unto you, and peace, from God our Father, and the Lord Jesus Christ.

² We give thanks to God always for you all, making mention of you in our prayers;

³ Remembering without ceasing ^c your work of faith, ^d and labour of love, and patience of hope, in our Lord Jesus Christ, in the sight of God and our Father;

⁴ Knowing, brethren ^e beloved, by your election of God.

⁵ For ^f our Gospel came not unto you in word only, but also in power, and ^g in the Holy Ghost, and in much assurance;

⁶ Therefore ^h laboured; worked energetically to promote the glory of God, and the salvation of men. They had hope: not an idle, cold, heartless expectation of future good, from which they felt no excitement, and for which they could give no reason; but such a hope as produced a satisfying expectation of a future life and state of blessedness; the reality of which faith had described, and love anticipated. A hope, not hasty and impatient to get out of the trials of life, and possess the heavenly inheritance; but one that was as willing to endure hardships, as to enjoy glory itself, when God might be most honoured by this patient endurance. FAITH worked, LOVE laboured, and hope endured patiently.

⁷ It is not a mark of much grace to be longing to get to heaven, because of the troubles and difficulties of the present life: they who love Christ, are ever willing to suffer with Him; and He may be as much glorified by patient suffering, as by the most active faith, or laborious love. There are times in which, through affliction or other hindrances, we cannot do the will of God; but we can suffer it; and in such cases, He seeks a heart that bears submissively; suffers patiently; and endures, as seeing Him who is invisible, without repining or murmuring. This is as full a proof of Christian perfection, as the most intense and ardent love. Meekness, gentleness, and long-suffering, are, in our present state, of more use to our as ye know what manner of men we were among you for your sake.

5 And ye became followers of us, and of the Lord, having received the word in much affliction,^a with joy of the Holy Ghost;

7 So that ye were ensamples to all that believe in Macedonia and Achaia.

8 For from you^b sounded out the word of the Lord, not only in Macedonia and Achaia, but also^c in every place, your faith selves and others; and of more consequence in the sight of God, than all the ecstasies of the spirits of just men made perfect; and than all the raptures of an archangel. That church, or Christian society, the members of which manifest the work of faith, labour of love, and patience of hope, is most nearly allied to heaven; and is on the suburbs of glory.

4. Knowing—your election of God Being assured, from the doctrine which I have delivered to you, and which God has confirmed by various miracles and gifts of the Holy Spirit, that he has chosen and called the Gentiles to the same privileges to which he chose and called the Jews; and that, as they have rejected the offers of the Gospel, God has now elected the Gentiles in their stead. This is the election which the Thessalonians knew, and of which the apostle treats at large in his Epistle to the Romans; and also in his Epistles to the Galatians and Ephesians. No irrespective, unconditional, eternal, and personal election to everlasting glory, is meant by the apostle. As God had chosen the Jews, whom, because of their obstinate unbelief, he had now rejected; so he had now chosen or elected the Gentiles. And in neither case was there any thing absolute; all was most specifically conditional, as far as their final salvation was concerned; without any merit on their part, they were chosen and called to those blessings which, if they rightly used, would lead them to eternal glory. That these blessings could be abused, become finally useless, and forfeited, they had an ample proof in the case of the Jews, who, after having been the elect of God for more than 2000 years, were now become reprobates.

5. For our Gospel That is, the glad tidings of salvation by Jesus Christ; and of your being elected to enjoy all the privileges to which the Jews were called, without being obliged to submit to circumcision, or fulfil the rites and ceremonies of the Mosaic law.

Came unto you in word only It was not by simple teaching, or mere reasoning, that the doctrines which we preached recommended themselves to you; we did not insist on your using this or the other religious institution; we insisted on a change of heart and life; and we held out the energy which was able to effect it.

But also in power Εν δυνάμει, with miraculous manifestations to your eyes and to your hearts; which induced you to acknowledge that this Gospel was the power of God unto salvation.

And in the Holy Ghost By his influence upon your hearts, in changing and renewing them; and by the testimony which ye received from him, that you were accepted through the Beloved; and became the adopted children of God.

And in much assurance Εν πολλῇ ὁμοθυμαδόν. The Holy Spirit, which was given you, left no doubt, on your mind, either with respect to the general truth of the doctrine, or the safety of your own state. Ye had the fullest assurance that the Gospel was true; and the fullest assurance that ye had received the remission of sins through that Gospel. The Spirit himself bearing witness with your spirit, that you are the sons and daughters of God Almighty.

What manner of men we were How we preached, and how we lived; our doctrines and our practices ever corresponding. And for your sakes we sustained difficulties, endured hardships, and were incessant in our labours.

6. Ye became followers of us Ye became imitators, μιμηταί, of us; ye believed the same truths, walked in the same way, and minded the same thing; knowing that our doctrine was of the Lord; and that the way in which we walked, was prescribed by Himself; and that He also suffered the contradictions of ungodly men.

Having received the word in much affliction That they received the doctrine of the Gospel in the midst of much persecution, we may learn from the history in general, and from Acts xvii. 5, 6.

to Godward is spread abroad; so that we need not to speak any thing.

9 For they themselves show of us^a what manner of entering in we had unto you,^b and how ye turned to God from idols to serve the living and true God;

10 And^c to wait for his Son^d from heaven, whom he raised from the dead, even Jesus, which delivered us^e from the wrath to come.

With joy of the Holy Ghost The consolations which they received, in consequence of believing in Christ, more than counterbalanced all the afflictions which they suffered from their persecutors.

7. Ye were ensamples Τύποις, τύποις, models, or patterns, according to which all the churches, in Macedonia and Achaia, formed both their creed and their conduct .

8. From you sounded out As Thessalonica was very conveniently situated for traffic, many merchants from thence traded through Macedonia, Achaia, and different parts of Greece. By these, the fame of the Thessalonians, having received the doctrine of the Gospel, was doubtless carried far and wide. And it appears that they had walked so conscientiously before God and man, that their friends could speak of them without a blush; and their adversaries could say nothing to their disgrace.

9. How ye turned to God from idols This could not be spoken either of the Jews, or of the devout persons, but of the heathen Greeks; and of such it appears that the majority of the church was formed. See what is said on this subject in the Preface to this epistle.

To serve the living and true God The living God, in opposition to the idols, which were either inanimate stocks or stones; or the representations of dead men.

The true God—In opposition to the whole system of idolatry, which was false in the objects of its adoration, false in its pretensions, false in its promises, and false in all its prospects .

10. And to wait for his Son from heaven To expect a future state of glory, and resurrection of the body, according to the Gospel doctrine, after the example of Jesus Christ, who was raised from the dead, and ascended unto heaven, ever to appear in the presence of God for us.

Delivered us from the wrath to come From all the punishment due to us for our sins; and from the destruction which is about to come on the unbelieving and impenitent Jews.

This was the news, the sounding out, that went abroad concerning the converted Thessalonians. Every where it was said, they have believed the Gospel; they have renounced idolatry; they worship the living and true God; they have received the gifts and graces of the Holy Spirit; they are happy in their souls, unsplotted in their lives, and full of joy; expecting an eternal glory through that Christ who had died for, and purged their sins; and who shall fashion their degraded bodies, and make them like to His glorious body, and give them an eternal residence with Himself, in a state of blessedness.

These were glorious news, and wherever they were told, prepared the way of the Gospel among the heathen. The mere preaching of the Gospel has done much to convince and convert sinners; but the lives of the sincere followers of Christ, as illustrative of the truth of these doctrines, has done much more. Truth represented in action, seems to assume a body, and thus render itself pulpable. In heathen countries, which are under the dominion of Christian powers, the Gospel, though established there, does little good; because of the profane and irreligious lives of those who profess it. Why has not the whole peninsula of India been long since evangelized? The Gospel has been preached there; but the lives of the Europeans, professing Christianity there, have been in general profligate, sordid, and base. From them, sounded out no good report of the Gospel; and therefore the Mohammedans continue to prefer their Koran, and the Hindus their Vedas and Shasters. It should, however, be acknowledged, to the glory of God, that of late years, a few apostolic men in that country are turning the tide in favour of the Gospel; and several eminent Europeans have warmly espoused the doctrine of Christ; and are labouring to circulate the word of God through the whole of British India.

CHAPTER II.

The apostle sets forth how the Gospel was brought and preached to the Thessalonians, in consequence of his being persecuted at Philippi, 1, 2. The manner in which the apostles preached; the matter of their doctrine, and the tenor of their lives, 3—11. He exhorts them to walk worthy of God, 12. And commends them for the manner in which they received the Gospel, 13. How they suffered from their own countrymen, as the first believers did from the Jews, who endeavoured to prevent the apostles from preaching the Gospel to the Gentiles, 14—16. St. Paul's apology for his absence from them, and his earnest desire to see them, founded on his great affection for them, 17—20. [A. M. cir. 4036. A. D. cir. 52. A. U. C. 805. Anno Claudii Cæsar. try. This consideration gave him a right to deliver all the following exhortations.

2. Shamefully entreated—at Philippi There, Paul and in our God ⁴ to speak unto you the Gospel of God * with much contention.

3 For our exhortation was not of deceit, nor of uncleanness, nor in guile :

4 But as ⁵ we were allowed of God ⁶ to be put in trust with the Gospel, even so we speak ; ⁷ not as pleasing men, but God, ⁸ which trieth our hearts.

5 For ¹ neither at any time used we flattering words, as ye know, nor a cloak of covetousness ; ² God is witness :

6 ³ Nor of men sought we glory, neither of you, nor yet of others, when ⁴ we might have been ⁵ burdensome, ⁶ as the apostles of Christ.

7 But ¹ we were gentle among you, even as a nurse cherisheth her children :

8 ² So being affectionately desirous of you, we were willing ³ to have imparted unto you, not the Gospel of God only, but also ⁴ our own souls, because ye were dear unto us.

Silas had been beaten with many stripes, shut up in the inner prison, and their feet made fast in the stocks.—See Acts xvi. 23, &c. and the notes there.

With much contention] The words εὐ πολλῷ ἀγῶνι, not only signify with intense labour and earnestness, but may here mean exposed to the greatest danger ; at the peril of our lives. The Greek phrase, quoted by Rosenmüller, is to the point, ἀγὼν προῦναι οὐκ ἀνεμῆναι, in danger we must not delay ; activity and despatch are then indispensably necessary.

3. Our exhortation] The word παραλειτουργία, has a very extensive meaning : it signifies not only exhortation and teaching in general, but also encouragement, consolation, and the like. [When the apostles exhorted or admonished men, it was, that they should turn from evil to good ; from misery to happiness ; from Satan to God ; and from hell to heaven. Their exhortations having this object, every word was consolatory ; and, as the truth which they delivered was unquestionable, therefore their ministry was a subject of the highest encouragement and joy.

Not of deceit] We did not endeavour to allure you with false pretences : we did not deceive you ; nor were we deceived ourselves.

Nor of uncleanness] Such as the teachings of the Gentile philosophers were ; their supreme gods were celebrated for their adulteries, fornications, uncleanness, thefts, barbarities, and profligacies of the most odious kind. Our Gospel was pure ; came from the pure and holy God ; was accompanied with the influences of the Holy Spirit, and produced purity both in the hearts and lives of all that received it.

Nor in guile] We had no false pretences, and were influenced by no sinister motives.

4. But as we were allowed of God] Καθὼς ἡ ἐξουκρίσθηθα ; as we were accounted worthy to be put in trust. As God put confidence in us, and sent us on his most especial message to mankind, even so we speak, keeping the dignity of our high calling continually in view ; and acting as in the sight of God, we speak not to please or flatter man, though our doctrine is the most consolatory that can be conceived ; but to please that God who searcheth the heart ; and before whom all our motives are constantly without a veil.

5. Flattering words] Though we proclaim the Gospel, or glad tidings ; yet we showed that, without holiness, none should see the Lord.

Ye know] That while we preached the whole Gospel, we never gave any countenance to sin.

Nor a cloak of covetousness] We did not seek temporal emolument ; nor did we preach the Gospel for a cloak to our covetousness ; God is witness that we did not ; we sought you, not ourselves. Hear this, ye that preach the Gospel ! Can ye call God to witness that, in preaching it, ye have no end in view by your ministry but His glory in the salvation of souls ? Or, do ye enter into the priesthood for a morsel of bread ; or for what is ominously and impiously called a living, a benefice ! In better days your place and office were called a cure of souls ; what care have you for the souls of them by whose labours you are in general more than sufficiently supported ? Is it your study, your earnest labour to bring sinners to God ? To preach among your heathen parishioners the unsearchable riches of Christ ?

But I should speak to the thousands who have no parishes ; but they have their chapels, their congregations, pews and seat-vents, &c. &c. Is it for the sake of these that ye have entered or continue in the Gospel ministry ? Is God witness that in all these things, ye have no cloak of covetousness ? Happy is the man who can say so, whether he have the provision which the law of the land allows him, or whether he lives on the free-will offerings of the people.

The faithful labourer is worthy of his hire ; for the ox that breeds out the corn should not be muzzled ; and they that preach the Gospel should live (not strive) by the Gospel. But we to that man who enters into the labour for the sake of the hire ; he knows not Christ, and how can he preach Him !

6. Nor of men sought we glory] As we preached not for 9 For ye remember, brethren, our labour and travail ; for labouring night and day, * because we would not be chargeable unto any of you, we preached unto you the Gospel of God.

10 ¹ We are witnesses, and God also, ² how holily and justly and unblameably we behaved ourselves among you that believe :

11 As ye know how we exhorted and comforted and charged every one of you, as a father doth his children, 12 ³ That ye would walk worthy of God, ⁴ who hath called you unto his kingdom and glory.

13 For this cause also thank we God ⁵ without ceasing, because, when ye received the word of God which ye heard of us, ye received it ⁶ not as the word of men, but as it is in truth, the word of God, which effectually worketh also in you that believe.

14 For ye, brethren, became followers ¹ of the churches of worldly gain, so we preached not for popular applause ; we had what we sought for, the approbation of God, and the testimony of a good conscience.

When we might have been burdensome] They had a right to their maintenance while they devoted themselves wholly to the work of the Gospel for the sake of the people's souls. Others understand the words εὐ βαρὺν εἶναι, to be honourable ; we sought no glory of you nor of others, though we were honourable as the apostles of Christ. בָּרָא עָבֹד, in Hebrew, to which the Greek βαρὺς answers, signifies not only weight, but glory ; and in both these senses the apostle uses it, 2 Cor. iv. 17.

7. But we were gentle among you] Far from assuming the authority which we had, we acted towards you as a tender nurse, or parent does to a delicate child. We fed, counselled, cherished, and bore with you ; we taught you to walk, preserved you from stumbling, and led you in a right path.

Instead of men, gentle, many MSS. and several Versions and 1 Fathers, have young, young children. But this never can be considered the original reading, the scope of the place being totally opposed to it. It is the Thessalonians whom the apostle considers as young children, and himself and fellow-labourers as the nurse ; he could with no propriety say that he was among them as a little child, while himself professed to be their nurse.

8. Being affectionately desirous of you] We had such intense love for you, that we were not only willing and forward to preach the unsearchable riches of Christ to you ; but also to give our own lives for your sake ; because ye were dear, διὰ τὸ ἀγαπᾶν ὑμᾶς, because ye were beloved by us. The words used here by the apostle, are expressive of the strongest affection and attachment.

9. Ye remember—our labour and travail] From this it appears that St. Paul spent much more time at Thessalonica than is generally supposed ; for the expressions in this verse denote a long continuance of a constantly exercised ministry, interrupted only by manual labour for their own support ; labouring night and day, because we would not be chargeable to you. Probably Paul and his companions worked with their hands by day, and spent a considerable part of the night or evenings, in preaching Christ to the people.

10. We are witnesses, and God also, how holily i. e. in reference to God ; how justly, in reference to men ; and unblameably, in reference to our spirit and conduct, as ministers of Christ, we behaved ourselves among you. What a consciousness of his own integrity must St. Paul have had to use the expressions that are here ! No hypocrite, and none who did the work of the Lord carelessly, could make such an appeal both to God and man.

11. How we exhorted] What pastoral care is marked here ! They exhorted ; were continually teaching and instructing the objects of their charge ; this was their general work.

They comforted] They found many under trials and temptations ; and those they encouraged.

They charged] Μαγνησεντες ; continued to renew to the people that all the threatenings and promises of God were true ; that He required faith, love, and obedience ; that he could not behold sin with allowance ; that Jesus died to save them from their sins ; and that, without holiness, none should see God. And all these things they did, not in a general way only, but they spoke to every man ; none was left unnoticed, unadmonished, uncorrected. The spirit in which they performed all these branches of the pastoral care, was that which was most likely to ensure success ; as a father treats his children, so they treated every member of the church.

12. That ye should walk worthy of God] That they should, in every respect, act up to their high calling ; that it would not be a reproach to the God of holiness, to acknowledge them as his sons and daughters.—See the notes on Ephes. iv. 1. Phil. i. 27. and Col. i. 10.

His kingdom and glory] His church here ; for that is the kingdom of God among men ; and His glory hereafter ; for that is the state to which the dispensations of grace in his church lead. The words, however, may be a hendiadys, and signify His glorious kingdom.

God which in Judea are in Christ Jesus: for ye also have suffered like things of your own countrymen, even as they have of the Jews:

13. Ye received the word of God]. Ye received the doctrine of God, not as any thing fabricated by man, but as coming immediately from God himself; we being only His messengers, to declare what he had previously revealed to us. And ye have had the fullest proof that ye have not believed in vain; for that doctrine under the power and influence of the Holy Ghost, has worked most powerfully in you; filling you with light, life, and holiness.

14 Ye—became followers of the churches of God]. There is not a word here of the church of Rome being the model after which the other churches were to be formed; it had no such pre-eminence; this honour belonged to the churches of Judea: it was according to them, not the church at Rome, that the Asiatic churches were modelled. The purest of all the apostolic churches was that of the Thessalonians, and this was formed after the Christian churches in Judea.

Had any pre-eminence or authority belonged to the church of Rome, the apostle would have proposed this as a model to all those which he formed, either in Judea, Asia Minor, Greece, or Italy.

Ye also have suffered—of your own countrymen]. It is worthy of remark that, in almost every case, the Jews were the leaders of all persecutions against the apostles, and the infant church. And that they could not do themselves, they instigated others to do; and by gathering together lewd fellows of the baser sort, from among the Gentiles, they made frequent uprisings, and especially at Thessalonice, where the opposition to the Gospel was very high, and the persecution of the Christians very hot.

15. 16. Who both killed the Lord Jesus, &c.] What a faithful, but just character, is this of the Jews! 1. They slew the Lord Jesus, through the most unprincipled and fell malice. 2. They killed their own prophets; there was no time in which this seed of the serpent did not hate and oppose spiritual things; they slew even their own prophets who declared to them the will of God. 3. They persecuted the apostles, showing the same spirit of enmity to the Gospel which they had shown to the law. 4. They did not please God, nor seek to please Him; though they pretended that their opposition to the Gospel, was through their zeal for God's glory! they were hypocrites of the worst kind. 5. They were contrary to all men; they hated the whole human race; and judged and wished them to perdition. 6. They forbade the apostles to preach to the Gentiles, lest they should be saved; this was an inveteracy of malice completely super-human; they persecuted the body to death, and the soul to damnation! They were afraid that the Gentiles should get their souls saved, if the Gospel was preached to them! 7. They filled up their sins always; they had no views, purposes, or outlines of iniquity; all was filled up; every evil purpose was followed, as far as possible, with a wicked art! Is it any wonder, therefore, that revenge should come upon them to the uttermost? It is to be reckoned among the highest merits of God, that the whole nation was not pursued, by the Divine justice, to utter, and final extinction!

17. Being taken from you for a short time]. Through the persecution raised by the Jews, see Acts xvii. he was obliged to leave Thessalonica, and yield to a storm that it would have been useless for him to have withstood.

Being taken from you—in presence, not in heart]. The apostle had compared himself to a parent or nurse, ver. 7. and 11. and the people he considered as his most beloved children; here he represents himself as feeling what an affectionate father must feel, when torn from his children, for this is the import of the word ἀπορριπθῆναι, bereft of children, which we tunely translate, being taken from you.

Endeavoured the more abundantly]. His separation from them did not destroy his parental feelings; and the manner 17 But we, brethren, being taken from you for a short time ^ain presence, not in heart, endeavoured the more abundantly ^bto see your face with great desire.

18 Wherefore we would have come unto you, even I Paul, once and again; but ^cSatan hindered us.

19 For ^dwhat is our hope, or joy, or ^ecrown of ^frejoicing? Are not even ye in the presence of our Lord Jesus Christ ^gat his coming?

20 For ye are our glory and joy.

in which he was able to leave them, increased his desire to revisit them as soon as possible.

18. Even I Paul]. He had already sent Timothy and Silas to them; but he himself was anxious to see them; and had purposed this once and again, but Satan hindered; i. e. some adversary, as the word means, whether the devil himself, or some of his children. There was, however, such a storm of persecution raised up against him, that his friends did not think it prudent to permit him to go till the storm had been somewhat allayed.

19. For what is our hope]. I can have no prospects from earth; I have forsaken all for the Gospel; and esteem every thing the world can afford, as dross and dung, that I may gain Christ. Why then should I continually labour at the risk of my life, preaching the Gospel? Is it not to get your souls saved that ye may be my crown of rejoicing in the day of Christ? For this I labour; and, having planted the Gospel among you, I wish to take every opportunity of watering it, that it may grow up unto eternal life.

20. For ye are our glory and joy]. Ye are the seal of our apostleship; your conversion and steadiness are a full proof that God hath sent us. Converts to Christ are our ornaments; persevering believers, our joy in the day of judgment.

1. In the preceding chapter we have the characters and marks of a genuine pastor, laid down in such a manner as not to be misunderstood. Every man who preaches the Gospel, should carefully read this chapter, and examine himself by it. Most preachers, on reading it conscientiously, will either give up their place to others, or purpose to do the work of the Lord more fervently for the future. He who expects nothing but the approbation of Christ will labour for Christ; and he who has the glory of his Master only in view, will ever have his Master's presence and blessing. Those who enter into this work for human applause, or secular emolument, may have their reward; but in that one smile of approbation from Christ is not included.

2. God, for reasons best known to himself, often permits the most pious and benevolent purposes of his servants to be frustrated for a time. It is well that the good purpose was in the heart; but God knows the best time and place to bring it to effect. Satan is ever opposing all that is pure, good, and benevolent; and he appears frequently to succeed; but this is not really the case; if at any time he prevents the followers of God from bringing a pious purpose into effect, that was the time in which it could not have been done, to secure its full effect. Let the purpose be retained, and the best time and place will be duly provided. As Satan constantly endeavours to oppose every good work, no wonder he is found opposing a good purpose, even at the very time that God sees it improper to bring it to the intended effect. Man proposes, but God disposes.

3. The apostle speaks of the wrath coming upon the Jews; it was about twenty years after this that their city was destroyed, their temple burnt, more than a million of them destroyed, their civil polity utterly subverted, and what remained of this wretched nation, scattered to all the winds of heaven and in this state, without a nation, without a temple, without worship, and apparently without any religion, they continue to this day, a monument of God's displeasure, and a proof of the Divine inspiration, both of the prophets and apostles, who, in the most explicit manner, have predicted all the evils which have since befallen them. Their crimes were great; to these their punishment is proportioned. For what end God preserved them distinct from all the people of the earth, among whom they sojourn, we cannot pretend to say; but it must unquestionably be for a subject of the very highest importance. In the mean time, let the Christian world treat them with humanity and mercy.

CHAPTER III.

St. Paul informs them how, being hindered himself from visiting them, he had sent Timothy to comfort them: of whom he gives a high character, 1, 2. Shows that trials and difficulties are unavoidable in the present state, 3, 4. Mentions the joy he had on hearing by Timothy of their steadfastness in the faith, for which he returns thanks to God, and prays earnestly for their increase, 5—10. Prays also that God may afford him an opportunity of seeing them, 11. And that they may abound in love to God and to one another; and be unblameable in holiness at the coming of Christ, 12, 13. [A. M. cir. 4056. A. D. cir. 52. A. U. C. 805. Anno Claudii Caesar. Aug. 12.]

WHEREFORE * when we could no longer forbear, ^bwe thought it good to be left at Athens alone;

^a Verse 5.—^b Acts 17. 13.

NOTES.—Verse 1. Wherefore when we could no longer, &c.] The apostle was anxious to hear of their state; and, as he could obtain no information without sending a messenger express, he therefore sent Timothy from Athens, choosing

2 And sent ^aTimotheus, our brother, and minister of God, and our fellow-labourer in the Gospel of Christ, to rather to be left alone, than to continue any longer in uncertainty relative to their state.

2. Timotheus, our brother]. It appears that Timothy was but a youth when converted to God; he had now, however establish you, and to comfort you, concerning your faith: 3 ^d That no man should be moved by these afflictions; for yourselves know that ^e we are appointed thereunto. 4 ^f For verily, when we were with you, we told you before that we should suffer tribulation; even as it came to pass, and ye know.

5 For this cause, ^g when I could no longer forbear, I sent to know your faith, lest by some means the tempter have tempted you, and ^h our labour be in vain.

6 ^k But now, when Timotheus came from you unto us, and brought us good tidings, of your faith and charity, and that ye have good remembrance of us always, desiring greatly to see us, ⁱ we also to see you:

7 Therefore, brethren, ^m we were comforted over you in all our affliction and distress by your faith:

^a Eph. 3. 13.—^b Acts 9. 16 & 11. 22 & 23. 25 & 11. 11. 1 Cor. 4. 9. 2 Tim. 3. 12. 1 Pet. 2. 21.—^c Acts 23. 31.—^d Ver. 1.—^e 1 Cor. 7. 3.—^f 1 Cor. 11. 3.—^g Gal. 2. 2 & 4. 11. Phil. 2. 16.—^h Acts 18. 1.—ⁱ Phil. 1. 3.—^j 2 Cor. 1. 4 & 7. 13.—^k Gal. 4. 1.—^l Ch. 1. 2.

been some years in the work of God; Paul, therefore, calls him his brother, being one of the same Christian family, a son of God by adoption; elsewhere he calls him his own son, 1 Tim. 1. 2, and his dearly beloved son, 2 Tim. 1. 2, because he was brought to the knowledge of the true God, and to salvation by Christ, through the apostle's instrumentality.—See the Preface to 1st Epist. to Timothy.

Minister of God] Employed by God to preach the Gospel; this was God's work; and he had appointed Timothy to do it, and to do it at this time, in conjunction with St. Paul: and therefore he calls him his fellow-labourer. There were no sinicures then; preaching the Gospel was God's work; the primitive preachers were His workmen, and laboured in this calling. It is the same still, but who works?

3. That no man should be moved] That is, caused to apostatize from Christianity.

We are appointed thereunto] Εἰς τὸντο κειμεθα,—we are exposed to this; we lie open to such; they are unavoidable in the present state of things; as the Latins say, sic est sors nostra, "this is our lot." God appoints nothing of this kind; but He permits it, for He has made man a free agent.

4. That we should suffer tribulation] I prepared you for it, because I knew that it was according to their nature for wicked men to persecute the followers of God.

5. For this cause] Knowing that you would be persecuted, and knowing that your apostasy was possible, I sent to know your faith: whether you continued steadfast in the truth, lest you might have been tempted by Satan, to consult your present ease, and abandon the Gospel, for which you suffered persecution.

6. When Timotheus came] We have already seen that he and Silas stood behind at Thessalonica, when Paul was obliged to leave it; for the persecution seems to have been principally directed against him. When Paul came to Athens, he sent pressingly to him and Silas, to come to him with all speed to that city. We are not informed that they did come; but it is most likely that they did; and that Paul sent Timothy back to Thessalonica to comfort and build up these new converts. After Paul had sent away Timothy, it is likely he went himself straight to Corinth, and there Timothy soon after met him, with the good news of the steadiness of the Thessalonian church.

Your faith and charity] The good tidings which Timothy brought from Thessalonica, consisted of three particulars—

1. Their faith; they continued steadfast in their belief of the Gospel—2. Their charity; they loved one another, and lived in unity and harmony—3. They were affectionately attached to the apostle; they had good remembrance of him, and desired earnestly to see him.

7. They were comforted] My afflictions and persecutions seemed trifles when I heard of your perseverance in the faith.

8 For now we live, if ye ^a stand fast in the Lord.

9 ^b For what thanks can we render to God again for you, for all the joy wherewith we joy for your sakes before our God;

10 ^c Night and day ^d praying exceedingly ^e that we might see your face, ^f and might perfect that which is lacking in your faith?

11 Now God himself and our Father, and our Lord Jesus Christ, ^g direct ^h our way unto you.

12 And the Lord ⁱ make you to increase and abound in love one toward another, and toward all men, even as we do toward you:

13 To the end he may ^k establish your hearts unblameable in holiness before God, even our Father, at the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ ^l with all his saints.

^a Acts 26. 7. 2 Tim. 1. 3.—^b Rom. 11. 14 & 15. 32.—^c Ch. 2. 17.—^d 2 Cor. 12. 9, 11. Col. 4. 12.—^e Or, supplication—^f Mark 1. 3.—^g v. Chap. 4. 10.—^h v. Chap. 4. 9 & 5. 15. 2 Pet. 1. 7.—ⁱ 1 Cor. 13. 1. Phil. 1. 10. Ch. 5. 23. 2 Thess. 2. 17. 1 John 2. 20, 21.—^j Zech. 14. 5. Jude 14.

8. For now we live] Your steadfastness in the faith, gives me new life and comfort; I now feel that I live to some purpose, as my labour in the Lord is not in vain.

9. What thanks can we render to God] The high satisfaction and uncommon joy, which the apostle felt, are strongly depicted in the language he uses. How near his heart did the success of his ministry lie! It was not enough for him that he preached so often, laboured so hard, suffered so much; what were all these if souls were not converted? And what were all conversions, if those who embraced the Gospel did not walk steadily in the way to heaven, and persevere?

10. Night and day praying exceedingly] Supplicating God at all times; mingling this with all my prayers; υπερεικονισαμεν δευοντες, abounding and superabounding in my entreaties to God, to permit me to revisit you. How strong was his affection for this church!

Might perfect that which is lacking] That I might have the opportunity of giving you the fullest instructions in the doctrine of Christ; that ye might have every thing in the most ample detail; so that the great outlines of truth which you already know may be filled up, that ye may be perfectly fitted to every good word and work.

11. Now God himself and our Father] That is, God who is our Father, who has adopted us into the heavenly family, and called us his sons and daughters.

Direct our way] As he was employed in God's work, he dared not consult his own inclinations: he looked for continual directions from God, where, when, and how, to do his Master's work.

12. Make you to increase and abound in love] They had already love to each other, so as to unite them in one Christian body; and he prays that they may have an increase and an abundance of it; that they might feel the same love to each other which he felt for them all.

13. That he may establish your hearts] Without love to God and man, there can be no establishment in the religion of Christ. It is love that produces both solidity and continuance. And, as love is the fulfilling of the law, he who is filled with love, is unblameable in holiness; for he who has the love of God in him is a partaker of the Divine nature, for God is love.

At the coming of our Lord] God is coming to judge the world: every hour that passes on in the general lapse of time, is advancing His approach: whatsoever He does, is in reference to this great event: and whatsoever we do, should be in reference to the same. But who, in that great day, shall give up his accounts with joy? That person only whose heart is established in holiness before God, i. e. so as to bear the eye and strict scrutiny of his Judge. Reader, by this to heart, for thou knowest not what a moment may bring forth. When thy soul departs from thy body, it will be the coming of the Lord to thee.

CHAPTER IV.

The apostle exhorts them to attend to the directions which he had already given them, that they might know how to walk and please God, 1, 2. Gives them exhortations concerning continency, chastity, and matrimonial fidelity, 3—8. Speaks concerning their love to each other; and love to the churches of Christ; and exhorts them to continue and increase in it, 9, 10. Counsels them to observe an inoffensive conduct, to mind their own affairs, to do their own business, and to live honestly, 11, 12. Not to sorrow for the dead, as persons who have no hope of a resurrection; because, to Christians, the resurrection of Christ is a proof of the resurrection of his followers, 13, 14. Gives a short, but awful description, of the appearing of Christ to judge the world, 15. [A. M. cir. 4056. A. D. cir. 52. A. U. C. 805. Anno Claudii Cæsaris. Aug. 12.]

FURTHERMORE then we ^a beseech you, brethren, and ^b exhort you by the Lord Jesus, ^c that as ye have received of us ^d how ye ought to walk ^e and to please God, so ye would abound more and more.

^a Or, request.—^b Or, beseech.—^c Phil. 1. 27. Col. 2. 6.—^d Ch. 2. 12.—^e Col. 1. 10.

NOTES.—Verse 1. We beseech you, brethren, and exhort] We give you proper instructions in heavenly things; and request you to attend to our advice. The apostle used the most pressing entreaties; for he had a strong and affectionate desire, that this church should excel in all righteousness and true holiness.

Please God—more and more] God sets no bounds to the communications of His grace and Spirit to them that are faithful. And, as there are no bounds to the graces, so there should be none to the exercise of those graces. No man can

2 For ye know what commandments we gave you by the Lord Jesus.

3 For this is ^a the will of God, even ^b your sanctification, ^c that ye should abstain from fornication:

^d Rom. 12. 9. Eph. 5. 17.—^e Eph. 5. 27.—^f 1 Cor. 6. 15, 18. Eph. 5. 3. Col. 3. 5.

ever feel that he loves God too much; or that he loves man too much for God's sake.

2. Ye know what commandments we gave you] This refers to his instructions, while he was among them: and to instructions on particular subjects, which he does not recapitulate, but only hint at.

3. This is the will of God, even your sanctification] God has called you to holiness; He requires that you should be holy; for, without holiness, none can see the Lord. This is the general calling; but in it, many particulars are included

4 I That every one of you should know how to possess his vessel in sanctification and honour;

5 * Not in the lust of concupiscence, ¹ even as the Gentiles ² which know not God:

6 * That no man go beyond and ³ defraud his brother ⁴ in any matter: because that the Lord ⁵ is the avenger of all such, as we also have forewarned you and testified.

7 For God hath not called us unto uncleanness, ⁶ but unto holiness.

8 * He therefore that ⁷ despiseth, despiseth not man, but God, ⁸ who hath also given unto us his Holy Spirit.

9 But as touching brotherly love ⁹ ye need not that I write unto you; for ¹⁰ ye yourselves are taught of God ¹¹ to love one another.

¹ Rom 6:19. ² 1 Cor 6:15-18 & Col 3:5. ³ Rom 1:24, 26-1 Eph 4:17, 19-1 Cor 1:15, 31. ⁴ Gal 4:5. ⁵ Eph 2:1 & 4:15. ⁶ 1 Thess 1:1-2. ⁷ Lev 19:11, 13. ⁸ 1 Cor 6:5-6. ⁹ agape, or caritas—¹⁰ philo, in the matter. ¹¹ 2 Thess 1:3-11 & 1 Cor 11:44 & 19:2. ¹² 1 Cor 1:2. ¹³ Heb 12:11. ¹⁴ 1 Pet 1:14, 15-16 & Luke 11:16-17. ¹⁵ Or, reject him. ¹⁶ 1 Cor 1:10. ¹⁷ 2 Th 1:1. ¹⁸ 1 John 3:14-17. ¹⁹ Chap 5:1-11. ²⁰ Jer 31:31. ²¹ John 6:45 & 14:26. ²² Hebrews 8:11. ²³ 1 John 2:25, 27.

Some of these he proceeds to mention; and it is very likely that these had been points on which he gave them particular instructions while among them.

That ye should abstain from fornication] The word porneia as we have seen in other places, includes all sorts of uncleanness; and it was probably this consideration that induced several MSS., some Versions and Fathers, to add here passions, all. Directions of this kind were peculiarly necessary among the Greeks; and indeed heathens in general, who were strongly addicted to such vices.

4. How to possess his vessel] Let every man use his wife for the purpose alone for which God created her, and instituted marriage. The word exousia, answers to the Hebrew שָׂרָה sephara, which, though it signifies recess in general, has several other meanings. That the rabbins frequently express reife by it, Schoettgen largely proves; and to me it appears very probable, that the apostle uses it in that sense here. St. Paul calls the wife, the weaker vessel, 1 Pet. iii. 7. Others think, that the body is meant, which is the vessel in which the soul dwells. In this sense St. Paul uses it, 2 Cor. iv. 7. We have this treasure in earthen vessels; and in this sense it is used by both Greek and Roman authors. There is a third sense which interpreters have put on the word, which I forbear to name. The general sense is plain; purity and continency are most obviously intended, whether the word be understood as referring to the wife or the husband, as the following verse sufficiently proves.

5. Not in the lust of concupiscence] Having no rational object, aim, nor end. Some say, "not like beasts;" but this does not apply as they who use it wish; for the males and females of the brute creation are regular and consistent in their intercourse; and scarcely ever exceed such bounds as reason itself would prescribe to those most capable of observing and obeying its dictates.

The Gentiles which know not God] These are the beasts; their own brutes are rational creatures when compared with them. Enough has been said on this subject on Rom. i. and ii. They who wish to see more, may consult Juvénal, and particularly his 6th and 9th satires; and indeed all the writers on Greek and Roman morals.

6. That no man go beyond and defraud his brother] That no man should, by any means, endeavour to corrupt the wife of another; or to alienate her affections or fidelity from her husband: this I believe to be the apostle's meaning; though some understand it of corruption, overreaching, tricking, cheating, and cozenage in general.

The Lord is the avenger of all such] He takes up the cause of the injured husband, wherever the case has not been detected by man; and all such vices he will signally punish. Every species of uncleanness was practised among the heathens; nor were they reputed as vices. Their gods, their emperors, their philosophers, and their great men in general, gave them examples of every species of impurity; and they had no system of ethics which forbade these abominations. The Christian religion not only discommends these things, but forbids them on the most awful penalties: therefore, wherever Christianity prevails, these vices, if practised at all, are obliged to seek the deepest gloom of midnight to cover them from the eyes of men. On this account they are comparatively rare: even among the more professors of Christianity, they exist, but do not flourish.

7. God hath not called us unto uncleanness] He is the creator of male and female, and the institutor of marriage; and He has called men and women to this state: but the end of this, and all the other callings of God to man, is holiness, not uncleanness. And they who use the marriage state as He directs, will find it conducive to their holiness and perfection.

8. He therefore that despiseth] He who will not receive these teachings, and is led either to undervalue or despise them, despises not us, but God, from whom we have received our commission; and by whose Spirit we give these directions.—See on ver. 15.

Hath also given unto us his holy Spirit] Instead of ἐκ χάριτος, unto us; ἐκ χάριτος, unto you, is the reading of BDEFG, a great many others, the Syriac, all the Arabic, Armenian, latter Syriac in the margin, some of the Itala; Clement, Didymus, and Ambrosiaster; this seems to be the better reading. has also given you His Holy Spirit, which ye might understand, and be enabled to practise these things. It is one thing to receive a revelation from the Spirit of God; it is another thing to receive that Spirit to enable a man to live according to that revelation. In the first sense, the apostles alone received this Holy Spirit; in the latter sense, all true Christians, as well as the Thessalonians, received it. I think was, yeu, is the true reading; and that is confirmed by the following verse: For ye yourselves are taught of God to love one another. Griesbach has inserted it in the margin, but has not admitted it into the text, because it has not what he deemed full support from those MSS. which are of the Alexandrian Rescension; but he thought its genuineness very probable.

9. Quiescent, idly at home] They were remarkable for that; and though the apostle appears to have had this as a topic on which he intended to write to them; yet, from the account which he received of their prosperous state by Timothy, he finds that it is unnecessary to spend any time in inculcating a doctrine which they fully understood and practised. See chap. iii. 6.

10. Ye do it toward all the brethren] Ye not only love one another at Thessalonica, but ye love all the brethren in Macedonia; ye consider them all as children of the same Father; and that all the churches which are in Christ, make one great and glorious body, of which he is the head.

11. That ye study to be quiet] Though in general the church at Thessalonica was pure and exemplary; yet there seems to have been some idle, tattling people among them, who disturbed the peace of others: persons who, under the pretence of religion, gadded about from house to house; did not work, but were burdensome to others; and were continually meddling with other people's business; making parties, and procuring their bread by religious gossiping. To these the apostle gives those directions which the whole church of God should enforce, wherever such troublesome and dangerous people are found; viz. that they should study to be quiet; never again, to hold their peace, as their vicious cant will never prompt to their religion; that they should do their own business, and let that of others alone; and that they should work with their own hands, and not be a burden to the church of God, or to those well meaning, but weak and inconsiderate people, who entertain them; being imposed on by their apparent sanctity and glozing conversation. An idle person, though able to discourse like an angel, or pray like an apostle, cannot be a Christian; all such are hypocrites and deceivers: the true members of the church of Christ, walk, work, and labour.

12. That ye may walk honestly] Εὐνομίως, becomingly, decently, respectfully, as is consistent with the purity, holiness, gravity, and usefulness, of your Christian calling.

Then that are without] The unconverted Gentiles and Jews. See this expression explained at large on Coloss. iv. 5.

That ye may have lack of nothing] That ye may be able to get your bread by honest labour, which God will ever bless; and be chargeable to no man. He that is dependant on another, is necessarily in bondage; and he who is able to get his own bread by the sweat of his brow, should not be under obligation even to a king.

I do not recollect whether, in any other part of this work, I have given the following story from the Hatem Tai Nameh. Hatem Tai was an Arabian nobleman, who flourished some time before the Mohammedan æra: He was reputed the most generous and liberal man in all the East. One day, he slew one hundred camels, and made a feast, in the district, were invited. About the time of the feast, he took a walk towards a neighbouring wood, to see if he could find any person whom he might invite to partake of the entertainment which he had then provided: walking along the skirt of the wood, he espied an old man coming out of it, laden with a burthen of fagots; he accosted him, and asked if he had not heard of the entertainment made that day by Hatem Tai? The old man answered in the affirmative. He asked him why he did not attend and partake with the rest? The old man answered, "He that is able to gain his bread, even by collecting fagots in the wood, should not be beholden even to Hatem Tai." This is a noble saying, and has long been a rule of conduct to the writer of this note.

we which are alive and remain until the coming of the Lord shall not prevent them which are asleep.

16 For [the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with ^m the trump of God; ⁿ and the dead in Christ shall rise first:

k 1 Cor. 15, 51.—l Matthew 24, 31, Acts 1, 11. 2 Thess. 1, 7.—m 1 Cor. 15, 52.—n 1 Cor. 15, 52, 53.

13. I would not have you to be ignorant] Instead of exoper, have, δοξασει, wish, is the reading of ADEFG. many others; besides the Arabic, Ethiopic, Armenian, some of the Scythian, the Vulgate and Italia, with many of the Greek Fathers. This is undoubtedly the true reading: Brethren, I would not wish you to be ignorant; or I would not that you should be ignorant. This was probably one of the points which was lacking in their faith, that he wished to go to Thessalonica to instruct them in.

Them which are asleep] That is, them that are dead. It is supposed that the apostle had heard that the Thessalonians continued to lament over their dead as the heathens did in general, who had no hope of the resurrection of the body; and that they had been puzzled concerning the doctrine of the resurrection. To set them right on this important subject, he delivers three important truths—1. He asserts, as he had done before, that they who died in the Lord, should have, in virtue of Christ's resurrection, a resurrection unto eternal life and blessedness—2. He makes a new discovery, that the last generation should not die at all, but be in a moment changed to immortals—3. He adds another new discovery, that, though the living should not die, but be transformed; yet the dead should first be raised, and be made glorious and immortal; and so, in some measure, have the preference and advantage of such as shall then be found alive.—See Dodd.

14. For if ye believe that Jesus died and rose again] Et yap, seeing that ye believe; knowing that the resurrection of Christ is as fully authenticated as His death:

Eten so them] It necessarily follows that they who sleep, die, in Him; in the faith of the Gospel. Will God bring with him; He will raise them up as Jesus was raised from the dead; in the same manner; i. e. by His own eternal power and energy; and He will bring them with him, with Christ; for He is the head of the church, which is His body.

15. This we say unto you by the word of the Lord] This I have, by express revelation, from the Lord. What he now delivers, he gives as coming immediately from the Spirit of God. Indeed, human reason could not have found out the points which he immediately subjoins; no conjectures could lead to them. Allowing even the general doctrine of the resurrection to be believed, yet what follows does not flow from the premises: they are doctrines of pure revelation; and such as never could have been found out by human ingenuity. In no place does the apostle speak more confidently and positively of his inspiration, than here; and we should prepare ourselves to receive some momentous and interesting truth.

We which are alive and remain] By the pronoun we, the apostle does not intend himself and the Thessalonians, to whom he was then writing; he is speaking of the genuine Christians, which shall be found on earth when Christ comes to judgment. From not considering the manner in which the apostle uses this word, some have been led to suppose that he imagined that the day of judgment would take place in that generation; and while he, and the then believers at Thessalonica, were in life. But it is impossible that a man, under so direct an influence of the Holy Spirit, should be permitted to make such a mistake: nay, no man in the exercise of his sober reason could have formed such an opinion; there was nothing to warrant the supposition; no premises from which it could be fairly deduced; nor indeed any thing in the circumstances of the church, nor in the constitution of the world, that could have suggested a hint of the kind. The apostle is speaking of the thing indefinitely, as to the time when it shall happen; but positively as to the order that shall be then observed.

Shall not prevent them which are asleep] Those who shall be found living in that day, though they shall not pass through death, but be suddenly changed, yet shall not go to glory be-

17 ° Then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them ^p in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air: and so ^q shall we ever be with the Lord.

18 ° Wherefore ^r comfort one another with these words.

o 1 Cor. 15, 51.—p Acts 1, 9. Rev. 11, 12.—q John 12, 35; & 14, 3. & 17, 24.—r 1 Cor. 15, 51.—s 1 Th. 4, 18.

fore them that are dead; for the dead in Christ shall rise first; they shall be raised, their bodies made glorious, and be caught up to meet the Lord before the others shall be changed. And this appears to be the meaning of the apostle's word, ἡ ὀψοσπερ, which we translate, shall not prevent; for, although this word prevent, from præ and venio, literally signifies to go before, yet we use it now in the sense of to hinder, or obstruct. ὀψοσπερ τινα, signifies the same, according to Hesychius, as ἡποσπερ, to go before; ἡποσπερ, to anticipate, be before. Those who shall be found alive on that day, shall not anticipate glory before the dead in Christ; for they shall rise first, and begin the enjoyment of it, before the others shall be changed.—This appears to be the apostle's meaning.

16. The Lord himself] That is, Jesus Christ shall descend from heaven; shall, in like manner as He was seen by His disciples to ascend; i. e. in His human form; but now, infinitely more glorious, for thousands of thousands shall minister unto Him; and ten thousand times ten thousand shall stand before Him; for the Son of man shall come on the throne of His glory; but who may abide the day of His coming, or stand when He appeareth?

With a shout] Or order, ἐν κέλευσται; and probably in these words, Arise, ye dead, and come to judgment! which order shall be repeated by the archangel, who shall accompany it with the sound of the trump of God, whose great and terrible blasts, like those on Mount Sinai, sounding louder and louder, shall shake both the heavens and the earth!

Observe the order of this terribly glorious day—1. Jesus, in all the dignity and splendour of His eternal Majesty, shall descend from heaven to the mid region, what the apostle calls the air, somewhere within the earth's atmosphere—2. Then the κέλευσται, shout or order, shall be given for the dead to arise—3. Next the archangel, as the herald of Christ, shall repeat the order, Arise, ye dead, and come to judgment!—4. When all the dead in Christ are raised, then the trumpet shall sound, as the signal for them all to flock together to the throne of Christ. It was by the sound of the trumpet that the solemn assemblies, under the law, were convoked; and to such convocations, there appears to be here an allusion—5. When the dead in Christ are raised, their vile bodies being made like unto His glorious body—then, 6. Those who are alive shall be changed, and made immortal—7. These shall be caught up together with them to meet the Lord in the air—8. We may suppose that the judgment will now be set, and the books opened; and the dead judged out of the things written in those books—9. The eternal states of quick and dead being thus determined, then all who shall be found to have made a covenant with Him by sacrifice, and to have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb, shall be taken to His eternal glory, and be forever with the Lord! What an inexpressibly terrific glory will then be exhibited!—I forbear to call in here the descriptions which men of a poetic turn have made of this terrible scene, because I cannot trust to their correctness; and it is a subject which we should speak of, and contemplate, as nearly as possible, in the words of Scripture.

18. Comfort one another with these words] Strange saying! comfort a man with the information that he is going to appear before the judgment seat of God! Who can feel comfort from these words? That man alone, with whose spirit the Spirit of God bears witness that his sins are blotted out, and the thoughts of whose heart are purified by the inspiration of God's Holy Spirit; so that he can perfectly love Him, and worthily magnify His name. Reader, thou art not in a safe state, unless it be thus with thee, or thou art hungering and thirsting after righteousness. If so, thou shalt be filled; for it is impossible that thou shouldst be taken away in thy sins, while mourning after the salvation of God. They that seek shall find.

CHAPTER V.

The apostle continues to speak of Christ's coming to judgment; and the uncertainty of the time in which it shall take place; and the careless state of sinners, 1—3. Shows the Thessalonians that they are children of the light; that they should watch and pray, and put on the armour of God, being called to obtain salvation by Christ, who died for them, that, whether dead or alive, when the day of judgment comes, they may live for ever with Him; and that they should comfort and edify each other with these considerations, 4—11. He exhorts them to remember those who labour among them, and are over them in the Lord; and to esteem such highly for their work's sake, 12, 13. He charges them to warn, comfort, and support those who stood in need of such assistance; and to be patient and beneficent towards all, 14, 15. He points out their high spiritual privileges; warns them against neglecting or misimproving the gifts of the Spirit, and the means of grace, 16—20. They are also exhorted to prove all things, to abstain from all evil, and to expect to be sanctified through spirit, soul, and body, 21—24. Recommends himself and brethren to their prayers; charges them to read this epistle to all the brethren, 25—28. [A. M. cir. 4055. A. D. cir. 52. A. U. C. 805. An. Claudii Cæsar. Aug. 12.]

curiosity to know (as the disciples did concerning the destruction of Jerusalem,) when those things should take place : and what should be the signs of those times, and of the coming of the Son of Man. And it is remarkable, that the apostle answers here to these anticipated questions, as our Lord did, in the above case to the direct question of his disciples : and he seems to refer in these words, Of the times and the seasons, ye have no need that I write unto you, for yourselves know that the day of the Lord cometh as a thief in the night, to what our Lord said, Matt. xxiv. 32—41. xxv. 13. and the apostle takes it for granted that they were acquainted with our Lord's prediction on the subject: For you yourselves know perfectly that the day of the Lord so cometh as a thief in the night. It is very likely, therefore, that the apostle, like our Lord, couples these two grand events, the destruction of Jerusalem, and the final judgment. And it appears most probable, that it is of the former event, the destruction of Jerusalem, that he speaks, as it was certainly of the latter, that is treated in the sixth, seventh, and eighth chapters. In the notes on Acts i. 6, 7, it has already been shown, that the apokryph kaitoms, times or season, (the very same terms which are used here) refer to the destruction of the Jewish commonwealth; and we may fairly presume, that they have the same meaning in this place.

3. For when they shall say, Peace and safety This points out, very particularly, the state of the Jewish people when the Romans came against them; and so fully persuaded were they that God would not deliver the city and temple to their enemies, that they refused every overture that was made to them.

Sudden destruction.] In the storming of their city, and the burning of their temple, and the massacre of several hundreds of thousands of themselves, the rest being sold for slaves, and the whole of them dispersed over the face of the earth.

As it trav up a season. This figure is perfectly consistent with what the apostle had said before; viz. that the times and seasons were not known; though the thing itself was expected; our Lord having predicted it in the most positive manner. So, a woman with child knows that, if she be spared, she will have a bearing time; but the week, the day, the hour, she cannot tell. In a great majority of cases, the time is accelerated or retarded much before or beyond the time that the woman expected; so with respect to the Jews; neither the day, week, month, nor year, was known. All that was specifically known was this: their destruction was coming; and it should be sudden, and they should not escape.

4. But ye, brethren, are not in darkness]. Probably St. Paul refers to a notion that was very prevalent among the Jews: viz. that God would judge the Gentiles in the night-time when utterly secure and careless; but he would judge the Jews in the day-time, when employed in reading and performing the words of the law. The words in Mittrach Thellim, on Psal. ix. 8, are the following—When the holy blessed God shall judge the Gentiles, it shall be in the night season, in the day season he will be asleep; but when he shall judge the Jews, it shall be in the day season, when they are occupied in the study of the law. This manner the apostle appears to have in view in the 4th, 5th, 6th, 7th, and 8th verses.

5. Ye are all the children of light Ye are children of God, and enjoy both this light and life. Ye are Christians, ye are children of light to Him who has brought life and immortality to light by His Gospel. This dispensation under which ye are, has illustrated all the preceding dispensations; in its light, all is become hominous; and ye who walked formerly in heathen ignorance, or in the darkness of Jewish prejudices, are now light in the Lord, because ye have believed in Him who is the light to lighten the Gentiles, and the glory and splendour of His people Israel.

They are not of the night, nor of darkness.} Our actions are such as we are not afraid to expose to the fullest and clearest light. Sinners hate the light; they are enemies to knowledge; they love darkness; they will not receive instruction; and their deeds are such as cannot bear the light.

6: Let us not sleep as do others] Let us, (who are of the day,) who believe the Gospel, and belong to Christ, not give way to a careless unconcerned state of mind, like to the Gentiles and sinners in general, who are stupefied and blinded by sin, so that they neither think nor feel: but live in time as if it were eternity; or rather live as if there were no eternity, no future state of existence, rewards, or punishments.

Let us watch Be always on the alert : and be sober ; making a moderate use of all things.

7. For they that sleep Sleepers and drunkards seek the night season; so the careless and the profligate persons indulge their evil propensities, and avoid all means of instruction; they prefer their ignorance to the word of God's instruction, and to the light of life. There seems to be here an allusion to the opinion mentioned under ver. 4. to which the reader is requested to refer. It may be remarked also, that it was accounted doubly scandalous, even among the heathen, to be drunk in the day-time. They who were drunken, were drunken in the night.

8. Putting on the breastplate We are not only called to work, but we are called also to fight; and, that we may not be surprised, we must watch; and that we may be in a condition to defend ourselves, we must be sober; and that we may be enabled to conquer, we must be armed; and what the breastplate and helmet are to a soldier's heart and head; so are faith, love, and hope, to us. Faith enables us to endure, as seeing Him who is invisible; love excites us to diligence and activity, and makes us bear our troubles and difficulties patiently; hope helps us to anticipate the great end, the glory, for that end we are created and which we shall, in due time, obtain, if we faint not. For an explanation of the different parts of the Grecian armour, as illustrating that of the Christian, see the notes on Ephes. vi. where the subject is largely explained.

9. For God hath not appointed us to wrath. So then it appears, that some were appointed to wrath: est oporere ut puniantur; on this subject there can be no dispute. But who are they? When did this appointment take place? And for what cause? These are supposed to be “very difficult questions, and such as cannot receive a satisfactory answer; and the whole must be referred to the sovereignty of God.” The apostle took carefully at the apostle’s words, we shall find all these difficulties vanish. It is very obvious that, in the preceding verses, the apostle refers simply to the destruction of the Jewish polity, and to the terrible judgments which were about to fall on the Jews as a nation; therefore, they are the people who were appointed to wrath; and they were thus appointed, not from eternity, nor from any indefinite or remote time; but from that time in which they utterly rejected the offers of salvation made to them by Jesus Christ and his apostles: the privileges of their election were still continued to them, even after they had crucified the Lord of glory; for when He gave commandment to His disciples to go to all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature, he bade them begin at Jerusalem. They did so, and continued to offer salvation to them; till at last, being every where persecuted, and the whole nation appearing with one consent to reject the Gospel; when the kingdom of God was wholly taken away from them, and the apostles turned to the Gentiles. Then God appointed them to wrath; and the cause of that appointment was their final and determined rejection of Christ and his Gospel. But even this appointment to wrath does not signify eternal damnation: nothing of the kind is intended in the word. Though we are sure that those who die in their sins can never see God, yet it is possible that many of those wretched Jews, during their calamities, and especially during the siege of their city, did turn unto the Lord who smote them: and found that salvation which He never denies to the sincere penitent.

When the Jews were rejected and appointed to wrath, then the Gentiles were elected, and appointed to obtain salvation by our Lord Jesus Christ, whose Gospel they gladly received, and continue to prize it; while the remnant of the Jews continue, in all places of their dispersion, the same irreconcilable and blasphemous opponents to the Gospel of Christ. On these accounts, the election of the Gentiles, and the reprobation of the Jews, still continue.

(10. Who died for us) His death was an atoning sacrifice for the Gentiles as well as for the Jews.

Whether we wake or sleep) Whether we die or live; whether we are in this state, or in the other world, we shall live together with Him, shall enjoy His life, and the consolations of His Spirit while here; and shall be glorified together with Him in the eternal world. The words show that everywhere, and in all circumstances, genuine believers who walk after God, have life and communion with Him, and are continually happy, and constantly safe. The apostle however, may refer to 15 * See that none render evil for evil unto any man; but ever follow that which is good, both among yourselves, and to all men.

16 * Rejoice evermore.

17 * Pray without ceasing.

18 * In every thing give thanks: for this is the will of God in Christ Jesus concerning you.

22 * Abstain from all appearance of evil.

the doctrine he has delivered, chap. iv. 15. concerning the dead in Christ rising first; and the last generation of men not dying, but undergoing such a change as should render them immortal; but on that great day, all the followers of God, both those who had long slept in the dust of the earth, as well as those who should be found living, should be acknowledged by Christ as His own, and live together for ever with Him.

11. Comfort—(one another) Rest assured that, in all times and circumstances, it shall be well with the righteous: let every man lay this to heart; and, with this consideration, comfort and edify each other in all trials and difficulties.

12. Know them Act kindly towards them; acknowledge them as the messengers of Christ, and treat them with tenderness and respect. This is a frequent meaning of the word προσκαι: see on John i. 10.

Them which labour among you The words τοὺς κοπιῶντας, have appeared to some as expressing those who had laboured among them; but as it is the participle of the present tense, there is no need to consider it in this light. Both it, and the word πρωτεύοντες, the superintendents, refer to persons then actually employed in the work of God. These were all admonishers, teachers, and instructors of the people; devoting their time and talents to this important work.

13. Esteem them very highly in love Christian ministers, who preach the whole truth, and labour in the word and doctrine, are entitled to more than respect: the apostle commands them to be esteemed, ὡς ἐκτερίσθη, abundantly and superabundantly; and this is to be done in love; and as men delight to serve those whom they love, it necessarily follows that they should provide for them, and see that they wanted neither the necessaries nor conveniences of life; I do not say comforts, though these also should be furnished; but of these the genuine messengers of Christ are frequently destitute. However, they should have food, raiment, and lodging, for themselves and their household. This they ought to have for their work's sake; those who do not work, should not eat. As ministers of Christ, such as labour not, are unworthy either of respect or support.

14. Warn them that are unruly The whole phraseology of this verse is military; I shall consider the import of each term. Αναγκάζοντες, those who are out of their ranks, and are neither in a disposition nor situation to perform the work and duty of a soldier: those who will not do the work prescribed, and who will meddle with what is not commanded. There are many such in every church, that is of considerable magnitude.

Comfort the feeble-minded Τῶν ὀλιγοψύχων, those of little souls; the faint-hearted: those who, on the eve of a battle are dispirited, because of the number of the enemy, and their own feeble and unprovided state. Let them know, that the battle is not theirs, but the Lord's; and that those who trust in Him shall conquer.

Support the weak Ἀνυψοῦτε τοὺς ἀσθενεῖς, shore up, prop them that are weak; strengthen those wings and companies that are likely to be most exposed, that they be not overpowered and broken in the day of battle.

Be patient towards all Μακροθυμεῖτε πρὸς πάντας; the disorderly, the feeble-minded, and the weak, will exercise your patience, and try your temper. If the troops be irregular, and cannot in every respect be reduced to proper order and discipline, let not the officers lose their temper nor courage: let them do the best they can; God will be with them, and a victory will give confidence to their troops. We have often seen that the Christian life is compared to a warfare; and that the directions given to soldiers are, mutatis mutandis, allowing for the different systems, suitable to Christians. This subject has been largely treated on Ephes. vi. The ministers of Christ being considered as officers, should acquaint themselves with the officer's duty. He who has the direction and management of a church of God, will need all the skill and prudence he can acquire.

15. See that none render evil for evil Every temper contrary to love, is contrary to Christianity. A peevish, fretful, vindictive man, may be a child of Satan: he certainly is not a child of God.

Follow that which is good That by which ye may profit your brethren and your neighbours of every description, whether Jews or Gentiles.

16. Rejoice evermore Be always happy; the religion of Christ was intended to remove misery. He that has God for his portion may constantly exult. Four MSS. of good note, add ὡς καὶ ὑμεῖς, in the Lord; rejoice in the Lord evermore.

23 And the very God of peace sanctify you wholly; and I pray God your whole spirit and soul and body be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ.

24 * Faithful is he that calleth you, who also will do it.

25 Brethren, pray for us.

26 Greet all the brethren with a holy kiss.

27 I charge you by the Lord that this epistle be read unto all the holy brethren.

28 The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you. Amen.

The first epistle unto the Thessalonians was written from Athens.

1. 1 Cor. 14. 1, 30. — 1 Cor. 2. 11, 13. 1. John 4. 1. — Phil. 4. 9. — k Ch. 4. 12. — Phil. 4. 9. — 1 Th. 3. 13. — 1 Cor. 1. 8. — 1 Cor. 1. 9. & 10. 3. 2 Thess. 3. 3. — 1 Cor. 4. 3. 2 Thess. 3. 4. — Romans 16. 15. — 1 Cor. ad. — Col. 4. 16. 2 Thess. 3. 11. — 1 Cor. 16. 24. 2 Thess. 3. 15.

17. Pray without ceasing Ye are dependent on God for every good; without Him ye can do nothing: feel that dependance at all times, and ye will always be in the spirit of prayer; and those who feel this spirit will, as frequently as possible, be found in the exercise of prayer.

18. In every thing give thanks For this reason, that all things work together for good to them that love God; therefore, every occurrence may be a subject of gratitude and thankfulness. While ye live to God, prosperity and adversity will be equally helpful to you.

For this is the will of God That ye should be always happy; that ye should ever be in the spirit of prayer; and that ye should profit by every occurrence in life; and be continually grateful and obedient; for gratitude and obedience are inseparably connected.

19. Quench not the Spirit The Holy Spirit is represented as a fire, because it is his province to enlighten and quicken the soul; and to purge, purify, and refine it. This spirit is represented as being quenched when any act is done, word spoken, or temper indulged, contrary to its dictates. It is the Spirit of love; and therefore, anger, malice, revenge, or any unkind or unholty temper, will quench it so, that it will withdraw its influences; and then the heart is left in a state of hardness and darkness. It has been observed, that fire may be quenched as well by heaping earth on it, as by throwing water on it; and so the love of the world will as effectually grieve and quench the Spirit, as any ordinary acts of transgression.

Every genuine Christian is made a partaker of the Spirit of God; and he who has not the Spirit of Christ, is none of His. It cannot be the miraculous gifts of the Spirit which the apostle means, for these were given to few, and not always; for even apostles could not work miracles when they pleased; but the direction in the text is general; and refers to a gift of which they were generally partakers.

20. Despise not prophesyings Do not suppose that ye have not need of continual instruction; without it ye cannot preserve the Christian life, nor go on to perfection. God will ever send a message of salvation by each of His ministers, to every faithful, attentive hearer. Do not suppose that ye are already wise enough; ye are no more wise enough, than you are holy enough. They who slight, or neglect, the means of grace, and especially the preaching of God's holy word, are generally vain, empty, self-conceited people; and exceedingly superficial both in knowledge and piety.

21. Prove all things Whatever ye hear in these prophecies or preachings, examine by the words of Christ, and by the doctrines which, from time to time, we have delivered unto you in our preaching and writings. Try the spirits, the different teachers, by the word of God.

Hold fast that which is good Whatever in these prophecies has a tendency to increase your faith, love, holiness, and usefulness, that receive and hold fast. There were prophets or teachers even at that time, who professed to be of God, and yet were not.

22. Abstain from all appearance of evil Sin not, and avoid even the appearance of it. Do not drive your morality so near the bounds of evil, as to lead even weak persons to believe that ye actually touch, taste, or handle it. Let not the form of it, εἶδος, appear with or among you: much less the substance. Ye are called to holiness; be ye holy, for God is holy.

23. And the very God of peace That same God who is the author of peace, the giver of peace; and who has sent, for the redemption of the world, the Prince of peace; may that very God sanctify you wholly; leave no more evil in your hearts than His precepts tolerate evil in your conduct. The word wholly, ὁλοτελής, means precisely the same as our phrase, to all intent and purposes. May He sanctify you to the end, and to the uttermost; that, as sin hath reigned unto death, even so may grace reign through righteousness unto eternal life by Jesus Christ our Lord.

Your whole spirit, and soul, and body Some think, that the apostle alludes to the Pythagorean and Platonic doctrine, which was acknowledged among the Thessalonians. I should rather believe that he refers simply to the fact, that the creature called man, is a compound being, consisting—1. Of a body, σῶμα, an organized system, formed, by the creative energy of God, out of the dust of the earth; composed of bones, muscles, and nerves; of arteries, veins, and a variety of other vessels, in which the blood and other fluids circulate—2. Of a soul, ψυχή; which is the seat of the different affections and passions; such as love, hatred, anger, &c. with sensations, appetites, and propensities of different kinds—3. Of spirit, πνεῦμα; the immortal principle, the source of life to the body and soul, without which the animal functions cannot be performed, how perfect soever the bodily organs may be; and which alone, possesses the faculty of intelligence, understanding, thinking, and reasoning; and produces the faculty of speech wherever it resides, if accident have not impeded the organs of speech.

The apostle prays that this compound being, in all its parts, powers, and faculties, which he terms σώματιν, τὴν ψυχὴν, καὶ τὸ πνεῦμα, comprehending all parts, every thing, that constitutes man, and manhood, may be sanctified, and preserved blameless, till the coming of Christ: hence we learn—1. That body, soul, and spirit, are debased and polluted by sin—2. That each is capable of being sanctified, consecrated in all its powers to God; and made holy—3. That the whole man is to be preserved to the coming of Christ, that body, soul, and spirit, may be then glorified for ever with Him—4. That in this state, the whole man may be so sanctified, as to be preserved blameless, till the coming of Christ. And thus we learn, that the sanctification is to take place in, at, or after death. On the pollution, and sanctification of flesh and spirit, see the note on 2 Cor. vii. 1.

24. Faithful is he that calleth you In a great variety of places in His word, God has promised to sanctify His followers; and His faithfulness binds him to fulfil His promises; therefore, He will do it. He who can believe, will find this thing also possible to Him.

25. Pray for us. Even apostles, while acting under an extraordinary mission, and enjoying the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, felt the necessity of the prayers of the faithful. God requires that His people should pray for His ministers: and it is not to be wondered at, if they, who pray not for their preachers, should receive no benefit from their teaching. How can they expect God to send a message by Him, for whom they who are the most interested, have not prayed! If the grace and Spirit of Christ be not with the most earnest prayers which a man can offer, they, and the heaven to which they lead, are not worth having.

26. Greet all the brethren See the note on Rom. xvi. 16. Instead of all the brethren, the Coptic has, greet one another; a reading not noticed by either Griesbach or Wettstein.

27. I charge you by the Lord—that this epistle be read There must have been some particular reason for this solemn charge: he certainly had some cause to suspect that the epistle would be suppressed in some way or other; and that the whole church would not be permitted to hear it; or he may refer to the smaller churches contiguous to Thessalonica, or the churches in Macedonia in general, whom he wished to hear it; as well as those to whom it was more immediately directed. There is no doubt that the apostles designed that their epistles should be copied, and sent to all the churches in the vicinity of that to which they were directed. Had this not been the case, a great number of churches would have known scarcely any thing of the New Testament. As every Jewish synagogue had a copy of the law and the prophets; so every Christian church had a copy of the Gospels and the epistles; which were daily, or at least every Sabbath, read for the instruction of the people. This the apostle deemed so necessary, that he adjured them by the Lord, to read this epistle to all the brethren; i. e. to all the Christians in that district. Other churches might get copies of it; and thus, no doubt, it soon became general. In this way, other parts of the Sacred Writings were disseminated through all the churches of the Gentiles; and the errors of the different scribes, employed to take copies, constituted what are now called the various readings.

28. The grace of our Lord Jesus As the epistle began, so it ends; for the grace of Christ must be at the beginning and end of every work, in order to complete it, and bring it to good effect.

Amen. This is wanting in BD⁴FG and some others. It was probably not written by St. Paul.

The subscriptions are, as in other cases, various and contradictory. The chief MSS. conclude as follows:—

The first to the Thessalonians is completed; the 2d to the Thessalonians begins—DFG.

The first to the Thessalonians, written from Athens—AB and others.

From Laodicea—Cod. Claromont.

The first to the Thessalonians, written from Athens.—Common Greek text.

The Versions conclude thus:

The first epistle to the Thessalonians was written at Athens, and sent by the hands of Timothy.—SYRIAC.

To the Thessalonians.—ETHIOPIA. Nothing in the VULGATE.

The end of the epistle: it was written from a city of the Athenians, and sent by the hand of Timothy. And to the Lord be praise for ever and ever. Amen.—ARABIC.

Written from Athens, and sent by Silvanus and Timothy.—COPTIC.

That it was not sent by either Silvanus or Timothy, is evident enough from the inscription; for St. Paul associates these two with himself, in directing it to the Thessalonian church. Others say that it was sent by Tychicus and Onesimus; but this also is absurd, for Onesimus was not converted till a considerable time after the writing of this epistle. That it was written by St. Paul, there is no doubt; and that it was written at Corinth, and not at Athens, has been shown in the Preface.

1. The two preceding chapters are certainly among the most important, and the most sublime, in the New Testament. The general judgment, the resurrection of the body, and the state of the quick and dead, the unrighteous and the just, are described, concisely indeed, but they are exhibited in the most striking and affecting points of view. I have attempted little else than verbal illustrations; the subject is too vast for my comprehension: I cannot order my speech by reason of darkness. Though there are some topics handled here which do not appear in other parts of the Sacred Writings, yet the main of what we learn is this, "Our God will come, and will not keep silence; a fire shall burn before Him; and it shall be very tempestuous round about Him: He shall call to the heavens above, and to the earth beneath, that He may judge His people." The day of judgment! what an awful word! what a truly terrific time, when the heavens shall be shrivelled as a scroll, and the elements melt with fervent heat! when the earth and its appendages shall be burnt up, and the fury of that conflagration be such, that there shall be no more sea! A time when the noble and ignoble dead, the small and the great, shall stand before God, and all be judged according to the deeds done in the body! yea, a time when the thoughts of the heart, and every secret thing, shall be brought to light! when the innumerable millions of transgressions, and embryo and abortive sins, shall be exhibited in all their purposes and intents; a time when justice, eternal justice, shall sit alone upon the throne, and pronounce a sentence as impartial as irrevocable; and as awful as eternal! There is a term of human life; and every human being is rapidly gliding to it, as fast as the wings of time, in their onward motion, incomprehensibly swift, can carry him! And shall not the living lay this to heart? should we not live, in order to die? should we not die, in order to be judged? and should we not live and die, so as to live again to all eternity? O thou man of Satan and his angels, but with God and his saints! O thou man of God, thou Christian, thou immortal spirit, think of these things!

2. The subject in verse 27 of the last chapter, I have but slightly noticed: I charge you, by the Lord, that this epistle be read unto all the holy brethren. This is exceedingly strange! the epistles to the Romans, the Corinthians, Galatians, Ephesians, Philippians, Colossians, and Thessalonians, were directed to the whole church in each of those places; why then, after directing this, as he did all the rest, to the whole church, should he, at the conclusion, adjure them, by the Lord, that it should be read to all the holy brethren? that is, to the very persons to whom it was addressed! Is there not some mystery here? has it not been the endeavour of Satan, from the beginning, to keep men from consulting the oracles of God! and has he not used every authority of the church to accomplish his purpose? Was not the prohibiting the use of the Scriptures to the people at large, the mystery of iniquity, which then began to work, and against which the adjuration of the apostle is directed?—See second epistle, chap. ii. This mystery, which was the grand agent in the hands of mystery, Babylon the great, to keep the people in darkness, that the unauthorized and wicked pretensions of this mother of the abominations of the earth might not be brought to the test; but that she might continue to wear her crown, sit on her scarlet beast, and subject the Christian world to her empire! Was it not the Christian world's total ignorance of God's Book, which the Romish church took care to keep from the people at large, that induced them, patiently, yet with terror, to bow down to all her usurpations, and to swallow down monstrous doctrines, which she imposed upon them as Christian realities? Was it not this deplorable ignorance which induced kings and emperors to put their necks, literally, under the feet of this usurped and anti-Christian power? This mystery of iniquity continues still to work; and with all the pretensions of the Romish church, the Scriptures are, in general, withheld from the people; or suffered to be read under such restrictions, and with such notes, as totally subvert the sense of those passages on which this church endeavours to build her unscriptural pretensions. It is generally allowed that the Virgile version is the most favourable to these pretensions; and yet even that version the rulers of the church dare not trust in the hands of any of their people, even under their general ecclesiastical restrictions, without their counteracting notes and comments. How strange is this! and yet, in this church there have been, and still are, many enlightened and eminent men; surely truth has nothing to fear from the Bible. When the Romish church permits the free use of this book, she may be stripped, indeed, of some of her appendages, but she will lose nothing but her dross and tin, and become, what the original church at Rome was, beloved of God, called to be saints, and have her faith, once more, spoken of throughout all the world, Rom. i. 7, 8. She has in her own hands the means of her own regeneration; and a genuine Protestant will wish, not her destruction, but her reformation; and if she consent not to be reformed, her total destruction is inevitable.

PREFACE TO THE SECOND EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE TO THE THESSALONIANS.

For an account of Thessalonica, and St. Paul's labours there, the reader is requested to consult the preface to the preceding epistle. That this Second Epistle was written shortly after the first, and from the same place too, is very probable, from this circumstance, that the same persons, Paul, Silvanus, and Timothy, who addressed the church at Thessalonica, in the former epistle, address the same church in this; and, as three such apostolic men were rarely long together in the same place, it is very likely that the two epistles were written not only in the same year, but also within a very short time of each other. It appears that the person who carried the First Epistle, returned speedily to Corinth, and gave the apostle a particular account of the state of the Thessalonian church; and, among other things, informed him, that many were in expectation of the speedy arrival of the day of judgment; and that they inferred from his epistle already sent, chap. iv. 15, 17, and v. 4, and 6, that it was to take place while the apostle and themselves should be yet alive. And it appears probable, from some parts of this epistle, that he was informed also that some, expecting this sudden appearance of the Lord Jesus, had given up all their secular concerns as inconsistent with a due preparation for such an important and awful event: see chap. iii. 6—13. To correct such a misapprehension, and redeem them from an error, which, if appearing to rest on the authority of an apostle, must, in its issue, be ruinous to the cause of Christianity, St. Paul would feel himself constrained to write immediately; and this is a sufficient reason why these epistles should appear to have been written at so short a distance from each other. What rendered this speedy intervention of the apostle's authority and direction the more necessary was, that there appear to have been some in that church, who professed to have a revelation concerning this thing; and to have endeavoured to confirm it by a pretended report from the apostle himself; and from the words already referred to in the former epistle: see here on chap. ii. 1, and 2. We beseech you, brethren, be not soon shaken in mind, or be troubled, neither by spirit, nor by word, nor by letter, as from us, as that the day of Christ is at hand. As the apostle in this epistle, chap. iii. 2, entreats the Thessalonians to pray the Lord that he and his companions might be delivered from unreasonable and wicked men, Dr. Macknight supposes that the epistle was written soon after the insurrection of the Jews at Corinth, in which they dragged Paul before Gallio, the pro-consul of Achaia, and accused him of persuading men to worship God contrary to the law, Acts xviii. 13. This argument places it also in the year 52, or 53, in the twelfth or thirteenth of Claudius, the successor of Caius.

As there have been some eminent Christian writers who have entertained the same opinion with those at Thessalonica, that not only St. Paul, but other apostles of Christ, did believe that the day of general judgment should take place in their time, which opinion is shown, by the event, to be absolutely false; it appears to be a matter of the utmost consequence to the credit of Divine revelation, to rescue the character of the apostles from such an imputation. Dr. Macknight has written well on this subject, as the following extract from his preface to this epistle will prove:

"Grotius, Locke, and others," says he, "have affirmed, that the apostles believed that the end of the world was to happen in their time; and that they have declared this to be their belief in various passages of their epistles. But these learned men, and all who joined them in that opinion, have fallen into a most pernicious error; for, thereby they destroy the authority of the Gospel revelation, at least so far as it is contained in the discourses and writings of the apostles; because, if they have erred in a matter of such importance, and which they affirm was revealed to them by Christ, they may have been mistaken in other matters also, where their inspiration is not more strongly asserted by them than in this instance. It is therefore necessary to clear them from so injurious an imputation.

"And first, with respect to Paul, who was an apostle of Christ, and Silvanus, who was a prophet, and a chief man among the brethren, and Timothy, who was eminent for his spiritual gifts, I observe that the epistle under our consideration affords the clearest proof that these men knew the truth concerning the coming of Christ to judge the world; for in it they expressly assured the Thessalonians, that the persons who made them believe that the day of judgment was at hand, were deceiving them; that, before the day of judgment, there was to be a great apostasy in religion, occasioned by the man of sin, who at that time was restrained from showing himself, but who was to be revealed in his season; that, when revealed, he will sit, that is, remain a long time in the church of God, as God, and showing himself that he is God; and that, after ward, he is to be destroyed. Now, as these events could not be accomplished in the course of a few years, the persons who foretold they were to happen before the coming of Christ, certainly did not think the day of judgment would be in their lifetime. Besides, St. Paul, Rom. xi. 23—26, by a long chain of reasoning, having showed that, after the general conversion of the Gentiles, the Jews, in a body, are to be brought into the Christian church; can any person be so absurd as to persevere in maintaining that this apostle believed the end of the world would happen in his life-time?

"Next, with respect to the apostle Peter, I think it plain, from the manner in which he has spoken of the coming of Christ, that he knew it was at a great distance, 2 Pet. iii. 3. Knowing this first, that scoffers will come in the last days, walking after their own lusts. 4. And saying, Where is the promise of his coming? For, from the time the fathers fell asleep, all things continue as at the beginning of the creation. 5. But this one thing, let it not escape you, beloved, that one day is with the Lord as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day. 9. The Lord who hath promised, doth not delay, in the manner some account delaying. Now, seeing Peter has here foretold that, in the last age, the wicked will mock at the promise of Christ's coming, on account of its being long delayed; and, from the stability and regularity of the course of nature during so many ages, will argue that there is no probability that the world will ever come to an end; it is evident that he also knew the coming of Christ to judgment, was at a very great distance at the time he wrote that epistle.

"The same may be said of James; for, in the hearing of the apostles, elders, and brethren, assembled in the council of Jerusalem, he quoted passages from the Jewish prophets, to show that all the Gentiles were, in some future period, to seek after the Lord, Acts xv. 17. But if James looked for the general conversion of the Gentiles, he certainly could not imagine the end of the world would happen in his time.

"Lastly, the apostle John, in his book of the Revelations, having foretold a great variety of important events, respecting the political and religious state of the world, which could not be accomplished in a few years, but required a series of ages to give them birth; there cannot be the least doubt that he likewise knew the truth concerning his Master's second coming; and therefore, to suppose that he imagined the day of judgment was to happen in his own life-time, is a palpable mistake.

"Upon the whole, seeing the apostles, and other inspired teachers of our religion, certainly knew that the coming of Christ to judgment was at a great distance, every impartial person must be sensible they have been much injured, not by the enemies of revelation alone, but by some of its friends; who, upon the strength of certain expressions, the meaning of which they evidently misunderstood, have endeavoured to persuade the world that the apostles ignorantly believed the day of judgment was at hand. These expressions may all be applied to other events, as shall be showed in the next section, and therefore they ought to be so applied; because candour requires that sense to be put on an author's words which renders him most consistent with himself."

As the term coming of Christ, has several acceptations in the Sacred Writings, and the applying any one of these to the subject to which, in a given place, it does not belong, may lead to very erroneous, if not dangerous conclusions, as it appears to have done at Thessalonica; it is necessary to consider the different senses in which this phrase is used, that we may know its specific meaning in the different places where it occurs. Dr. Macknight, in the 4th section of his Preface, intitled, Different comings of Christ are spoken of in the New Testament, has treated this subject also with considerable judgment, as the reader will at once perceive.

"In this article, I propose to show that there are other comings of Christ spoken of in Scripture, besides his coming to judgment; and that there are other things besides this mundane system, whose end is there foretold; and that it is of these other matters the apostles speak, when they represent the day of their Master, and the end of all things, as at hand.

"First, then, in the prophetic writings of the Jews (2 Sam. xxii. 10, 12. Psal. cxvii. 2—5. Isa. xix. 1.) great exertions of the Divine power, whether for the salvation or destruction of nations, are called the coming, the appearance, the presence of God. Hence it was natural for the apostles, who were Jews, to call any signal and evident interposition of Christ, as governor of the world, for the accomplishment of His purposes, His coming and His day: accordingly, those exertions of His power and providence, whereby He destroyed Jerusalem and the temple, abrogated the Mosaic institutions, and established the Gospel, are called by the apostles His coming and day: not only in allusion to the ancient prophetic language, but because Christ himself, in his prophecy concerning these events, recorded Matt. xxiv. has termed them the coming of the Son of man, in allusion to the following prophecy of Daniel, of which his own prophecy is an explication: Dan. vii. 13. I saw in the night visions, and, behold, one like the Son of man came with the clouds of heaven, and came to the Ancient of days. And they brought him near before him

14. And there was given him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom; that all people, nations, and languages, should serve him. His dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away; and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed. This prophecy, the Jewish doctors, with one consent, attribute to the Messiah, and of that temporal kingdom which they expected was to be given him. Farther, they supposed, He would erect that temporal kingdom by great and visible exertions of His power for the destruction of His enemies; but they little suspected that themselves were of the number of those enemies whom He was to destroy; and that His kingdom was to be established upon the ruin of their state. Yet that was the true meaning of the coming of the Son of man in the clouds of heaven. For while the Jewish nation continued in Judea, and observed the institutions of Moses, they violently opposed the preaching of the Gospel, by which the Messiah was to reign over all people, nations, and languages. Wherefore, that the everlasting kingdom might be established effectually, it was necessary that Jerusalem and the Jewish state should be destroyed by the Roman armies. Now, since our Lord foretold this sad catastrophe in the words of the prophet Daniel, Matt. xxiv. 30. And they shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven, with power and great glory; and after describing every particular of it with the greatest exactness, seeing he told his disciples, ver. 34. This generation shall not pass till all these things be fulfilled; can there be any doubt that the apostles (who, when they wrote their epistles, certainly understood the true import of this prophecy,) by their Master's coming, and by the end of all things, which they represent as at hand, mean His coming to destroy Jerusalem, and to put an end to the institutions of Moses? It is no objection to this, that when the apostles heard Christ declare, There shall not be left here one stone upon another, that shall not be thrown down, they connected the end of the world or age with that event. Matt. xxiv. 3. Tell us when shall these things be, and what shall be the sign of thy coming, and of the end of the age? For as the Jewish doctors divided the duration of the world into three ages; the age before the law, the age under the law, and the age under the Messiah; the apostles knew that the age under the law was to end when the age under the Messiah began; and, therefore, by the end of the age, they meant, even at that time, not the end of the world, but the end of the age under the law, in which the Jews had been greatly oppressed by the heathens. And although they did not then understand the purpose for which their master was to come, nor the true nature of his kingdom, nor suspect that he was to make any change in the institutions of Moses; yet when they wrote their epistles, being illuminated by the Holy Ghost, they certainly knew that the institutions of Moses were to be abolished; and that their Master's kingdom was not a temporal but a spiritual dominion, in which all people, nations, and languages, were to be governed, not by external force, but by the operation of truth upon their minds, through the preaching of the Gospel.

Farther, that the apostles, by the coming of Christ, which they represented as at hand when they wrote their epistles, meant His coming to establish His spiritual kingdom over all people, nations, and languages, and not his coming to put an end to this mundane system, is evident from what Christ himself told them, Matt. xvi. 28. 'There be some standing here, who shall not taste of death till they see the Son of Man coming in his kingdom.' And, agreeably to this account of the coming of Christ, and of the end of all things, I observe, that every passage of their epistles, in which the apostles have spoken of these things as at hand, may, with the greatest propriety, be interpreted of Christ's coming to establish His everlasting kingdom over all people, nations, and languages, by destroying Jerusalem, putting an end to the law of Moses, and spreading the Gospel through the world. Thus, 1 Cor. x. 11. 'These things are written for our admonition, upon whom the ends of the ages are come,' means the end of the age under the law, and the beginning of the age under the Messiah. Phil. iv. 5. 'Let your moderation be known to all men: the Lord is nigh,' namely, to destroy the Jews, your greatest adversaries. Heb. ix. 26. 'But now once, at the end of the ages, the Jewish jubilees, he hath been manifested to abolish sin offering, by the sacrifice of himself.' Heb. x. 25. 'Exhorting one another daily; and so much the more, as ye see the day approaching,' the day of Christ's coming to destroy Jerusalem, and the Jewish state. Ver. 37. 'For yet a little while, and He who is coming, will come, and will not tarry.' James v. 7. 'Wherefore, be patient, brethren, unto the coming of the Lord.' Ver. 8. 'Be ye also patient, strengthen your hearts, for the coming of the Lord,' to destroy the Jews, your persecutors, 'draweth nigh.' Ver. 9. 'Behold, the Judge standeth before the door.' 1 Pet. iv. 7. 'The end of all things,' the end of Jerusalem, and of the temple, and of all the Mosaic institutions, 'hath approached: Be ye, therefore, sober, and watch unto prayer.' 1 John ii. 18. 'Young children, it is the last hour of the Jewish state; and, as ye have heard' from Christ, in His prophecy of the destruction of Jerusalem, that 'antichrist cometh, so now there are many antichrists, whence we know that it is the last hour' of the Jewish state.

2. 'There is another coming of Christ spoken of by the apostles, different, likewise, from his coming to judge the world, and to put an end to the present state of things, viz.: his coming to destroy the man of sin. 2 Thess. ii. 8. 'Then the Lord will consume by the breath of his mouth, and will render intellect by the bright shining of his coming.' This singular event, which will contribute greatly to the honour of God, and the good of his church, being accomplished by a visible and extraordinary interposition of the power of Christ in the government of the world, is agreeably to the Scripture style, fitly called 'the coming of the Lord;' and 'the bright shining of his coming;' but this coming is nowhere in the Scriptures said to be at hand.

3. 'There is, likewise, a day, or coming of Christ, spoken of by Paul, different from His coming to judgment, and from both the former comings; I mean His releasing His people from their present trial, by death. 1 Cor. i. 8. 'He also, will confirm you unto the end, without accusation, in the day of our Lord Jesus Christ.' Philip. i. 6. 'He who hath begun in you a good work, will be completing it, until the day of our Lord Jesus Christ.' It is true, the release of Christ's servants from their present trial, by death, is accomplished, for the most part, by no extraordinary display of His power; yet it is fitly enough called His day and coming; because, by His appointment, all men die; and by His power, each is carried to his own place after death. Besides, His servants, in particular, being put on their duty, like soldiers, must remain at their several posts, till released by their Commander; and when he releases them, He is fitly said to come for that purpose.

4. 'Besides all these, there is a day, or coming of the Lord, to judge the world, and to put an end to the present state of things. This is coming, Christ himself has promised. Matt. xvi. 27. 'The son of man shall come in the glory of his Father, with his holy angels; and then shall he reward every man according to his work.' Now, this being a real, personal appearing of Christ in the body, is more properly, than any other of His comings, called the day and coming of Christ. And the purposes of it being more important than those of His other comings, the exertions of His power for accomplishing them, will be more great and glorious. Hence this coming is, with great propriety, termed, 'the revelation of Jesus Christ,' and 'the day of his revelation,' when he shall be glorified in his saints, and admired of all them who believe.

Thus it appears, that when the apostles wrote, there were four comings of Christ to happen, three of them figurative, but the fourth a real appearance; that these different comings are frequently spoken of in Scripture; and that although the coming of Christ to destroy Jerusalem, and to establish His everlasting kingdom, be represented by the apostles as then at hand, no passage from their writings can be produced, in which His personal appearance to judge the world, is said, or even insinuated, to be at hand. The truth is, if the different comings of Christ are distinguished as they ought to be, we shall find that the apostles have spoken of each of them according to truth; and that the opinion which some Christians have, inadvisedly, espoused, to the great discredit of the inspiration of the apostles, has not the least foundation in Scripture.

The epistle naturally divides itself into three parts, and each is contained in a separate chapter.

PART I. CHAP. I.—Contains the address, and motives of consolation in their afflicted and persecuted state.

PART 2. CHAP. II.—Is partly prophetic, and partly didactic. It contains the doctrine concerning Christ's coming to judgment; and a prophecy concerning some future, but great apostasy from the Christian faith.

PART 3. CHAP. III.—Is wholly hortatory; and contains a number of important advices relative to Christian virtues, and a proper behaviour in those situations in life in which it had pleased God to call them.

This is the shortest of all St. Paul's epistles to the Churches, but is of very great importance; and, in many places, very sublime, especially in the second part; and in this there are several very great difficulties, and some things hard to be understood. After all the pains and labour of learned men, it would be hazardous to say, the meaning of every part is now clearly made out. What increases the difficulty, is, that the apostle refers to some private communication with themselves, no part of which is on record; and, without which, it would require St. Paul's inspiration to be able to fix the sense and meaning of all we find here. May the Father of lights give the reader a wise understanding in all things! Amen.

THE SECOND EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE TO THE THESSALONIANS.

For Chronological Eras, see at the end of the Acts.

CHAPTER I.

The salutation of St. Paul and his companions, 1, 2. The apostle gives thanks to God for their faith, love, and union, and for their patience under persecutions, 3, 4. Speaks of the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ; the punishment of the ungodly, and the glorification of the righteous, 5-10. Prays that God may count them worthy of their calling; that the name of Jesus may be glorified in them, 11, 12. [A. M. cir. 4056. A. D. cir. 52. A. U. C. 805. Anno Cædri Cæsar. Aug. 12.]

PAUL, and ^a Sylvanus, and Timothy, unto the church of the Thessalonians ^b in God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ:

2 ^c Grace unto you, and peace, from God our Father, and the Lord Jesus Christ.

3 ^d We are bound to thank God always for you, brethren, as it is meet, because that your faith groweth exceedingly, and the charity of every one of you all toward each other abundantly;

4 So that ^e we ourselves glory in you in the churches of God ^f for your patience and faith ^g in all your persecutions and tribulations that ye endure:

5 Which is ^h a manifest token of the righteous judgment of God, that ye may be counted worthy of the kingdom of God, ⁱ for which ye also suffer:

6 ^k Seeing it is a righteous thing with God to recompense tribulation to them that trouble you:

NOTES.—Verse 1. Paul and Silvanus, &c.] See the notes on 1 Thess. 1. 1. This epistle was written a short time after the former; and as Silas and Timothy were still at Corinth, the apostle joins their names with his own, as in the former case.

3. Your faith groweth exceedingly] The word ἐκπεπαισμένοι, signifies, to grow luxuriantly, as a good and healthy tree, planted in a good soil; and if a fruit tree bearing an abundance of fruit to compensate the labour of the husbandmen. Faith is one of the seeds of the kingdom: this the apostle had sowed and reaped, and God gave an abundant increase. Their faith was multiplied, and their love abundant: and this was not the case with some distinguished characters only; it was the case with every one of them.

4. We ourselves glory in you in the churches of God] We hold you up as an example of what the grace of God can produce when communicated to honest and faithful hearts.

For your patience and faith] From Acts xvii. 5, 13, and from 1 Thess. ii. 14, we learn, that the people of Thessalonica had suffered much persecution, both from the Jews, and their own countrymen: but, being thoroughly convinced of the truth of the Gospel, and feeling it to be the power of God unto salvation, no persecution could turn them aside from it. And having suffered for the truth, it was precious to them. Persecution never essentially injured the genuine church of God.

5. A manifest token of the righteous judgment of God] The persecutions and tribulations which you endure, are a manifest proof that God has judged righteously in calling you Gentiles into his church; and these sufferings are also a proof that ye are called in: for they who enter into the kingdom of God, go through great tribulation; your going through that tribulation, is a proof that ye are entering in; and God sees it right and just that ye should be permitted to suffer, before ye enjoy that endless felicity.

The words, however, may be understood in another sense, and will form this maxim, "The sufferings of the just, and the triumphs of the wicked in this life, are a sure proof that there will be a future judgment in which the wicked shall be punished and the righteous rewarded." This maxim is not only true in itself, but it is most likely that this is the apostle's meaning.

That ye may be counted worthy] Your patient endurance of these sufferings, is a proof that ye are rendered meet for that glory on account of which ye suffer; and in a true Gospel sense of the word, worthy of that glory: for, he who is a child of God, and a partaker of the Divine nature, is worthy of God's kingdom; not because he has done any thing to merit it, but because he bears the image of God; and the image is that which gives the title.

6. Seeing it is a righteous thing] Though God neither rewards nor punishes in this life, in a general way, yet he often gives proofs of his displeasure; especially against those who persecute his followers. They, therefore, who have given you tribulation, shall have tribulation in recompense.

7. And to you who are troubled, Rest with us] And while they have tribulation, you shall have that eternal rest which remains for the people of God.

When the Lord Jesus shall be revealed] But this fullness of tribulation to them, and rest to you, shall not take place till the Lord Jesus come to judge the world.

7 And to you who are troubled, ¹ Rest with us, when ² the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with ³ his mighty angels,

8 ⁴ In flaming fire, ⁵ taking vengeance on them ⁶ that know not God, and ⁷ that obey not the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ:

9 ⁸ Who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and ⁹ from the glory of his power;

10 ¹⁰ When he shall come to be glorified in his saints, ¹¹ and to be admired in all them that believe (because our testimony among you was believed) in that day.

11 Wherefore also we pray always for you, that our God would ¹² count ¹³ you worthy of this calling, and fulfill all the good pleasure of ¹⁴ his goodness, and ¹⁵ the work of faith with power.

12 ¹⁶ That the name of our Lord Jesus Christ may be glorified in you, and ye in him, according to the grace of our God and the Lord Jesus Christ.

With his mighty angels] The coming of God to judge the world, is scarcely ever spoken of in the Sacred Writings without mentioning the holy angels who are to accompany him and to form his court or retinue. See Deut. xxxiii. 2. Matt. xvi. 27. xvi. 31. xxi. 64. Mark viii. 33.

8. In flaming fire] Ἐν φλογὶ πυρός, in thunder and lightning; taking vengeance; inflicting just punishment on them that know not God; the heathen, who do not worship the true God, and will not acknowledge Him, but worship idols: and on them that obey not the Gospel, the Jews particularly who have rejected the Gospel, and persecuted Christ and His messengers: and all nominal Christians, who, though they believe the Gospel as a revelation from God, yet do not obey it as a rule of life.

9. Who shall be punished] What this everlasting destruction consists in we cannot tell. It is not annihilation, for their being continues, and as the destruction is everlasting, it is an eternal continuance and presence of substantial evil, and absence of all good; for a part of this punishment consists in being banished from the presence of the Lord, excluded from His approbation for ever: so that the light of His countenance can be no more enjoyed, as there will be an eternal impossibility of ever being reconciled to Him.

The glory of his power] Never to see the face of God throughout eternity, is a heart-rending, soul-appalling thought! and to be banished from the glory of his power, that power, the glory of which is peculiarly manifested in saving the lost, and glorifying the faithful, is what cannot be reflected on, without confusion and dismay. But this must be the lot of all who do not acknowledge God, and obey not the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ.

10. When he shall come to be glorified in his saints] As the grace of God is peculiarly glorified in saving sinners, and making them into saints, this gracious power will be particularly manifested in the great day, when countless millions will appear before that Throne, who have come out of great tribulation, and have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb.

And to be admired] Ὠψαυθενται, to be wondered at among, and on the account of, all them that believe. Much as true believers admire the perfections of the Redeemer of mankind; and much as they wonder at His amazing condescension in becoming man, and dying for the sins of the world; all their present amazement and wonder will be as nothing when compared with what they shall feel when they come to see Him in all his glory; the glory that He had with the Father, before the world was. In reference to this we may apply those words of St. John, "Beloved, now are we the sons of God: and it doth not yet appear what we shall be, but we know that when he shall appear we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is." 1 John, chap. iii. 2.

Instead of τοὺς πιστεύοντες, them that believe; τοὺς πιστευομένους, them that have believed, is the reading of ABCDEF. many others; the latter Syriac, Sleronic, Vulgate, and Itala, with most of the Greek Fathers. This reading is undoubtedly genuine.

Because our testimony—was believed in that day.] The members of this sentence seem to have been strangely transposed. I believe it should be read thus: "In that day when he shall come to be glorified in his saints, and adored among all them that have believed: for our testimony was believed among you." The Thessalonians had credited what the apostles had said and written, not only concerning Jesus Christ in general; but concerning the day of judgment in particular.

11. We pray—that our God would reward you worthily. It is our earnest prayer that God would make you worthy, after, afford those continual supplies of grace by His Holy Spirit, without which you cannot adorn your holy vocation; you are called into the Christian church, and to be proper members of this church, ye must be members of the mystical body of Christ; and this implies that ye should be holy, as he who has called you is holy.

Fulfil all the good pleasure of his goodness. 1. The goodness of God, His own innate eternal kindness, has led Him to call you into this state of salvation. 2. It is the pleasure of that goodness, to save you unto eternal life. 3. It is the good pleasure, nothing can please God more, than your receiving and retaining His utmost salvation. 4. It is all the good pleasure of His goodness thus to save you: this He has amply proved, by sending His Son to die for you; beyond which gift, He has none greater. In this, all the good pleasure of His goodness is astonishingly manifested. 5. And if you be faithful to His grace, He will fulfil, completely accomplish, all the good pleasure of His goodness in you; which goodness is to be apprehended, and is to work by faith, the power of which must come from Him, though the act or exercise of that power must be of yourselves; but the very power to believe, affords excitement to the exercise of faith.

12. That the name of our Lord. This is the great end of your Christian calling, that Jesus who hath died for you, may have His passion and death magnified in your life and happiness; that ye may show forth the virtue of Him who called you from darkness into His marvellous light.

And ye in him. That His glorious excellence may be seen upon you; that ye may be adorned with the graces of His Spirit; as He is glorified, by your salvation from all sin.

According to the grace. That your salvation may be such as God requires; and such as is worthy of His grace to communicate. God saves as becomes God to save; and thus the dignity of His nature, is seen in the excellence and glory of His work.

1. It is an awful consideration to the people of the world, that persecutions and afflictions should be the lot of the true church; and should be the proof of its being such: because this shows, more than any thing else, the desperate state of mankind; their total enmity to God: they persecute, not because the followers of God have done, or can do them hurt;

but they persecute because they have not the Spirit of Christ in them! Men may amuse themselves by arguing against the doctrine of original sin, or the total depravity of the soul of man; but while there is religious persecution in the world, there is the most absolute disproof of all their arguments. Nothing but a heart wholly alienated from God, could ever devise the persecution or maltreatment of a man, for no other cause, but that he has given himself up to glorify God with his body and spirit, which are His.

2. The everlasting destruction of the ungodly, is a subject that should be continually placed before the eyes of men by the preachers of the Gospel. How shall a man be induced to take measures to escape a danger, of the existence of which he is not convinced? Show him the hell which the justice of God has lighted up for the devil and his angels; and in which all Satan's children and followers must have their eternal portion. All the perfections of God require, that He should render to every man his due. And what is the due of a sinner, or a persecutor, of one who is a determinate enemy to God, goodness, and good men? Why, everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord and the glory of His power. And if God did not award this to such persons, He could not be the God of justice.

3. The grand object of God in giving His Gospel to mankind is to save them from their sins, make them like Himself, and take them to His eternal glory. He saves according to the measure of His eternal goodness: the scanty salvation contended for, and expected by the generality of Christians, it would be dishonourable to God to administer. He saves according to His grace. His own eternal goodness and holiness is the measure of His salvation to man: not the exceeds and expectations of any class of Christians. He saved not all we must not only be saved in God's way, and upon His own terms, but also according to His own measure. He who is not filled with the fulness of God, cannot expect the glory of God.

4. Another proof of the fall and degeneracy of man is, their general enmity to the doctrine of holiness: they cannot bear the thought of being sanctified through body, soul, and spirit, so as to perfect holiness in the fear of God. A spurious kind of Christianity is gaining ground in the world. Weakness, doubtfulness, littleness of faith, consciousness of inward corruptions, and sinful infirmities of different kinds, are, by some, considered the highest proofs of a gracious state; whereas, in the primitive church, they would have been considered as evidences that the persons in question had received just light enough to show them their wretchedness and danger; but not the healing virtue of the blood of Christ.

CHAPTER II.

He exhorts the Thessalonians to stand fast in the faith, and not to be alarmed at the rumours they heard concerning the sudden coming of Christ, 1, 2. Because, previously to this coming, there would be a great apostasy from the true faith, and a manifestation of a son of perdition, of whose unparalleled presumption he gives an awful description; as well as of his pernicious success among men, and the means which he would use to deceive and pervert the world, and pervert their steadfastness; shows the great privileges to which they were called; and prays that they may be comforted and established in every good word and work, 13—17. [A. M. cir. 4055. A. D. cir. 52. A. U. C. 805. An. Claudii Cæsar. Aug. 12.]

NOW we beseech you, brethren, by the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, and by our gathering together unto him.

1. That ye be not soon shaken in mind, or be troubled, neither by spirit, nor by word, nor by letter as from us, as that day of Christ is at hand.

1 Thess. 3:16. 2 Thess. 3:1. Mark 13:37. 1 Thess. 1:17. — c. Matt. 24:4. Eph. 5:6. 1 John 4:1. — Matt. 24:4. Eph. 5:6. — 1 Tim. 4:1.

NOTES.—Verse 1. We beseech you—by the coming of our Lord. It is evident that the Thessalonians, incited or deceived by false teachers, had taken a wrong meaning out of the words of the 1st epistle, chap. iv. 15, &c. concerning the day of judgment; and were led then to conclude, that that day was at hand; and this had produced great confusion in the church; to correct this mistake, the apostle sent them this second letter, in which he shows, that this day must be necessarily distant, because a great work is to be done previously to its appearing.

Of the day of general judgment he had spoken before, and said that it should come as a thief in the night; i. e. when not expected; but he did not attempt to fix the time; nor did he insinuate that it was either near at hand, or far off. Now, however, he shows that it must necessarily be far off, because of the great transactions which must take place before it can come.

2. Be not soon shaken in mind. Αὐτοὶ οὐκ ὀκνῶντες, from the mind; i. e. that they should retain the persuasion they had of the truths which he had before delivered to them: that they should still hold the same opinions; and hold fast the doctrines which they had been taught.

Neither by spirit. Any pretended revelation.

Nor by word. Any thing which any person may profess to have heard the apostles speak.

Nor by letter. Either the former one which he had sent, some passages of which have been misconceived and misconstrued; or by any other letter, as from us, pretending to have been written by us, the apostles, containing predictions of this kind. There is a diversity of opinion among critics concerning this last clause; some supposing that it refers simply

3. Let no man deceive you by any means: for that day shall not come, except there come a falling away first, and that man of sin be revealed, the son of perdition;

4. Who opposeth and exalteth himself above all that is called God, or that is worshipped; so that he as God sitteth in the temple of God, showing himself that he is God.

[Dan. 7:27. Jer. 13:18. Rev. 13:11, &c. — See 1 Mar. 2:18. — c. John 17:12. — A. Es. 14:18. Ezek. 28:2, 9. Dan. 7:25, 26, 11:35, Rev. 13:11, 14:9, &c.]

to the first epistle; others, supposing that a forged epistle is intended. I have joined the two senses.

The word exaltation, to be shaken, signifies to be agitated as a ship at sea in a storm; and strongly marks the confusion and distress which the Thessalonians had felt in their false apprehension of this coming of Christ.

As that the day of Christ is at hand. In the Preface to this epistle, I have given a general view of the meaning of the phrase the coming of Christ. Now, the question is, whether does the apostle mean the coming of Christ to execute judgment upon the Jews, and to destroy their polity; or His coming, at the end of time, to judge the world? There are certainly many expressions in the following verses, that may be applied indifferently to either; and some seem to apply to the one, and not to the other; and yet, the whole can scarcely be so interpreted as to suit any one of these comings exclusively. This is precisely the case with the predictions of our Lord, relative to these great events; one is used to point out and illustrate the other. On this ground, I am led to think that the apostle, in the following, (confessingly obscure words,) has both these in view, speaking of none of them exclusively; for it is the custom of the inspired penmen, or rather of that Spirit by which they spoke, to point out as many certain events by one prediction, as it was possible to do; and to choose the figures, metaphors, and similes accordingly; and thus, from the beginning, God has pointed out the things that were not, by the things that then existed; making the one type or signification of the other. As the apostle spoke by the same Spirit, he must probably followed the same plan; and thus the following prophecy is to be interpreted and understood.

5 Remember ye not, that, when I was yet with you, I told you these things?

6 And now ye know what ^a withholdeth that he might be revealed in his time.

7 For ¹ the mystery of iniquity doth already work: only he who now letteth will let until he be taken out of the way.

8 And then shall that Wicked be revealed, ² whom the Lord shall consume ³ with the Spirit of his mouth, and shall destroy ⁴ with the brightness of his coming.

9 Even him, whose coming is ⁵ after the working of Satan with all power and ⁶ signs and lying wonders.

10 And with all deceivableness of unrighteousness in ⁷ them that perish; because they received not the love of the truth, that they might be saved.

11 And ⁸ for this cause God shall send them strong delusion, ⁹ that they should believe a lie:

¹⁰ Or, withhold.—1 John 2:18, & 4:3.—¹¹ Dan 7:10, 11.—¹² Job 4:8. Isa. 11:4. Hos. 6:5. Rev. 2:16, & 19:20, 21.—¹³ Ch. 1:8. 2. 3. Except there come a falling away first] We have the original word anagasia, in our word apostasy; and by this term, we understand a dereliction of the essential principles of religious truth; either a total abandonment of Christianity itself, or such a corruption of its doctrines, as renders the whole system completely inefficient to salvation. But what this apostasy means, is a question which has not yet, and perhaps never will be answered to general satisfaction. At present, I shall content myself with making a few literal remarks on this obscure prophecy; and afterward give the opinions of learned men on its principal parts.

That man of sin] Ο ανθρωπος της αμαρτίας; the same as the Hebrew expresses, by איש איש ish achen, and איש לילית ish lailat; the perverse, obstinate, and iniquitous man. It is worthy of remark, that, among the rabbins, Samael, or the devil, is called איש לילית ish lailat veish achen, the man of Hell, and the man of iniquity; and that these titles are given to Adam after his fall.

The son of perdition] Ο υιος της απωλειας, the son of destruction; the same epithet that is given to Judas Iscariot, John xvii. 12, where see the note. The son of perdition, and the man of sin; or, as some excellent MSS. and Versions, with several of the Fathers read, αυτοπατος της αμαρτίας, the lawless man, see ver. 8, must mean the same person or thing. It is also remarkable, that the wicked Jews are styled by Isaiah, chap. i. 4. בנים משחיתים benim meshachetim, "children of perdition;" persons who destroy themselves and destroy others.

4. Who opposeth and exalteth] He stands against, and exalts himself above all Divine authority; and above every object of adoration; and every institution, relative to Divine worship, απαρκα; himself being the source whence must originate all the doctrines of religion; and all its rites and ceremonies: so that sitting in the temple of God, having the highest place and authority in the Christian church, he acts as God, taking upon himself God's titles and attributes, and arrogates to himself that authority that belongs to the Most High. The words as God, are waiting in AB, many others. Erpen's Archie, the Coptic, Sahidic, Ethiopic, Armenian, the Vulgate, some copies of the Itala, and the chief of the Greek Fathers. Griesbach has left them out of the text, and Professor White says, certissima delenda: they should most certainly be erased. There is indeed no evidence of their being authentic, and the text reads much better without them: So that he sitteth in the temple of God, &c.

5. I told you these things] In several parts of this description of the man of sin, the apostle alludes to a conversation which had taken place between him and the members of this church, when he was at Thessalonica; and this one circumstance will account for much of the obscurity, that is in these verses. Besides, the apostle appears to speak with great caution, and does not at all wish to publish what he had communicated to them; the hints which he drops were sufficient to call the whole to their remembrance.

6. And now ye know what withholdeth] I told you this among other things; I informed you what it was that prevented this man of sin, this son of perdition, from revealing himself fully.

7. For the mystery of iniquity doth already work] There is a system of corrupt doctrine which will lead to the general apostasy, already in existence; but it is a mystery: it is as yet hidden; it dare not show itself because of that which withholdeth, or withholdeth. But, when that which now restraineth be taken out of the way, then shall that wicked one be revealed: it will then be manifest who he is, and what he is.—See the observations at the end of this chapter.

8. Whom the Lord shall consume] He shall blast him so, that he shall wither and die away; and this shall be done by the Spirit of His mouth; the words of eternal life, the true doctrine of the Gospel of Jesus; this shall be the instrument used to destroy this man of sin; therefore, it is evident his death will not be a sudden but a gradual one; because, it is by the preaching of the truth that he is to be exposed, overthrown, and finally destroyed.

The brightness of his coming] This may refer to that full manifestation of the truth which had been obscured and kept under by the evaluation of this man of sin.

12 That they all might be damned who believed not the truth, but ^a had pleasure in unrighteousness:

13 But ^b we are bound to give thanks always to God for you, brethren, beloved of the Lord, because God ^c hath ^d from the beginning chosen you to salvation, ^e through sanctification of the Spirit and belief of the truth:

14 Whereunto he called you by our Gospel, to ^f the obtaining of the glory of our Lord Jesus Christ.

15 Therefore, brethren, ^g stand fast and hold ^h the traditions which ye have been taught, whether by word, or our epistle.

16 ⁱ Now our Lord Jesus Christ himself, and God, even our Father, ^j which hath loved us, and hath given us everlasting consolation and ^k good hope through grace, 17 Comfort your hearts, ^l and stablish you in every ^m good word and work.

9. Whose coming is after the working of Satan] The operation of God's Spirit sends his messengers; the operation of Satan's spirit sends his emissaries. The one comes κατ' ενεργειαν του Θεου, after, or according to the energy, or inward powerful working of God; the other comes κατ' ενεργειαν του Σατανα, according to the energy, or inward working, of Satan.

With all power] Παση δυναμει, all kinds of miracles, like the Egyptian magicians. And signs and lying wonders; the word lying may be applied to the whole of these; they were lying miracles, lying signs, and lying wonders; only appearances of what was real; and done to give credit to his presumption and imposture. Whereas God sent his messengers with real miracles, real signs, and real wonders; such, Satan cannot produce.

10. And with all deceivableness of unrighteousness] With every art that cunning can invent, and unrighteousness suggest, in order to delude and deceive.

In them that perish] Εν τοις απολλυμενοις, among them that are destroyed; and they are destroyed and perish because they would not receive the love of the truth, that they might be saved. So, they perish because they obstinately refuse to be saved; and receive a lie in preference to the truth. This has been true of all the Jews, from the days of the apostle until now.

11. God shall send them strong delusion] For this very cause, that they would not receive the love of the truth, but had pleasure in unrighteousness; therefore, God permits strong delusion to occupy their minds; so that they believe a lie rather than the truth; prefer false apostles, and their erroneous doctrines, to the pure truths of the Gospel, brought to them by the well accredited messengers of God: being ever ready to receive any false Messiah, while they systematically, and virulently, reject the true one.

12. That they all might be damned] Οις κριθονται, so that they may all be condemned who believed not the truth, when it was proclaimed to them; but took pleasure in unrighteousness, preferring that to the way of holiness. Their condemnation was the effect of their refusal to believe the truth; and they refused to believe it because they loved their sins. For a farther, and more pointed, illustration of the preceding verses, see at the conclusion of this chapter.

13 and 14. God hath from the beginning chosen you to salvation] In your calling, God has shown the purpose that he had formed from the beginning, to call the Gentiles to the same privileges with the Jews; not through circumcision; and the observance of the Mosaic law, but by faith in Christ Jesus; but this simple way of salvation referred to the same end, holiness; without which no man, whether Jew or Gentile, can see the Lord.

Let us observe the order of Divine grace in this business:—1. They were to hear the truth; the doctrines of the Gospel.—2. They were to believe this truth, when they heard it preached.—3. They were to receive the Spirit of God, in believing the truth.—4. That Spirit was to sanctify their souls; produce an inward holiness, which was to lead to all outward conformity to God.—5. All this constituted their salvation; their being fitted for the inheritance among the saints in light.—6. They were to obtain the glory of our Lord Jesus Christ; that state of felicity for which they were fitted, by being saved here from their sins, and by being sanctified by the Spirit of God.

15. Therefore, brethren, stand fast] Their obtaining eternal glory, depended on their faithfulness to the grace of God; for this calling did not necessarily and irresistibly lead to faith; nor their faith, to the sanctification of the Spirit; nor their sanctification of the Spirit, to the glory of our Lord Jesus. Had they not attended to the calling, they could not have believed; had they not believed, they could not have been sanctified; had they not been sanctified, they could not have been glorified. All these things depended on each other; they were stages of the great journey; and at any of these stages they might have halted, and never finished their Christian race.

Hold the traditions which ye have been taught] The word παρὰ, which we render tradition, signifies any thing delivered in the way of teaching; and here most obviously means the doctrines delivered by the apostle to the Thessalonians; whether in his preaching, private conversation, or by these epistles; and particularly the first epistle, as the apostle here states. Whatever these traditions were, as to their matter, they were a revelation from God; for they came by men who spoke and acted under the inspiration of the Holy Spirit; and on this ground, the passage here can never, with any propriety, be brought to support the unapostolical, and antiapostolical traditions of the Romish church; those being matters which are, confessedly, not taken from either Testament; nor were spoken either by a prophet or an apostle.

16. Now our Lord Jesus] As all your grace came from God through Christ, so the power that is necessary to strengthen and confirm you unto the end, must come in the same way.

Everlasting consolation] Παράκλησις αἰώνιος, the glad tidings of the Gospel; and the comfort which ye have received through believing; a gift which God had in His original purpose, in reference to the Gentiles; a purpose which has respected all times and places; and which shall continue to the conclusion of time; for the Gospel is everlasting, and shall not be superseded by any other dispensation. It is the last and best which God has provided for man; and it is good tidings, everlasting consolation; a complete system of complete peace and happiness. The words may also refer to the happiness which the believing Thessalonians then possessed.

And good hope through grace] The hope of the Gospel was the resurrection of the body, and the final glorification of it, and the soul, throughout eternity. This was the good hope which the Thessalonians had; not a hope that they should be pardoned or sanctified, &c. Pardon and holiness they enjoyed, therefore they were no objects of hope; but the resurrection of the body, and eternal glory, were necessarily future; these they had in expectation; these they hoped for; and, through the grace which they had already received, they had a good hope, a well-grounded expectation, of this glorious state.

17. Combat your hearts] Keep your souls ever under the influence of His Holy Spirit; and establish you; confirm and strengthen you in your belief of every good word, or doctrine, which we have delivered unto you; and in the practice of every good work, recommended and enjoined by the doctrines of the Gospel.

It is not enough that we believe the truth; we must live the truth. Antinomianism says, "Believe the doctrines, and ye are safe." The testimony borne by the Gospel is—believe, love, obey: none of these can subsist without the other. The faith of a devil may exist without loving obedience; but the faith of a true believer worketh by love; and this faith and love have not respect to some one commandment, but to all; for God writes His whole law on the heart of every genuine Christian; and gives him that love which is the fulfilling of the law.

The reader will have observed, that, in going through this chapter, while examining the import of every leading word, I have avoided fixing any specific meaning to terms; the apostacy, or falling away: the man of sin; son of perdition; him who letteth, or withholdeth, &c. The reason is, I have found it extremely difficult to fix any sense to my own satisfaction; and, it was natural for me to think that, if I could not satisfy myself, it was not likely I could satisfy my readers; but, as something should be said relative to the persons and things intended by the apostle, I choose to give rather what others have said, than attempt any new mode of interpretation. The great scarcity of explanations given by wise and learned men, only prove the difficulty of the place.

1. The general run of Protestant writers understand the whole as referring to the popes, and church of Rome; or the whole system of the papacy—2. Others think that the defection of the Jewish nation, from their allegiance to the Roman emperor, is what is to be understood by the apostacy, or falling off; and that all the other terms refer to the destruction of Jerusalem—3. The Fathers understood the antichrist to be intended; and of this person they seem to have formed no specific idea—4. Dr. Hammond refers the apostacy to the defection of the primitive Christians to the Gnostic heresy; and supposes that, by the man of sin, and son of perdition, Simon Magus is meant—5. Grotius applies the whole to Caius Cæsar—6. Wetstein applies the apostacy to the rebellion and slaughter of the three princes that were proclaimed by the Roman armies, previously to the reign of Tiberianus; and supposes Titus, and the Flavian family, to be intended by the man of sin, and son of perdition—7. Schultze contends, strongly, that the whole refers to the case of the Jews, incited to rebellion by the scribes and Pharisees; and to the utter and final destruction of the Rabbinic and Pharisaic system; and thinks he finds something in their spirit and conduct, and in what has happened to them, to illustrate every word in this prophecy. Dr. Whitby is nearly of the same sentiments—8. Cadnet follows, in the main, the interpretation given by the ancient Fathers; and wonders at the want of candour in the Protestant writers, who have gleamed up every abusive tale against the bishops and church of Rome; and asks them, Would they be willing that the Catholics should exert all the aspersions cast on Protestantism by its enemies?—9. Bishop Newton has examined the whole prophecy with his usual skill and judgment. The sum of what he says, as abridged by Dr. Dodd, I think it right to subjoin. The principal part of modern commentators follow his steps. He applies the whole to the Romish church; the apostacy, its defection from the pure doctrines of Christianity; and the man of sin, &c. the general succession of the popes of Rome. But we must hear him for himself, as he takes up the subject in the order of the verses.

3, 4. For that day shall not come, except, &c.—"The day of Christ shall not come, except there come the apostacy first." The apostacy here described, is plainly not of a civil, but of a religious nature; not a revolt from the government, but a defection from the true religion and worship. In the original, it is the apostasy. With an article to give it an emphasis; the article being adverbial, signifies, "that famous, and before-mentioned prophecy." So likewise is the man of sin, with the like article, and the like emphasis. If, then, the notion of the man of sin be derived from any ancient prophet, it must be derived from Dan. vii. 25, and ix. 26. Any man may be satisfied that St. Paul alluded to Daniel's description, because he has not only borrowed the same ideas, but has even adopted some of the phrases and expressions. "The man of sin, may signify either a single man, or a succession of men; a succession of men being meant in Daniel, it is probable that the same was intended here also. It is the more probable, because a single man appears hardly sufficient for the work here assigned; and it is agreeable to the phraseology of Scripture, and especially to that of the prophets, to speak of a body, or number of men, under the character of one; thus, a king, Dan. vii. 8. Rev. xvii. is used for a succession of kings. The man of sin being to be expressed from Dan. vii. 21, according to the Greek translation, he shall exceed in evil all that went before him; and he may fulfil the character either by promoting wickedness in general, or by advancing idolatry in particular, as the word sin signifies frequently in Scripture. The son of perdition is also the denunciation of the traitor Judas, John xvii. 12, which implies, that the man of sin should be like Judas, a false apostle; like him, betray Christ; and like him, be devoted to destruction. When opposeth, &c. is manifestly copied from Daniel, He shall exalt himself, &c. The features exactly resemble each other: "He opposeth, and exalteth himself above all; or, according to the Greek, above every one that is called God, or that is worshipped. The Greek word for worshipped, is εὐσεβείας, alluding to the Greek title of the Roman emperors, εὐσεβής, which signifies august, or venerable. He shall oppose; for the prophets speak of things future, as present; he shall oppose, and exalt himself, not only above inferior magistrates, (who sometimes called gods in Italy, &c.) but even above the greatest emperors; and shall arrogate to himself Divine honours. So that he, as God, sitteth in the temple, &c. By the temple of God, the apostle could not well mean the temple of Jerusalem, because that, he knew, would be destroyed within a few years. After the death of Christ, the temple of Jerusalem is never called by the apostles the temple of God; and if, at any time, they make mention of the house, or temple of God, they mean the church in general, or every particular believer. Whoever will consult 1 Cor. iii. 16, 17. 2 Cor. vi. 16. 1 Tim. iii. 15. Rev. iii. 12, will want no examples to prove, that, under the Gospel dispensation, the temple of God is the church of Christ; and the man of sin's sitting, implies his ruling and presiding there; and sitting there as God, implies his claiming Divine authority in things spiritual as well as temporal; and showing himself that he is God, implies his doing it with ostentation.

5, 6, 7. Remember ye not, &c. The apostle thought it part of his duty, as he made it a part of his preaching and doctrine, to forewarn his new converts of the grand apostacy that would infect the church, even while he was at Thessalonica. From these verses, it appears that the man of sin was not then revealed; his time was not yet come; or the season of his manifestation. The mystery of iniquity was indeed already working; the seeds of corruption were sown; but they were not grown up to maturity; the man of sin was yet hardly received in the womb; if not he some time before he could be brought forth; there was some obstacle that hindered his appearing. What this was we cannot determine with absolute certainty, at so great a distance of time; but, if we may rely upon the concurrent testimony of the Fathers, it was the Roman empire. Most probably it was somewhat relating to the higher powers, because the apostle deserves such caution (he mentioned it in discourse, but would not commit it to writing).

8. Then shall that Wicked be revealed. When the obstacle, mentioned in the preceding verse, should be removed, then shall that Wicked, &c. Nothing can be plainer than that the lawless Charybdis, (as the Greek signifies, the wicked law), here mentioned, and the man of sin, must be one and the same person. The apostle was speaking before of what hindered that he should be revealed, and would continue to hinder till it was taken away; and then the wicked one, &c. Not that he should be consumed immediately after he was revealed. But the apostle, to comfort the Thessalonians, no sooner mentions his revelation, than he foretells also his destruction, even before he describes his other qualifications. His other qualifications should have been described first, in order of time; but the apostle listens to what was first and warmest in his thoughts and wishes, When the Lord shall consume, &c. If these two clauses refer to two distinct and different events, the meaning manifestly is, that the Lord Jesus shall gradually consume him with the true preaching and publication of His word; and shall utterly destroy him at His second coming, in the glory of His Father, with all the holy angels. If these two clauses relate to one and the same event, it is a pleonasm very usual in the sacred, as well as other oriental writings: and the purport plainly is, that the Lord Jesus shall destroy him with the greatest facility, when he shall be revealed from heaven; as the apostle has expressed it in the preceding chapter.

9—12. Whose coming is after, &c.—The apostle was eager to foretel the destruction of the man of sin; and for this purpose, having broken in upon his subject, he now returns to it again, and describes the other qualifications by which this wicked one should advance, and establish himself in the world. He should rise to credit and authority by the most diabolical methods; should pretend to supernatural powers, and boast of revelations, visions, and miracles; false in the senses, and applied to promote false doctrines. Verse 9. He should likewise practise all other wicked acts of deceit; should be guilty of the most impious frauds and impositions upon mankind; but should prevail only among those who are destitute of a sincere affection for the truth; whereby they might attain eternal salvation. Verse 10. And indeed, it is a just and righteous judgment of God, to give them over to vanities and lies in this world, and to condemnation in the next, who have no regard to truth and virtue, but delight in falsehood and wickedness: ver. 11, 12.
